OF

ENGLISH CASE LAW.

EXTRADITION.

Effect of Act on Treaties.]—Semble, that s. 27 of the Extradition Act, 1870, has the effect of keeping in full force the treaty, though it repeals the act passed to give it effect. Bouvier, In re, 42 L. J., Q. B. 17; 27 L. T. 844; 12 Cox, C. C. 303.

Provision preventing Conviction for different Offence.]—B. was arrested in Jersey, under a warrant issued pursuant to the Extradition Act, 1870, and was sent to prison, there to remain for fifteen days, after which he was to be surrendered to the French authorities. He had been condemned by a French court, upon a judgment for three separate offences, one of which, abus de confiance, was not within the existing extradition treaty between this country and France, nor within the Extradition Act, 1870, which repeals the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 75, passed for giving effect to the treaty. By s. 3, sub-s. 2, of the Extradition Act, 1870, a fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered to a foreign state, unless provision is made by the law of that state, or by arrangement, that the fugitive criminal shall not, until he has been restored, or had an opportunity of returning, to her Majesty's dominions, be detained or tried in that foreign state for any offence committed prior to his surrender, other than the extradition crime proved by the facts on which the surrender is grounded:—Held, that under the existing law of France such a provision is made, and therefore that B. was not entitled to be discharged. Ib.

Termination of Convention—Fresh Notice.]—By the terms of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 75, the contracting parties were at liberty at any time after the 1st January, 1844, to put an end to the convention upon which it was founded, by giving six months' notice of their intention so to do, and the act was to remain in force during the continuance of the convention. The act, however, contained no provisions for the withdrawal or renewal of such notices. The French government, on the 4th December, 1865, gave such notice, but on the 21st May, before the expiration of the six months, they gave a fresh notice, and agreed with the English government that such notice should be treated as expiring on the 21st November, 1866:—Held, that the act was still in force, and a habeas corpus was refused to a French subject detained in English custody after the expiration of the six months included in the original notice. Widermann, Ex parte, 12 Jur. (N.S.) 536; 14 L. T. 719.

To what Crimes applicable.] — To satisfy a magistrate in committing a prisoner charged with an extradition crime, under s. 10 of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 52, there must be some evidence that the prisoner committed such crime within the jurisdiction of the country seeking extradition. Reg. v. Lavaudier, 15 Cox, C. C. 329.

—— Offence of a Political Character.]—By the Extradition Act, 1870, s. 3 (1), "A fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered if the offence in respect of which his surrender is demanded is one of a political character":—Held, that to bring an offence within the meaning of the words "of a political character," it must be incidental to and form part of political disturbances. A number of the citizens of one of the cantons of the Swiss Republic, being dissatisfied with the administration of the government of the canton, rose against the government, arrested several members of the government, seized the arsenal from which they provided themselves with arms, attacked, broke open, and took forcible possession of, the municipal palace, disarmed the gendarmes, imprisoned some members of the government, and established a provisional government. On entering the municipal palace the prisoner, who had taken an active part in the disturbance throughout, shot with a revolver and killed a member of the government. He escaped to England, where he was arrested and committed for extradition on a charge of murder. On a motion for habeas corpus:—Held, that the offence which the prisoner had committed was incidental to and formed a part of political disturbances, and therefore was an offence of a political character within the meaning of the statute, and the prisoner could not be surrendered, but was entitled to be discharged from custody. Castioni, Ex parte, 60 L. J., M. C. 22; [1891] 1 Q. B. 149; 64 L. T. 344; 39 W. R. 202; 17 Cox, C. C. 225; 55 J. P. 328.

To constitute an "offence of a political character" within the meaning of s. 3, sub-s. 1 of the Extradition Act, 1870, there must be two parties in the State, each striving to impose its own government upon the other. An explosion caused by an anarchist is not, therefore, an offence of that nature. Meunier, In re, 63 L. J., M. C. 198; [1894] 2 Q. B. 415; 10 R. 400; 71 L. T. 403; 42 W. R. 637; 18 Cox, C. C. 15.

Section 19 of the Extradition Act is not confined to political offences, but applies to all criminal charges. Pooley v. Whetham, 50 L. J., Ch. 236; 15 Ch. D. 435; 43 L. T. 267; 29 W. R. 296—C. A.

—— Falsification of Accounts as Director—Faux—Forgery.]—Fraudulent falsification of accounts as director, officer, or member of a public company, and constituting the crime of faux en écritures de commerce within article 147 of the Code Penal, is an extradition crime within the 18th head of article 3 of the English version and within the 2nd head of the same article of the French version of the treaty with France signed in 1876 and ratified in 1878; and within the Extradition Acts, 1870 and 1873. Arton, In re (No. 2), 65 L. J., M. C. 50; [1896] 1 Q. B. 509; 74 L. T. 249; 44 W. R. 351; 18 Cox, C. C. 277; 60 J. P. 132.

—— "Crime or Offence."]—It is a provision of the Hong Kong Ordinance, No. 2 of 1850, that, where it may appear to a magistrate or court that there is a probable cause for believing that a Chinaman, who has taken refuge at Hong Kong, has committed "any crime or offence against the laws of China," he may be imprisoned with a view to his being surrendered to the government of China:—Held, that the words "crime or offence" must be limited to those ordinary crimes and offences which are punishable by the laws of all nations, and which are not peculiar to the laws of China, such as murder, robbery, theft, or arson, committed by a Chinaman within Chinese territory, or in Chinese ships on the high seas; piracy, moreover, in certain circumstances, would come within the ordinance, as, for example, if a Chinaman went from the Chinese coast to plunder ships at sea, returning again to China with his plunder. Att.-Gen. (Hong Kong) v. Kwok-a-Sing, 42 L. J., P. C. 64; L. R. 5 P. C. 179; 29 L. T. 114; 21 W. R. 825; 12 Cox, C. C. 565.

When a Chinaman, who had taken refuge in Hong Kong, was accused of having previously murdered a French captain of a French ship at sea, it was held that he could not be imprisoned and delivered up to the Chinese government under the ordinance; on two grounds—first, that it could not be assumed, without evidence, that there was any law in China to punish a Chinese subject for a murder committed upon a foreigner within foreign territory; and, second, that, even if it could be so assumed, still, the offence having been committed within French territory, ought to be treated as an offence against French, and not as an offence against Chinese, law. Ib.

—— Crimes against Bankruptcy Laws.]—In the list of extradition crimes in the schedule to the act are included "crimes by bankrupts against the bankruptcy law":—Held, that a wife charged with complicity in the fraudulent bankruptcy of her husband is not a person charged with a crime within the meaning of the description, as it is limited to crimes committed by bankrupts only. Counhaye, Ex parte, 42 L. J., Q. B. 217; L. R. 8 Q. B. 410; 28 L. T. 761; 21 W. R. 883.

—— Forgery.]—The word forgery in the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 75, includes knowingly uttering a forged document. Dubois, In re, or Coppin, In re, infra.

The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 76, following the language of a treaty between this country and the United States of America, enacts, that all persons charged with the crime of murder, or assault with intent to commit murder, or with the crime of piracy, or arson, or robbery, or forgery, or the utterance of forged paper, may be delivered up to justice, means such acts as amount to any of those offences according to the law of England, and the general law of the United States, and does not comprise offences which are only such by the local legislation of some particular state of the American union. Windsor, In re, 6 B. & S. 522; 34 L. J., M. C. 163; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 807; 12 L. T. 307; 13 W. R. 655; 10 Cox, C. C. 118.

A paying teller of a bank at New York, and as such accountable for the cash at the bank, kept the paying teller's book, called the proof book, and proved his cash by it every day. From this book the general bookkeeper took his figures to show the condition of the bank on the general ledger from day to day. The book in question was one of the books of account at the bank, and the property of the bank. In it was entered by the paying teller from the receiving teller's books, or from the lists of the deposits, the money received each day, and also the amounts paid out by the paying teller, or amounts for which the bank was responsible each day. The proof book also contained a statement of the assets of the bank in coin and cash, so that the proof books should each show each day the exact amount of money in the bank. He falsely, and with intent to defraud, entered a certain sum in the book as assets of the bank:—Held, that this was not a forgery by the law of England or the general law of the United States, and, therefore, that he could not be given up under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 76. Ib.

—— Piracy.]—In time of peace any act of depredation on a ship is primâ facie piracy: but in time of war between two countries, the presumption is that depredation by one of them on a ship of the other is an act of legitimate warfare. It is immaterial whether the act was done by soldiers or volunteers, and whether it was commanded by the belligerent state, or when done ratified by it. Tivnan or Ternan, In re, 5 B. & S. 645; 33 L. J., M. C. 201; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 34; 10 L. T. 499; 12 W. R. 858; 9 Cox, C. C. 522.

Waiver of Fulfilment of Conditions in Treaty.]—By the treaty between this country and Belgium, a requisition for the surrender to Belgium of a fugitive criminal to be made to the foreign secretary, accompanied by a warrant of arrest or other equivalent judicial document issued by a judge or magistrate, duly authorised, &c., together with duly-authenticated depositions taken on oath before such judge or magistrate, which documents are to be transmitted to the home secretary, who, if there be due cause, shall require a magistrate to apprehend the fugitive :—Held, that the secretary may waive the fulfilment of these conditions, and that such documents may be received in evidence before the police magistrate before whom the fugitive is brought, although the warrant is not issued and the depositions taken before the same judge. Counhaye, Ex parte, 42 L. J., Q. B. 217 ; L. R. 8 Q. B. 410 ; 28 L. T. 761 ; 21 W. R. 883.

Subjects Surrenderable.]—A treaty having been made between this country and the Swiss government under the Extradition Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 52), which provided that no Swiss should be delivered up by Switzerland to the government of the United Kingdom, and no subject of the United Kingdom should be delivered up by the government thereof to Switzerland ; and an order in counsel having been made, which directed that the act should apply in the case of the treaty :—Held, that the treaty must be taken to be incorporated with, and to limit the operation of, the act, and that no British subject in this country could be surrendered to the Swiss government. Reg. v. Wilson, 3 Q. B. D. 42 ; 37 L. T. 354 ; 26 W. R. 44 ; 13 Cox, C. C. 630.

A person condemned par contumace in France is still an accused person, and as such liable to rendition. Dubois, In re, or Coppin, In re, 36 L. J., M. C. 10 ; L. R. 2 Ch. 47 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 867 ; 15 L. T. 165 ; 16 W. R. 24.

—— Crime committed in Foreign Country by Person "in Her Majesty's Dominions."]—N., being in Southampton, wrote and sent certain letters containing alleged false pretences to certain persons carrying on business within the jurisdiction of the German Empire, thereby inducing them to part with certain goods and deliver them to his order to certain persons in Hamburg. N. also sent to the same persons certain alleged forged cheques in payment :—Held, that N. was a fugitive criminal within the Extradition Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 52), s. 26, and was rightly committed by the police magistrate to await the warrant of the secretary of state for his extradition. Reg. v. Nillins, 53 L. J., M. C. 157.

—— Subject of State not Party to Treaty.]—An extradition treaty between the United Kingdom and the Netherlands provided that the governments, parties to the treaty, should reciprocally deliver up to each other any persons, who being accused of any of certain specified crimes committed within the jurisdiction of the party requiring the extradition should be found in the territories of the other party. The treaty further provided that neither of the contracting governments should be bound to deliver up its own subjects, and that a person arrested under the treaty in either country should be discharged, if within fourteen days a requisition should not have been made for his surrender by the diplomatic agent of "his" country :—Held, that the provisions for the extradition of criminals under the treaty were not confined to persons who were subjects of the state requiring the extradition, but applied to all persons who had committed any of the specified crimes within the jurisdiction of such state of whatever nationality they might be, except subjects of the state from which extradition was required. Reg. v. Ganz, 51 L. J., Q. B. 419 ; 9 Q. B. D. 93 ; 46 L. T. 592.

—— Surrender—Matter of Political Discretion.]—The extradition treaty between England and Belgium of 1887, suppressing the exception contained in article 1 of the treaty of 1876, provides that the high contracting parties shall not be bound to surrender their own subjects. This implies that they may do so, and the surrender of a British subject to Belgium under the Extradition Act, 1870, now rests in the discretion of the secretary of state. Galwey, In re, 65 L. J., M. C. 38 ; [1896] 1 Q. B. 230 ; 73 L. T. 756 ; 44 W. R. 313 ; 18 Cox, C. C. 213 ; 60 J. P. 87.

Relief against Abuse of Process.]—If a warrant under the Extradition Act is obtained, not for the bonâ fide purpose of punishing a person for a crime, but with the indirect object of making him amenable to an attachment in a civil action, the court will relieve against such an abuse of the process of the court. Pooley v. Whetham, 50 L. J., Ch. 236 ; 15 Ch. D. 435 ; 43 L. T. 267 ; 29 W. R. 296—C. A.

Upon the committal of a fugitive criminal under s. 10 of the Extradition Act, 1870, upon alleged charges of forgery committed in the State of New York, it was suggested that, upon being extradited, the prisoner might be tried in America for some charge other than the alleged charges of forgery, in respect of which she had been surrendered, and accordingly a rule nisi for habeas corpus was granted :—Held, that the rule must be discharged, since the Government of the United States of America had made provision for s. 3, sub-s. 2, of the Extradition Act, 1870, and that a fugitive criminal would be tried there solely for the offence in respect of which he had been surrendered. Further, that the point had been clearly raised and decided in The United States v. Rauscher (12 Davis Sup. Ct. 407), which as a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, was binding on all courts within the Union. Woodall, In re, 57 L. J., M. C. 72 ; 59 L. T. 549 ; 16 Cox, C. C. 478 ; 52 J. P. 646.

Where a prisoner had been committed for extradition in respect of crimes primâ facie divested of any political character, and there is no evidence that they are of political character, or that his extradition is demanded in order to punish him for an offence of a political character, but only a suggestion to that effect, the court will grant no habeas corpus. Considerations as to whether a demand for a prisoner's surrender by a friendly foreign power under a treaty has been made in good faith and in the interests of justice rest with the government, and the court has no authority to entertain them judicially. Arton, In re (No. 1), 65 L. J., M. C. 23 ; [1896] 1 Q. B. 108 ; 73 L. T. 687 ; 44 W. R. 238.

Evidence—Foreign Depositions.]—Under the Extradition Act, 1870, foreign depositions, if duly authenticated, may be received in evidence in proceedings under the act, although taken in the absence of the person accused, and without his having had an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses. Counhaye, Ex parte, supra.

Authorising the admission in evidence of copies of depositions certified in the manner specified by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 75, is inapplicable where the original depositions may be received in evidence without being so certified. Dubois, In re, or Coppin. In re, 36 L. J., M. C. 10; L. R. 2 Ch. 47; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 867; 15 L. T. 165; 16 W. R. 24.

—— Taken at former Hearing Admissible.]—Upon a hearing, a witness gave his evidence before a police magistrate A. in the presence of the accused and signed his deposition. The further hearing of the case was then adjourned, and on the adjournment day the further hearing was resumed before B., another police magistrate, but as the witness before examined before A. refused to attend and had gone abroad, his deposition made before A. was proved to have been duly taken and was read as part of the case against the accused, whereupon additional evidence having been taken, the prisoner was committed to the Middlesex House of Detention pursuant to the act:—Held, that the deposition so taken at the former hearing by A. was properly receivable by B. upon the subsequent hearing. Huguet, Ex parte, 29 L. T. 40; 12 Cox, C. C. 551.

Warrant of Arrest—Authentication of.]—If the original warrant for the arrest of an accused person only requires a seal to justify his arrest according to the French law, such warrant will be sufficient without signature. Dubois, In re, or Coppin, In re, 36 L. J., M. C. 10; L. R. 2 Ch. 47; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 867; 15 L. T. 165; 16 W. R. 24.

A person accused of forgery in France, in 1862 was committed for rendition upon the production of an arrêt de mise en accusation, dated the 1st May, 1863, accusing him of forgery, and authenticated by the seals of the Cour Impériale de Paris and of the minister of justice; and upon production of the original depositions taken in 1862 and 1863, authenticated by the seals of the minister of justice and the minister of foreign affairs in France. Ib.

A document produced before a magistrate as the "foreign warrant" of arrest under s. 10 of the Extradition Act, 1870, was sealed with the seal of the department of justice at the Hague, and purported to be a copy of the record or minutes of a certain order or decree of the criminal court of justice there, setting forth the charges against the criminal whose extradition was sought, and authorising proceedings against him and his arrest:—Held, that the production of such a document before the magistrate was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of s. 10 of the Extradition Act, 1870, which provides that the magistrate may commit the criminal to prison, if, inter alia, the foreign warrant authorising his arrest is duly authenticated. Reg. v. Ganz, 51 L. J., Q. B. 419; 9 Q. B. D. 93; 46 L. T. 592.

Semble, such document must be regarded as in the nature of an original for this purpose. Ib.

—— Description of Offence.]—A French subject and fugitive criminal was apprehended in England upon a warrant issued by the chief metropolitan police magistrate, after notice from the home secretary that a requisition had been made for his extradition under the treaty with France (1876) for the surrender of fugitive criminals, and he was committed under s. 10 of the Extradition Act, 1870. In the foreign warrant issued in France the prisoner was accused of the crime of "abus de confiance"; and by Article 3 of the treaty one of the crimes for which extradition is to be granted is "abus de confiance ou détournement par un banquier, commissionnaire, administrateur," &c. In the police magistrate's warrant of committal the offence was described as "fraud by an agent":—Held, that the description of the offence in the warrant was sufficient, and that the facts upon the depositions disclosed a primâ facie case of fraud by an agent within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 75, to justify the prisoner's committal for trial if the offence had been committed in England, and therefore the magistrate was right in committing him under the Extradition Act. Piot, Ex parte, 48 L. T. 120; 15 Cox, C. C. 208; 47 J. P. 247.

The charge contained in a French warrant against a prisoner under arrest in England was that in 19 cases he had embezzled or misappropriated money entrusted or delivered to him in his capacity of notary. The warrant of the secretary of state addressed to the chief magistrate of the metropolitan police courts recited that a requisition had been made for the surrender of the prisoner upon an accusation of "fraud by a bailee," within the jurisdiction of the French Republic. The magistrate's warrant of commitment recited that the prisoner was accused of "fraud by a bailee and frauds as an agent":—Held, upon an order nisi for habeas corpus to discharge the prisoner, that the French warrant stated an offence within article 3, No 18, of the Extradition Treaty, 1876, which the home secretary's warrant translated into the corresponding English provision of the same article; that the magistrate's warrant was good; that the term "embezzlement" in the French warrant might with equal propriety be translated "fraudulent misappropriation"; and that in four out of the nineteen cases there was evidence that the prisoner had been entrusted with property for safe custody in the terms of s. 76 of the Larceny Act, 1861. Accordingly a primâ facie case against the law of England had been made out. Bellencontre, In re, 60 L. J., M. C. 83; [1891] 2 Q. B. 122; 64 L. T. 461; 39 W. R. 381; 17 Cox, C. C. 253; 55 J. P. 694.

G. and H. were charged with conspiring together in A., in the jurisdiction of the government of H., to obtain goods by false pretences from H. & Co. in M., in the jurisdiction of the government of G. They wrote letters from A. (containing the false pretences) to H. & Co., in G., ordering goods to be sent to them in A.; they also orally (with like false pretences) ordered the same goods from the agent of H. & Co. who called on them in A. The goods were sent from M. as ordered. On the receipt of the goods, G. and H. sent them to E., whither soon after they themselves absconded; and were there arrested at the request of the government of G. The warrant of arrest described the fugitive criminals as "suspected of fraud." On the application for their discharge, it was contended that the warrant of arrest was bad for insufficiency; and that the offence, if any, had been committed in H. and not in G., so that they ought not to be delivered up to the government of G:—Held, that the foreign warrant of arrest was sufficient, and did not require the offence to be so set out as to strictly satisfy the English definition of the crime committed abroad; but it was enough if it purported to be a judicial document issued by a court of competent authority ordering the arrest of the fugitive criminal. Reg. v. Jacobi, 46 L. T. 595, n.

A native of Switzerland was apprehended on November 12, under the Extradition Act, 1870, on a warrant charging him with "crimes against bankruptcy laws." On November 28, a rule nisi for a habeas corpus was obtained, on the ground that the offence was not sufficiently alleged in the warrant. On November 29, a fresh warrant was lodged charging the offence more specifically: —Held, that the first warrant contained a sufficient description of the offence to justify the apprehension and detention of the prisoner. Terraz, Ex parte, 48 L. J., Ex. 214; 4 Ex. D. 63; 39 L. T. 502; 27 W. R. 170; 14 Cox, C. C. 153.

The court differed as to whether the validity of the second warrant might be gone into on the argument of the rule obtained on the validity of the first. Ib.

The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 75, reciting a convention between her majesty and the king of the French, provides for the mutual delivering up to justice persons who, being accused of certain offences therein specified (inter alia, fraudulent bankruptcy), committed in one country, shall be found within the territories of the other; and empowers a justice in England, upon a requisition duly made in the name of the king of the French, and signified by the warrant of the secretary of state to such justice, to issue his warrant for the apprehension of, and to commit, the person accused to gaol, there to remain until delivered pursuant to such requisition. A Frenchman was committed upon a charge of fraudulent bankruptcy committed in France. The warrant of commitment directing the gaoler to keep him in custody "until he shall be discharged by the due course of law," is insufficient. Besset, In re, 6 Q. B. 481; 1 New Sess. Cas. 337; 14 L. J., M. C. 17; 9 Jur. 66.

By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 76, s. 1, in case requisition should be made at any time by the authority of the United States, in accordance with a treaty between them and this country of the 9th of August, 1842, for the delivery of any person charged with piracy committed within the jurisdiction of the United States, who shall be found within the territories of her majesty, it shall be lawful for one of the secretaries of state, by warrant under his hand and seal, to signify that such requisition has been made, and to require all justices of the peace to govern themselves accordingly, and to aid in apprehending the person so accused, and committing such person to gaol for the purpose of being delivered up to justice:—Held, that the statute has reference, not to acts of piracy jure gentium, which are equally cognizable by all nations, but only to such acts as are constituted piracy by the municipal law of the United States, and which are, therefore, not punishable elsewhere than in their jurisdiction. And therefore it is sufficient if a warrant of a justice, ordering the apprehension of a person, in compliance with this statute, is made in the form given by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 120. Tivnan or Ternan, In re, 5 B. & S. 645; 33 L. J., M. C. 201; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 34; 10 L. T. 499; 12 W. R. 858; 9 Cox, C. C. 522.

In order to enable a justice of the peace to issue his warrant under the statute for the apprehension and committal for trial of an accused person, it need not appear that there was an original warrant for his apprehension in the United States, or depositions taken against him there. Ib.

The warrant need not allege that the evidence before him was taken upon oath. Ib.

Committal upon improper Warrant—Other Charges.]—A prisoner was committed to be extradited to France upon a warrant of committal which was found to be bad by the court, but other offences alleged against him were included in the French warrant for his extradition:—Held, that he was entitled to be discharged. Reg. v. De Portugal, or De Portugal, In re, 55 L. J., Q. B. 567; 16 Q. B. D. 487; 34 W. R. 42; 50 J. P. 501.

Jurisdiction to Review Magistrate's Decision.]—The decision of a magistrate, who commits a prisoner for extradition, that the offence charged is not of a political character, is subject to review by the court on an application for habeas corpus. Castioni, Ex parte, 60 L. J., M. C. 22; [1891] 1 Q. B. 149; 64 L. T. 344; 39 W. R. 202; 17 Cox, C. C. 225; 55 J. P. 328.

Upon an application for a habeas corpus in the case of a fugitive criminal committed by a police magistrate under the Extradition Act, the court has no power to review the decision of the magistrate on the ground that it was against the weight of the evidence laid before him, there being sufficient evidence before him to give him jurisdiction in the matter. Reg. v. Maurer, or Maurer, Ex parte, 52 L. J., M. C. 104; 10 Q. B. D. 513; 31 W. R. 609.

By the Extradition Act, 1870, when a fugitive criminal is brought before a police magistrate, the latter is to hear the case in the same manner and to have the same jurisdiction and powers, as near as may be, as if the prisoner were brought before him charged with an indictable offence committed in England:—Held, upon a rule for a habeas corpus, upon a committal by a police magistrate, that as a court of common law is not a court of appeal in such a case, it will not question the judgment of the magistrate if the case was within his jurisdiction and there was any evidence to support his decision. Huguet, Ex parte, 29 L. T. 40; 12 Cox, C. C. 551.

Law of Local Venue.]—Where the offence is one continuous transaction committed partly in one country and partly in another, the English law of local venue in criminal matters ought not to be applied to the extradition of fugitive criminals. Reg. v. Jacobi, 46 L. T. 595, n.

Attachment for Contempt of Court during Arrest under.]—An attachment issued by the High Court of Justice for disobedience of an order of the court in a civil action is not an offence within the meaning of the 19th s. of the Extradition Act, 1870. Therefore, where a party to an action in the chancery division was arrested in Paris for a crime under the Extradition Act, and while in prison in England under the warrant was served with an attachment for disobedience to an order in the action: —Held, that the attachment was valid, and that the prisoner was not entitled to his discharge until he had cleared his contempt, although he had been acquitted of the criminal charge. Pooley v. Whetham, 50 L. J., Ch. 236; 15 Ch. D. 435; 43 L. T. 267; 29 W. R. 296—C. A.

"Apprehension"—Person already in Custody —Arrest without a Warrant.]—Under s. 8 of the Extradition Act, 1870, a fugitive criminal who is already in custody may be detained for an offence coming within the act, even though he was originally arrested without any warrant. The word "apprehension" in s. 8 includes "detention":—Semble, per Brett, L. J., that a constable would be justified in arresting without a warrant a fugitive from a foreign country on reasonable grounds of suspicion that he has committed a crime which would be a felony if committed in the United Kingdom. Reg. v. Weil, 53 L. J., M. C. 74; 9 Q. B. D. 701; 47 L. T. 630; 31 W. R. 60; 15 Cox, C. C. 189—C. A.

Trial under wrong Name—Jurisdiction.]—T. was received into custody from the Swedish police in Stockholm, where he was in prison, having been arrested under the name of D., under which name he was extradited. D. had previously been connected with T., and it was proved that T. and D. were different persons:—Held, that the court having jurisdiction to try the indictment, it was immaterial under what name T. was extradited. Reg. v. Finkelstein, 16 Cox, C. C. 107.

Detention of Articles produced under a Subpœna duces tecum.]—At the hearing of an application for the extradition of a person charged with a theft committed abroad, certain articles forming part of the stolen property were produced under a subpœna duces tecum by a witness who claimed the property in them under a bonâ fide purchase from the prisoner in England. The magistrate committed the prisoner for extradition, and gave a verbal direction that the articles produced by the witness should be detained by the police for the purposes of the prosecution abroad. On an application by such witness under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 5, for an order to the magistrate to direct the delivery up of the articles:—Held, (1) that the magistrate was functus officio the moment he made the committal for extradition; (2) that the verbal direction for the detention of the articles being given without jurisdiction, the court had no power under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 5 (which deals solely with acts relating to the duties of magistrates) to make the order asked; (3) that even if the court had power the applicant would require to establish his title to the articles; and (4) that the applicant's possessory title to the articles had been lawfully divested by their production under the subpœna duces tecum. Reg. v. Lushington, Otto, Ex parte, [1894] 1 Q. B. 420; 10 R. 418; 70 L. T. 412; 42 W. R. 411; 17 Cox, C. C. 754; 58 J. P. 282.

1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

Fictitious Conveyances.]—As to the principles on which fictitious conveyances operate. See Wood v. Lambirth, 1 Ph. 8; 5 Jur. 741.

Fictitious conveyances will not be drawn into question by chancery. Anon., Cary, 4.

Court never makes recoveries good upon equitable circumstances. Salvin v. Thornton, Ambl. 548; 1 Bro. C. C. 73.

The force of a conveyance by common recovery to extinguish all conditions, powers, and incidents annexed to an estate tail, arises from hence, that the law considers it for this purpose in nature of a real action, and that the recoverer is in by right. Pullen v. Ready, 2 Atk. 591.

Fine, Nature of.]—A fine, with proclamations by a tenant in tail, whether the proclamations are finished in his lifetime or not, will bar the issue in tail, because the fine is quasi a judgment, and the issue in tail claims the estate through his ancestor, whose right was barred by the judgment. Hume v. Burton, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 270.

A fine is conclusive evidence: it is a judicial act of the court, and has in everything the form and description of a record; it is a record in C. B. and a matter that can only be tried by the court and not by a jury. Id. 60.

But a recovery is grounded on the act of the party. Id. 83.

Where a fine with proclamation is levied by tenant in tail, and the præcipe is brought in the same term against the conusee of such fine, and a common recovery suffered there, such fine, præcipe, and common recovery form one common assurance. Id. 204.

The act which gives to fines their present force and efficacy, which directs their operation, and where they operate has made them irresistible, does not materially depart from those rules under which other judgments have been held to be conclusive. The effect of that act is two-fold. Under that act a fine with proclamations by a tenant in tail, whether the proclamations are finished in his lifetime or not, will bar the issue in tail, because the fine is quasi a judgment, and the issue in tail claims the estate through his ancestor, whose right was barred by the judgment. Again, by that statute a fine with proclamations, if five years are suffered to pass without claim, will bar every man who does not come within the savings of that act, because there the fine acts quasi in rem, for, by the proclamations, all men are invited to claim, if they have any right, and having failed to do so, within the time prescribed by law, they are therefore barred. Id. 270.

2. Agreements to Levy or Suffer.

a. Specific Performance.

Specific performance of an agreement to levy a fine. Holles v. Carr, 3 Swan. 645.

Issue in tail not bound unless fine actually levied, although tenant in tail was decreed to levy fine. Weale v. Lower, cited 2 Vern. 306.

—— Death before Compliance with Decree.]—Tenant in tail sells for a full value, receives the money, and covenants to levy a fine, and was afterwards decreed to do it; yet dying (though in prison for not performing the decree) his issue could not be bound. Fox v. Crane, 2 Vern. 306.

The court will not decree that which seems to be impossible: and it is more than doubtful whether the old law now prevails, by which a man was compellable to procure his wife to levy a fine. Frederick v. Coxwell, 3 Y. & J. 514.

b. Infant, by.

A recovery by an infant who appears by attorney is void. Zouch v. Mitchell, Godb. 161.

The only possible way to make valid a recovery suffered by an infant is to have a writ of privy seal and sign manual signifying the king's pleasure that a common recovery be suffered by the infant, who is thereupon examined, with his friends, as to the circumstances of the case; and if the court sees it will be of advantage to the infant, they will admit it. Hume v. Burton, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 264.

The caption of a fine by de po. is of equal authority as if taken in court, and is equally conclusive evidence. Id. 60.

But it is otherwise of the caption of a warrant of attorney, acknowledged in a common recovery, which is the act of the party, and a matter in pais. Id. 98, 111. And see Winchester (Bishop's) case, 3 Comb. 1.

The writ of de po. does not direct the commissioners to examine a party. Ib.

If an infant or non compos mentis suffer a recovery by attorney, it is error, for neither of them has capacity to transfer an authority to a third person to act for him. Id. 23.

Infancy cannot be assigned for error, by the vouchee in a common recovery, after he comes of age. Id. 230.

A petition to the king to direct his judges to take a fine or recovery from an infant referred to the Lord Chancellor. Mackworth's case, 1 Vern. 461.

A fine cannot be taken from an infant, but a recovery may by the king's special direction. Ib.

Court will, if necessary, order infant, feme covert, being heir or trustee, to levy a fine. Anon., 2 Com. 615.

An infant trustee may levy a fine, but Lord H. doubted whether he could suffer a recovery without a privy seal. Bowes, Ex parte, 3 Atk. 164. S. P., Smith, Ex parte, Ambl. 624.

An infant on whom an estate is descended may, by an order from this court, convey by a common recovery. Johnson, Ex parte, 3 Atk. 559.

An infant mortgagee or trustee, who is a feme covert, may convey by fine. Maire, Ex parte, 3 Atk. 479; Com. 615.

c. Lunatic, by.

A fine shall not be reversed for non sane memory or imprisonment, for the contrary appears by the fine. Hume v. Burton, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 245.

There is no instance of a recovery suffered by an idiot which can only be accounted for from the consciousness that such an act could not stand. Id. 90.

Alienations, not of record, by an idiot after inquisition may be avoided by sci. fa. Id. 124.

Where the vouchee in a common recovery appears by attorney, the caption of the warrant appointing such attorney, appearing on the record to be taken by the chief justice of C. B. out of court, is not conclusive evidence of the capacity of such vouchee as to the soundness of mind to make such attorney, and suffer such recovery. Id. 16. For a history of this cause, see Rochfort v. Ely (1 Bro. P. C) 450; but more fully, Hume v. Ely (7 Bro. P. C.) 369.

Where a lunatic who had no issue, was seised of an estate tail in possession, with the immediate reversion to himself in fee, and the land had been sold under the 1 Will. 4, c. 65, for payment of his debts, an order was made on the committee to suffer a recovery on behalf of the lunatic, in order to complete the title to a purchaser. Brand, In re, 1 Myl. & K. 150.

Recovery suffered by one not in possession has no operation. Wynne v. Cookes, 1 Bro. C. C. 515.

Father and son, on the son's marriage, by lease and release, convey lands to trustees and their heirs to the use of the father for life; remainder to his wife for life; remainder to the son for ninety-nine years, if she should so long live; remainder to trustees during his life to support contingent remainders to the son's intended wife for life for her jointure; remainder to the first and every other son of that marriage in tail male; remainder to the daughter or daughters of that marriage, and the heirs of their bodies, till they shall, out of the rents, issues, and profits have received 3,000*l.*; remainder to the heirs of the body of the son; remainder to the second son of the father, and to his first and other sons; remainder to the right heirs of the son for ever. There were issue of the marriage only two daughters, who, being in possession after all the particular precedent estates determined, suffer a common recovery, and it was held that this was no bar of the subsequent remainders, the limitation to them being only a security till the 3,000*l.* was raised. Stanhope v. Thacker, Pre. Ch. 435.

By settlement before the marriage of D., the father, after limiting an estate to his son and the heirs of his body, limited it, in default of such issue, to the use of R. for ninety-nine years, if he so long live, remainder to trustees and their heirs during his life upon trust to preserve, &c.; and after the end of the said term, to the use of the first, &c., son of the said R. in tail, with several other remainders, and the last to E., the father of the lessor of plaintiff, in the same words as the limitation to R. R. had one son, F., and when he came of age they levied a fine to make a tenant to the præcipe, and suffered a recovery in which F. was the vouchee:—Held, that this fine and recovery were no bar. Smith v. Packhurst, 3 Atk. 135; 2 Stra. 1105; Andr. 315.

Where the parties had no seisin to warrant the fine, the courts of law will not presume or strain a point to work a wrong. Townsend v. Ash, 3 Atk. 339.

But evidence of receipt of rent is a sufficient possession to levy a fine. Ib. And see Dormer v. Fortescue, 3 Atk. 124.

A wrong-doer, to gain a possession by disseisin, must not step on the land and then leave the right owner in possession, which, though sufficient to give a seisin on a feoffment, is not so to levy a fine. Ib.

A., by his will, ordered all personal estate to be sold, for the payment of his debts and legacies; and in case it should prove insufficient, he devised his real estates to his executors, for the purpose of making good the deficiency; he then devised his real estate after such time as his debts and legacies should be paid by the rents and profits thereof, to E., for life; and in case E. should have any issue male, then to such issue male, and his heirs for ever; and after the decease of E., in case he left no issue male, then after such time as the testator's debts and legacies were fully paid, he devised part of his said estate to J. in fee, and the residue to N. in fee. E. entered into possession, and kept down the interest of the debts; but afterwards suffered a common recovery of the whole estate, and declared the uses thereof to himself in fee:—Held, that an estate for life was vested in E. at the time of the recovery, notwithstanding the debts were not paid, and that he could make a good tenant to the præcipe:—Held, also, that the remainders limited to J. and N. were contingent remainders, and well barred by this recovery. Barnardiston v. Carter, 3 Bro. P. C. 64; 1 P. W. 509.

Fine levied by lessee for years or at will, void. Secus, where by one having a defeasible right, and such lessee joins with him. S. C., 1 P. W. 520.

An equitable recovery will bar equitable interests. Salvin v. Thornton, Ambl. 549; 1 Bro. C. C. 73.

In a marriage settlement lands were conveyed to trustees and their heirs, to the use of the trustees and their heirs, to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the use of the wife for life, remainder to the first, &c., son of the marriage. These limitations to the husband for life, &c., are trusts only, and not uses, and when the husband and wife levied a fine to a mortgagee to raise money, though the fine would have been a forfeiture of the wife's estate for her life had she the legal estate, against which equity would not relieve; yet decreed that a trust estate was not forfeited by a fine. Whetstone (Lady) v. St. Bury, 2 P. W. 146; Pre. Ch. 591.

A limitation in a will to C. and his heirs, to the use of him and his heirs, in trust to pay debts, and after in trust for D., and the heirs of his body, and in default of the heirs of the body of D., remainder to C. and his heirs, on condition he married M.:—Held, that the recovery of D. barred the remainder to C., as being a remainder of the trust, not of the legal estate. Robinson v. Cuming, 1 Atk. 473; Forrest, 164.

An equitable recovery will not bar a legal remainder. Brydges v. Brydges, 3 Ves. 125.

e. Tenant to the Præcipe.

A defective common recovery as to a tenant to the præcipe will bar an estate tail in trust only. Beverley v. Beverley, 2 Vern. 132.

After length of time, court will presume there was a tenant to the præcipe in a recovery. Webber v. Montrath (Earl), 9 Mod. 143.

The only use of making a tenant to the præcipe by fine is, to put the evidence of there being a good tenant to the præcipe upon record, for where he is made by deed, if that deed is lost, the recovery falls to the ground. Hume v. Burton, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 273.

Where a fine with proclamation is levied by tenant in tail, and the præcipe is brought in the same term against the conusee of such fine and a common recovery suffered thereon, such fine, præcipe, and common recovery form one common assurance. Id. 204.

An equitable recovery is valid though the tenant to the præcipe is made by bargain and sale not enrolled within due time. Smith v. Frederick, 1 Russ. 174.

The word "and," in the last sentence of the 21 Geo. 2, c. 11, s. 8 (the act for validating recoveries after twenty years, notwithstanding the deed making the tenant to the præcipe should be lost and not appear), is to be read "or"; and it is not necessary, in order to bring a case within that statute, to give strict proof of the loss of the deed. Townsend v. Kingston (Earl), 6 Ir. Eq. R. 118.

Where a lease and release were made to create a tenant to the præcipe in a recovery, and the lease was lost:—Held, to be a case to which relief given by 14 Geo. 2, c. 20, s. 5, applies. Holmes v. Ailsbie, 1 Madd. 551.

A legal estate in the equitable tenant to the præcipe is no objection to an equitable recovery. Brydges v. Brydges, 3 Ves. 126.

An estate tail in an equity of redemption is well barred by a recovery, notwithstanding that the mortgagee did not join in making a tenant to the præcipe. Darcy v. Darcy, Wall. Lyn. 119.

A testator who was entitled to the equity of redemption in freehold premises, subject to a mortgage in fee, devised the premises to J. P. and another as trustees, on trust, in the first place, out of the rents to pay off the mortgage; and he then gave 10*l*. a year out of the rents, in the events which happened to E. P., and the remainder of the rents to J. P. and S. M. P. equally, and after the death of E. P. he devised certain parts of the premises to J. P. and the heirs of his body. S. M. P. died in the lifetime of E. P.; J. P. then joined in suffering a recovery, for the purpose of barring the estate tail: but neither E. P. nor the next of kin of S. M. P. joined in making the tenant to the præcipe:—Held, that the concurrence of E. P. was not necessary, but that the concurrence of the next of kin of S. M. P. was necessary, and that the recovery was, for want of such concurrence, invalid as to one moiety of the premises. Penny v. Allen, 7 De G. M. & G. 409; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 273; 5 W. R. 303.

The eldest son and heir of S. M. P. was in possession of the rents of all the devised premises, and joined in respect of certain parts of them, of which he was himself tenant in tail, in making the tenant to the præcipe. The court refused, in the absence of any other circumstances, tending to prove it, to presume a surrender to him of S. M. P.'s estate, pur autre vie, or to regard him as having a title to it by general occupancy. Ib.

Held, that there could be no general occupancy, whether the estate pur autre vie was regarded as legal or equitable, and that the person beneficially entitled, and not the executor or administrator of S. M. P., was the proper person to concur in making the tenant to the præcipe. Ib.

The title of the plaintiff, against which the recovery was set up, accrued in 1837; the plaintiff brought an ejectment in 1852, but was forced to abandon it, and to proceed in equity; he filed his bill in 1855:—Held, that he was not barred of his title to relief by lapse of time, and in particular that the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, s. 23, did not apply. Ib.

The account of rents and profits of those portions of the property to which the plaintiff was declared entitled was directed from 1852, the time when the plaintiff first made an adverse claim by commencing the ejectment. Ib.

f. Voucher.

The fine of a tenant in tail does not take away the right of the remainder-man, but the remainder-man is at liberty to prove the vouchee in a recovery non compos. Hume v. Burton, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 207.

A. is tenant for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., remainder to first and other sons in tail male, remainder to daughters in tail general, remainder to right heirs of body, remainders over. A. suffers recovery with single voucher, being himself tenant to the writ:—Held, recovery no bar to remainder over; nor is cured by Irish Act, 21 Geo. 2, c. 11, which is formed pretty much of English Acts 10 & 11 Will. 3, c. 14, and 14 Geo. 2, c. 20. Meredyth v. Leslie, 6 Bro. P. C. 338.

A recovery was suffered by a tenant for life and remainder-man in tail in 1781. The record stated that the tenant to the præcipe called to warranty the tenant for life, who appeared by his attorney, and warranted the tenant in tail, who appeared in person:—Held, that the recovery was valid, though the record did not state a summons to warranty, nor a warrant of attorney to authorise the appearance for the tenant for life. Stewart v. Conyngham (Marquis), 1 Ir. Ch. R. 534.

g. Fraud.

Fraudulent fines no bar in equity. Anon. Cary, 20.

Equity has power, by ordering a reconveyance, to vacate a fine fraudulently obtained. St. John v. Turner, 1 Eq. Abr. 258.

Articles and a conveyance, and fine in pursuance thereof, set aside for fraud. Coleby v. Smith, 1 Vern. 205.

A person obtained a fine by fraud, decreed a trustee. Barnesley v. Powel, 1 Ves. 289.

If a fine be gained by fraud from a feme covert under age, who dies, and her heir buys in a prior mortgage, and then levies a fine, and five years pass, and those who claim under the fine bring a bill to redeem, &c., equity will not assist them claiming under such fraudulent title, and also by reason of the fine and non-claim. Packington v. Barrow, Pre. Ch. 216.

A fine being fraudulently obtained, and erasures in several parts of it, to make it correspond throughout, is a crime in the persons concerned, but not relievable in a court of equity, being examinable only in the proper court where the fine was levied. Decree affirmed. Clark v. Ward, 4 Bro. P. C. 70; Pre. Ch. 150.

J., and W. his eldest son, join in a mortgage for 100*l*. and interest, and after payment it was declared that the premises should be to the use of J. for life; remainder to W. and the heirs of his body; remainder, over. B. takes an assignment of this mortgage, and afterwards prevails on J. to sell him part of the premises and levy a fine. This sale is a fraud upon W., and was accordingly set aside. Browne v Mitton, 4 Bro. P. C. 167.

Where a fine and non-claim is levied by one who got possession under a forged deed, the court will decree against the fine. Cartwright v. Pulteney, 2 Atk. 381.

A fine may at law be impeached for fraud, and in matters of fraud, equity has concurrent jurisdiction. Conry v. Caulfield, 2 Ball & B. 272.

A fine levied upon a possession acquired by the fraud of a tenant, but acquiesced in by the landlord with notice of the fraud, will operate as a bar. Ib.

Where tenants give a conditional possession, provided they may pay their rents to a third person till a suit is determined, a fine levied under such a possession shall not stand; for should such a fine prevail, what is said to be a solemn act and the end of all controversies, would cease to be so, and introductory of numerous frauds. Even at law, fines will be set aside for fraud, as in case of a tenant for years. Baker v. Pritchard, 2 Atk. 390. And see Fermor's case, 3 Comb. 77; Whaley v. Tancred, 1 Vent. 241; Brereton v. Gamul, 2 Atk. 240.

A., tenant for life, with remainder to B. in tail, by fraud gets B.'s authority to levy a fine. He sells the land, and invests the purchase money in the funds, where it is clearly identified. B. has no lien on this money against the other creditors of A. Newcomb v. Burden, 2 Anstr. 343.

Observations as to the legal and equitable right of parties to bar known existing adverse claims by fine and non-claim. If, in levying a fine, a direct fraud is practised, this court has undoubted jurisdiction to give relief; but the mere fact that a party levying a fine has good reason to believe that, if he did not do so, an adverse claim might or would be established against him, has never been considered as sufficient evidence of a good fraud to induce this court to grant relief. Langley v. Fisher, 2 Beav. 90; 15 L. J., Ch. 73.

Semble, if fraud has been practised on a tenant in tail, and carried into effect by a recovery, and tenant in tail dies without issue and without confirming this transaction, the next remainderman in tail may maintain a bill to set it aside. Secus, if the recovery was with the intention of barring the entail, and the fraud only applied to some part of the transaction, independent of that object. Bellamy v. Sabine, 2 Ph. 425; 17 L. J. Ch. 105. And see S. C., 5 L. J. Ch. 36.

Bill brought by a remainderman in fee of copyhold, expectant on an estate tail which was spent, to be relieved against an erroneous common recovery in the lord's court, praying that the lord might be decreed to suffer plaintiff to bring a plaint in the lord's court, in nature of a writ of error, to reverse this recovery, or that this court would relieve on the merits. The defendant demurred, and the demurrer was allowed. Ash v. Rogle, 1 Vern. 367.

Whether equity will supply the defect of a fine, where the conusor dies after the caption, and before the fine is perfected. Wharton v. Wharton, 2 Vern. 3.

Court of equity will not rectify a mistake of names in a recovery, especially after a length of time and against a purchaser. Bell v. Cundall, Ambl. 102.

By the chirograph of a fine, the caption appeared to be on the 23rd of October, 1701, whereas in fact the fine was not acknowledged till the 2nd of March following, and this was offered to be proved, but the court refused to admit the evidence, being of opinion that no proof of the time of acknowledging a fine ought to be admitted contrary to or against the chirograph, and that the record, which was the chirograph of a fine, could not be falsified until it was vacated or reversed. Saye and Sele (Lord) v. Lloyd, 4 Bro. P. C. 73.

Where a recovery in the common pleas has not been entered of record, if it appears by the prothonotary's minutes it was suffered at bar, the court will order it to be entered, with a proviso that it shall not prejudice any subsequent purchaser. So, as to an old judgment. Anon, 3 Atk. 521.

3. Operation.

a. Generally.

Fine cannot bar a possibility. Whitfield v. Fausset, 1 Ves. 390.

A bill in equity not sufficient to prevent the operation of a fine at law. Toulmin v. Price, 5 Ves. 238.

Fine levied pendente lite not to be set up at trial of ejectment. Lutwych v. Southin, Dick. 286.

To a plea in bar of a fine, a direct positive averment of seisin is necessary. Dobson v. Leadbeater, 13 Ves. 230.

A common recovery suffered in the common pleas will not pass a copyhold. Secus, in customary freeholds. Oliver v. Taylor, 1 Atk. 474.

A fine cannot be levied of money, or of the trust of money; and therefore, where a sum of money is covenanted to be laid out in lands, and settled to the same uses as the lands comprised in the deed, and the tenant in tail suffers a recovery of the settled estate before money is laid out, it shall go in the same manner as if no such recovery had been suffered. Warwick (Countess) v. Edwards, 1 Bro. P. C. 210.

Tenant for years, at will, or at sufferance, cannot by fine devest an estate, and turn it to a right. Brereton v. Gamul, 2 Atk. 249.

A fine could be levied only by a person having the freehold either by right or by money. Doe d. Parker v. Gregory, 4 N. & M. 308; 2 A. & E. 14; 4 L. J., K. B. 19.

"Disposition"—Copyholds—Tenant on the Rolls—Declaration of Trust without Surrender—Deed acknowledged.]—The words "dispose" and "disposition" in the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, are not used as technical words, but as ordinary English words of wide meaning, and where they are not limited by the context they are sufficient to extend to all acts by which a new interest, whether legal or equitable, in the property is effectually created. Consequently, a married woman, tenant on the rolls of copyholds, can by deed acknowledged under the act effectually declare herself a trustee of those copyholds. Such a disposition is not within the proviso of s. 77 of the act, and is therefore binding on her customary heir. Green v. Patterson (32 Ch. D. 95) discussed and distinguished. Carter v. Carter, 65 L. J., Ch. 86; [1896] 1 Ch. 62; 13 R. 824; 73 L. T. 437; 44 W. R. 73.

Application to Rectify Deed.]—The court is not prohibited by the Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), s. 47, from exercising its ordinary jurisdiction to rectify, on the ground of mistake, a deed of re-settlement which has been enrolled as a disentailing assurance under the act. Hall-Dare v. Hall-Dare, 55 L. J., Ch. 154; 31 Ch. D. 251; 54 L. T. 120; 34 W. R. 82—C. A.

Specific Performance.]—The jurisdiction which the courts of equity had prior to the Fines and Recoveries Act of decreeing specific performance of a contract by a tenant in tail to bar the entail by ordering him to levy a fine or suffer a common recovery for the purpose, and enforcing the order as against the tenant in tail personally by the process of contempt, has not been excluded by s. 47 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, and the court can still as against the tenant in tail himself decree specific performance of a contract to execute a disentailing assurance, although the contract is not enforceable as against the succeeding issue in tail. Bankes v. Small, 56 L. J., Ch. 832; 36 Ch. D. 716; 57 L. T. 292; 35 W. R. 765—C. A.

Though in a fine there are often more parcels of land than belong to the conusor, yet a court of equity will restrain it to such lands as really belong to him. Brereton v. Gamul, 2 Atk. 240.

Charge in the bill, that A. died seised in fee of estate in D., and elsewhere. Plea of fine of all the estates charged in the bill, and of which A. died seised in fee, sufficient without averments that they were in D., and none elsewhere; court will not intend that there are advowsons merely because mentioned in the fine. Butler v. Every, 1 Ves. J. 136.

Two sisters having estates tail, descended from the mother, and the remainder in fee aliunde. One levies a fine; the question was, whether it barred the fee in a moiety, or only the estate tail in one moiety, and the fee in a moiety of a moiety. It was determined at law that it barred a moiety. Church v. Edwards, 2 Bro. C. C. 180.

Where a fine and recovery is of so many acres in S., the party interested shall have his election, where and in what parts of the estate the fine and recovery should operate. Decrees, &c., in part reversed. Blaney (Lord) v. Mahon, 4 Bro. P. C. 76.

Estates held to be comprised in an equitable recovery, the words being sufficiently comprehensive, notwithstanding an inference against the possession of the party, and his intention to include them from acts done under a misconception of his title. Pigott v. Waller, 7 Ves. 98.

The vill of B. being part of the parish of B., a recovery is suffered of the tithes of the parish, the deed making the tenant, conveying the tithes of the vill. The tithes of the vill pass. Gibson v. Clark, 1 Jac. & Walk. 159; 20 R. R. 266.

A fine operates on all the conusor's interest, and will pass contingent as well as vested rights, if the intention be so, and the use of the word "vested" does not show a contrary intention, when there are also the words "all estate, &c." Under the circumstances, a share of an estate, of which a fine had been levied, and which descended to the conusor as heir-at-law after the levying of the fine, and the deed to lead the uses thereof, was held to be included in the fine, and subjected to the uses thereof, by a deed executed subsequently to the descent for the purpose of confirming the deed declaring the uses of the fine. Cole v. Sewell, 2 Con. & L. 344; 4 Dr. & War. 1; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 66. Affirmed, 2 H. L. Cas. 186; 12 Jur. 927.

An estate stood limited, subject to a life estate, to five persons, as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between them in tail. One of these persons, a married woman, concurred with her husband in a deed mortgaging her fifth share and all other the share and interest to which she might become entitled by the death of any of the other tenants in tail without issue; and the deed contained a covenant to levy a fine of the property expressed to be conveyed by the deed. A fine was levied, purporting to extend only to the fifth share. Afterwards, one of the other tenants in tail died without issue, and without having barred his estate tail:—Held, that there was an error in the fine, which was cured by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 7, and that the fine was effectual as to one-fourth, and not as to one-fifth only. Life Association of Scotland v. Siddal, Cooper v. Greene, 3 De G. F. & J. 58.

Bare Trustee.]—A bare trustee who, under s. 31 of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, is protector of a settlement, can insist on retaining the legal estate, only so long as the purposes of the trust exist, that is, so long as, according to the rules of the court of equity, he is required to be a trustee. Buttanshaw v. Martin, 1 Johns. 89; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 647.

Therefore, where there was a devise of lands to trustees upon trust for the testator's daughter during her life, for her separate use without power of anticipations, with remainder to the use of her children as tenants in common in tail, with remainders over:—Held, that the testator's daughter having become discoverte and being sui juris, could compel a conveyance by the trustees of the legal estate. Ib.

—— Husband.]—A husband of a married woman taking an estate to her separate use under a settlement is not a bare trustee under the settlement, within the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 31. Keer v. Brown, 1 Johns. 138; 28 L. J., Ch. 477; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 457; 7 W. R. 372.

Tenant in Tail in Possession.]—Where there is a tenant in tail in possession and a tenant in tail in remainder under the same settlement, the tenant in tail in possession is protector within the words of s. 22 of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74. Blewitt, In re, 6 De G. M. & G. 187; 25 L. J., Ch. 393; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 21; 4 W. R. 195.

Lord Chancellor—Lunatic.]—Circumstances under which the lord chancellor, as a protector, in lieu of the tenant in tail in possession, a lunatic, will consent to a disentailing deed for the purpose of securing a part of the estate for the near relations of the lunatic. Ib.

Joint Tenancy—Tenancy in Common.]—Freeholds stood limited to A., B., C., and D. jointly for life, remainder in fifths to them and E. as tenants in common in tail male, with cross remainders in tail male. A., without the consent of B., C., or D., and in the lifetime of E., who afterwards died without issue, executed a disentailing deed of his estates tail:—Held, that A. was protector not merely of an aliquot share of the estate, but specifically of his original fifth share, and also of the fourth of E.'s fifth in remainder after E.'s estate tail; and consequently that the original fifth share of A., and also his fourth of E.'s fifth share were effectually disentailed. Tufnell v. Borrell, 44 L. J., Ch. 756; L. R. 20 Eq. 194; 23 W. R. 717.

"Owner of Prior Estate."]—In s. 22 of the Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), which points out the person who shall be protector of the settlement, the "owner of the prior estate" is the person who is entitled under the settlement to the beneficial enjoyments of the rents and profits. Dudson's Contract, In re, 47 L. J., Ch. 632; 8 Ch. D. 628; 39 L. T. 182; 27 W. R. 179.

In a will made before the passing of the act, the testator, being entitled to the equity of redemption of a freehold estate, devised the same to trustees and their heirs to the use of them and their heirs during the life of A. (a married woman), in trust for A. for her separate use, with remainder to the use of B. in tail, with remainders over. In 1871, the legal estate being still outstanding, the first tenant in tail, with the consent of A. as protector, disentailed the estate:—Held, that the entail was effectually barred, A., and not the trustees, being the proper protector of the settlement. Ib.

Trustees under Will.]—The trustees of the real estate under a will were appointed also protectors of the estates tail created by the will. They all died, and new trustees of the real estate were appointed by the court:—Held, that the tenant for life had become protector of the settlement, and that he and the first tenant in tail could convey. Clarke v. Chamberlin, 16 Ch. D. 176; 29 W. R. 415.

ii. Married Women.

Where by a settlement executed prior to the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, realty was settled to the use of a married woman for life for her separate use, with remainder in tail, she alone is (by virtue of s. 24) protector of the settlement. Keer v. Brown, 1 Johns. 138; 28 L. J., Ch. 477; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 457; 7 W. R. 372.

Husband Convicted of Felony.]—Where the tenant for life is a married woman, whose husband has been convicted of felony, and the life estate is not settled to her separate use, the court of chancery, together with the wife, is the protector of the settlement. Wainewright, In re, Slade, Ex parte, 1 Ph. 258; 12 L. J., Ch. 426; 7 Jur. 499; 13 Sim. 260.

Wife with Separate Estate—Husband not a Bare Trustee.]—A husband of a married woman taking an estate to her separate use under a settlement is not a bare trustee under the settlement, within the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 31. Ib.

iii. Survivorship of Office.

When protectors of a settlement are appointed under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 32, the protectorship is not determined by the death of one of them, but vests in the survivor or survivors. Bell v. Holtby, 42 L. J., Ch. 266; L. R. 15 Eq. 178; 28 L. T. 9; 21 W. R. 321.

iv. Other Matters.

Court as Protector—Form of Petition for Consent.]—Form of petition, evidence, and order, on an application to the court to consent as protector of a settlement to the barring of an entail. Gravenor, In re, 1 De G. & Sm. 701.

Settlement by Court—Limitations.]—Where it was referred to the master to draw up a settlement in pursuance of a direction in a deed executed by the late Lord Despencer, that his estates should so far as the law would allow be strictly settled after his death, so as to go along with the title, so long as the holder of the title should be a lineal descendant of himself, but with a provision, that in case the title should at any time, within the limits prescribed by the law for strict settlements, be suspended or in abeyance, then that the rents and profits of the estates should during such interval be equally divided among the co-heirs per stirpes of the person or persons by whose death or deaths such abeyance should have been occasioned; the court approved of a settlement in which the latter object was secured by a proviso, subject to be defeated by a recovery, and not as suggested by the court at the first hearing, by a term of 1,000 years prior in limitation to all the other uses; and the court also declined to appoint a protector of the settlement by reason of his irresponsibility if appointed. Banks v. Le Despencer, 11 Sim. 508; 9 L. J. (N.S.) Ch. 185; 4 Jur. 601.

Joint Protectors — Death — Survivorship of Office.]—When protectors of a settlement are appointed under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74 (The Fines and Recoveries Act), s. 32, the protectorship is not determined by the death of one of them, but vests in the survivor or survivors. Bell v. Holtby, 42 L. J., Ch. 266; L. R. 15 Eq. 178; 28 L. T. 9; 21 W. R. 321.

d. Tenant for Life.

The fine of a tenant for life divested the estate of the remainderman or reversioner, leaving in him only a right of entry, to be exercised either then, by reason of the forfeiture, or within five years after the natural determination of the preceding estate. Goodright d. Fowler v. Forrester, 8 East, 552; 1 Taunt. 578.

By a will in 1789, an estate was devised to M. for life, with remainder as he should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment, remainder to the heirs of his body, with remainders over. In 1790, M. levied a fine to the use of himself in fee, and afterwards died without issue:—Held, in an ejectment by the heir-at-law of M., that the fine created a discontinuance, and gave a tortious fee to M., and that his heir-at-law was consequently entitled to recover in ejectment, the remainders over being divested, and the rights of the remaindermen only capable of being enforced by real action. Doe d. Gilbert v. Ross, 7 M. & W. 102; 10 L. J., Ex. 201.

A tenant for life and tenant in remainder of copyhold premises suffered a recovery, and declared uses on the surrender, which, as a voluntary conveyance, was void as against a purchaser:—Held, that the recovery itself was not therefore void, but that it operated so as to give them the fee by way of resulting use. Doe d. Baverstock v. Rolfe, 3 N. & P. 648; 8 A. & E. 650; 7 L. J., Q. B. 251.

A common recovery with double voucher suffered by a bare tenant for life as vouchee, without feoffment or fine, destroyed a contingent remainder immediately expectant on the life estate, notwithstanding 14 Eliz. c. 8. Doe d. Davies v. Gatacre, 5 Bing (N.C.) 609; 7 Scott, 807; 8 L. J., C. P. 338.

A., being seised in remainder during the life of B. and C., and the survivor, in trust to preserve contingent remainders, took an estate in possession to him and his heirs during the life of C., to make him tenant to the præcipe; and a recovery was suffered against A.:—Held, that the contingent remainders were saved by 14 Eliz. c. 8. Boughton v. Sandilands, 3 Taunt. 373.

If a fine was levied by a tenant for life, remainderman in tail, and reversioner in fee, a declaration of uses by the tenant for life and remainderman in tail did not bind the reversioner without his privity. Ros v. Popham, 1 Dougl. 25.

A. was tenant for years, remainder to B. for life, remainder to the first and other sons of B. in tail, remainder to the heirs of B. in tail; A. and B. joined in a lease and release to make a tenant to the præcipe, and suffered a recovery; the estate tail limited to the sons of B. was not divested by the recovery, nor was there any forfeiture of the estates of A. and B. Smith d. Richards v. Clyfford, 1 Term Rep. 738; 1 R. R. 384.

By indentures of lease and release, dated in 1796, an estate was conveyed to A. and B. to the use of A., his heirs and assigns for ever. A. devised the estate to his daughter and to the heirs of her body, but in case she died without issue of her body living at her decease, then to his nephew and his heirs for ever. In February, 1814, the daughter suffered a recovery of the estate, and upon her marriage, in March in the same year, executed deeds of lease and release, reciting that she was seised in fee-simple of the estate, and conveyed the same to trustees in trust for her and her husband and their issue, and in default of issue to such person as she should appoint. The marriage took place, and the daughter died without issue, having devised the estate in fee to her husband, who survived her:—Held, that the recovery suffered by the daughter was inoperative, because at that time the legal estate for life was in B., and she was only equitable tenant for life, with a legal remainder in tail, and consequently that the husband had no title. Ireson v. Pearman, 5 D. & R. 687; 3 B. & C. 799; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 119; 27 R. R. 490.

e. Tenant in Tail—Disentailing Deed.

i. Generally.

Form of.]—A disentailing deed need not pursue any particular form of conveyance; any deed which by its legal operation would have conveyed the fee simple, if the grantor had been seised in fee, will, if executed by a tenant in tail in possession, and if duly enrolled, bar the entail. Nelson v. Agnew, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 232.

It is not necessary that a disentailing deed should be assented to or executed by the grantees to uses. Ib.

—— Intention.]—By a disentailing deed under the Fines and Recoveries Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, after reciting that A. was tenant for life, with remainder to B. in tail, of the two estates therein comprised, and that A. being called upon to pay a debt of 1,200*l.* had applied to C., who had agreed to advance that sum, in consideration of B. joining in the deed, which he had also agreed to do; in order to defeat all estates tail of B., and to convey the inheritance in fee therein, A. and B. jointly conveyed the two estates, and all the interest of A. and B. therein, to C., for five hundred years, to secure the repayment of 1,200*l.* and interest, with remainder to A. for life, remainder to B. in fee. In fact, A. was tenant in tail, not tenant for life, of one of the two estates:—Held, that the conveyance being for valuable consideration as to both B. and C., the tenant in tail under A.'s entail could not be heard to say that such entail was not barred by the deed, the intention to convey the whole fee simple in the property so entailed being sufficiently expressed, and the operative words of the disentailing deed being large enough to bar such entail. Evans v. Jones, 1 Kay, 29; 2 Eq. R. 421.

Must Operate as a Conveyance.]—A disentailing deed, which fails to operate as a conveyance, cannot bar an entail.

A tenant in tail in possession of an estate executed a disentailing deed, purporting to be a grant of the estate to A. and B. and their heirs, free from all estates tail of the grantor, to the use of A. and B. and their heirs upon trust for the grantor. The deed was enrolled, but not executed by A. and B., who subsequently executed a deed of disclaimer:—Held, that the disentailing deed operated as a grant and not by the statute of uses; that it was rendered inoperative by the subsequent disclaimer by the grantees; and that the estate tail was not barred under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74. Peacock v. Eastland, 39 L. J., Ch. 534; L. R. 10 Eq. 17; 22 L. T. 706; 18 W. R. 856.

Renders Estate Perpetual.]—A disentailing deed executed by a tenant in tail does not destroy the interest he possesses in the estate, but enables him, by the exercise of the power which that interest gives him, to render it perpetual. Lilford (Lord) v. Att.-Gen., L. R. 2 H. L. 63.

Defective Estates—Effect in Confirming.]—In 1825 a person took the benefit of the Insolvent Act, and executed an assignment of all his real and personal property in possession, reversion, or expectancy, to the provisional assignee, in trust for his creditors. The insolvent was at the time tenant in tail in remainder of real estate, and in 1826 he became tenant in tail in possession by the death of his father. In 1831 he became bankrupt, and the commissioners executed a disentailing deed of his real estate. In 1844 he died, leaving issue inheritable under the entail. The assignee under the insolvency claimed the estate against the the assignees under the bankruptcy, on the ground that the estate conveyed to him by the deed of 1825 was enlarged into a fee simple by the disentailing deed executed under the bankruptcy:—Held, that the deed of 1825 only passed such interest as the insolvent had power to convey without fine or recovery, and did not operate as a contract to convey the fee. Sturgis v. Morse, 29 L. J., Ch. 766; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 766; 8 W. R. 737.

The rule that disentailing assurances will enlarge and confirm defective estates and titles, previously granted, rests on technical grounds, and does not apply to estates created by statutory powers, in the absence of some paramount equity overriding the power to bar the estate tail. Ib.

Insolvent Trader — Sale — Confirmation to Purchaser.]—Where a trader sold an estate, and conveyed it as tenant in fee simple, with the usual covenant for further assurance, and became bankrupt, and it was afterwards considered that he was tenant in tail only, it was ordered that the commissioner should be at liberty to execute a deed of confirmation to purchaser. Fripp, Ex parte, Phelps, In re, 1 De G. 293.

Entailed Money.]—A disentailing deed under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 71, affects entailed money, although not yet due, and not yet liable to be invested in the purchase of land. Fordham v. Fordham, 34 Beav. 59; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 28; 11 L. T. 529; 13 W. R. 197.

Heirlooms — Defeasible Estate Tail.]—If a tenant in tail in remainder, whose estate is defeasible by the birth of issue of a prior existing tenant for life, executes a disentailing deed, and dies during the life of such tenant for life, he will not obtain a title to chattels under a gift in the nature of heirlooms to the person for the time being in the enjoyment of the estate under the limitations of the will of a testator. Hogg v. Jones, 8 L. T. 816.

Covenant to Disentail—Specific Performance —Parties.]—To a bill by the covenantee, for specific performance of a covenant entered into by a tenant in tail in remainder, to disentail the estate after the decease of the tenant for life, judgment creditors of the tenant in tail, whose debts have been made charges on his estate, under the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, are not necessary parties. Petre v. Duncombe, 7 Hare, 24; 17 L. J., Ch. 370; 12 Jur. 24.

Statute forbidding Alienation—Effect of.]—When lands are limited to a person and the heirs of his body by a statute which forbids the alienation of any portion of the lands therein mentioned by the donee or the heirs of his body, the estate thus created is nevertheless a tenancy in tail deprived of one of its ordinary incidents—namely, that the entail can be barred and the heirs in tail and the remaindermen cut off. Abergavenny (Earl) v. Brace, 41 L. J., Ex. 120; L. R. 7 Ex. 145; 26 L. T. 514; 20 W. R. 462.

Estate Tail whether Well Barred.]—In 1872 certain lands devised by will were held by trustees on trust, subject to the estate of a tenant for life, for the second son of the testator's daughter A. for life, with remainder to the third son of A. for life, with remainder in tail in each case to the issue of such son. In that year the second son of A. and his eldest son by deed barred the entail; and in the same year the third son of A. died, leaving his eldest son, the plaintiff, surviving. There was a proviso in the will that in case of a certain event happening the trusts in favour of the second son of A. and his issue should be postponed and to take effect in remainder next immediately after the trusts in favour of the third son of A. and his issue. That event happened in 1883. On the death of the tenant for life in 1891, the plaintiff claimed a declaration that he was entitled to the possession and rents of the said lands:—Held, that the disentailing deed was effectual to bar the plaintiff's estate. Milbank v. Vane, 62 L. J., Ch. 629; [1893] 3 Ch. 79; 2 R. 443; 68 L. T. 735—C. A.

A testator in 1827 devised lands to trustees and their heirs upon trust to stand seised for the life of A., and also until the whole of his just debts and all interest thereon should be paid, and gave the trustees power to set and let the same, and to apply the rents and profits, and the value of whatever timber might be considered at its best growth, towards the payment of the debts, and then to pay the rents and profits to A. for life, and after his death to the heirs of his body, and in default of such issue, to the testator's right heirs for ever. In 1830 the entail was barred:—Held, that the trustees took a fee-simple estate, and that the estate tail was well barred. Collier v. Walters, 43 L. J., Ch. 216; L. R. 17 Eq. 252; 29 L. T., 868; 22 W. R. 209.

S., by will, gave 5,000*l.* to the eldest son of his late brother for life, with remainder upon trusts corresponding with the limitations made by A. of the C. estate in favour of his issue, but subject to an executory limitation over on the death under twenty-one, without issue then living, of any person who under the said limitations of the C. estate, would be tenant in tail by purchase. A. had never made any settlement, but had registered according to the law of Scotland two deeds of entail of the C. estate, of which he was then tenant in tail in possession. A.'s eldest son having executed a disentailing deed, and thereby become owner in fee of the C. estate, claimed the 5,000*l.* absolutely:—Held, that he had become absolutely entitled to the 5,000*l.* on completion of the instrument of disentail. Schank v. Scott, 22 W. R. 513.

A., B., C. and D. were joint tenants of freeholds for life, with remainder to A., B., C., D., and E., as tenants in common in tail with cross-remainder. A., without the consent of B., C. or D., executed a disentailing assurance. Subsequently E. died without issue and without having barred his estate tail:—Held, that A. was protector of the same share of which he was tenant in tail, and that, therefore, he had effectually barred his estate tail as well in the one-fourth of E.'s fifth share to which he was entitled in remainder on E.'s estate tail, as in his original one-fifth share. Tufnell v. Borrell, 44 L. J., Ch. 756; L. R. 20 Eq. 194; 23 W. R. 717.

Two sisters having estates tail, descended from the mother, and the remainder in fee aliunde. One levies a fine; the question was whether it barred the fee in a moiety, or only the estate tail in one moiety, and the fee in a moiety of a moiety. It was determined at law that it barred a moiety. Church v. Edwards, 2 Bro. C. C. 180.

Party Executing must be Tenant in tail.]—A deed of disentailer, executed under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, has no effect in barring future contingent estates, unless the party executing it was in fact a tenant in tail. Slater v. Dangerfield, 15 M. & W. 263; 16 L. J., Ex. 139. See Evans v. Jones, Kay, 29; 2 Eq. R. 421.

Estate to Illegitimate Child Barrable.]—An estate granted by Charles the Second to one of his illegitimate children for love and affection may be well barred by bargain and sale under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 15, notwithstanding 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 20. Grafton (Duke) v. London and Birmingham Ry., 5 Bing. (N.C.) 7; 6 Scott, 719; 1 Arn. 363; 8 L. J., C. P. 47.

and their heirs, to the use of his daughter A. for life, and after death, for such one or more of her children, or his, her, or their issue, in such manner and form as A. should by will appoint; and, in default of appointment, "for all and every her children, and the heirs of their body or bodies lawfully begotten, in equal shares and proportions." The testator then proceeded, "And in case of the death of my daughter A., without leaving any child her surviving, and in the event of such child or children her surviving and dying without leaving any issue of his or her body, then in trust for my own right heirs for ever." A. had a son, who died in her lifetime, having previously joined with her in the execution of a disentailing deed:—Held, that the son took a vested estate tail under the will, and consequently that the ultimate limitation to the right heirs of the testator was barred by the disentailing deed. Richards v. Davies, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 861; 32 L. J., C. P. 112; 11 W. R. 430—Ex. Ch.

"Disposition"—Disentailing Deed only Enrolled.]—A disposition is made to a purchaser for value, within the meaning of the proviso in 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 38 (Fines and Recoveries), although the disentailing deed, conveying a fee to the tenant in tail to such uses as he shall direct, is the only deed enrolled; provided that deed and the other deeds declaring the uses in favour of the purchaser form part of one and the same transaction. Crocker v. Waine, 5 B. & S. 697; 33 L. J., Q. B. 316; 10 L. T. 600; 12 W. R. 905.

Fine must be Levied.]—Issue in tail not bound, unless fine actually levied, although tenant in tail was decreed to levy fine. Weale v. Lower, cited 2 Vern. 306.

Tenant in tail sells for a full value, receives the money, and covenants to levy a fine, and was afterwards decreed to do it; yet dying (though in prison for not performing the decree) his issue could not be bound. Fox v. Crane, 2 Vern. 306.

The fine of a tenant in tail does not take away the right of the remainderman, but the remainderman is at liberty to prove the vouchee in a recovery non compos. Hume v. Burton, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 207.

Fine a Quasi Judgment.]—A fine with proclamations, by a tenant in tail, whether the proclamations are finished in his lifetime or not, will bar the issue in tail; because the fine is quasi a judgment, and the issue in tail claims the estate through his ancestor, whose right was barred by the judgment. Id. 270.

Equity of Redemption—Estate tail in Condition as to Assuming Name—No Notice.]—An estate tail in an equity of redemption is well barred by a recovery, notwithstanding that the mortgagee did not join in making a tenant to the præcipe. Darcy v. Darcy, Wall. Lyn. 119.

Recovery.]—Tenant in tail conveys his estate to the use of himself and his intended wife, for their lives, with remainder to the heirs of their bodies, and after marriage suffers a recovery; the recovery bars but a moiety, and is a severance of the joint estate. Moody v. Moody, Ambl. 649.

Where there is a deed to lead the uses of a recovery, tenant in tail cannot declare new uses, but such subsequent declaration must be by all parties concerned in interest. Stapilton v. Stapilton, 1 Atk. 7.

Where a father was tenant for life, with remainder to his son in tail, who, on his marriage, by lease and release, conveys his estate to trustees in strict settlement, and some time afterwards joins with his father in making a mortgagee of the same estate, and suffers a recovery to the use of the mortgagee:—Held, that the recovery shall notwithstanding come first to the use of the marriage settlement. Cheney v. Hall, 2 Eden, 357.

Recovery suffered by deaf and dumb person, and settlement to uses set aside, though no actual fraud. Ferres v. Ferres, 2 Eq. Abr. 695.

Copyholds—Post-Nuptial Settlement—Disposition.]—A feme covert entitled to an equitable estate tail in copyholds at B. executed, in February, 1870, a deed declaring that such copyholds should be held in trust for such persons as she and her husband should jointly appoint, and in default for herself in fee. The deed was duly acknowledged, but was not entered upon the court rolls of the manor within six months after execution. By a deed of settlement dated in March, 1870, she and her husband purporting to exercise this joint power, appointed the copyholds at B., and also covenanted to surrender those and other copyholds to which she was entitled in fee, to trustees upon trust to sell, invest the proceeds, and hold the fund (in the events which happened) for her for her separate use for life, then for her husband for life, and then for her children other than her eldest son. No sale or surrender of any of the copyholds was ever made. The feme covert had several children, and after the deaths of her and her husband the trustee of the settlement petitioned that all the copyholds might vest in him for all the estate therein of the eldest son and customary heir, who was an infant, and the court made a vesting order according to the prayer of the petition:—Held, first, that the deed of February, 1870, being a mere declaration of trust by the tenant in tail, and not a "disposition" within the Fines and Recoveries Act, was inoperative as an assurance to bar the estate tail in the copyholds at B. Secondly, that in concurrence with Honeywood v. Foster (30 Beav. 1) and Gibbons v. Snape (1 De G. J. & S. 621), and upon the construction of the statute, that, taking s. 41, together with ss. 50 and 53 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, a disentailing assurance by an equitable tenant in tail of copyholds, which is not entered upon the court rolls of the manor within six months after execution, is void; and consequently that the power of appointment which the deed of February, 1870, purported to create could not be exercised. Thirdly, that the settlement of March, 1870, was not a disposition by the feme covert within the act, and could not be treated either as an assignment of her equitable interest in the copyholds or as a valid declaration of trust, or as anything more than a mere covenant to surrender. Green v. Paterson, 56 L. J., Ch. 181; 32 Ch. D. 95; 54 L. T. 738; 34 W. R. 724—C. A.

If a tenant in tail suffers a recovery, and declares uses which are void, he does not take back an estate tail, but an estate in fee. Tanner v. Radford, 6 Sim. 21.

Tenant in tail may suffer a recovery and bar his issue; though he had previously, by an innocent conveyance, aliened in fee. Bond v. Bond, Hay & J. 374.

If a tenant in tail by purchase under a settlement, made by his ancestor ex parte maternâ, suffered a recovery, and declared the uses to himself in fee, he took the fee as a purchaser, descendible to his paternal heirs. Roe d. Crow v. Baldwere, 5 Term Rep. 104; 2 R. R. 550.

Where a common recovery was suffered of an estate tail, the recoveror acquired an absolute estate in fee simple derived out of the estate tail; so that if a tenant in tail by purchase, under a marriage settlement made by his ancestor ex parte maternâ, with the reversion in fee by descent ex parte maternâ, suffered a common recovery to the use of himself in fee, this estate would descend to his heirs general and not to the heirs ex parte maternâ; for the recovery did not let in the reversion in fee, but a new estate was thereby acquired, by purchase, which was totally different from the old estate tail. Martin d. Tregonwell v. Strachan, 6 Bro. P. C. 319; 1 Wils. 266; 2 Stra. 1179; 5 Term Rep. 107, n.; 2 R. R. 552, n.

Tenant in tail under will, before suffering recovery, settles estate on self for life, and with remainders to other tenants in tail in remainder under will, and afterwards suffers a recovery and mortgages the estate:—Held, valid against tenants in tail in remainder. Cormick v. Trapaud, 6 Dow, 60.

Articles on marriage to settle lands on the husband and wife for their lives, remainder to the first, etc., son of the marriage, remainder to the heirs male to the body of the husband by any wife, remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband by the first wife, remainder to the husband in fee, with provisions for the daughters of that marriage, if no son; husband has one daughter by the first wife, suffers a recovery, and marries a second wife, taking notice of his first marriage articles in his second settlement. He being tenant in tail by the articles, was allowed by his recovery to have barred his daughter of the first marriage. Powell v. Price, 2 P. W. 535.

Fine merges Estate tail.]—The operation of a fine levied by tenant in tail, who has the immediate reversion in fee in himself, is to merge the estate tail, and bring the reversion in fee into possession, by which means it will become liable to the incumbrances of all who were seised of it. Shelburne (Earl) v. Biddulph, 6 Bro. P. C. 356.

If a tenant in tail, remainder in fee, grant an estate to A., to commence after the death of tenant in tail, and then levy a fine to other uses, A.'s estate is merged in the fine. Langley v. Browne, 2 Atk. 201.

Vesting Order under Trustee Act, 1850.]—A vesting order under the Trustee Act, 1850, will, if consented to by the protector of the settlement, bar all estates in remainder, and not pass a base fee only under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74. Powell v. Matthews, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 973.

Under a devise of a mansion and family estate to several successively for life and in tail; with a proviso, that whatsoever person should, by virtue of the will, became possessed of or entitled to the estate, should, from the time he became so possessed, take upon himself the surname of Thelwall, and make the mansion his usual and common place of abode and residence:—Held, that a tenant in tail in remainder succeeding to the possession, who had also become heir-at-law to the testator, not being found to have had notice of the will of her ancestor, containing such condition, her title could not be impeached by the remainderman over, who brought ejectment after her death, against her husband, by whom she had issue, which died before her: she having also in fact suffered a recovery about four months after she came of age, within which period it was contended that she ought to have complied with the condition of residence to enable her to make a good tenant to the præcipe. Doe d. Kenrick v. Beauclerk, 11 East, 657; 11 R. R. 307.

Under a devise of land to a trustee and his heirs, out of the rents and profits to pay an annuity to the testator's wife, and the overplus to his nephews; and after his wife's death, to the use of his nephews and the survivor for their lives; remainder to the use of the trustee to preserve contingent uses and estates, during their lives; and after their decease in trust for the heirs male of the body and bodies of the nephews; and in default of such issue, then to the use of another in fee:—Held, that the limitation in trust for the heirs male of the body and bodies of the nephews was executed by the statute, and therefore united with the prior use executed in them for life; and that a recovery suffered of the whole estate by the survivor of the nephews after the death of the other nephew without issue, and after the death of his own issue, bound the entail, and defeated the subsequent limitation in fee. Doe d. Terry v. Collier, 11 East, 377; 10 R. R. 529.

Tenants in Common—Partition.]—Two tenants in common of copyhold estate in tail, agree upon a partition, each surrenders the part allotted to the other:—Held, entail was barred only as to a moiety. Oakley v. Smith, Ambl. 368; 1 Eden, 261.

Equitable.]—If cestui que trust in tail levies a fine or suffers a recovery, it shall have the same operation as if it were an estate at law, especially if it be on a consideration paid. Goodrich v. Brown, 1 Ch. Ca. 49; 2 Freem. 180; 1 Ch. Ca. 213; S. C., cited, and said to be the first precedent of the kind. And see Washburn v. Downs, 1 Ch. Ca. 213, where it is said to be Bridgman's opinion that it should not bar, but it is now well settled.

A. conveys his estate to trustees in trust to convey as he shall by will direct, and then by will directs them to convey to B., his son in tail male, remainder to C. in tail male, remainder to the right heirs of the testator, and B. being in possession suffers a recovery without the trustees, this shall bar the estate tail in equity; for a trust is a creature of equity, and to be governed by its rules. North v. Way, 1 Vern. 13; 2 Ch. Ca. 78.

Common recovery suffered or fine levied by cestui que trust of an estate tail has the same effect in equity as it would have at law in case the legal estate was in him. Carpenter v. Carpenter, 1 Vern. 440.

A trust estate in tail is not within the statute de Donis, and therefore may be barred by feoffment or bargain or sale, without fine or recovery. Washborn v. Downs, 1 Ch. Ca. 68. S. P., Beverley v. Beverley, 2 Vern. 132.

Recovery will bar equitable estates tail. Botler v. Allington, 1 Bro. C. C. 72.

Cestui que trust in tail brings a bill against the trustees to the intent they should join in a recovery; this not proper, but it is proper to pray that the trustees may convey the premises to the cestui que trust in tail, who may then suffer a recovery, though if the trustees are also trustees for any annuity subsisting, they are not compellable to part with the legal estate out of them to the cestui que trust in tail. Carteret v. Carteret, 2 P. W. 133.

Equitable recovery valid, though the tenant in tail was not, at the time, in actual receipt of the rents which the trustee paid over to other under a decree afterwards reversed. Grenville (Lord) v. Blyth, 16 Ves. 224.

Equitable tenant in tail aliens in fee by way of mortgage; a good equitable recovery may be suffered of the secondary equitable estate without the concurrence of the mortgagee. Nouaille v. Greenwood, Turn. & R. 26; 23 R. R. 174.

Presumption as to.]—In ejectment by heir in tail of E., one of three sisters who were coparceners in tail, to recover the third part of certain lands, it appeared that in 1748 two of them, M. and D., suffered recoveries of their shares, but E. did not. All married, and in 1759 their husbands entered into an agreement to make partition of the lands so held in coparcenary, as well as of other lands, part leasehold, part freehold, the leasehold having been devised by the same will which created the estates tail, and the freehold not being comprised in the will. The agreement provided only for a deed of partition. No deed was proved to have been executed. The lands had been held according to the agreement from the date of it till the ejectment. Those in dispute had been held by the husband of D., and those who took under him and her:—Held, that the possession being accounted for, the court could not presume a recovery or fine to bar the estate tail. Doe d. Millett v. Millett, 6 Q. B. 1036; 17 L. J., Q. B. 202; 12 Jur. 649.

Discontinuance.]—Discontinuance can only be created by a tenant in tail in possession at the time he does the act to defeat the settlement. Doe d. Jones v. Jones, 1 B. & C. 238; 2 D. & R. 373; 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 102.

The discontinuing party must be actually seised by force of the entail. Driver d. Burton v. Hussey, 1 H. Bl. 269.

Remainder under an old settlement barred by a fine and non-claim, the fine also working a discontinuance. Snell v. Silcock, 5 Ves. 469.

In order that a fine levied by a tenant in tail may operate as a discontinuance to the reversioner, the tenant in tail must be rightfully in possession, by force of his estate tail, at the time when the fine is levied. Anderson v. Anderson, 30 Beav. 209; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1067; 4 L. T. 19; 9 W. R. 492.

Therefore, a fine levied by a tenant in tail in remainder expectant upon the determination of an estate by the curtesy during the existence of the previous estate, and in favour of the tenant by the curtesy, held not to work a discontinuance. Ib.

Estates were settled to certain uses, with remainder to trustees for 500 years, to raise portions for younger children, remainder to the use of the first and other sons successively of the settlor in tail male, remainder to his heirs and assigns for ever. The estate came, by virtue of the settlement, to E., the eldest son, who also became the reversioner in fee. He levied a fine to his own use in fee, and devised the estates in trust for T., his brother, for his life, remainder to the use of T., his brother's son for life, remainders to the sons of the last-mentioned T. successively in tail male, remainder to the use of F. in fee. E. died without issue in 1774. T., the brother, suffered a recovery in the same year, devised the estates to T., his son, for life, with remainder over, and died in 1780. T., the son, entered on his father's death:—Held, that E., being the tenant in tail, possessed of the immediate estate of freehold, was not precluded by the term of 500 years from levying a fine, which worked a discontinuance of the remainders; and that he thereupon acquired a tortious fee, which he might devise as above. Doe d. Cooper v. Finch, 4 B. & Ad. 283; 1 N. & M. 130; 2 L. J., K. B. 41.

Creation of Base Fee.]—An estate being limited by a marriage settlement to the use of A. and his wife, and the heirs of their bodies, and A. having died, leaving his widow and three children, viz., G., an only son, and L. and H., daughters; the widow, in 1735, by a deed-poll, in consideration of an annuity to her by her son G., and of natural affection, granted, surrendered and yielded up the estate to G., in fee; and afterwards, during her life, suffered a recovery. The widow died in 1767; G. died without issue in 1779, having devised the estate to trustees to secure the payment of an annuity to W., the only son of his sister, L. (who was then dead), and subject thereto to B., the eldest son of W., for life, with remainder to his second son. In 1790 B. entered, on his father's death, into possession of the entirety of the estate, claiming under the will of G., and subsequently did various acts in the character of devisee for life. In 1814, he suffered a recovery of one moiety, and in 1816 conveyed the entirety of the estate to mortgagees in fee. In 1818, M., the descendant of the other coparcener, H., at B.'s request, suffered a recovery of a moiety, which it was declared should enure (subject to a term to secure a sum of money to M.) to the use of B.'s mortgagees:—Held, first, that the deed-poll of 1735 operated as a covenant to stand seised, and created a base fee, determinable by the entry of the issue in tail. Woodroffe v. Doe d. Daniel, 15 M. & W. 769; 7 Jur. 959—Ex. Ch. Affirmed in the House of Lords, 2 H. L. Cas. 811; 13 Jur. 1013.

Held, secondly, that this base fee did not, on the death of the widow, become merged in the reversion in fee in G., as the estate tail subsisted as an intermediate estate; and that, although G., being estopped by the recovery suffered by him, was not remitted to the estate tail, no right of entry accrued till his death, and therefore the period of twenty years, for the operation of the Statute of Limitations against the issue in tail, was to be calculated from G.'s death in 1779, and not from the death of his mother in 1767; and that B.'s entry in 1790 was not barred by lapse of time. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that although B. entered under the will, and manifested an intention to take the estate under it for his life only, that intention was immaterial, and he was remitted, nolens volens, as to his moiety, to the original estate tail, which was barred by the recovery in 1814. Ib.

Held, also, that the entry and remitter of B. did not operate to remit M., his coparcener, to the other moiety of the estate. Ib.

A tenant in tail of the gift of the crown, the reversion being in the crown, suffered a common recovery before 34 Hen. 8; he gained a base fee descendible and alienable so long as there was issue in tail, and the reversion was still in the crown. Neale d. Athole (Duke) v. Wilding, 1 Wils. 275.

In 1841, Lord H., being entitled in remainder (subject to the existing life estate of Lord D.) as tenant in tail to two undivided third parts of certain hereditaments, mortgaged his interest in the property to M. D. In 1842 Lord H. became bankrupt. At the date of his bankruptcy the statute in force was 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, as amended by the Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74). No disentailing deed was executed by the commissioners in bankruptcy pursuant to s. 64 of that statute; but in 1872 Lord H. executed a disentailing deed. In 1878 Lord D., the tenant for life, died. The plaintiff was a sub-mortgagee from M. D., and brought this action to realise his security:—Held, that the mortgage by Lord H., the tenant in tail in remainder, conferred upon the grantee, not merely an estate for the life of the grantor, but a base fee, voidable by the entry of the issue in tail; that, notwithstanding the intervening bankruptcy, the subsequent disentailing deed by the tenant in tail operated to confirm the base fee; and that, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled, under his security, to a base fee, to continue so long as there should be issue of Lord H. who would have succeeded under the entail. Hankey v. Martin, 49 L. T. 560.

Husband and Wife.]—Where feme covert joins with her husband in fine, she cannot recall it after five years. Anon., Cary 5.

Wife may dispose of personal estate as well as real by joining in fine with husband, over which she has absolute power, and on her consent her whole fortune was paid over to husband, though stated to be insolvent. Willats v. Cay, 2 Atk. 67.

A husband and wife levied a fine of the wife's lands, which was declared to the use of the husband and his heirs; the husband devised the lands to H.; H., as a voluntary devisee, shall not have the aid of equity against the heir of the wife. Coventry v. Hall, 2 Ch. Ca. 134.

Tenant in tail conveys his estate to the use of himself and his intended wife for their lives, with remainder to the heirs of their bodies, and after marriage suffers a recovery, the recovery bars but a moiety, and is a severance of the joint estate. Moody v. Moody, Ambl. 649.

Feme covert having power to convey her estate after her death conveys it by lease and release to take effect after her death. She afterwards joins with her husband in levying a fine to different uses; the lease and release held to have no effect, and the fine operated. Bramhall v. Hall, Ambl. 467.

Husband and wife levy a fine of her trust estate; this shall bind the wife, unless there be proof of force or fraud; and this, although she by answer had sworn that she was compelled by duress to join. Penne v. Peacock, Forrest, 41.

The wife joins in a mortgage and levies a fine to bar her dower, and in consideration thereof the husband agrees the wife shall have the equity of redemption in lieu of her dower, and afterwards he makes a second mortgage. This agreement is fraudulent as against the second mortgage, so far as to entitle the wife to the whole equity of redemption, but decreed she should have her dower notwithstanding the fine. Dolin v. Coltman, 1 Vern. 294.

Where a wife joined her husband in a fine to a purchaser, but not in the declaration of uses, she shall be bound after fifteen years' widowhood, and acquiescence. Swanton v. Raven, 3 Atk. 105.

Where a feme covert has an interest in land, no consent of a remainderman can bar the entail, unless there had been a fine, nor can equity carry such an agreement into execution as to a legal estate. Trafford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. 449.

A fine levied of the wife's estate must, in order to have validity, be the joint act of her and her husband. Belt v. Bell, Ll. & G. Plunk. 53.

Husband seised in right of his wife of a share of the New River water, the wife cannot be barred sans fine; and where they both without a fine mortgage such share, and the wife after the husband's death pays interest, this will not affirm the mortgage. Drybutter v. Bartholomew, 2 P. W. 127.

Purchase to the use of baron and feme and their heirs; they join in a mortgage to the vendor to secure part of the purchase money; upon a bill to foreclose, they answer jointly; the husband dies, and the wife insists on the want of a fine:—Held, the joint answer is equal to a fine, and mortgage good. Anon., Mos. 248.

Where by a marriage settlement a sum was to be raised out of an estate in Jamaica, and invested in lands in this country, to be settled on the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, or an option to her of an annuity for life, in lieu of such life estate, and before the money was raised the husband and wife joined in mortgaging the Jamaica estate, and the latter acknowledged before a magistrate the deed which, by the colonial law, was equivalent to a fine:—Held, that she thereby barred all interest at law or in equity in the estate, and was not, therefore, entitled to the dividends arising from the compensation money which had been invested. Forbes v. Adams, 9 Sim. 462; 8 L. J. (N.S.) Ch. 116.

Husband and wife being jointly entitled to equity of redemption in fee, convey it by deed without fine to mortgagee; wife survives; she or her heir may redeem at any time within twenty years from husband's death. Price v. Copner, 1 Sim. & S. 347; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 178.

—— Contingent Interest.]—Semble, a feme covert cannot, by a deed not acknowledged, convey a contingent interest in a term of years settled to her separate use. Bestall v. Bunbury, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 549.

Where, by an instrument executed before the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, real property is settled to the use of a married woman for life, for her separate use, with remainder over in tail, she is, under s. 24, the sole protector of the settlement, and her husband's consent is not requisite, under s. 34, to enable the tenant in tail to make an absolute disposition of the property. Keer v. Brown, 1 Johns. 138; 28 L. J., Ch. 477; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 457; 7 W. R. 372.

Before 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, a fine was necessary to pass the interest of a married woman in that part of her fee-simple estate which did not belong to her husband; and since that statute a deed duly acknowledged by her under s. 77 is necessary for that purpose, notwithstanding that the estate of the wife may be given to her for her separate use. Lechmere v.

Brotheridge, 32 L. J., Ch. 577 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 705 ; 8 L. T. 751 ; 11 W. R. 814.

But where a married woman has an estate for life for her separate use, in freehold hereditaments, she can alienate that estate without any acknowledgment under the statute ; for no fine was necessary for that purpose previously to the act. Ib.

—— "Interest in Land"—Reversionary Interest — Assignment — Beneficial Interest in Mortgage Debt.]—The beneficial life interest of a married woman in a trust fund properly invested by the trustees upon a mortgage of land is an "interest in land" within the Fines and Recoveries Act (Kay, L. J., dissenting). Newton's Trusts, In re (23 Ch. D. 181), overruled. Miller v. Collins, 65 L. J., Ch. 353 ; [1896] 1 Ch. 573 ; 74 L. T. 122 ; 44 W. R. 466—C. A.

—— Settlement—After-acquired Property—Future Interests—Expectancy—Power of Disposal.]—The Fines and Recoveries Act does not enable a married woman, by an after-acquired property clause in a settlement, to dispose of real estate in which she has only an expectation that some interest may accrue to her. Allcard v. Walker, 65 L. J., Ch. 660 ; [1896] 2 Ch. 369 ; 74 L. T. 487 ; 44 W. R. 661.

Malins' Act only applies to property to which a married woman is entitled under an "instrument" made after December 31, 1857. It does not apply to interests under intestacies, nor to mere possibilities. The married woman must at the date of the disposing deed have some existing title to the interests. Ib.

—— Application for Leave to Dispense with Husband's Concurrence.]—An application under s. 19 of the Fines and Recoveries Act on behalf of a married woman for leave to dispose of lands without her husband's concurrence, should, semble, notwithstanding the Judicature Acts, be made to the Queen's Bench Division. Giles (Ellen), In re, 8 R. 273 ; 70 L. T. 757. And see col. 62.

—— Settlement of Copyholds—Declaration of Trust by Deed Acknowledged—Validity—"Disposition."]—A voluntary declaration of trust of copyholds, made by a married woman, a tenant on the rolls, by deed acknowledged, with the concurrence of her husband, is a valid "disposition" in equity of the copyholds under s. 77 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, and the customary heir of the married woman will be bound by the trusts. Pride v. Bubb (41 L. J., Ch. 105 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 64) applied. Green v. Paterson (56 L. J. Ch. 181 ; 32 Ch. D. 95) distinguished. Carter v. Carter, 65 L. J., Ch. 86 ; [1896] 1 Ch. 62 ; 13 R. 824 ; 73 L. T. 437 ; 44 W. R. 73.

By a marriage settlement an estate was limited to the use of the husband for life : remainder to the use of the wife for life ; remainder to the children of the marriage, and, in default of issue, to the use of such person as the wife should appoint ; and, for default of such appointment, to the use of the right heirs of the survivor of the husband and wife for ever ; with power to the husband and wife to charge the estate ; and a power to trustees, in whom the legal estate was vested, to sell, by the direction and with the approbation of the husband and wife, or the survivor. The husband and wife borrowed a sum of money by way of annuity ; created a term of 1,000 years ; and levied a fine to G. in fee, with a deed declaring the uses to be "in trust to secure the regular payment of the annuity, and for corroborating and strengthening the said term" :—Held, that the fine did not operate to extinguish the power of the wife to consent to a sale of the settled estates, so as to prevent an exercise of the power of sale by the trustees. Tyrrell v. Marsh, 10 Moore, 305 ; 3 Bing. 31 ; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 138 ; 28 R. R. 577.

Where husband and wife granted to trustees an estate, of which the wife's father was seised in fee-simple, and afterwards, in the life of the father they levied a fine of the lands to the uses of the settlement, and the father afterwards died, leaving the wife one of his co-heiresses :—Held, that her moiety of the estate became subject to the uses of that settlement, by reason of the fine, as an estoppel against the husband and wife and all persons claiming title under them. Helps v. Hereford, 2 B. & Ald. 242 ; 20 R. R. 416.

Under the will of a testator, who died in March, 1862, M., a married woman, was entitled in reversion expectant on the death of a tenant for life to a share of the proceeds of real estate devised to trustees in trust for sale on that event. In August, 1862, in the lifetime of the tenant for life, M.'s husband executed a general assignment, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, of all his property to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors. In August, 1866, he was adjudged bankrupt, and in December following he obtained his discharge. The tenant for life died in January, 1869. By a deed executed in February following, and duly acknowledged by M. under s. 77 of the Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), M. and her husband assigned all moneys which should become due to them or either of them under the testator's will to S. by way of mortgage. Shortly afterwards the trustees of the will sold the real estate, and ultimately paid M.'s share of the proceeds into court under the Trustee Relief Act :—Held, that the husband was not precluded by the creditors' deed of 1862 or by his bankruptcy in 1866 from concurring with his wife in the mortgage of 1869, and accordingly that the mortgage was valid against the trustee of the creditors' deed and the assignee in bankruptcy. Jakeman's Trusts, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 363 ; 23 Ch. D. 344.

Under the will of a testator who died in 1843, his three children, T., W., & S., a married woman, were each entitled to one-third of his residuary estate, subject to the life interest therein of his widow. In 1844 T. died a bachelor and intestate. By a deed executed in 1854 (before Sir R. Malins' Act), to which the tenant for life, the trustees of the will, W., & S. and her husband were parties, and which was acknowledged by S. under the Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74) two mortgage debts, secured to the trustees on real estate and forming part of the testator's residuary estate, were assigned by the tenant for life and W. and by S. and her husband, with the privity of the trustees, by way of mortgage. The deed was executed under the erroneous assumption that, according to the terms of a gift over in the will, T. took no share in the testator's estate, and consequently his administrator was not made a party :—Held, that the deed was not effectual to pass S.'s share of the two mortgage debts. Williams v. Cooke

A testator devised lands to his wife for life; remainder to all the children of his brother who should be living at the time of his wife's decease. His brother left one daughter, who married, and afterwards, with her husband, during the life of testator's widow, levied a fine come ceo, &c., of the lands, and declared the use to A. After the death of the widow, A. brought ejectment against the tenant in possession:—Held, that it was maintainable, for that although the brother's daughter had only a contingent remainder during the life of the widow, and the fine could only operate by estoppel until the contingency happened, yet afterwards it operated on the estate. Doe d. Christmas v. Oliver, 10 B. & C. 181; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 137.

A testator devised to his daughter, E., the wife of H., for life; remainder to John, his daughter's son, and his heirs and assigns for ever; but in case he should die before the testator's daughter, E., and she should have no other child living at her death, his will was that his daughter should give and devise the premises to such person as she should think proper. The testator died in February, 1763, and John, the daughter's son, in April. In January, 1766, the daughter had another son. In November, 1770, H. died; and in 1773 E. levied a fine with proclamations:—Held, that, although at the death of the testator, and until the death of his grandson John, the power given to the daughter to devise to such person as she should think proper, could avail only as an executory devise; yet, upon the death of John, the character of the limitation changed, and it became contingent, and that it was therefore barred by the fine. Doe d. Harris v. Howell, 10 B. & C. 191; 5 M. & Ry. 24; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 123.

By a marriage settlement in 1806, manors and lands were limited to the use of the husband for life; remainder to the use of the wife for life; remainder in strict tail male; remainder to the wife in fee, in case she should survive her husband; but if she should die in his lifetime, remainder to the daughters successively in tail male; remainder to the use of such persons related by blood or consanguinity, as the wife by her will might appoint; and in case of no such appointment to the wife in fee. The settlement also contained a power for the trustees, at the request and with the direction of the husband and wife, or the survivor, to sell or exchange the settled estates, and for that purpose to revoke all or any of the uses contained in the settlement; and also a covenant for further assurance on the part of the husband and wife, and all persons claiming under the husband. In pursuance of this settlement certain fines were levied. By deed, dated March, 1807, reciting the settlement, and the fines levied in pursuance thereof, and the limitations therein contained; and that the wife was desirous of acquiring an absolute power of appointment over the manors and lands comprised in the settlement, in the event of her surviving, or dying in the lifetime of her husband, and there being a general failure of issue of her body inheritable to the manors, under the settlement, the husband and wife covenanted to levy certain fines sur conusance de droit come ceo, with proclamations, to G. and his heirs, of all the manors, lands, &c., comprised in the settlement; which fines were to operate, and to be taken to operate, first, for corroborating the uses contained in the settlement antecedently to the limitations to the use of the wife in fee-simple, and, subject thereto, to the use of such persons as the wife by will or deed might appoint. In pursuance of this latter deed, several fines come ceo, &c., were levied by the husband and wife:—Held, that these latter fines did not operate to extinguish or suspend the right or power of the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, to request and direct a sale or exchange of the settled estates under the powers for that purpose contained in the settlement, so as to prevent an exercise of those powers by the trustees. Jersey (Earl) v. Deane, 5 B. & Ald. 569. And see ESTATE.

When and by Whom.]—The inrolment of the deed of disposition, under the statute 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, may be made immediately upon the execution of the deed, and may be effected either by vendor or purchaser; and as the inrolment relates to the execution of the deed, it follows that a tenant in tail who has not barred the entail under the statute can, nevertheless, make a good title in fee simple. Cattell v. Corrall, 4 Y. & Coll. 228.

Copyholds—3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, Applicable to.]—The provisions of the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 74, as to the inrolment, within six months of the execution, of deeds to bar equitable estates tail, are applicable to copyholds; and unless such a deed affecting copyhold hereditaments is entered upon the court rolls of the manor, within six months after its execution, it is absolutely void. Gibbons v. Snape, 32 Beav. 130. Affirmed 1 De G., J. & S. 621; 33 L. J., Ch. 103; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1096; 9 L. T. 132; 11 W. R. 1087.

A deed to bar an equitable estate tail must, in order to operate upon copyhold lands, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, be entered on the court rolls within six calendar months after the date of its execution, by analogy to the time within which it must be inrolled in the court of chancery to affect freeholds. Honywood v. Forster, 30 Beav. 1; 30 L. J., Ch. 930; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1264; 4 L. T. 785; 9 W. R. 855.

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 53, requires disentailing deeds relating to copyholds to be entered on the court rolls of the manor of which they are held within six months after their execution. Boyd v. Pawle, 14 L. T. 753; 14 W. R. 1009.

Therefore, where an equitable tenant in tail of copyholds executed a disentailing deed, and neglected to enter it on the court rolls, but on the last day within the time limited produced it to the steward of the manor, who, upon being told that it could not be left in his charge, as it was required for other purposes, indorsed it with a memorandum to that effect:—Held, that the requirements of the statute had not been complied with, and the deed was invalid. Ib.

After Death of Tenant in Tail.]—A disentailing deed executed in pursuance of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92 (Irish) (similar to the English Act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), is valid if inrolled within six months from the time of its execution, although such inrolment has not taken place until after the death of the tenant in tail who executed the deed. Browne, Ex parte, Piers, In re, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 452. And see S. C., 13 Ir. Ch. R. 459.

The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92, s. 66, applies only to disentailing deeds executed by the same tenant in tail, and not to deeds executed by successive tenants in tail. Ib.

Therefore, where A., a tenant in tail, executed a disentailing deed, which was inrolled within the six months prescribed by the statute, but not until after A.'s death, and B., a succeeding tenant in tail, executed a disentailing deed to a purchaser for value after A.'s death, which was inrolled prior to the inrolment of the deed executed by A. :—Held, that the deed executed by A. was entitled to priority over the deed executed by B. Ib.

The 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92, has no application to the inrolment of a disentailing deed by a tenant in fee, nor to any disposition of lands otherwise than by a tenant in tail in pursuance of the Act. Ib.

f. Mortgages.

If a fine be gained by fraud from a feme covert under age, who dies, and her heir buys in a prior mortgage, and then levies a fine, and five years pass, and those who claim under the fine bring a bill to redeem, etc., equity will not assist them claiming under such fraudulent title, and also by reason of the fine and non-claim. Packington v. Barrow, Pre. Ch. 216.

Mortgagee is not barred by fine, by mortgagor in possession. Pomfret (Earl) v. Windsor (Lord), 2 Ves. 482.

Fine levied by a mortgagee, and five years' non-claim, will not bar the mortgagor of his equity of redemption. Welden v. Dux Ebor., 1 Vern. 132. And see Story v. Windsor (Lord), 2 Atk. 631 ; 1 Ch. Ca. 34.

A fine and non-claim is a good bar to an equity of redemption ; so it is to a bill of review. Lingard v. Griffin, 2 Vern. 189.

g. Charges.

A. devised lands to B. in tail, remainder to C. in tail, subject to the payment of legacies ; C. levies a fine, and five years' non-claim pass, and mortgages the lands ; fine and non-claim no bar of the legacies, C. having no title but under the will, the mortgagor must be supposed to have notice of the legacies. Drapers' Co. v. Yardley, 2 Vern. 662.

One having a sum of money charged upon land secured by a term in third person, levies a fine of the land : this extinguishes his right to the charge ; so if he suffers a recovery. Chandos (Duke) v. Talbot, 2 P. W. 605.

A., on his marriage, gave a bond of 600*l.* with a warrant of attorney, to confess judgment thereon, defeasance on payment of 300*l.* to his wife if she survived : afterwards she joined with him in a conveyance by fine of his real estate :—Held, that this extinguished her right, or any lien created by this judgment on the real estate. Goodrich v. Shotbolt, Pre. Ch. 333 ; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 18.

As to a fine of land not barring a rent-charge issuing out of the land. Whitfield v. Faussett, 1 Ves. 387.

Fine cannot bar a possibility. Id. 390.

A. had a rent-charge issuing out of lands which B. purchased among others with notice ; B. afterwards sold part of the lands so charged, and prevailed on A. and her husband to join in a fine to the purchaser. Though the rent-charge was thereby extinguished, yet as B. paid no consideration to A., she was relieved. —— v. Hawkes, 1 Ch. Ca. 273.

If a tenant in tail confesses a judgment and suffers a recovery to any collateral purpose, that recovery shall enure to make good all his preceding incumbrances, and a common recovery will let in this judgment, though a conusee of a judgment has neither the legal estate, nor any equitable lien. So a common recovery will let in a charge under marriage articles, and it makes no difference whether the estate be legal or equitable. Hart v. Middlehurst, 3 Atk. 376.

A fine by a tenant in tail, though levied with a different intent, operates, in the first place, to confirm any incumbrance previously created by him, by a voidable conveyance. Loyd v. Loyd, 2 Con. & L. 592 ; 4 Dr & War. 354.

A fine is a bar to every charge upon the land to which the party levying the fine is entitled in his own right. Beynon v. Gollins, Romilly's Notes of Cases, 132.

D. being tenant for life in 1799 demised all the lands and premises of which he was so seised for life, to certain trustees for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, upon trust to pay himself an annuity of 10,000*l.* per annum, and to apply the residue in payment of his creditors who should avail themselves of the benefit of the deed. In 1819 D. joined with B., his eldest son, the tenant in tail, in suffering a recovery and re-settling the estates ; and by a deed executed in 1822, after giving D. a power of charging the estates with a sum of 217,000*l.*, and B. a power of charging the estates likewise upon D.'s death with 100,000*l.* ; these estates were limited to certain trustees upon trust to pay B. an annuity of 5,000*l.*, with an additional annuity of 1,000*l.* on his marriage. B. married, and mortgaged the annuities, together with the 100,000*l.* which he was entitled to charge as aforesaid, for the purpose of securing large advances made to him by the plaintiff. On a bill filed by plaintiff for the purpose of obtaining the benefit of those securities, to which some of the creditors claiming under the trust deed of 1799 were made parties, they being in possession by a receiver appointed by the court, in a cause instituted for the purpose of carrying the trusts of the deed into effect :—Held, that the trusts of the deed of 1799 were not extinguished by the recoveries in 1819. Wallace v. Donegal, 1 Dr. & Wal. 461. Affirmed sub nom. Houlditch v. Wallace, id. 490 ; 5 Cl. & F. 629.

H. T., on his marriage, covenanted to settle certain lands upon certain trusts, under which portions were to be secured to his younger children : he afterwards sold the lands, and levied a fine to the purchaser : the fine was held to have no operation in equity to protect the purchaser :—Held, also, that H. T. was a trustee for his children, and that the fine could not give to the purchaser a benefit which the father himself could not take. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 459.

See also Smith v. Frederick, 1 Russ. 174 ; Brown v. Blake, 1 Moll. 368 ; Eales v. Conn, Sim. 65.

h. Remainders.

Father and son, on the son's marriage, by lease and re-lease, convey lands to trustees and their heirs, to the use of the father for life, remainder to the son for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, remainder to trustees during his life, to support contingent remainders to the son's intended wife for life, for her jointure, remainder to the first and every other son of that marriage in tail male, remainder to the daughter or daughters of that marriage, and the heirs of their bodies, till they shall, out of the rents, issues, and profits, have received 3,000*l.*; remainder to the heirs of the body of the son, remainder to the second son of the father and to his first and other sons, remainder to the right heirs of the son for ever. There were issue of the marriage only two daughters, who, being in possession after all the particular precedent estates determined, suffer a common recovery; and it was held that this was no bar of the subsequent remainders, the limitation to them being only a security till the 3,000*l.* was raised. Stanhope v. Thacker, Pre. Ch. 435.

If A. be a cestui que trust for life, remainder in trust for B. in tail, remainder to C. in fee, B. cannot, by a recovery, bar the remainder, if there be no good tenant to the præcipe. North (Lord) v. Williams, 2 Ch. Ca. 64.

Common recovery by cestui que trust in tail, bars the entail and all the remainders. North v. Way, 1 Vern. 13; 2 Ch. Ca. 63, 78.

Cestui que trust in tail, with remainder over, levies a fine and dies without issue, and there are five years and non-claim. By opinion of lord keeper, remainderman barred. Basket v. Pierce, 1 Vern. 226.

Entry of remainderman within five years after a fine levied by tenant in tail, will not save his right. Stapleton v. Sherrard, 1 Vern. 213; 3 Ch. Rep. 255.

Tenant in tail of a trust estate, with remainders over, cannot by will or settlement bar the remainders, or without a recovery, any more than tenant in tail of a legal estate. Kirkham v. Smith, Ambl. 518.

To bar legal remainders by common recovery there must be a legal tenant to the præcipe. Salvin v. Thornton, Ambl. 455; 1 Bro. C. C. 73.

One, having an equitable interest for the life of another, with legal remainder to himself in tail, and then to others, levies a fine and suffers a recovery; whether it will bar the legal remainders, quære. S. C., Ambl. 699.

Tenant in tail under will, before suffering recovery, settles estate on self for life, and with remainders to other tenants in tail in remainder under will, and afterwards suffers a recovery and mortgages the estate:—Held, valid against tenants in tail in remainder. Cormick v. Trapaud, 6 Dow. 60.

An equitable recovery will not bar a legal remainder. Brydges v. Brydges, 3 Ves. 125.

Remainder under an old settlement barred by a fine and non-claim, fine also working a discontinuance. Snell v. Silcock, 5 Ves. 469.

The fine of a tenant in tail does not take away the right of the remainderman, but the remainderman is at liberty to prove the vouchee in a recovery non compos. Hume v. Burton, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 207.

A fine with proclamations by a tenant in tail, whether the proclamations are finished in his lifetime or not, will bar the issue in tail; because the fine is quasi a judgment, and the issue in tail claims the estate through his ancestor, whose right was barred by the judgment. Id. 270.

Lands being settled by H. on sons of R. successively in tail male, with divers remainders over, and ultimate reversion, to H. and his heirs. H. is attainted of treason, and afterwards B., the issue in tail male, being in possession under the settlement, suffers a recovery. Quære, if it is a bar to reversion vested in crown by attainder. Blosse v. Clanmorris, 3 Bligh, 62.

As a tenant for life, and the person in remainder, in nature of a tenant in tail of a freehold lease, may certainly join and bar the next in limitation, so he who hath both the interests in himself may also bar the entail of such a lease. Forster v. Forster, 2 Atk. 259.

A second son tenant for life of a freehold lease, remainder to the heirs of the body of the father, the tenant for life, and the elder brother, may bar the entail. Ib.

It was doubted formerly, but now settled, that if a tenant in tail, remainder in fee, levy a fine, a common recovery bars the fee, and the issue in tail have not a scintilla juris. Langley v. Brown, 2 Atk. 201.

If tenant in tail, remainder in fee, grant an estate to A., to commence after the death of tenant in tail, and then levy a fine to other uses, A.'s estate is merged in the fine. Ib.

A. by his will ordered all his personal estate to be sold, for the payment of his debts and legacies; and in case it should prove insufficient, he devised his real estate to his executors, for the purpose of making good the deficiency. He then devised his real estate, after such time as his debts and legacies should be paid by the rents and profits thereof, to E. for life; and in case E. should have any issue male, then to such issue male and his heirs for ever. And after the decease of E., in case he left no male issue, then, after such time as the testator's debts and legacies were fully paid, he devised part of his said real estate to J. in fee, and the residue to N. in fee. E. entered into possession, and kept down the interests of the debts; but afterwards suffered a common recovery of the whole estate, and declared the uses thereof to himself in fee:—Held, that an estate for life was vested in E. at the time of the recovery, notwithstanding the debts were not paid, and that he could make a good tenant to the præcipe:—Held, also, that the remainders limited to J. and N. were contingent remainders, and well barred by this recovery. Carter v. Barnardiston, 3 Bro. P. C. 63; 1 P. W. 509.

Where lands are devised to A. for life, and if A. shall leave issue male, then to such issue male and his heirs for ever, and if A. shall leave no issue male, then to B. in fee; if A. suffers a recovery of these lands and five years pass, the right heirs of the testator are barred, in regard they ought to have entered upon such forfeiture, and have no new entry upon the death of the tenant for life. S. C., 1 P. W. 520.

Contingent remainder created by a limitation to the use of the husband and wife and survivor, and heirs and assigns of survivor, barred by a fine subsequently levied by the husband and wife. Parker v. Carter, 4 Hare, 409. And see Cole v. Sewell, 2 H. L. C. 186; 12 Jur. 927.

i. Power of Appointment.

A bare naked power is not barred by any of the statutes of fines, otherwise as to an interesse termini. Willis v. Sherrall, 1 Atk. 476.

Neither can a collateral or naked power be barred or extinguished by fine, feoffment, or any other conveyance. Albany's Case, 1 Com. 111. Digge's Case, 1 Com. 174. Edwards v. Slater, Hard. 415.

Power of appointment in grantee for life, though in favour of particular objects, is not a trust, and may be extinguished by a recovery. Smith v. Death, 5 Madd. 371.

j. Trust Estate.

Fine levied by a trustee and five years pass, does not destroy the trust, nor separate it from the land, but transfers them both together. Borey v. Smith, 1 Vern. 84 ; 2 Ch. Ca. 124.

If a man purchases an estate, which he sees has a defect upon the face of the deed, yet a fine will bar it, for that defect is the very occasion of the fine. So a man who purchases from a trustee who has levied a fine, is as much a trustee as he was ; and it is the same as to the grantee of a mortgagee, for his fine will not discharge the equity of redemption. The operation of a fine and non-claim is not by turning it into a right, but it is by force of the bar arising from the statute of non-claim. Story v. Windsor (Lord), 2 Atk. 631 ; 1 Ch. Ca. 34.

Trustee to preserve contingent remainders joining in a recovery with the remainderman in tail, having attained twenty-one, held no breach of trust ; and no objection to a specific performance. Biscoe v. Perkins, 1 Ves. & B. 485 ; 12 R. R. 279.

Fine and non-claim will not bar a person claiming under a trust ; if to a person having notice of the trust it is merely a conveyance. So, if trustee conveys to a person, with notice, and takes a reconveyance, it operates nothing. So, if the person to whom he conveyed had no notice, yet, on the reconveyance, the trust would attach, though it did not attach on the person to whom he conveyed ; nor would have attached, if that person had conveyed to another without notice. One taking from a trustee with notice, levies a fine to strengthen his estate : this shall not bar the cestui que trust. Kennedy v. Daly, 1 Sch. & Lef. 379.

k. Forfeiture.

If a tenant for life of a trust estate, limited to trustees to preserve, etc., levies a fine sur concessit of her life estate, it will not work a forfeiture of the estate for life, because it cannot affect the subsequent remainders which are preserved by the trustees. So, where a fine sur concessit is levied by a tenant for life (reversioner in fee, after several limitations in a deed or will), equity will never construe such a fine to work a wrong. Lethieullier v. Tracey, 3 Atk. 729 ; Ambl. 204, 220.

Conveyance of a chattel interest by sale and release cannot work a forfeiture or disseisin ; otherwise if it were by feoffment, but in that case the person entitled to take advantage of the forfeiture is not bound to do so till the expiration of the lease. Fines levied by parties not having the freehold have no effect ; they may be avoided by plea of partes finis nil habuerent. Saunders v. Annesley (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 99.

Tenant for life, remainder over, mortgages and levies a fine whereby estate is forfeited and remainderman recovers in ejectment, yet mortgagee having no notice of his being tenant for life only, and mortgagor, having made affidavit that he was entitled absolutely as heir-at-law, and that there was no will :—Held, entitled for life of mortgagor. Willis v. Fineux, Pre. Ch. 108.

On a marriage settlement, lands were conveyed to trustees and their heirs, to the use of the trustees and their heirs, to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the use of the wife for life, remainder to the first, etc., sons of the marriage : these limitations to the husband for life, etc., are trusts only, and not uses ; and when the husband and wife levied a fine to a mortgagee to raise money, though the fine would have been a forfeiture of the wife's estate for her life had she had the legal estate, against which equity will not relieve, yet decreed that a trust estate was not forfeited by a fine. Whetstone (Lady) v. St. Bury, 2 P. W. 146 ; Pre Ch. 591.

A., being tenant for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, etc., remainder to his first, etc., sons in tail, remainder to heirs of his own body, remainder to right heirs of his father the devisor, had a sister of half-blood who was daughter of father by former venter, and he had also sister of the whole blood. A. made a lease and re-lease, and thereby conveyed to B. in trust for payment of debts, etc., and levied fine thereof, but had not suffered recovery :—Held, that this altered the reversion, and that estate should go to right heirs of A. Stringer v. New, 9 Mod. 363.

Where a common recovery was suffered of an estate tail, the recoverer acquired an absolute estate in fee simple derived out of the estate tail ; so that if a tenant in tail by purchase, under a marriage settlement made by his ancestor ex parte maternâ, with the reversion in fee by descent ex parte maternâ, suffered a common recovery to the use of himself in fee, this estate would descend to his heirs general and not to the heirs ex parte maternâ ; for the recovery did not let in the reversion in fee, but a new estate was thereby acquired, by purchase, which was totally different from the old estate tail. Martin d. Tregonwell v. Strachan, 6 Bro. P. C. 319 ; 5 Term Rep. 107, n. ; 1 Wils. 266 ; 2 Stra. 1179.

m. Revocation of Will.

Where a common recovery is to a particular purpose, it shall operate as a revocation only to answer that purpose. Parsons v. Freeman, 3 Atk. 741.

Where the tenant in a common recovery has not pleaded non-tenure, he gains a new estate, though the limitations are to the old uses, and the will is revoked by it. Bennet v. Vade, 2 Atk. 324 ; 9 Mod. 212.

Recovery by tenant in tail with reversion in fee is a revocation at law, so in equity if an equitable estate. Williams v. Owens, 2 Ves. J. 598.

Where a devised estate is differently modified there is a revocation, otherwise where the testator remains with the same estate and interest, and subject to the same means of disposition, though changed as to the legal or equitable quality. Ib.

Fine for the mere purpose of a partition is no revocation even at law. Ib.

A recovery after a will, though no intention to revoke, is a revocation. Brydges v. Chandos (Duchess), 2 Ves. J. 430.

One devises his freehold estates to certain uses, and bequeaths a leasehold messuage to trustees to convey it to the uses of the freehold, so that they shall not be separate. He afterwards suffers a recovery of the freehold estates, which operating as a revocation of the freehold, the bequest of the leasehold is also revoked. Reversed in the House of Lords, as to this last point. Darley v. Darley, Ambl. 653 ; Dick. 397 ; 3 Wils. 6. But see Southey v. Somerville, 13 Ves. 492, where Lord Eldon said, he should be disposed to agree with the opinion of Lord Camden rather than the judgment of the House of Lords. And see Carrington v. Payne, 5 Ves. 404 ; 5 R. R. 87. Lowndes v. Stone, 4 Ves. 649 ; 4 R. R. 316. Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 280 : 8 R. R. 144.

A. devised estates of which he had only the equitable fee, and afterwards agreed to sell part of the estates, and to remove an objection taken by the purchaser, but which was not well founded ; he suffered a recovery :—Held, that though the recovery was an equitable one, and the purpose for which it was suffered was expressly mentioned in the deed declaring the uses, and though the limitations thereby made of the property not intended to be sold were precisely the same as before the recovery, and were expressed to be in restoration and confirmation of them, the will was revoked. Lock v. Foote, 5 Sim. 618.

n. Agreements to Settle.

A. covenanted on his marriage to lay out 3,000*l.* in the purchase of land, and to settle it on himself in tail, remainder to B. A. purchased the manor of D. with this 3,000*l.* and never settled it, but suffered a recovery thereof ; as the covenant was a lien on the land, so the recovery suffered thereof discharged the lien and barred B. of the benefit of the covenant, and the remainder. Marwood v. Turner, 3 P. W. 171.

Articles on marriage, to settle lands on husband and wife for lives, remainder to heirs male of body of wife by husband, remainder to heirs male by any other wife, remainder to heirs female by wife. Settlement is made before marriage, and said to be in pursuance of article, whereby lands are limited to husband for life without waste, and with power of making leases, remainder to first, etc., sons of marriage, in tail male, remainder to first and other sons in tail by other marriage, remainder to heirs of body of husband ; there are issue to daughters. Husband suffers recovery, and devises premises to sister ; daughters may compel reconveyance to them. West v. Erisey, 1 Com. 412 ; 2 P. W. 349. And see on appeal, 1 Bro. P. C. 225.

Articles on marriage, to settle lands on the husband and wife for their lives, remainder to the first, etc., son of the marriage, remainder to the heirs male of the body of the husband by any wife, remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband by the first wife, remainder to the husband in fee, with provisions for the daughters of that marriage, if no son. Husband has one daughter by the first wife, suffers a recovery and marries a second wife, taking notice of his first marriage articles in his second settlement. He being tenant in tail by the articles, was allowed by his recovery to have barred his daughter of the first marriage. Powell v. Price, 2 P. W. 525.

In marriage articles, there is a diversity between a limitation to the heirs of the body of a man, and to the heirs female of the body of a man, and the sons more favoured than daughters. Id. 539.

By a marriage settlement, an estate in Jamaica was limited to trustees for a term, upon trust to raise 18,000*l.*, to be laid out in land in Great Britain of the value of 600*l.* a year, to be settled when purchased on the husband for life, with the remainder to the wife for life, with an option to her to have an annuity of 600*l.* out of the land instead of the land itself ; the wife afterwards joined with the husband in mortgaging the Jamaica estate in fee, and acknowledged the mortgage-deed before a magistrate, which by the laws of Jamaica is equivalent to a fine :—Held, that the wife had thereby barred herself of all claim to a provision under the settlement. Forbes v. Adams, 9 Sim. 462 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 116.

M. G. being seised in fee of the estate of Brookhill, in 1768, on her marriage with E. B., and while under age, entered into articles, whereby the estate of Brookhill was agreed to be settled to the first and other sons of the marriage in tail male, and M. G. covenanted to levy a fine when of age, to the uses of the articles. In 1777, a fine was levied by E. B. and wife, but no uses were then declared. By a deed, in 1794, reciting that up to that time no uses had been declared of the fine of 1777, E. B. and wife conveyed the lands of Brookhill to the second son of the marriage in tail, and declared the fine of 1777 should enure to the uses of the deed of 1794. On the death of E. B., who survived his wife, the second son entered into possession of the said lands, as tenant in tail, under the deed of 1794, and in 1821, a fine levied with proclamations, and five years' non-claim elapsed. Upon a bill filed by the heir-at-law of the eldest son of the marriage, to carry the articles of 1768 into effect :—Held, that the fine levied in 1821, and the five years' non-claim, barred the plaintiff's right to recover, inasmuch as that fine was levied by a person who did not derive, under the title of E. B., and who had, at most, constructive notice only of the articles of 1768. Bell v. Bell, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 44.

4. Declaration of Uses.

Where there is a deed to lead the uses of recovery, tenant in tail cannot declare new uses, but such subsequent declaration must be by all parties concerned in interest. Stapilton v. Stapilton, 1 Atk. 7.

Where there is an agreement to suffer a recovery, and uses are by it declared, though it is suffered at a different time from the recovery covenanted to be suffered, yet if there is no subsequent declaration of uses, it shall enure to those so declared. Ib.

Where the uses of the recovery are declared to be the recoveror and his heirs, it does not create a new use, but he is in one of the ancient use. Garth v. Cotton, 3 Atk. 756.

A covenant in a mortgage deed, by husband and wife, in 1692, to levy a fine in the Easter term following, but not levied till Trinity term in 1695. For 10*l.* more they join in a conveyance of the equity of redemption, and covenant that the fine theretofore levied should be to the uses of the latter deed. The covenant in 1695 was held to be good and binding on the husband and wife, and the former deed might be laid out of the case, as the covenant under it was not strictly pursued. Fleetwood v. Templeman, 2 Atk. 79.

Where a father was tenant for life, with remainder to his son in tail, who on his marriage, by lease and re-lease, conveys his estate to trustees in strict settlement, and some time afterwards joins with his father in making a mortgage of the same estate, and suffers a recovery to the use of the mortgage:—Held, that the recovery shall notwithstanding come first to the use of the marriage settlement. Cheney v. Hall, 2 Eden, 357.

The father, tenant for life, remainder to the son in tail, with remainder over. The son is an infant, and on an advantageous match being proposed for the son, the father and infant join in marriage articles, and the father only covenants that, within a year of the son's coming of age, the father and son will join in a fine and recovery of the family estate to the several uses. The infant son seals the deed, and within a year after he comes of age joins with his father in a fine and recovery, but no deed to lead to uses is to be found. The infant son sealing the articles not sufficient to declare the uses of the fine and recovery. Nightingale Ferrers (Earl), 3 P. W. 206.

P., tenant for life, remainder to his son R. for life, remainder to his, R.'s, first, etc., son in tail. P., by indenture tripartite, between himself, his son R., and J., covenants to levy a fine of the premises, but R. only sealed the deed, without joining in any covenant; this no surrender nor release, nor consequently any destruction of the contingent remainder to the first, etc., son of R. Id. 210, n.

Where a fine is covenanted to be levied to certain uses, it is competent to the parties, whilst it is directory, to vary the uses, but the uses must be varied by all the parties, and by an instrument of as high a degree as the former, and the fine ought to be levied to the same conusee; and, therefore, where a fine covenanted to be levied to certain uses was omitted to be levied, and several years afterwards a fine was levied by the same conusors pursuant to a deed declaring other uses, and to a different conusee:—Held, that the fine operated to the uses of the latter deed, and not of the former. Houghton v. Tate, 3 Y. & J. 486.

A fine was levied of certain premises by a man and his wife, to the use of B., his executors, etc., for 999 years, and at the same time the lessor covenanted, that if B., his heirs or assigns, should by deed express his will and mind to have the freehold and inheritance of the said premises, then such fine should enure to such persons, and for such estates as by such deed should be expressed. This lease was held a mere chattel, and passed by a general residuary bequest of personal estate. Williams v. Llandaff (Bishop), 1 Cox, 254.

If a tenant in tail suffers a recovery, and declares uses which are void, he does not take back an estate tail, but an estate in fee. Tanner v. Radford, 6 Sim. 21.

If a fine is levied pursuant to a decree for a particular purpose, equity will not permit any other use to be made of it. Goodrich v. Brown, 1 Ch. Ca. 49; 2 Freem. 180. And see Baden v. Pembroke (Earl), 2 Vern. 56. Brown v. Blake, 1 Moll. 368; and Dickens v. Unthank, 24 L. J., Ch. 501; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 916; 3 W. R. 504.

5. Non-Claim.

Entry of remainderman within five years of a fine levied by tenant in tail will not save his right. Stapleton v. Sherrard, 1 Vern. 213.

A fine levied by a termor for years is a forfeiture, but the reversioner has five years after the expiration of the term. Brandlyn v. Ord, 1 Atk. 571.

Where lands are devised to A. for life, and if A. shall leave issue male, then to such issue male and his heirs for ever; and if A. shall have no issue male, then to B. in fee. If A. suffers a recovery of these lands, and five years pass, the right heirs of the testator are barred; in regard they ought to have entered upon such forfeiture, and have no new entry upon the death of the tenant for life. Carter v. Barnardiston, 1 P. W. 520.

A fine with proclamations, if five years after the title accrued are suffered to pass, will bar every man who does not come within the savings of the statute, because there the fine acts quasi in rem, for by the proclamations all men are invited to claim, if any right they have; and having failed to do so within the time prescribed by law, they are therefore barred. Hume v. Burton, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 271.

An ejectment and confession of lease, entry, and ouster without further proceeding, is not such an actual entry as will be sufficient to avoid a fine or Statute of Limitations. Sterling v. Penlington, 9 Mod. 248.

The difference between the bar created by the Statute of Limitations, and by a fine and non-claim, is, that the former takes away the remedy, the latter takes away the right. Bell v. Bell, Ll. & G. Plunk. 65.

Effect of fine and non-claim in equity. Salsbury v. Bagott, 2 Swan. 603.

Plea of fine and non-claim in bar to plaintiff's title overruled, because the pendency of suit in equity, as it was proper matter of equity, prevented the running of the fine. Baker v. Pritchard, 2 Atk. 389.

It would be dangerous where a person enters on the foot of a trust, and never makes any declaration of his having performed the trust in pursuance of the will, to construe this such an entry as that a fine and non-claim would bar the right of plaintiff, a remainderman. Shields v. Atkins, 3 Atk. 560.

Fine levied after a feoffment with livery, is a bar after the five years are run out. Id. 526.

A fine and non-claim cannot be pleaded in bar to a bill to prevent the setting up of an outstanding term. Leigh v. Leigh, 1 Sim. 349.

Non-claim on a void fine of no effect. Pomfret (Earl) v. Windsor (Lord), 2 Ves. 482.

On fine by tenant for life, reversioner need not enter until five years after his death. Ib.

Fine by persons in possession and non-claim, the legal estate being in trustees, held not to bar an equitable charge under the deed of trust, though a great length of time had elapsed. Id. 472.

Trustee for term to pay debts, purchased the inheritance from tenant for life, and had it conveyed to him by fine and feoffment; remainderman is not entitled to account of rents, except from his entry to avoid the fine; and if he neglects to claim for five years he is barred. Reynolds v. Jones, 2 Sim. & S. 206.

6. Acknowledgments to bar Wife's Interest.

a. Validity of, generally.

General Principle.]—There is no principle enabling this court to bind the real estate of a married woman, in any manner, except by those formalities required by law. Both principle and authority concur in showing that this court has no authority to alter the character of the property of an infant, and convert realty into personalty. Field v. Moore, 7 De G. M. & G. 691; 25 L. J., Ch. 66; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 145; 4 W. R. 187.

No contract entered into by a married woman with a person who knows her to be married, otherwise than by deed acknowledged, or by some act in court in which she is put at arm's length from her husband, can bind her real estate, even although she has for a long time led the other party to believe that she will abide by such contract, and he has, on the faith of such belief, irrevocably abandoned valuable rights. Nicholl v. Jones, 36 L. J., Ch. 554; L. R. 3 Eq. 696; 15 L. T. 383; 15 W. R. 393.

A wife may, by a deed duly acknowledged, to which her husband is a party, acquire a power to dispose by will of her real estates, whether in possession or in reversion. Pride v. Bubb, 41 L. J., Ch. 105; L. R. 7 Ch. 64; 25 L. T. 890; 20 W. R. 220.

Acknowledgment passes all Interest.]—The interest of a married woman in the proceeds of real estate devised by the will under which she took such interest, upon trust for sale:—Held, to pass by her deed executed and acknowledged according to the provisions of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, for abolishing fines and recoveries, and substituting more simple modes of conveyance, whether such interest be in possession or reversion, and whether the sale of the real estate be or be not made. Briggs v. Chamberlaine, 11 Hare, 69; 23 L. J., Ch. 635; 18 Jur. 56.

Contingent Remainder.]—Assuming that between the passing of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, and of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, a man or a feme sole could not by any means effectually dispose at law of a contingent remainder in fee by act inter vivos, except by estoppel by means of a false recital, still, upon the true construction of the former act, a married woman could convey such an estate by deed acknowledged. Crofts v. Middleton, 25 L. J., Ch. 513; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 528; 4 W. R. 429—L.JJ.

Supposing such a deed could not operate so as to pass the legal estate, still, if made for a valuable consideration, it would be good to confer an equitable title by way of contract; for the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 76, gives a married woman power, with the concurrence of her husband, to contract by acknowledged deed, so as to bind her real estate though not herself personally. Ib.

Contingent Interest.]—Under the Irish Fines and Recoveries Abolition Act (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92), ss. 22 & 68, a married woman can by deed, acknowledged under that statute, dispose of an interest in realty limited to her for her sole and separate use, contingent upon the insolvency of her husband, although the contingency has not arisen. Smallman, In re, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 249.

Real Estate.]—A married woman can elect, so as to bind her interest in real estate, without deed acknowledged under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, Barrow v. Barrow, 4 Kay & J. 409; 27 L. J., Ch. 678; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1049; 6 W. R. 714.

Where a wife has an estate for life in freeholds for her separate use, she can alienate that estate without any acknowledgment under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74. Lechmere v. Brotheridge, 32 Beav. 353; 2 N. R. 219; 32 L. J., Ch. 577; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 705; 11 W. R. 814. But see Taylor v. Meads, 34 L. J., Ch. 203; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 166; 11 L. T. 6; 13 W. R. 394—L.JJ.

But a married woman cannot dispose of her fee-simple lands, settled to her separate use, except by deed, duly acknowledged under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74. Ib.

With respect to personal property, whether vested or contingent, settled to the separate use of a feme covert, she may deal with it as a feme sole, and either sell or incumber it. Ib.

The executors of a widow brought an action of covenant upon a lease executed by her and her late husband (who was seised in her right), but not acknowledged by her according to 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, ss. 77, 79, and not made according to the power in 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, s. 32. The defendants had executed the lease as sureties for the lessee, who was left in possession for the whole term, before and after the death of the husband, the widow doing nothing to disaffirm the tenancy:—Held, that they were liable, as it must be presumed that the lessee obtained what he bargained for—a lease, valid while the husband and wife lived, and voidable upon his death. Toler v. Slater, 37 L. J., Q. B. 33; L. R. 3 Q. B. 42; 17 L. T. 168: 16 W. R. 124.

A husband cannot dispose of his wife's interest in the proceeds of real estate, directed by a will to be sold, in any mode short of a deed executed and acknowledged by her under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74. Franks v. Bollans, 37 L. J., Ch. 664; L. R. 3 Ch. 717; 18 L. T. 623; 16 W. R. 1158.

Purchase Money of Land taken by Railway Company.]—Where purchase money paid into court by a railway company belongs to a married woman, the court will pay it out to her, without deed acknowledged but simply upon her examination. Hayes, In re, 9 W. R. 769.

—— Special Act.]—Where an Act of Parliament authorised the purchase of lands in which a feme covert is interested, and gave the Court of Exchequer authority to distribute the purchase money amongst the parties beneficially entitled, the exercise of that authority by the court is in lieu of the solemnities ordinarily required for the conveyance of the real property of a feme covert, or on the payment of her money out of court. Ellison, Ex parte, 2 Y. & Coll. 528; 7 L. J., Ex. Eq. 49; 1 Jur. 283.

Agent to Convey.]—A statutory enactment which authorises the appointment of a person to execute a conveyance in the name and on behalf of another, cannot be made applicable when the latter person is a married woman; acknowledgment and separate examination being essential to the conveyance of real estate by a married woman, and being acts which from their nature cannot be performed vicariously. Stables, In re, 33 L. J., Ch. 422; 10 L. T. 1; 12 W. R. 513.

Enrolment before Acknowledgment.] — The acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman need not be taken before the enrolment of the deed. Taverner, Ex parte, 7 De G., M. & G. 627 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 45 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1194 ; 4 W. R. 29.

Amount of Interest.]—A deed of assignment by way of mortgage, duly acknowledged by a married woman, is sufficient evidence against her in an ejectment by the mortgagee, after her husband's death, although by the recitals it appears that she had only a life interest in a term, and the deed purported to convey the whole, notwithstanding that the objections are taken that it is void as regards her, being a conveyance by a married woman of a chattel interest, or that it is invalid as purporting to convey the whole interest in the term, and that, therefore, it is no estoppel upon her. Audsley v. Horn, 1 F. & F. 135.

Husband having only Life Estate—Specific Performance.]—B. contracted to purchase from S. a freehold property for which an agreement was entered into between them, and a deposit paid. It turned out that S. was not entitled in fee, but only to an estate pur autre vie, with remainder to the use of him and his wife. The wife's acknowledgment to the conveyance being necessary, this formality could not be completed, the sale was therefore considered as abandoned, and the deposit returned. The property was subsequently sold to W., and the conveyance duly acknowledged by the wife. On a bill by S. for a specific performance of this agreement, and a declaration that W. was a trustee for B. :—Held, that he was so, and a decree for specific performance made as to such interest as S. had in the property, and reference as to the amount of compensation to the plaintiff for the interest not conveyed to him. Barnes v. Wood, 21 L. T. 227.

Wife Living Apart from Husband.]—When the acknowledgment of a party to a fine was taken before commissioners who were aware of the fact of her being a married woman, and of the non-concurrence of her husband, but the parties were living separate under a deed by which the husband covenanted not to interfere with his wife's property, the court refused to reverse the fine at the instance of the husband, but left him to his common-law remedy. Check v. Bootle, 4 M. & Scott, 460.

Married Woman Resident in New Zealand.]—An acknowledgment by a married woman resident in New Zealand of a documentary deed was taken before a commissioner lawfully authorised to administer oaths in that colony :—Held, that this was sufficient, and an order was granted directing the proper officer of the court to receive and file the document. Smith (Elizabeth), In re, 50 L. J., Q. B. 32 ; 43 L. T. 438 ; 29 W. R. 264.

Order for Conveyance Set aside on Ground of Fraud.]—Where an order under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 91, and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, s. 1, for the conveyance of a married woman's interest in property without the concurrence of her husband has been obtained by fraud or the suppression of facts which ought to have been disclosed at the time, the court will set it aside. Cockerell, Ex parte, 4 C. P. D. 39 ; 27 W. R. 366.

Evidence of Execution—No Seal but Attestation.]—A deed acknowledged by married women was duly signed by them, but no seal was affixed to it, though pieces of ribbon were inserted in the parchment opposite to the signatures on which seals were to have been put. The attestation clause stated the deed to have been "signed, sealed, and delivered" in the presence of the attesting witnesses, and the certificate of the commissioners before whom the acknowledgment had been taken certified that the married women had acknowledged the instrument as their respective acts and deeds :—Held, primâ facie evidence that the deed was sealed, and there being no evidence to the contrary, the certificate of acknowledgment was allowed to be filed. Mayer, In re, 40 L. J., C. P. 201 ; 24 L. T. 273 ; 19 W. R. 641. S. C., nom. Sandilands, In re, L. R. 6 C. P. 411.

4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92—Insolvency of Husband.]—Under the Irish Fines and Recoveries Abolition Act (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92), ss. 22 and 68, a married woman can by deed, acknowledged under that statute, dispose of an interest in realty limited to her for her sole and separate use, contingent upon the insolvency of her husband, although the contingency has not arisen. Smallman, In re, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 249.

Wife past Child-bearing.]—A sum of money was in court under the Settled Estates Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 120), subject to the trusts of a marriage settlement. There was no issue, and the wife was past child-bearing. Under the settlement the survivor of the husband and wife was entitled absolutely in default of children :—Held, that upon the execution of a deed acknowledge by the wife, the court would order the fund to be transferred to the joint account of the husband and wife. Belt's Settled Estates, In re, 37 L. T. 272 ; 25 W. R. 901.

b. Examination of Wife.

Object and Effect of Examination.]—One of the essential purposes of the separate examination of a wife on a sale and conveyance of her real estate by herself and her husband under the Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), is to ascertain whether the purchase money is to belong to her husband or not. Accordingly, when she has acknowledged the conveyance before the commissioners, and has, on being separately examined by them, refused any provision out of the purchase money or otherwise, she must be treated as having given up to her husband all claim upon the purchase money, and as having no further interest in it either at law or in equity. This is the case even if the purchase money or any part of it is left outstanding in trustees by way of an indemnity fund against charges on the estate; as, for instance, in the case of part being vested in trustees by a deed of declaration of trust for the purpose of keeping down an annuity originally charged on the estate, and subject to which it is sold; consequently, in such a case, in the event of the wife surviving the husband, and the fund still remaining outstanding, she cannot, as against his estate, claim the fund as her chose in action not reduced into possession by the husband. The effect of a married woman's acknowledgment and separate examination under the Fines and Recoveries Act, discussed. Tennent v. Welch, 57 L. J., Ch. 481; 37 Ch. D. 622; 58 L. T. 368; 36 W. R. 389.

—— Protection of Married Women.]—By a parol ante-nuptial agreement it was agreed that the husband should take a certain portion of the wife's property, and that the residue should be settled for her separate use. This agreement was carried out so far as related to the husband, but no settlement was made on the wife. The wife, subsequently to her marriage, filed her bill by her next friend, stating these facts, and praying that her interests in certain property consisting of real estate coming to her might be declared accordingly. The husband, by his answer, admitted the statements in the bill. A deed was then prepared, purporting to be a settlement on the wife, in pursuance of the agreement, and giving her a power to dispose of her property by will. This deed, though signed by the wife, was not acknowledged by her. She made a will disposing of her property in favour of her husband and other parties, and died. The husband then filed a supplemental bill, praying as against the heir of the wife, that the parol agreement might be carried into effect, that the want of an acknowledgment might, if necessary, be supplied, and that the will of the wife might be established as a valid execution of the power given to her by the deed:—Held, first, that in a suit thus framed, there was no case established in point of proof as against the heir; secondly, that the contract so entered into before marriage, there being nothing but marriage following, could not be carried into effect under the Statute of Frauds; and, thirdly, that the court would not supply the want of the acknowledgment, as tending to destroy the protection which the law throws around married women. Lassence v. Tierney, 1 Mac. & G. 551; 2 H. & Tw. 115; 14 Jur. 182.

Woman Married after 1870.]—The 8th section of the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, does not enable a woman married after the passing of the act to pass by an unacknowledged deed the fee simple of real estate descended upon her. Observations upon a dictum of Jessel, M.R., in Voss, In re (13 Ch. D. 504, 505). Johnson v. Johnson, 56 L. J., Ch. 326; 35 Ch. D. 345; 56 L. T. 163; 35 W. R. 329.

Specific Performance of Agreement.]—See Cahill v. Cahill, 8 App. Cas. 420; 49 L. T. 605; 31 W. R. 861.

Trust for Sale—"Bare Trustee."]—A testator devised his real estate to trustees for sale, who were married women, one of them having married before and the other after the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. Both of them also took beneficial interests in the proceeds of sale. Under the judgment in an action for the administration of the testator's estate, part of the real estate was sold by the trustees, the purchaser paying his purchase money into court:—Held, that the married women were "bare trustees" within s. 6 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, and that the conveyance to the purchaser did not require the concurrence of the husbands, or acknowledgment under the Fines and Recoveries Act. Docwra, In re, Docwra v. Faith, 54 L. J., Ch. 1121; 29 Ch. D. 693; 53 L. T. 288; 33 W. R. 574.

Copyholds, Covenant to Surrender.]—A covenant to surrender copyholds vested in husband and wife in right of the wife is inoperative to pass the wife's estate, though by deed acknowledged. Green v. Paterson, 56 L. J., Ch. 181; 32 Ch. D. 95; 54 L. T. 738; 34 W. R. 724—C. A.

Sale under Settled Estates Act.]—Notwithstanding the provision of s. 50 of the Settled Estates Act, 1877, that, when a married woman consents to an application to the court under the act, she is to be examined apart from her husband as to her consent, such an examination is not now necessary in the case of a woman who has married since the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. Riddell v. Errington, 54 L. J., Ch. 293; 26 Ch. D. 220; 50 L. T. 584; 32 W. R. 680.

In the case of a woman married before the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 1 of the act applies only as to property acquired by her after the commencement of the act. Therefore, if such a woman is a petitioner, or a respondent to a petition, under the Settled Estates Act, 1877, relating to property her interest in which was acquired before the commencement of the act of 1882, she must be examined separately, as provided by s. 50 of the act of 1877. Harris's Settled Estates, In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 208; 28 Ch. D. 171; 51 L. T. 855; 33 W. R. 393.

On an application under the Settled Estates Act, 1877, for the sanction of the court to the purchase of certain land by the trustees of a settlement out of funds in court arising from sales of the settled hereditaments, the separate examination of a married woman, the tenant for life, was directed, notwithstanding s. 32 of the Settled Land Act, 1882. Arabin's Trusts, In re, 52 L. T. 728.

Payment of Fund out of Court.]—A fund standing to the separate credit of a married woman, unless married after the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, will not be paid to her by the court, even on her separate receipt, without her separate examination. Secus, where the marriage was after the act, and the applicant takes under an intestacy. Deignan v. Deignan, 13 L. R. Ir. 278.

Separate Examination dispensed with.]—On a petition under the Settled Estates Act to sanction a lease of property vested in trustees without power of leasing, the lease being clearly for the benefit of all parties, the separate examination of a married woman interested in the property and resident in Australia was dispensed with. Halliday, In re, 40 L. J., Ch. 687; L. R. 12 Eq. 199; 19 W. R. 966.

—— Wife Abroad.]—When a petition is presented to authorise a sale of settled estates under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, and a party interested, being a married woman, is abroad and served, the court will dispense with her acknowledgment. Tibbett, In re, 20 L. T. 299; 17 W. R. 394.

—— Election to take Proceeds of Realty as Personalty.]—The court will not permit a married woman to elect to take her share of proceeds of sale of real estate as personalty without her separate examination, even where the share does not amount to 200*l*. Shaw, In re, Topham v. Burgoyne, 49 L. J., Ch. 213; 41 L. T. 670.

—— Execution by Master.]—Independently of the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 78, the Court has jurisdiction, under the 28 Geo. 3, c. 35, to direct a deed, which is to have the effect of a deed under the provisions of the "Fines and Recoveries Act" (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92), to be executed by the Master for defendant out of the jurisdiction. Piers v. Piers, Sau. & Sc. 89.

Compromise of Restitution Suit—Release of Jointure.]—A married woman was entitled by an ante-nuptial settlement to a jointure rentcharge after her husband's death secured upon his real estates in Ireland. The wife having left him, the husband commenced a suit for restitution of conjugal rights; with a view to a compromise by an agreement for separation a document was drawn up and signed by the husband, which stipulated that the wife should release part of her jointure. The wife signed this document with a qualification that no further steps were to be taken in the matrimonial suit, but it was not stayed or dismissed. A deed was prepared to carry out the terms of the compromise and was executed by the husband, but the wife refused to execute it or to return to her husband, and the husband afterwards died:—Held, that the wife was not, when she signed the document, in all respects in the same position as a feme sole, and that even if any final agreement had been come to she would not have been bound by it, there having been no acknowledgment as required by 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 92, ss. 68 & 71; and that specific performance of the agreement to release her jointure could not be decreed against her. Hunt v. Hunt (4 De G. F. & J. 22; 31 L. J. Ch. 161) and Besant v. Wood (12 Ch. D. 605) commented on. Cahill v. Cahill, 8 App. Cas. 420; 49 L. T. 605; 31 W. R. 861.

Deed Executed under Mistake.]—Under the will of a testator who died in 1843, his three children, T., W., and S., a married woman, were each entitled to one-third of his residuary estate, subject to the life interest therein of his widow. In 1844 T. died a bachelor, and intestate. By a deed executed in 1854 (before Sir R. Malin's Act), to which the tenant for life, the trustees of the will, W., and S. and her husband, were parties, and which was acknowledged by S. under the Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), two mortgage debts, secured to the trustees on real estate and forming part of the testator's residuary estate, were assigned by the tenant for life and W. and by S. and her husband, with the privity of the trustees, by way of mortgage. The deed was executed under the erroneous assumption that according to the terms of a gift over in the will, T. took no share in the testator's estate, and consequently his administrator was not made a party:—Held, that the deed was not effectual to pass S.'s share of the two mortgage debts. Williams v. Cooke (4 Giff. 343) distinguished. Newton's Trusts, In re, 23 Ch. D. 181.

c. Taking before Commissioners.

Before whom.]—Before 17 & 18 Vict. c. 75, an acknowledgment by a feme covert before two commissioners, one of whom was interested, was void. Bancks v. Ollerton, 10 Ex. 168; 2 C. L. R. 1090; 23 L. J., Ex. 285; 2 W. R. 622. S. P., Ollerton, In re, 15 C. B. 796.

The town commissioners, taking the acknowledgment of a married woman under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 82, must be appointed commissioners for the same district. Webster, Ex parte, 1 D. (N.S.) 678; 4 Scott (N.R.) 636; 4 Man. & G. 27.

Commissioners who take the acknowledgment in England of a married woman under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 82, need not be appointed for the county in which the acknowledgment is taken. Blackmur v. Blackmur, 45 L. J., Ch. 710; 3 Ch. D. 633; 24 W. R. 900.

Examination of Married Woman.]—No person connected with the husband ought to be present when a married woman's examination as to her consent is taken. Bendyshe, In re, 26 L. J., Ch. 814; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 727; 5 W. R. 816.

Before taking an acknowledgment of a married woman before two commissioners, there must be a previous examination before both, even though one is interested or concerned, and r. 3, H. T. 4 Will. 4, does not render this unnecessary; that rule and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 75, must not be considered to approve of or confirm any practice of taking acknowledgments before commissioners, one of whom is interested or concerned, and except in cases of reasonable necessity, both should be disinterested and not concerned in the matter. Menhennitt, In re, 39 L. J., C. P. 40; L. R. 5 C. P. 16; 21 L. T. 332; 18 W. R. 66.

Giving up Interest.]—Where the consideration-money for a married woman giving up her interest in the estate in respect of which the acknowledgment is taken is to be paid into her own hands, the commissioners should distinctly ascertain from her that she wishes to pass her property without any provision being made for her. Dorning, In re, 34 L. J., C. P. 173. S. C., Dowling, In re, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 223.

When property is sold under the compulsory provisions of an act of parliament, that rule of H. T. 4 Will. 4, which directs inquiry to be made of a married woman at the time of acknowledging a deed to convey her interest, whether any provision is made for her in consideration of her so giving up her interest, is inapplicable. Foster, In re, 7 C. B. 120.

Where the amount of the consideration which forms the inducement for a married woman to give up her interest in an estate, was too small to form the subject of a settlement, and the arrangement was that the amount should be paid to the wife, the court allowed the acknowledgment to be registered. Webber, Ex parte, 5 C. B. 179.

The officer of the court is justified in declining to receive and file an acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman, conveying her interest in property, where a provision is to be made for her in lieu of such interest, and the commissioner merely certifies that the deed declaring the trusts of that provision "has been already ingrossed, and was produced before him"; and the court will not make any order on the subject until they are satisfied that the deed has been duly executed. Dallas, In re, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 346; 30 L. J., C. P. 282.

—— In Consideration of Provision in Will.]—The court refused to allow a certificate of acknowledgment by a feme covert to be filed, where it appeared from her answers to the inquiry of the commissioners, as to whether she intended to give up her interest in the estate without any provision being made for her in lieu thereof, that the consideration for her consent was a provision made for her by her husband's will, although it was shown by another affidavit that she perfectly understood that to be no provision, inasmuch as the will was revocable. Dixon, In re, 4 C. B. 631 ; 16 L. J., C. P. 231.

Wife Deaf and Dumb.]—The court directed the officer to file an acknowledgment of a married woman, it appearing by affidavit, and also upon the certificate, that she was deaf and dumb, that the nature of the transaction had been duly explained to her by signs, and that she had, in like manner, signified her assent. Harper, In re, 6 Man. & G. 731 ; 7 Scott (N.R.) 431.

Letting Wife's Lands.]—A husband and wife, seised in fee in right of the wife, demised land for a term of years. The deed was executed by both, but not acknowledged by the wife under 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 74, s. 79. During the term the husband died, and the wife did no act to disaffirm the tenancy, and also died during the term :—Held, that in the absence of any proof that it was contemplated when the deed was executed that the acknowledgment of the wife should be taken, the lease was valid up to the time of her death, and an action was maintainable by her executors on the covenants in the lease, in respect of breaches which occurred during her life and after the death of the husband. Toler v. Slater, 37 L. J., Q. B. 33 ; L. R. 3 Q. B. 42 ; 17 L. T. 168 ; 16 W. R. 124.

Before Notaries.]—The court allowed a certificate of acknowledgment where the affidavit verifying the certificate was sworn before a notary public in the Hebrides, as the affidavit on which the application was made stated that there was no commissioner of the court in the Hebrides or nearer than the mainland. Groom, In re, 17 W. R. 589.

Fees.]—Commissioners for taking acknowledgments of married women have a lien for their fees on the deed, certificate of execution, &c. Grove, Ex parte, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 304 ; 3 Scott, 671 ; 5 D. P. C. 355 ; 2 Hodges, 246 ; 6 L. J., C. P. 30.

Duplicate Commission where Original was Lost.]—A commission for taking the acknowledgment of a married woman at Rokewood, a remote part of Victoria, having been returned with a defective affidavit of verification, the documents (with the exception of the deed, which had been executed in this country by a party entitled to a share of the property) were sent out again by post, and were lost. The court allowed a duplicate commission to go, with a fresh affidavit, it appearing that all the parties were still living at Rokewood. White, Ex parte, L. R. 8 C. P. 106.

Form of Commission.]—It is no objection to issuing a commission to take the acknowledgment of a feme covert resident beyond seas, that her christian name is unknown ; but when the commission is returned, the court will require strict proof of her identity. Atherton v. Appleton, In re, 3 D. & L. 26 ; 1 C. B. 447 ; 14 L. J., C. P. 225.

The court allowed a commission for taking the acknowledgment of a married woman in Australia to go out with a blank for the christian name of the husband, which (the marriage having taken place there) was unknown here. Legge, In re, 15 C. B. 364.

Enlarging Time for Returning Commission.]—The court will enlarge the time for returning a commission for taking the acknowledgment of a married woman abroad, where, by reason of the remoteness of the residences of the parties, the time allowed has proved too short. Booth, In re, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 540.

But not where it has been executed after the return-day named therein. Carter, In re, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 791.

The court will enlarge the time for returning a special commission where it has been duly executed, but its return has been unavoidably delayed until after the return-day therein named. Van Ufford, In re, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 789.

The court refused to enlarge the time for returning the commission in order to get the defects remedied, the time for the return having expired. Tierney, In re, 15 C. B. 761.

d. Dispensing with Husband's Concurrence.

Married Women's Property Act, 1882—Acknowledgment.]—M. and H., spinsters and tenants in tail in remainder, executed a deed in 1884, without the consent of the protector of the settlement, barring their estates tail and conveying their estates to S. in fee simple. The deed was duly enrolled. M. and H. afterwards married, and in 1889, the protector of the settlement being then dead, executed a deed enlarging the base fee in favour of S. :—Held, that by virtue of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, s. 1, sub-s. 1, and s. 2, the restrictions imposed by the Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries, s. 40, were no longer in force, and that the deed of 1889 did not require to be acknowledged by M. and H. as married women, or concurred in by their husbands. Drummond and Davies, In re, 60 L. J., Ch. 258 ; [1891] 1 Ch. 524 ; 64 L. T. 246 ; 39 W. R. 445.

Husband and Wife Separated.]—The court will not grant a rule to enable a wife to execute a conveyance without her husband's concurrence upon an affidavit which stated that the husband is living apart from his wife by mutual consent, but will require further particulars of the cause of such separation. Eardley, Ex parte, 25 L. T. 804.

Under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, ss. 77 and 91, the court authorised a feme covert to convey copyhold property, to which she was entitled to her sole and separate use, her husband having resided abroad for more than twenty years with another woman. Shireley, Ex parte, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 226 ; 7 Scott, 174 ; 7 D. P. C. 258 ; 1 Arn. 484 ; 3 Jur. 125.

A feme covert, when her husband has absconded, and has not been heard of for some time, may pass a contingent life interest in freehold property. Gill, Ex parte, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 168.

On an application by a wife to dispense with the concurrence of her husband to a conveyance on the ground that his residence is unknown, the affidavit must expressly state that he has not contributed to her support. Carburton, In re, 16 W. R. 84.

So, on the ground of his desertion, the affidavit must show that he does not contribute to her support. Robinson, Ex parte, L. R. 4 C. P. 205.

When an application is made to enable a married woman to execute a deed affecting her property without the consent of her husband, the affidavit must expressly state that the husband does not contribute to her support. Fletcher, In re, 17 W. R. 319.

When a wife, having been deserted by her husband, has been living apart from him for upwards of two years, and has maintained herself and her children without any assistance from him during that time, the court will, although the husband and wife are in communication with each other, grant an order to dispense with the concurrence of the husband in the execution of a conveyance by the wife of freehold property to which she is entitled apart from him, he having refused when applied to for the purpose to concur. Sutcliffe, Ex parte, 29 L. T. 747.

By a marriage settlement made in 1844, the property of the intended wife was conveyed to trustees to permit the husband to receive the rents and profits during the coverture, or until the wife should, by writing under her hand, otherwise direct or appoint, and from and after such direction or appointment, for the use of the wife. The deed also contained a power of sale, to be exercised at the request and by the direction (in writing) of the husband and wife. The husband received the rents and profits down to 1851, when the wife exercised her power of appointment by directing the trustees to receive the rents and profits, and to apply them to her separate use. In 1852, the husband went to Australia :—Held, not a case for an order to dispense with the husband's concurrence in a deed for the conveyance of the property. Eden, In re, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 232 ; 28 L. J., C. P. 4.

Husband's Interest in Rents.]—An order in the usual form obtained under s. 91 of the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, by a married woman, empowering her to dispose of her real estate without the concurrence of her husband, does not deprive him of the common law rights which he acquired in the property by reason of the coverture. Where, therefore, under such an order, a married woman sold and conveyed all her estate and interest in real estate, her husband refusing to join :—Held, that the husband's common law right to the rents during the coverture remained unaffected by the wife's alienation, but that (she asserting her equity to a settlement) he was bound, whether his estate was legal or equitable, to provide for her out of the rents ; and, under the circumstances, the whole of the rents were settled upon her. Fowke v. Draycott, 54 L. J., Ch. 977 ; 29 Ch. D. 996 ; 52 L. T. 890 ; 33 W. R. 701.

Judicial Separation.]—Conveyance of separate property by a married woman, when living apart, by a sentence of judicial separation without alimony. Andrews, Ex parte, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 371.

Living apart, Husband refusing to execute Deed.]—A widow entitled to personal estate, settled to her separate use, married R. Shortly after her marriage with R. she proposed that they should live apart, and agreed to make R. an allowance. R. refused to sign any agreement, but did live separate, and received the allowance, but occasionally they met. On the marriage of a daughter by her former husband, Mrs. R. proposed to settle a certain sum out of her separate estate, but R. refused to assent to the settlement. Mrs. R. then obtained an order of the court under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 91, and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, s. 1, on the ground that she and her husband were living apart, and the settlement was made on the daughter's marriage. On motion by R. to rescind the order, on the ground that his wife was not living apart from him :—Held, that the parties were living apart, and the court refused to rescind the order. Rogers, In re, 1 H. & R. 85 ; 35 L. J., C. P. 71 ; L. R. 1 C. P. 47 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 1038 ; 13 L. T. 437 ; 14 W. R. 142. See also Sutcliffe, Ex parte, supra.

The court dispensed with the concurrence of the husband (who was living separate from his wife), in the conveyance of property in which the wife had a separate interest under the will of her deceased father, where the husband had refused to execute the deed. Perrin, In re, 14 C. B. 420.

The concurrence of the husband will be dispensed with, where the parties are living apart by mutual consent, and the husband refuses to join in the execution unless part of the purchase-money is paid to him. Woodcock, In re, 1 C. B. 437.

Where a husband and wife were living apart, and the wife being devisee under a will of real property on trust for sale, the husband refused to concur in a conveyance of such property upon a sale under the trusts of the will, unless he received a sum of money for doing so, the court granted an order dispensing with the concurrence of the husband under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 91, although it was admitted by the affidavit that the husband had, since he had left his wife, to a slight extent contributed to her support. Caine, In re, 52 L. J., Q. B. 354 ; 10 Q. B. D. 284 ; 48 L. T. 357 ; 31 W. R. 428.

Effect of Order.]—Where a married woman has obtained an order of the Court of Common Pleas dispensing with her husband's concurrence, she may dispose of her real estate by a deed which is not acknowledged by her. Goodchild v. Dougal, 3 Ch. D. 650 ; 24 W. R. 960.

Husband a Bankrupt.]—Under the will of a testator, who died March, 1862, M., a married woman, was entitled in reversion expectant on the death of a tenant for life to a share of the proceeds of real estate devised to trustees in trust for sale on that event. In August, 1862, in the lifetime of a tenant for life, M.'s husband executed general assignment, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, of all his property to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors. In August, 1866, he was adjudged bankrupt, and in December following he obtained his discharge. The tenant for life died in January, 1869. By a deed executed in February following, and duly acknowledged by M. under s. 77, of the Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74), M. and her husband assigned all moneys which should become due to them or either of them under the testator's will to S. by way of mortgage. Shortly afterwards the trustees of the will sold the real estate, and ultimately paid M.'s share of the proceeds into court under the Trustee Relief Act :—Held, that the husband was not precluded by the creditors' deed of 1862 or by his bankruptcy in 1866 from concurring with his wife in the mortgage of 1869, and accordingly that the mortgage was valid against the trustee of the creditors' deed and the assignee in bankruptcy. Jakeman's Trusts, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 363 ; 23 Ch. D. 344.

Husband a Lunatic.]—When an application is made to dispense with a husband's concurrence to his wife's deed on the ground of his incapacity to execute by reason of lunacy, such lunacy and incapacity must be shown by an affidavit of a medical man, and it is not enough to produce an affidavit verifying a medical certificate. Reeves, In re, 24 W. R. 848.

The court will not allow the wife of a lunatic to convey her separate estate without some explanation as to the nature of the lunatic's property, and whether it contributes to the wife's support. Cloud, In re, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 833.

The court refused to make an order under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 91, dispensing with the concurrence of the husband to the execution of a deed by his wife on an affidavit by the son that the husband and wife had for three years been living apart, in consequence of the intemperate and violent habits of the former, which rendered necessary his confinement in a lunatic asylum for some time, and that although he had since been discharged, he was not in a fit mental condition to execute a deed or understand its nature. The court directed that application should be made to the husband to execute, and that the result should be stated to the court, and that he should have notice of an application for the order ; and further, that there should be an affidavit by a medical man of the husband's mental condition. Clare's Trusts, In re, 49 L. J., C. P. 557.

Husband a Minor.]—A husband, being a minor, the court granted a rule to enable the wife to execute a conveyance of her separate property without his concurrence. Haigh, In re, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 198 ; 26 L. J., C. P. 209 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 371 ; 5 W. R. 531.

Land not contracted to be Sold.]—The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 91, gives no authority to the court to grant an order dispensing with the concurrence of a husband in the sale or conveyance of the wife's land, unless the land is actually contracted to be sold or conveyed. Graham, Ex parte, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 370 ; 34 L. J., C. P. 321 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 468 ; 13 W. R. 782.

Form of Rule.]—Form of rule to dispense with the concurrence of the husband in the disposition by a feme covert of her separate property. Duffill, Ex parte, 6 Scott (N.R.) 30 ; 5 Man. & G. 378.

Form of Conveyance.]—The court will not sanction a particular form of conveyance by a married woman. Woodall, In re, 3 C. B. 639.

Affidavit—Absconding or Absent Husband.]—An application under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 91, to enable a feme covert, whose husband has absconded, to make a conveyance, must be founded upon the affidavit of the wife herself. Williams, In re, 2 Scott (N.R.) 120 ; 1 Man. & G. 881 ; 9 D. P. C. 72. S. P., Bruce, Ex parte, 9 D. P. C. 840 ; 3 Scott (N.R.) 592.

An affidavit describing her as a widow is informal. Noy, In re, 7 Scott (N.R.) 434.

The affidavit must describe her as wife of, &c., even though it discloses circumstances showing a well-grounded belief that the husband is dead. Sparrow, Ex parte, 12 C. B. 334.

The court declined to receive an affidavit in which she was described as "wife or widow." Anderson, In re, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 811.

The affidavit must contain the addition or description of the husband. Gardner, In re, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 215.

And negative any communication from him. Horsefall, In re, 1 Man. & G. 132 ; 10 L. J., C. P. 292.

But where a delay until the following term would have caused great inconvenience to the parties, the court gave directions for the order to be drawn up in vacation on the production of an affidavit from the wife. Ib.

In support of an application for an order to dispense with the concurrence of the husband of a married woman to the deeds of conveyance of property, an affidavit that he had absconded from home, and had since sailed for Port Phillip ; that since the departure of the ship, his wife had heard nothing of him, and that she believed him to be on his voyage ; that her husband had been made a bankrupt, and that her interest in the property in question passed to his assignees ; and also, that her husband having sold the property, she was desirous of completing the conveyance, is sufficient. Stone, Ex parte, 9 D. P. C. 843.

The court refused, in 1847, to dispense with the concurrence of a husband, upon an affidavit merely stating that he entered a government steamer in January, 1844, and that the last the wife had heard of him was, that in January, 1845, he was on board another government steamer at New Zealand, and that she believed it was his intention never to return. Gilmore, Ex parte, 3 C. B. 967.

The mere statement that the husband, a seaman, has gone abroad, and has not been heard of for some years, and that the wife has been informed that he is dead, is not enough ; the affidavit must show some reasonable ground for presuming the statement to be true. Taylor, Ex parte, 7 C. B. 1.

Where the husband was a seaman in the British navy on a foreign station, and the wife had not heard from him for two years, and the affidavits stated she believed he would never return :—Held, that the facts were insufficient. Smith, In re, 16 L. J., C. P. 168.

An affidavit stating that, having fallen into distressed circumstances, the husband, about two months before, left England for Australia with the intention of never returning, and that he had ever since been living separate and apart from his wife, is sufficient. Kelsey, In re, 16 C. B. 197 ; 3 C. L. R. 37.

But it is not enough to state that some years ago the husband left the wife and has since lived with another woman (in this country), without showing some direct application to him for his concurrence. Parker, Ex parte, 3 C. L. R. 148.

An affidavit showing that the husband had absconded, and had not been heard of for twenty years, although it also appeared that the wife had in the meantime married again, is sufficient. Farnall, Ex parte, 17 C. B. 189. S. P., Shirley,

Ex parte, 5 Bing. N. C. 226; 7 Scott, 174; 7 D. P. C. 258; 1 Arn. 484; 3 Jur. 125.

When the husband is beyond the seas, it must be shown that he has absented himself under such circumstances as to induce the court to infer that he has no intention to return to this country. Squires, In re, 17 C. B. 176; 25 L. J., C. P. 55; 4 W. R. 122.

An affidavit merely stating that the wife had left her husband in consequence of his violence, and was living apart from him, is insufficient. Price, In re, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 286; 7 L. T. 327.

—— Lunacy of Husband.]—When the husband is of unsound mind, the affidavit must show in distinct terms, or by necessary inference, that the husband is lunatic at the time of the application. Turner, In re, 3 C. B. 166.

And it is not enough to produce an affidavit verifying a medical certificate. Reeves, In re, 24 W. R. 848.

—— Illness of Husband.]—The court refused to dispense with the concurrence of the husband of a married woman, on an application by her to be permitted to convey her interest in an estate, although it was stated that he and the applicant were living apart by mutual consent, and that he was in a "very nervous and excitable state, and that it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to procure the execution by him of any deed," until it was sworn that an application had been made to him with that object, and refused. Murphy or Mirfin, In re, 2 D. (N.S.) 110; 5 Scott (N.R.) 166; 4 Man. & G. 636; 12 L. J., C. P. 92.

—— Wife not receiving Allowance from Husband.]—The court required an affidavit negativing the wife's receipt of any allowance from her husband. Fish, Ex parte, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 715; 3 L. T. 631. And cases, ante, col. 62.

An order will not be granted where it appears that the husband is in correspondence with his wife, and remitting sums of money for her support, however small. Squires, In re, supra.

—— Parties living Apart by Mutual Consent.]—The court refused to grant a rule to enable a married woman to execute a conveyance without the concurrence of her husband, upon an affidavit merely stating that the parties were living apart by mutual consent, but required an affidavit showing that an application had been made to the husband to execute the deed, and that he had refused to do so. Trenery, Ex parte, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 187.

—— Before whom Taken.]—An affidavit of a married woman is sufficient if sworn (where the party is residing abroad) before an officer whom the certificate of a notary public certifies to be a person empowered by law to take affidavits. Schiff, In re, 1 D. & L. 911.

—— Verifying Certificates,]—See infra.

e. Affidavit verifying Certificate of Acknowledgment.

Form of.]—The Reg. Gen., C. P. M. T. 1862, as to the form of affidavits, are directory only. Hall, Ex parte, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 369.

A statement in the affidavit of verification of an acknowledgment that it was taken at Madeira, is sufficiently precise. Hutchinson, Ex parte, 5 C. B. 499; 5 D. & L. 523; 17 L. J., C. P. 111.

The court allowed a special commission for taking the acknowledgment in America, the certificate of the taking thereof, and the affidavit of verification to be filed, notwithstanding that there was a slight defect in that part of the affidavit which negatived the interest of the commissioners, and that the jurat did not show where the affidavit was sworn. Chandler, In re, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 323; 5 W. R. 122.

An affidavit is not sufficient, unless it clearly states that the acknowledgment was made before two duly appointed commissioners, one of whom was not interested in the transaction for which the acknowledgment was required. Kay, In re, 19 L. T. 356.

The court ordered a certificate of acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman, and affidavits verifying it, to be filed, although the affidavits did not strictly comply with the rules of H. T., 1834, it being shown that under the circumstances it was impossible to obtain affidavits in accordance with those rules, and that the affidavits did comply with all the provisions of the Fines and Recoveries Act. Packer, In re, 39 L. J., C. P. 238; L. R. 5 C. P. 424; 22 L. T. 406; 18 W. R. 696.

The omission of the description of a special commissioner to take the acknowledgment of a married woman is an irregularity, when it occurs in the affidavit of verification; but it may be cured by a statement of identity. Howard, In re, Ashcroft, In re, 43 L. J., C. P. 245; L. R. 9 C. P. 347; 30 L. T. 471; 22 W. R. 653.

An unsigned affidavit of verification, sworn in a foreign possession of the British crown, may be sufficient, if the jurat contains a statement that the oath was administered before a court, judge, magistrate, commissioner, or notary public. Ib.

The court allowed a certificate of acknowledgment, taken at Loch Haven, Pennsylvania, to be filed, notwithstanding that the jurat of the affidavit of verification was defective in not naming the place where the acknowledgment was taken, or describing the deponent, there being a notarial certificate identifying the place and the parties. Coldwell, In re, L. R. 10 C. P. 667.

Erasures—In Jurat.]—The court directed the registrar to file the acknowledgment by a married woman, although it was doubtful whether there was not an erasure in the jurat of the affidavit of acknowledgment, it being certain that there was a rasure in it. Millard, In re, 6 D. & L. 86; 5 C. B. 753.

In the jurat of an affidavit of the due taking of an acknowledgment at Calcutta, the name of one of the deponents was interlined:—Held, that the affidavit could not be received. Fagan, In re, 5 C. B. 436.

The jurat of an affidavit of the due taking of an acknowledgment at Sydney had an interlineation in the body of it, and an erasure in the jurat. The court refused to allow it to be filed. Tierney, In re, 15 C. B. 761.

The court refused to enlarge the time for returning the commission in order to get the defects remedied, the time for the return having expired. Ib.

The court permitted an affidavit, verifying the notarial certificate of an acknowledgment, to be received notwithstanding an erasure in the jurat, being satisfied that there had been a substantial compliance with the statute, and the erasure arising from circumstances over which the parties had no control. Denton, In re, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 287; 28 L. J., C. P. 255; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 650.

—— Elsewhere.]—The court refused to direct the officer to receive a certificate and an affidavit of an acknowledgment, the affidavit having an interlineation in an important part, without anything to denote that the interlineation had been made before the affidavit was sworn. Worthington, In re, 5 C. B. 511. S. P., Page, In re, 5 D. & L. 475.

The court allowed a certificate of acknowledgment and affidavit of verification (taken in New South Wales) to be received and filed notwithstanding an erasure in a material part of the affidavit, there being satisfactory evidence that the erasure was made before the acknowledgment and affidavits were taken and sworn. Bingle, In re, 15 C. B. 449; 2 C. L. R. 1793.

An affidavit verifying the certificate of the due taking of an acknowledgment of a married woman may be sworn in Guernsey, before the chief bailiff and two jurats of that island. Mann, In re, L. R. 10 C. P. 473.

Omission of Date in Jurat.]—The court allowed a commission, with the certificate of acknowledgment, and affidavit of verification, to be received and filed, notwithstanding the omission of the month in the jurat of the affidavit. Van Ufford, In re, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 789.

Before whom taken.]—The affidavit of the due taking of the acknowledgment of a married woman may be made by one of the commissioners before whom it was taken, notwithstanding he is the attorney concerned in the transaction. Scholefield, In re, 3 Scott, 657; 2 Bing. (N.C.) 293; 5 D. P. C. 363; 2 Hodges, 236; 6 L. J., C. P. 28.

Identity of Commissioners.] — An affidavit verifying the certificate of acknowledgment before special commissioners ought to show clearly that the persons who purported to have taken the acknowledgment were the commissioners named in the commission. Vaughan, In re, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 314.

The court allowed a defect in that respect to be supplied by affidavit. Ib.

The acknowledgment of a married woman taken abroad must be taken by the persons mentioned in the commission; and therefore, where there were variances between the names of the persons designated in the commission as commissioners, and the names in the signatures attached, the court required that there should be an identification, by affidavits of persons on the spot bearing positive testimony to the fact. Booth, In re, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 541; 28 L. J., C. P. 138; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1301; 7 W. R. 288.

A commission for taking the acknowledgment was addressed to "Robert Roger Strong, registrar of the Supreme Court of Wellington, New Zealand," and on its return the acknowledgment was found to have been taken by "Robert Rodger Strang, registrar of the Supreme Court of Wellington":—Held, that the objection might be got over by a slight explanation on affidavit showing the identity of the party. Smith, In re, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 344; 4 L. T. 246; 9 W. R. 556.

Held, also, that an objection that the affidavit was sworn before "J. K., a solicitor of the Supreme Court of Wellington, and a commissioner for taking affidavits there," was insurmountable. Ib.

The court, under very peculiar circumstances, allowed a commission for taking the acknowledgment of a married woman in India to be amended by inserting therein the names of two gentlemen before whom the acknowledgment had been taken, and who were not originally named therein as commissioners, and also dispensed with a notarial certificate, and received an affidavit sworn before a political agent; the place at which the acknowledgment was taken being a very remote part of India, and it appearing (though not by affidavit) that there was no notary public, nor any magistrate before whom an oath could be taken, within several hundred miles. Stubbs, In re, 5 Scott (N.R.) 327; 4 Man. & G. 609.

A commission for taking the acknowledgment of a married woman was addressed to "Judge M'Roberts and W. Pythian," in Illinois, in the United States, and was certified by "W. Pythian and Samuel M'Roberts." The court required an affidavit showing the identity of Judge M'Roberts and Samuel M'Roberts. Mann, Ex parte, 7 Scott, 142; 5 Bing. (N.C.) 226; 1 Arn. 502; 3 Jur. 125.

A commission to take the acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman at Poonah, in the East Indies, was addressed to commissioners, one of whom was described as "Edward C. Jones," a collector and magistrate at that place. The acknowledgment was duly taken by Mr. Jones and one of the other commissioners, but Jones signed the certificate and affidavit of verification, "Edmund C. Jones." The court allowed the document to be received and filed, upon the production of affidavits showing that Edmund C. Jones was the person to whom the communication was intended to go, that he had always been described in the register at the India House as "Edward C. Jones," and that there was no other collector of that name in the Company's service. Price, In re, 17 C. B. 708.

Taken in Ireland.]—The affidavit verifying the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment must, even in Ireland, be made before a commissioner of the court. Anderson, In re, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 435; 2 Scott, 626; 1 Hodges, 418.

Taken in India.]—In the case of an acknowledgment taken in a remote part of India, the court, in lieu of a notarial certificate, received the certificate of the major-general in command of the district, upon production of an affidavit stating his rank and verifying his handwriting. Daly, In re, 5 C. B. 128; 5 D. & L. 333; 17 L. J., C. P. 1.

Taken in Foreign Countries.]—An affidavit of an acknowledgment of a deed in foreign parts is sufficient. Birch, Ex parte, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 394; 6 Scott, 185; 1 Arn. 172.

Where an acknowledgment is taken abroad, the affidavit verifying the certificate need not name the place where it is taken. Shufflebottom, In re, 6 Scott, 898.

The affidavit verifying the certificate of an acknowledgment of a conveyance may be made by a notary public. Pearsall, In re, 2 Scott (N.R.) 188 ; 1 Man. & G. 973 ; 9 D. P. C. 46.

The court permitted a certificate to be filed although the affidavit to excuse the want of a notarial certificate (which was sworn by one of the commissioners taking the acknowledgment, and was in other respects sufficient) erroneously stated, that the affidavit verifying the certificate was sworn by the other commissioner, when in fact it was sworn by the deponent himself. Taylor, In re, 4 Scott (N.R.) 328.

The court permitted a certificate of acknowledgment (taken at Philadelphia) to be received and filed, notwithstanding the affidavit of verification did not precisely conform to the rule of court. Shaw, In re, 3 Scott (N.R.) 647 ; 3 Man. & G. 236 ; 9 D. P. C. 839 ; 10 L. J., C. P. 322.

The court will not dispense with an affidavit of verification, sworn and authenticated according to the local law, unless it is distinctly shown that great inconvenience would result from a strict adherence to the ordinary rule. Crawford, In re, 4 C. B. 626.

The court refused to direct the proper officer to receive and file an acknowledgment where the affidavit of verification was sworn before the British Minister at Florence, it not appearing that there was any difficulty in getting it sworn before some properly-constituted authority at that place. Dunsany, In re, 7 C. B. 119.

An affidavit which alleged that the magistrate, before whom a prior affidavit annexed thereto, verifying the certificate of the acknowledgment of a deed, had been sworn, and which sufficiently showed the authority of the magistrate before whom the first affidavit was sworn, and accounted for the absence of a notarial certificate, is not vitiated by its stating that the former affidavit was sworn by another commissioner, it having been, in fact, sworn by the deponent himself. Warburton v. Warburton, 3 Man. & G. 633.

The court dispensed with the notarial certificate in the case of an acknowledgment taken at Corfu, it being sworn that there was no English notary resident on the island. Hurst, In re, 15 C. B. 410.

There being sufficient upon the documents reasonably to satisfy the court that the commission had been bonâ fide executed, the court permitted them to be received, though the notarial certificate did not in terms verify the signature of the justices of the peace before whom the affidavit of verification purported to be sworn. Foster, In re, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 544 ; 28 L. J., C. P. 138 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1301.

Where an affidavit verifying the certificate of an acknowledgment taken abroad by commissioners under a general commission, varied from the form given by Reg. Gen., H. T. 1834, in not stating where the acknowledgment was taken, but contained sufficient to satisfy the court that the commission had been bonâ fide acted on beyond the seas, the court allowed the certificate to be filed, as the rule of court is not a statutable rule. Partridge, In re, 17 C. B. 18 ; 25 L. J., C. P. 1 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1140 ; 4 W. R. 12.

—— Made before British Consul.]—Prior to 18 & 19 Vict. c. 42, an affidavit sworn before the British consul at Paris, to obtain an order to dispense with the concurrence of the husband of a married woman, was not admissible. Cooper, In re, 16 C. B. 225 ; 3 W. R. 405.

The court allowed an acknowledgment to be received and filed, where the affidavit verifying the same was sworn before "The Provisional British Consul for the Society Islands," it appearing that there was no notary or any other official person before whom it could have been sworn within many hundred miles. Darling, In re, 2 C. B. 347.

Under 6 Geo. 4, c. 87, s. 20, a British consul has the same power as a notary public to certify that the affidavit in support of the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment was sworn before a commissioner duly appointed. Barber, In re, 2 Bing. (N.C.) 268 ; 2 Scott, 436 ; 4 D. P. C. 640 ; 1 Hodges, 318 ; 5 L. J., C. P. 81.

An affidavit, verifying the due taking, in Russia, of the acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman, made before the British consul, is sufficient : it having been stated in a notarial certificate that the laws of Russia do not grant authority to any magistrate to administer an oath to any person whatsoever. Darey v. Maltwood, 2 Man. & G. 424. S. P., Bayley, In re, 2 Scott (N.R.) 823 ; 9 D. P. C. 380.

An affidavit of verification of the certificate of the acknowledgment, the parties being resident in Germany, must be sworn before a native court ; and an affidavit sworn before the English consul is not sufficient. Eady, In re, 6 D. P. C. 615 ; 1 Arn. 156.

The court received an affidavit sworn before the British consul, in the island of Madeira, the jurat describing him as being authorised by the laws of the island to administer oaths there ; and the affidavit being accompanied by a notarial certificate to the same effect. Hutchinson, Ex parte, 5 C. B. 499 ; 5 D. & L. 523 ; 17 L. J., C. P. 111.

—— Before Minister of British Chapel.]—The court directed an acknowledgment to be received and filed, where the affidavit verifying the certificate of the commissioners was sworn before A. B., minister of the British Chapel at Moscow, it being deposed to by the secretary of the Russia Company in London, that A. B. was in the habit of administering oaths to British subjects there, and certified by two merchants at Moscow that there was no English notary public, or British consul or vice-consul within four hundred miles of that city. Pickersgill, In re, 6 Man. & G. 250 ; 6 Scott (N.R.) 831.

—— Before Prothonotary.]—Upon an acknowledgment taken in Pennsylvania, the court, in lieu of a notarial certificate, received a certificate of "the prothonotary and clerk of the Court of Common Pleas in and for the centre county, Pennsylvania," it being sworn that there was no notary public within eighty miles of the place. Way, In re, 7 Scott (N.R.) 999 ; 6 Man. & G. 1046 ; 1 D. & L. 950.

—— Before a Solicitor.]—The court refused to allow a certificate of acknowledgment taken in Ontario to be filed, when the affidavit of verification purported to be sworn before "J. S., an attorney of the supreme court." The affidavit must be sworn before a magistrate, and his authority to administer oaths be certified by a notary public. Woodman, In re, 11 C. B. (N.S.) 630.

—— Before a Notary.]—A deed was acknowledged by a married woman in Wisconsin, in the United States of America. The affidavit of acknowledgment was sworn before a notary public, and not before a magistrate, as required by a rule of H. T., 14 Geo. 3. There was a certificate of the secretary of state of Wisconsin, certifying that in that state a notary public is officially authorised to administer oaths. On motion to enrol the acknowledgment and affidavit, the court directed the same to be enrolled. Cooper, In re, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 220; 34 L. J., C. P. 145; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 114; 11 L. T. 605; 13 W. R. 292.

Copy of Foreign Record.]—Where an acknowledgment of a married woman was taken at Milan, the court allowed a certified copy of an act of the Imperial Royal Civil Tribunal of that city to be received and filed in lieu of the affidavit verifying the certificate of the commissioners, upon the production of an affidavit from a competent party, showing that, by the law of that country, depositions on oath are always deposited amongst the records of the court, and office or certified copies only delivered out to the parties. Clericetti, In re, 15 C. B. 762.

f. Certificate.

On Paper or Parchment.]—In an acknowledgment to bar dower, the affidavit of verification and notarial certificate may be upon paper instead of parchment. Carr, Ex parte, 5 C. B. 496; 5 D. & L. 488; 17 L. J., C. P. 107.

It is no objection that the notarial certificate is on paper instead of parchment. Cock, In re, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 543; 28 L. J., C. P. 138.

Under Seal.]—The notarial certificate required in the case of a fine acknowledged in a foreign country must be under seal; a defect in this particular could not be supplied by proof of the handwriting of the conusors. Cruttenden v. Bourbell, 1 Taunt. 144.

Lady of Full Age.]—A certificate of an acknowledgment cannot be filed without a positive affidavit that she is of full age. Coverley, In re, 8 Scott, 147.

A certificate of acknowledgment of a deed was allowed to be filed where, in lieu of the form given in s. 84, the commissioners merely certified that the lady was, as they believed, of full age. Wallis, Ex parte, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 303; 29 L. J., C. P. 29; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 201; 8 W. R. 48.

Special Order as to Form of.]—Where the form of certificate to be made by commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of married women to deeds prescribed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 84, does not suit the peculiar circumstances of the case, the court will make a special order for the alteration of the form. Luke, In re, 3 D. P. C. 112; 1 Scott, 80; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 265.

To meet the special circumstances of the case, the court directed the commissioners for taking the acknowledgment of a married woman (an infant) in their certificate, to omit "of full age." Ib.

By order of a vice-chancellor indentures of settlements were directed to be executed by a married woman who was an infant. The queen's bench division allowed the certificate of acknowledgment under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 84, to be varied by omitting the words "of full age." Lacey, In re, 6 Q. B. D. 154; 44 L. T. 110; 29 W. R. 442.

Reputed Wife.]—In a certificate, the party was described as "Mary, the reputed wife of A. B., otherwise Mary S., spinster"; she was similarly described in the affidavit of verification, and in the deed itself. The court allowed the documents to be received and filed. Francis, Ex parte, 5 C. B. 498; 17 L. J., C. P. 110.

Date of.]—It is no objection to the filing of the certificate of acknowledgment that the date of the certificate is written on an erasure. Anon., 16 C. B. 574.

Where Executed.]—The documents connected with a married woman's acknowledgment of a deed, made abroad, were received and filed, though, by a mistake, it did not appear from them where the commission was executed; the court being satisfied, aliunde, as to that. Saunderson, In re, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 93; 29 L. J., C. P. 264; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1373; 8 W. R. 417.

Amending.]—The certificates of the acknowledgment of two married women stated them to have executed deeds of lease and release, whereas they were parties only to the release. The court refused to amend the certificates. Whitty or White, Ex parte, 3 Man. & G. 201; 3 Scott (N.R.) 591; 9 D. P. C. 838.

The court refused to allow the amendment of the certificate of the acknowledgment, where the commission issued in January, 1848, and the certificate erroneously stated the acknowledgment of the deed to have been taken in February, 1847. Millard, In re, 5 C. B. 753; 6 D. & L. 86.

g. Filing.

When.]—The affidavit verifying the certificate of the acknowledgment, may be filed subsequently to the filing the certificate. Anon., 1 Scott, 52.

Delay in.]—An acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman was taken in 1842, and the certificate and memorandum thereof duly signed by the commissioners; but, by some inadvertence on the part of the solicitor employed in the transaction, there was no affidavit of verification, and the documents were not filed. After the lapse of thirteen years the court allowed the certificate to be received and filed, upon an affidavit by the surviving commissioner, stating that it had always been his practice, and as he believed, that of his co-commissioner, to make all inquiries of the married woman before taking her acknowledgment; and that, from the circumstance of his having signed the certificate and memorandum, he verily believed that all proper inquiries had been made on this occasion, though from the lapse of time, he was unable positively to state what the answers were. Warne, In re, 15 C. B. 767; 3 C. L. R. 341.

When an acknowledgment had been duly taken, but through inadvertence the certificate and affidavit had not been filed for two years afterwards, the court allowed them to be filed. Stevens, Ex parte, 3 Hodges, 13.

So where there had been an omission for six years to file a certificate of acknowledgment by a married woman, and the affidavit verifying the same, the court allowed the same to be filed on being satisfied that the delay was unintentional, and that during the interval there had been no dealings with the property, and that, therefore, no person had acquired an interest which could be prejudiced by filing the acknowledgment and affidavit. Edge, In re, 35 L. J., C. P. 263 ; L. R. 1 C. P. 533 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 741.

A married woman joined in selling land in 1844. The necessary certificate of acknowledgment and affidavit of verification were signed and sworn, but not filed. A successor of the purchaser having resold in 1875, the defect in title was discovered, and the intending purchaser declined to complete unless it should be remedied. She had died in 1857 :—Held, that the certificate and affidavit might be filed nunc pro tunc. Blair, In re, Waring, Ex parte, 32 L. T. 731.

A married woman executed a deed in 1857, which was duly acknowledged before two commissioners at the time under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74 (The Fines and Recoveries Act), but no certificate of such acknowledgment was then registered or executed. Upon uncontradicted affidavits stating the facts, and that the omission to make the required certificate was merely an accidental oversight, there being no suggestion of malâ fides :—The court directed that the certificate which was now offered should be received and filed. Chalker, In re, 47 L. J., C. P. 378 ; 37 L. T. 502 ; 26 W. R. 128.

Without Commission being Annexed.]—The acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman was taken before special commissioners in Melbourne, but the documents were by mistake returned to this country without having the commission annexed to them. The court, upon being satisfied by affidavit that the acknowledgment had been properly taken by two of the persons to whom the commission was addressed, allowed the documents to be filed. The omission of one of three christian names of one of the commissioners was allowed to be supplied by an affidavit of identity. Edsall, In re, Thomas, In re, 44 L. J., C. P. 228 ; L. R. 10 C. P. 472 ; 23 W. R. 790.

Lost—Second Certificate.—But the court has no power to authorise a judge, before whom an acknowledgment has been taken, to sign a second certificate of such acknowledgment after the first certificate has been lost, in order that the second certificate and affidavit verifying the same may be filed after the time limited for filing of the certificate has elapsed. Married Woman, In re, 36 L. J., C. P. 233 ; L. R. 2 C. P. 510 ; 16 L. T. 323 ; 15 W. R. 745.

Effect of.]—A deed executed by a married woman to pass real estate, and indorsed with a memorandum of acknowledgment before a judge, under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 34, is not effectual, unless a certificate of that acknowledgment is filed of record in the court, as required by s. 85. Jolly v. Hancock, 7 Ex. 820 ; 22 L. J., Ex. 38 ; 16 Jur. 550.

The certificate is conclusive in its operation. Banks v. Ollerton, 10 Ex. 168 ; 2 C. L. R. 1090 ; 23 L. J., Ex. 285 ; 2 W. R. 622.

7. Other Matters relating to.

Fine Levied by Trustee.]—A fine might be levied by a trustee substituted for a missing trustee, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 74, s. 5. Jackson v. Warde, 9 Bing. 399 ; 2 M. & Scott, 566.

—— By Lunatic.]—At law it cannot be shown that a fine levied by a lunatic was void on account of fraud. Murley v. Sherren, 1 P. & D. 126 ; 1 W. W. & H. 678 ; 8 A. & E. 754 ; 8 L. J., Q. B. 152.

A fine levied by a lunatic is binding upon his heirs in a court of law. Ib.

—— By Copyholder.]—A fine levied by a copyholder, who continued in possession, was void as against the lord. Doe d. Tarrant v. Hellier, 3 Term Rep. 162 ; 1 R. R. 680.

—— By Others.]—Any number of persons having separate interests in one tenement, of whatsoever value, might concur to pass their interests to any number of purchasers by one fine. Appleyard v. Brown, 5 Taunt. 265.

Where fines were levied while the estates were contingent, the interest was not thereby extinguished. Doe d. Brune v. Martin, 8 B. & C. 497; 2 M. & Ry. 485.

Vouchee Dead when Judgment given.]—If a writ of summonses ad warrantizandum was returnable on a Sunday, and the vouchee died on that day, the recovery was void ; because Sunday being a dies non juridicus, judgment could not possibly have been given until the Monday following, consequently the judgment must have been given after the death of the vouchee ; and as a common recovery pursued the forms of a real action, it was of absolute necessity that the vouchee, against whom the judgment was obtained, should be living on the day when such judgment was given by the court, for otherwise the judgment was erroneous. Brown v. Swann, 6 Bro. P. C. 333 ; 1 W. Bl. 496, 526 ; 3 Burr. 1595.

Barring Entail.]—The term "disposition" in 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 38, is not restricted to the deed barring the entail, enrolled in chancery under the act, but comprises it and all other instruments by which the arrangement between the vendor and purchaser is carried out. Crocker v. Waine, 5 B. & S. 697 ; 33 L. J., Q. B. 316 ; 10 L. T. 600 ; 12 W. R. 905.

A conveyance executed by a tenant in tail to himself or to his own use is a disposition under that statute. Ib.

A disentailing deed executed in pursuance of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, is valid if enrolled within six months from the time of its execution, although such enrolment has not taken place until after the death of the tenant in tail who executed the deed. Piers, In re, 14 Ir. Ch. Rep. 452.

Seisin of Conusor and Tenant.]—The tenant to the præcipe must have had a freehold in possession, otherwise a recovery suffered was invalid. Roe d. Hale v. Wegg, 6 Term Rep. 708.

A recovery suffered by a person not in possession had no operation. Wynne v. Cookes, 1 Bro. C. C. 515.

A plaintiff, in ejectment for land, proved acts of ownership, and a fine levied by the ancestor of his lessor. The defendant proved that the land was formerly part of the churchyard, and proved acts of ownership by the vicar :—Held, that the fine was not a conclusive bar to the vicar, without clear evidence that the party levying it had then an estate of freehold in the land. Runcorn v. Doe d. Cooper, 8 D. & R. 450 ; 5 B. & C. 696 ; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 281.

A tenant in tail in possession of hereditaments and premises subject to an outstanding term, by an indenture, for the barring all estates tail, and all remainders thereon expectant, and for limiting the same to himself, his heirs, and assigns for ever, and in consideration of 10*s.* to him paid, granted, bargained, and sold the hereditaments and premises, and the reversion, remainder, &c., thereof, to L. & B., their heirs and assigns, to the use of L., that he might become tenant of the freehold, in order to suffer a recovery. The deed was duly enrolled as a bargain and sale :—Held, that by that deed L. became solely seised of the premises, so as to be a good tenant of the freehold for suffering a recovery of the entirety of the premises. Huggerston v. Hanbury, 7 D. & R. 723 ; 5 B. & C. 101 ; 4 L. J. (o.s.), K. B. 269 ; 29 R. R. 176.

In ejectment a fine is no evidence of ownership on the conusor, and without proof that he was in possession when it was levied, it is no evidence at all. Brassington v. Llewellyn, 1 F. & F. 27.

In 1768, T. J. Selby devised as follows :—"I give and devise to my right and lawful heir-at-law (for the better finding out of whom I direct advertisements to be published immediately after my decease in the public papers) all my manors, lands, &c., in B., to hold the same, to my heir-at-law, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, for ever, subject to, and chargeable with, the payment of all my debts, funeral charges, bonds, annuities, and legacies ; which I direct to be paid by my heir-at-law within twelve months after my decease. But should it so happen that no heir-at-law is found, I then constitute and appoint W. Lowndes my lawful heir, on condition he change his name to Selby ; and I give the estates and all the manors before mentioned to W. Lowndes." The testator died in 1772. In 1773, W. Lowndes was appointed receiver of the estates ; and in 1783 he took possession under a decree of March, 1783, and thence to the time of his death retained it, claiming the freehold and exercising dominion over the property as his own. In April, 1784, the devisee executed two deeds in the name of Selby, and the manor courts held by him after that date were held in that name :—Held, that the devisee had, at the time of levying the fine, such an estate of freehold as would make the fine operate as a bar. Davies v. Lowndes, 7 Scott (N.R.) 141 ; 6 Man. & G. 471—Ex. Ch.

Misdescription of Estate.]—A deed to lead the uses of a recovery, by mistake, treated an advowson as in gross, and as vested as to one moiety in A. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail general ; and as to the other moiety, as vested in A. in fee. The whole advowson was in fact appendant to a manor, and the manor and appendant advowson were, with other hereditaments, vested in A. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. A.'s eldest son joined with A. in making a tenant to the præcipe :—Held, that, notwithstanding the language of the recovery deed was large enough to have passed the whole advowson, as an advowson appendant, yet that, by reason of the apparent intention of the parties (although arising out of a mistake) the tenancy in tail was not barred in one moiety of the advowson. Moseley v. Motteux, 10 M. & W. 533 ; 12 L. J., Ex. 136.

Default of Power of Appointment.]—A., being entitled in fee-simple to estates in the county of D., in 1773, married B., who had freehold estates in the county of M., and also in the county of D., including Plas Madoc, in the county of D. Prior to the marriage, articles were executed between these parties and trustees on the 18th of October, 1773, by which it was stipulated, that, in case the marriage took place, A.'s estate should be settled, subject to a term of 500 years ; and B.'s estate (not including Plas Madoc) to the use of A. and B. for their lives and the life of the survivor, and to the use of the first and other sons of the marriage, in tail. There were two sons of the marriage, W. and E., and two daughters. The eldest son, W., having come of age on the 11th or 12th August, 1801, the property of A., the father, was, by lease and release, conveyed to W. for 2,000 years, by way of mortgage, and subject to that term to such uses as A. should appoint ; and in default, to the use of A. and B. for their lives, and afterwards to such uses as A. should appoint ; or in default, to such uses as the estates were then limited to. On the 1st and 2nd April, 1802, A. and B. and W. conveyed, by lease and release, to J. all the estates of A. and B. and W. in the counties of M. and D., and certain tithes theretofore the inheritance of A., in order to make J. tenant to the præcipe ; and the recovery was to enure to such uses as A. and B. and W. should appoint ; and in default, then to and for and upon such and the same powers, provisoes, limitations and agreements as the hereditaments and premises were and stood limited to, immediately before the execution of that indenture by virtue of the articles of settlement of the 18th October, 1773, or to or for and upon such and so many of them as should be then existing, undetermined and capable of taking effect. Common recoveries were suffered in 1802, and A. died soon after :—Held, that, in default of appointment, the deed of 1802 and recovery did not create any other legal limitations, and that Plas Madoc was not affected thereby. Youde v. Jones, 13 M. & W. 534 ; 14 L. J., Ex. 70 ; 9 Jur. 910.

By deed, dated 22nd December, 1809, B. and her son W. exercised the power of appointment given by the deed of 1802 over all the estates in the county of D., except Plas Madoc (which was stated to be thereinafter more particularly described, but was not). By the same deed B. released all her estates (save and except to her and her assigns, during her life, Plas Madoc) to J. and his heirs, to uses, for 1,000 years ; and subject thereto, to the use and intent that B. might receive an annuity of 400*l.* ; and subject thereto, to the use of W., his heirs and assigns for ever :—Held, that Plas Madoc passed under the conveyance from B. to W. in fee, subject to the term of 1,000 years, and that the exception of the life estate of B. was repugnant and void. Ib.

Chirograph and Proclamations.]—In order to prove a fine levied at one of the abolished courts of great session in Wales, a party put in evidence the chirograph with only one proclamation indorsed, and also a plea-roll of the same session, which showed a licentia concordandi between the same parties respecting the same premises :—Held, that the fine was sufficiently proved under 5 Vict. c. 32, s. 2. Doe d. Cadwalader v. Price, 16 M. & W. 603 ; 16 L. J., Ex. 159 ; 11 Jur. 131.

till the 2nd of March following, and this was offered to be proved; but the court refused to admit the evidence, being of opinion that no proof of the time of acknowledging a fine ought to be admitted contrary to or against the chirograph, and that the record, which was the chirograph of a fine, could not be falsified until it was vacated or reversed. Say and Seale (Lord) v. Lloyd, 4 Bro. P. C. 73.

The indorsement of proclamations on a fine was not alone sufficient evidence of their having been made. Doe d. Hatch v. Buck, 2 Marsh. 170; 6 Taunt. 487.

An examined copy of the record of a fine, levied with proclamations, was as good evidence of the fine as the chirograph itself certified by the officer. Doe d. Gilbert v. Ross, 7 M. & W. 102; 10 L. J., Ex. 201.

An entry to avoid a fine with proclamations, though not authorised by the party in whose behalf it was made, is sufficiently ratified by an ejectment founded on it. Doe d. Blight v. Pett, 4 P. & D. 278; 11 A. & E. 842.

A fine with proclamations was levied in the great sessions for the county of Denbigh. The proclamations indorsed on the fine were headed with the words "according to the form of the statute." The second proclamation was stated to be made at Ruthin, in the county of Denbigh, without stating that it was made at the great sessions, as required by 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 26, s. 41:—Held, that that was sufficient, and that, from the previous words, the proclamation must be understood to have been made at the great sessions. Doe d. Jones v. Harrison, 3 B. & Ad. 764; 1 L. J., K. B. 234.

The date of the chirograph of a fine was two days later than the day of the first proclamation, both days being in the same term; three other proclamations were duly made in the three following terms:—Held, to be a good fine with proclamations. Doe d. Fleming v. Ford, 1 A. & E. 758; 3 N. & M. 813; 3 L. J., K. B. 214.

Covenant to Levy.]—A covenant to do all lawful and reasonable acts for further assurance, includes a covenant to levy a fine, though not particularly named. King v. Jones, 5 Taunt. 418; 1 Marsh. 107; 4 M. & S. 188; 15 R. R. 533.

Amendment of Fine.]—The court amended a fine levied at the Carmarthen great sessions, in 1830, by indorsing the first and third proclamations, of which there was no entry, it appearing that such proclamations had been made, but the entry of them omitted by the clerk of the court. Lloyd v. Nicholas, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 633; 1 Arn. 237; 6 Scott, 355; 7 L. J., C. P. 259.

An estate stood limited, subject to a life estate, to five persons, as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between them in tail. One of these persons, a married woman, concurred with her husband in a deed mortgaging her fifth share and all other the share and interest to which she might become entitled by the death of any of the other tenants in tail without issue; and the deed contained a covenant to levy a fine of the property expressed to be conveyed by the deed. A fine was levied, purporting to extend only to the fifth share. Afterwards, one of the other tenants in tail died without issue, and without having barred his estate tail:—Held, that there was an error in the fine, which was cured by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 7, and that the fine was effectual as to one-fourth, and not as to one-fifth only. Life Association of Scotland v. Siddal, 3 De G. F & J. 58.

The court amended a fine levied in 1771, at the great sessions for the county of Cardigan, by indorsing the second and third proclamations (it appearing that there was no entry of them by the clerk of the court), and this, upon an affidavit of the clerk to the deputy prothonotary of that court, to the effect, that the proclamations were always duly made according to the practice of the court, but very often not registered; and on an affidavit of the surviving deforciant that the fine was intended between the parties, she (the survivor) wishing to transmit a good title to a purchaser; and although no affidavit was produced of the fact of the proclamations in this particular case. Price v. Watkins, 6 Jur. 170.

—— Of Recovery.]—The court refused to permit an old recovery to be amended by the insertion of a parish, the words of the deed being large enough to embrace it, and the omission being cured by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 8. Evans, In re, 2 Scott (N.R.) 83. S. C., nom. Heming v. Griffiths, 1 Man. & G. 879. S. C., nom. Watkins, In re, 9 D. P. C. 58.

A recovery was amended under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 8, by inserting the words "right of free warren," the right having always gone with the property in question, and the deed to lead the uses conveying all hereditaments. Twisden, In re, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 253; 5 Scott, 638; 1 Arn. 64; 7 L. J., C. P. 143.

The officer of the court of great sessions having omitted to enter of record a recovery duly suffered at bar, in 1804, the court ordered it to be done nunc pro tunc, under 1 Will. 4, c. 70, s. 27, which gives that court the like power to amend a recovery of the court of great sessions, as if it had been suffered in C. P. Evans v. Griffith, 9 Bing. 311; 2 M. & Scott, 383; 2 L. J., C. P. 9.

The court refused to amend a fine in a case of misdescription, cured by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 7. Lockington v. Shipley, 1 Bing. (N.C.) 355; 1 Scott, 263; 4 L. J., C. P. 48.

In the exemplification of a recovery, the name of the tenant was inserted in the place of that of the demandant, and vice versâ:—Held, that the defect, which was apparent on the production of the deed to lead the uses, was cured by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 8. Wickens v. Windus, 9 C. B. 711; 19 L. J., C. P. 329; 14 Jur. 836.

—— Indorsement of Proclamations.]—A fine was levied at the autumn great sessions held for the county of Cardigan in 1830. The roll of fines levied at those sessions was then proclaimed, and also at the autumn assizes for that county in 1831; and it appeared that the fine was then upon the proper roll. There was no evidence as to any proclamation having been made at the spring assizes 1831; and there was no indorsement of any of the proclamations, the officer whose duty it was to indorse them on the roll having omitted to do so:—The court allowed the proclamations to be indorsed by the clerk of the peace, into whose hands the records of fines for the county of Cardigan, by the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 70, came on the death of the late deputy prothonotary; and this after an ejectment brought to recover the premises comprised in the fine. Evans v. Davies, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 229; 7 D. P. C. 259; 6 Scott, 372; 1 Arn. 486; 8 L. J., C. P. 132; 3 Jur. 223.

Adjoining Owners.]—An action lies against a party for so negligently constructing and keeping a hayrick on the extremity of his land, that, in consequence of its spontaneous ignition, his neighbour's house is burnt down. Vaughan v. Menlove, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 468; 4 Scott, 244; 3 Hodges, 51; 6 L. J., C. P. 92; 1 Jur. 215. S. C., at nisi prius, 7 Car. & P. 525.

An action lies against an owner of a close for negligently lighting a fire there, which spreads to his neighbour's close, notwithstanding 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 86, by which no action shall be maintained against any person on whose estate any fire shall accidentally begin. Filliter v. Phippard, 11 Q. B. 347; 17 L. J., Q. B. 89; 12 Jur. 202.

Section 86 of 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, is a public act. Richards v. Easto, 15 M. & W. 244; 15 L. J., Ex. 163.

And is not confined in its operation to the districts to which the limited clauses of the act were restricted. Filliter v. Phippard, 11 Q. B. 347; 17 L. J., Q. B. 89; 12 Jur. 202.

It does not apply where a fire is produced by negligence; and in that case, by the common law, an action lies against the party by whose negligence, or that of his servants, a fire arises on his premises, and damages the property of another. Ib.

It does not apply where the fire is lighted intentionally, and mischief happens to result. Ib.

Whether the protection given by the stats. 6 Ann, c. 31, and 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, to a party in whose house, or on whose estate, a fire shall accidentally begin, extends to fires occasioned by the negligence of the owner or his servants, or whether it is confined to fires arising from pure accident, in the limited sense of the word—quære? Canterbury (Viscount) v. Att.-Gen., 1 Ph. 306; 12 L. J., Ch. 281; 7 Jur. 224.

Lightermen.]—Goods were delivered at M. to the owner of a ship "B." to be conveyed on board the ship "B.," and then to be carried in her to L. The goods were destroyed by a casual fire on board a lighter, employed by the owners of the "B." to convey them from M. to the ship "B.": —Held, that the 26 Geo. 3, c. 86, s. 2, did not protect the owners of the "B.," as the fire was not on board their ship. Moorewood v. Pollok, 1 El. & Bl. 743; 22 L. 2. FIREMEN AND BRIGADES.

Power to take Possession of Property on Premises.]—A fire broke out on premises in a part of which the plaintiff carried on the business of a licensed victualler, but the plaintiff's goods were not destroyed by the fire. In an action against the defendants for the wrongful conversion of the plaintiff's goods by their servants, the men of the fire brigade, the jury found that the fire brigade had custody of the premises for the purpose of extinguishing the fire; that the injury to the plaintiff's goods was caused by the felonious acts of the men of the fire brigade; that the officers were guilty of negligence in not preventing the felonious acts by the men, and they assessed the damages at 15*l.*:—Held, that under 28 & 29 Vict. c. 90, it is not the imperative duty of the fire brigade to take possession of property on premises where a fire breaks out, but the statute gives them power to do so. Joyce v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 44 L. T. 811; 45 J. P. 667.

Right to Control of Premises—Exclusion of Public.]—Section 171 of the Public Health Act, 1875, incorporating s. 32 of the Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847, empowers a fire brigade established by an urban authority to exclude all persons whose presence would interfere with their operations from the premises on fire. Carter v. Thomas, 62 L. J., M. C. 104; [1893] 1 Q. B. 673; 5 R. 343; 69 L. T. 436; 41 W. R. 510; 17 Cox, C. C. 664; 57 J. P. 438.

—— Chimneys in Dangerous Condition.]—In an action for throwing down a stack of chimneys, and thereby damaging the plaintiff's house, the defendant may justify that he was a fireman, and that the chimneys were in danger of falling on a public footpath, the adjoining house having been burnt down. Dewey v. White, M. & M. 56. See 28 & 29 Vict. c. 90, s. 12.

Expenses of Use of Fire-Engine—"Owner."]—By section 33 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, the expense incurred by the commissioners in sending engines beyond the limits of the special act for extinguishing fire in the neighbourhood is to be borne by "the owners of the land or building where such fire shall have happened." By s. 171 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the provisions of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, with respect to fires are incorporated with that act, and by s. 4 of that act "owner" is defined as "the person receiving the rack-rent of the lands or premises in connection with which the word is used, whether on his own account or as agent or trustee for any other person, or who would so receive the same if such lands or premises were let at a rack-rent":—Held, overruling Lewis v. Arnold (L. R. 10 Q. B. 245) that the expense incurred by the commissioners was to be borne by the "owners" of the land or buildings as defined in the Public Health Act, 1875, and that the definition did not include an occupier of such land or buildings as tenant from year to year. Sale v. Phillips, 63 L. J., M. C. 79; [1894] 1 Q. B. 349; 70 L. T. 559; 58 J. P. 460.

The occupier was the "owner" of lands within the meaning of s. 33, and liable for the expenses incurred in sending an engine to extinguish a fire at a haystack belonging to him. Lewis v. Arnold, 44 L. J., M. C. 68; L. R. 10 Q. B. 245; 32 L. T. 553; 23 W. R. 729.

A local government board is not entitled, under the Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847, s. 32, to charge for the use of apparatus employed and the value of water consumed on the occasion of a fire in premises situate within the district of such board. Drightlington Local Board v. Bower, 22 W. R. 165.

—— In Metropolis.]—Under 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, ss. 76, 77, a magistrate had jurisdiction to fix the amount of reward to be paid to the keepers of engines brought to extinguish fires, and order it to be paid, although the parish officers did not originate any proceeding before him for that purpose. Reg. v. Combe, 3 New Sess. Cas. 394; 13 Q. B. 179; 18 L. J., Q. B. 94; 13 Jur. 192.

The occupier of a building within the metropolis, in the chimney of which a fire originated, and in which there was at the time of the fire no inmate, is liable to repay to the overseers of the parish such reward as has been paid by them to the firemen attending at such fire, and which has been allowed under ss. 76, 77, and 78 of 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, by a justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the case. Reg. v. Pontifex, 4 W. R. 505.

Fire-plug fixed by Waterworks Company—Local Authority—"Request."]—Though s. 66 of the Public Health Act, 1875, makes it the duty of the urban authority to provide proper fire-plugs in their district, it does not impose upon them any statutory obligation to pay for fire-plugs erected by a waterworks company without a previous request from the urban authority; and a "request" by such authority, within the meaning of s. 38 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, cannot be implied from the fact that the urban authority have used fire-plugs erected within their district by a waterworks company, and that such plugs comply with the requirements of that section. Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. Brentford Local Board, 63 L. J., Q. B. 717; [1894] 2 Q. B. 735; 9 R. 788; 71 L. T. 240; 59 J. P. 51—C. A.

3. Firearms.

Proof of.]—Previously to 18 & 19 Vict. c. 148, there were two independent companies for the proof of firearms, viz., the Gun-maker's Company and the Birmingham Company. That act, passed for the proof of small arms by the two companies, and in order to avoid the inconvenience of several acts relating to the same matter, but without amalgamating the two companies, required double barrels to be proved, first by provisional and afterwards by definitive proof. The act declares that each of the two companies shall receive all barrels brought to the proof-house of that company in the proper state for proof, and whether or not theretofore proved, and shall duly prove the same thereat, according to the scale in force, and shall duly mark such barrels, when proved (if found of proof), as duly proved according to such scale; and that a barrel shall not be used in making any small arm unless the barrel has been duly proved at the Gun-makers' Company or at the Birmingham proof-house:—Held, that in the absence of any provision in the act making it obligatory on one company to receive and prove guns by the definitive proof which have been provisionally proved by the other company, the Gun-makers' Company could not be compelled to prove by definitive proof double barrels provisionally proved at the Birmingham proof-house, but which had not been provisionally proved by the Gun-makers' Company. Goodman v. Spencer, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 93; 26 L. J., C. P. 177; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 414; 5 W. R. 524.

Sea Fisheries—Rights of Foreign Nations.]—The right of nations to take fish in the sea may be restrained or regulated by treaty or custom. Fennings v. Granville, 1 Taunt. 241; 9 R. R. 760.

By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 79, s. 1, the articles of the convention between her majesty and the king of the French concerning the fisheries in the seas between the British Islands and France, were declared to have the force of law. By these articles, all transgressions of the regulations are in both countries to be submitted to the exclusive jurisdiction of the tribunal or magistrates designated by law, who are to settle all differences and decide all contentions between fishermen of the two countries; and the trial and judgment are always to take place in a summary manner. This tribunal is always to have power to award damages for injuries over and above the penalties. By s. 11 of the act, all offences against the articles committed by British subjects are to be determined by justices of the peace, who are also declared to have power of awarding compensation for injuries:—Held, that no action could be maintained for an injury caused by a breach of any of the regulations, as exclusive jurisdiction in such matters was given to the tribunal specified in the act. Marshall v. Nicholls, 18 Q. B. 882; 21 L. J., Q. B. 343; 16 Jur. 1155.

—— British Subjects.]—Primâ facie, every subject has a right to take fish found upon the seashore between high and low water mark. Bagott v. Orr, 2 Bos. & P. 472; 5 R. R. 668. S. P., Warren v. Matthews, 6 Mod. 73.

But such general right may be abridged by the existence of an exclusive right in an individual. Bagott v. Orr, supra.

—— Prescription.]—The right of fishing in the sea is common to all the king's subjects; therefore a prescription for such a right as annexed to a certain tenement is bad. Ward v. Cresswell, Willes, 265.

Tidal Navigable Rivers.]—In navigable rivers or arms of the sea, fishery is common and public; in private rivers not navigable, it belongs to the lords of the soil on each side. Carter v. Thurcot, 4 Burr. 2163.

A tidal navigable river is a highway at all times and all states of tide, and is not suspended during such periods of the tide as leave the channel too shallow to float vessels; and the right of the crown to the soil in arms of the sea and public navigable rivers, is subject to the public right of passage, and any grantee of the crown must take subject to such right. Colchester Corporation v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 339; 15 L. J., Q. B. 59; 9 Jur. 1090.

Oysters deposited artificially, and not attached to the soil, may be a nuisance, and obstruct the navigation, as well as natural oyster-beds. Ib.

Tidal River—What is.]—An information was laid against the appellant for unlawfully fishing in a river wherein the respondents had a private right of fishery. It was proved that the river was navigable, and that at the place where the appellant fished the water was not salt, and that in ordinary tides it was unaffected by any tidal influence, but that upon the occasion of very high tides the rising of the salt water in the lower part of the river dammed back the fresh water, and caused it upon those occasions to rise and fall with the flow and ebb of the tide. The appellant contended that, the river being navigable and tidal at the place in question, there was a presumption that the public had a right to fish there, and that the jurisdiction of the justices was therefore ousted by a reasonable claim of right:—Held, that the river at the place in question could not be considered as tidal within the meaning of the rule of law which gives the public a right to fish in navigable tidal rivers, and therefore there was no claim of title set up sufficient to oust the justices' jurisdiction. Reece v. Miller, 51 L. J., M. C. 64; 8 Q. B. D. 626; 47 J. P. 37.

—— Presumption.]—In a tidal river the fishery is primâ facie common to all. Aliter, where there is no tide. Fitzwalter's (Lord) Case, 1 Mod. 105.

River made Navigable.]—A river was made navigable by a company, and the public allowed to navigate it on payment of tolls, under certain acts of parliament; but the soil and rights of the owners on each side of the river remained untouched. The public had fished for many years in the river without interruption by the owner of the soil; but he caused a notice to be set up forbidding all fishing. A person afterwards fished in the river, and an information was taken out against him under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 24. At the hearing he set up the right in the public, and contended that the jurisdiction of the justices was ousted by this bonâ fide claim of right:—Held, that the right set up could not exist in law, and therefore title could not come in question, and the jurisdiction of the justices was not ousted. Hargreaves v. Diddams, 44 L. J., M. C. 178; L. R. 10 Q. B. 582; 32 L. T. 600; 23 W. R. 828.

The right of the public to fish in a non-tidal river which is made navigable by locks cannot exist in law. Mussett v. Burch, 35 L. T. 486.

M. was convicted under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 24, of fishing in water which was private property. The water was part of a navigable river, which was not tidal, and which was navigated by means of locks. At the hearing he set up a public right of fishing, and argued that the jurisdiction of the justices was ousted by such bonâ fide claim of right:—Held, that no such right could exist in law, and therefore the jurisdiction of the justices was not ousted. Ib.

Non-tidal Waters.]—There can be no public right of fishing in non-tidal waters, even where they are to some extent "navigable rivers." Pearce v. Scotcher, 9 Q. B. D. 162; 46 L. T. 342; 46 J. P. 248.

The public cannot acquire by immemorial usage any right of fishing in a river in which, though navigable, the tide does not ebb and flow. Murphy v. Ryan, Ir. R. 2 C. L. 143; 16 W. R. 678.

The word "navigable," used in a legal sense, as applied to a river in which the soil primâ facie belongs to the crown, and the fishing to the public, imports that the river is one in which the tide ebbs and flows. Ib.

Inland Lakes.]—The crown has no de jure right to the soil or fisheries of an inland non-tidal lake. Bristow v. Cormican, 3 App. Cas. 641.

If there are acts in pais, which would be admissible as evidence of the title of the crown, they must be submitted to a jury. They cannot be taken by the judge and made the basis of a decision by himself alone. Ib.

A general grant by the crown of a several fishery in a non-tidal lake is not, without more, sufficient to establish the title thereto; and, where there is no evidence of acts of possession by the grantee at the particular part of the lake which is the place in dispute, can have no effect. Ib.

The public has not of common right a common of fishery in large inland waters in which the tide does not flow or reflow, although they are navigable. Johnston v. Bloomfield, Ir. R. 8 C. L. 88—Ex. Ch.

Right of public to fish in non-tidal river, see Smith v. Andrews, infra, col. 93.

Grant by Crown of a Several Fishery.]—The soil of navigable tidal rivers, so far as the tide flows and reflows, is primâ facie in the crown, and the right of fishery therein is primâ facie in the public. But the right to exclude the public therefrom, and to create a several fishery, existed in the crown, and might, lawfully, have been exercised by the crown before Magna Charta, and the several fishery could, lawfully, be afterwards made the subject of grant by the crown to a private individual. Malcolmson v. O'Dea, 10 H. L. Cas. 593; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1135; 9 L. T. 93; 12 W. R. 178.

—— When Presumed.]—Where a grant of a several fishery had been made by the crown to a corporation, and rent received by the crown in respect thereof for a long period of time, the earliest grants describing it as an ancient inheritance of the crown:—Held, that the lawfulness of the origin of the several fishery might be presumed. Ib.

A prescriptive right to a several oyster fishery in a navigable tidal river was proved to have been exercised from time immemorial by a borough corporation and its lessees; without any qualification except that the free inhabitants of ancient tenements in the borough had from time immemorial without interruption, and claiming as of right, exercised the privilege of dredging for oysters in the locus in quo from the 2nd of February to Easter eve in each year, and of catching and carrying away the same without stint for sale and otherwise. This usage of the inhabitants tended to the destruction of the fishery, and if continued would destroy it:—Held (Lord Blackburn dissenting), that the claim of the inhabitants was not to a profit à prendre in alieno solo; that a lawful origin for the usage ought to be presumed if reasonably possible; and that the presumption which ought to be drawn, as reasonable in law and probable in fact, was that the original grant to the corporation was subject to a trust or condition in favour of the free inhabitants of ancient tenements in the borough in accordance with the usage. Goodman v. Saltash Corporation, 52 L. J., Q. B. 193; 7 App. Cas. 633; 48 L. T. 239; 31 W. R. 293; 47 J. P. 276—H. L. (E.)

E. claimed to use a raise-net on a marsh, which in the reign of Elizabeth formed part of a manor of an attainted person. The inquisition and survey then made purported to give an inventory of his possessions, and mentioned a raise-net set up in another part of the manor from that in which E. used his, but made no specific mention of any other raise-net. Subsequently part of the manor was granted to a predecessor of E., and was enfranchised. Proof of user since 1797 was given, but the right had been contested by people in the neighbourhood. In 1812, a deed of compromise was entered into in which the owner of the part of the manor not granted away was recited to be lord of the manor, and entitled to the soil of the marsh, and the predecessors of E. were recited to be entitled to the sole herbage and pasturage, and to a concurrent right of lake fishery thereon. There was also evidence of subsequent user, and proof that this raise-net had been used by E. in 1857:—Held, that although long exclusive enjoyment of a right to a several fishery in a public navigable river is sufficient primâ facie evidence upon which to presume that the crown had granted a separate right before Magna Charta, yet the omission of all mention of the right in any probably true inventory, taken since that period, of all the possessions of the then alleged owner of that right, or any reasonable ground for considering that the user had not been exclusive, but in common with other persons, may be sufficient to negative such presumption. Edgar v. English Fisheries Commissioners, 23 L. T. 732.

That this claim, being made in respect of what was then a customary tenement of the manor, a prescriptive right to a fishery of so peculiar a kind as to be accompanied by the right of using a fixed engine would have been presented by the tenant in the name of the lord, and would in consequence probably have appeared in the inquisition; and, therefore, this omission was proof that the right was not in existence at that time. Ib.

—— Appurtenant to a several Pasture.]—Even if a fishery may pass as appurtenant to land, a several fishery cannot be appurtenant to a several pasture; and, therefore, whatever claim E. might have to this fishery, it could only be as appurtenant to demesne lands, which was here negatived by the omission in the inquisition. Ib.

Grant to Corporation—Effect of Reincorporation.]—A corporation which had an immemorial right to the oyster-fishery in a navigable river, to be managed by certain functionaries and courts of the corporation, became, by the ouster of several of its members, unable to continue itself, or to carry on the management of the fishery. Afterwards the corporation was reincorporated by charter under the old name; and the charter ratified, confirmed and restored to it all fisheries:—Held, that there having been no actual dissolution, the fishery had never come to the crown, and would therefore be in the corporation as it existed under the new charter. Colchester Corporation v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 339; 15 L. J., Q. B. 173; 10 Jur. 610.

Licence to Fish, whether a Demise.]—The corporation, by a written document, purporting to be an order of a court of the corporation, held for the conservancy of the fishery, granted a licence to certain dredgermen to dredge and take the oysters during the oyster season:—Held, that this did not operate as a demise of the fishery, putting the corporation out of possession. Ib.

—— Grant of Licences.]—Evidence of a continuous practice for upwards of sixty years, wholly unresisted, for a corporation to grant licences to fish in a navigable tidal river, and to appoint watchers in order to prevent unlicensed persons from fishing therein, is sufficient for a jury to infer the ownership of a free fishery in the corporation; and it is not a just conclusion, from the fact of their having recovered in a former trial, where a part only of the entire subject-matter of the free fishery was in issue, that at that time the corporation was not possessed of the whole, and that their claim to the remainder was therefore a usurpation. Mannall v. Fisher, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 856; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 389.

A claim of a right to obtain from a corporation a licence to fish in an oyster-fishery belonging to them, under an alleged custom for the corporation to grant such a licence, under rules made by them, to oyster dredgers living in a certain district, and having served an apprenticeship, upon payment of a reasonable fee, is bad, not because of the uncertainty of the fee, but because, if it is not lawful to fish without such licence, the claim is precarious, and not as of right, being an enjoyment of the leave and licence of the corporation at their will and pleasure as owners of the fishery, and long enjoyment in order to establish a right by custom must be as of right, and not by leave asked from time to time. Mills v. Colchester Corporation, 37 L. J., C. P. 278; L. R. 3 C. P. 575; 16 W. R. 987—Ex. Ch. Affirming, 16 L. T. 626. S. C., on demurrer, 17 C. B. (N.S.) 635.

By Prescription.]—There may be a prescriptive right in a subject to a several fishery in any arm of the sea. Orford Corporation v. Richardson, 4 Term Rep. 439; 3 R. R. 579.

A prescriptive right to a several fishery in a navigable river may pass as appurtenant to a manor. Rogers v. Allen, 1 Camp. 309; 10 R. R. 689.

To an action for fishing in the plaintiff's fishery, the defendant pleaded that the locus in quo was an arm of the sea in which every subject of the realm had the liberty and privilege of free fishing; the plaintiff replied, a prescription for the sole and several right of fishing and traversed that every subject had the liberty and privilege of free fishing in the locus in quo: this was a bad traverse, and the defendant therefore might well pass it by in the rejoinder, and traverse the prescriptive right of the plaintiff stated in the replication. Richardson v. Orford, 2 H. Bl. 182; 1 Anst. 231; 4 Term Rep. 437; 3 R. R. 579.

——Evidence—Ancient Suit.]—In an action for trespass to a several fishery in a navigable tidal river in Ireland the defendants justified on the ground that the public had the right of fishing. The plaintiff's paper title (if the possession and enjoyment were consistent with it) afforded irresistible ground for a presumption that the fishery was put in defence before Magna Charta. As evidence of possession and user the plaintiff tendered (inter alia) the proceedings and decree in 1867 in a "possessory" suit brought in the court of chancery in Ireland by C. (the plaintiff's predecessor in title) against strangers to the present action; by which decree an injunction was awarded to quiet C. and his undertenants in such possession of their fishing as they had at the time of exhibiting the bill and three years before, to continue until evicted by due course of law, both parties being at liberty to take proceedings at law against each other for ascertaining their titles:—Held, that as the decree was a solemn and final adjudication not collusive, and as it could not have been made except upon proof of unbroken user and enjoyment for at least three years before the bill, inconsistent with any actual exercise at that time of a public right of fishing, the proceedings and decree were admissible; and that the effect of this evidence (not being met by any counter evidence applicable to the same period) was extremely strong to establish possession and enjoyment of the fishery in the latter part of the seventeenth century, consistent with the paper title and exclusive of the public. Pim v. Curell (6 M. & W. 234) discussed. Neill v. Devonshire (Duke), 8 App. Cas. 135; 31 W. R. 622—H. L. (Ir.)

Held, also, that a judgment obtained by the plaintiff in 1826 in an action against a stranger for trespass by fishing in the locus in quo, in which action the defendant appeared but allowed judgment to go by default of pleading, was evidence in the present action of possession in 1826. Ib.

The plaintiff sued the defendant for consequential injury to her reversionary interest in a several fishery in an arm of the sea, alleging her right to the soil between high and low water mark, into which she charged the defendant with cutting, and stating that such soil and fishery were in the possession of F., as her tenant. The defendant was tenant of a neighbouring property under G. In support of the plaintiff's title, evidence was offered of the proceedings in a former action, brought by F., while tenant to the plaintiff, against G., complaining of a similar injury to the same fishery. The declaration to the former action alleged that the present plaintiff was owner of the soil between high and low water mark, and charged G. with cutting the soil, and thereby injuring F.'s fishery. Not guilty being pleaded, the cause was referred to arbitration, and an award made in favour of F.:—Held, that these proceedings were not admissible either as evidence of reputation of the plaintiff's ownership of the fishery, or as proof or an admission by G. of the plaintiff's title to the soil or fishery. Wenman v. Mackenzie, 5 El. & Bl. 447; 25 L. J., Q. B. 44; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1015, 1049, n.; 3 W. R. 626.

Right of Crown to grant to Subject—Exclusion of Owner of Soil.]—The crown can hold a river-bed throughout a manor and the fishery in the river flowing over the same as parcel of the manor, and may grant the manor with the river-bed and fishery to a subject, and the subject may grant the banks of the river with reservation of the river-bed and fishery. Devonshire (Duke) v. Pattinson, 57 L. J., Q. B. 189; 20 Q. B. D. 263; 58 L. T. 392; 52 J. P. 276—C. A.

Merger — Re-grant by Crown.]—A several salmon fishery in a tidal river, granted by the crown to a subject before Magna Charta, does not, if it reverts to the crown, merge in the prerogative of the crown, but may be re-granted by the crown to a subject. Northumberland (Duke) v. Houghton, 39 L. J., Ex. 66; L. R. 5 Ex. 127; 22 L. T. 49; 18 W. R. 495.

2. FISHERY ACTS.

Salmon Fishery.] — See 4. Salmon Fishery, infra.

Election of Fishery Conservators—Rejecting Votes.]—The defendant, as chairman of a meeting held, pursuant to the Fishery Laws, for the election of Fishery Conservators, rejected the vote of the plaintiff, which was duly tendered by proxy:—Held, that an action against him for not receiving the plaintiff's vote was sustainable without special damage. Beecker v. Lucas, Ir. R. 11 C. L. 517.

Undersized Shell-Fish — Removal from Fishery.]—The offence of removing undersized shell-fish from a fishery, contrary to by-laws framed under the Sea Fisheries (Shell-Fish) Regulation Act, 1894, is complete wherever such shell-fish have been taken up from any part of the fishery with the intention of eventually carrying them away. Thomson v. Burns, 66 L. J., Q. B. 176; 76 L. T. 58; 18 Cox, C. C. 491; 61 J. P. 84.

District Fisheries Committee—Expenses—Restrictions by Constituent Councils.]—The words of s. 6, sub-s. 1, of the Sea Fisheries Regulation Act, 1888, "Subject to any restrictions or conditions as to expenditure made by the council or councils by whom a local fisheries committee is appointed, the committee may appoint such fishery officers as they deem expedient for the purpose of enforcing the observance within their district of by-laws, &c." imply that such restrictions or conditions must be imposed by such council or councils at the time when such appointment is to be made, and not subsequently; provided that such council or councils have reasonable notice that such appointment is contemplated. The expenses of such local fisheries committee mentioned in s. 10 of the said act include the properly estimated expenses deemed to be required by such committee during their year of office, and not merely expenses actually incurred by them. Reg. v. Plymouth

Semble, any council by whom the committee is appointed may impose the restrictions or conditions mentioned in s. 6. Ib.

Exclusive Right of Fishery Officer to Prosecute.]—The Sea Fisheries Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 22), creates certain offences, and by s. 11: "The provisions of this Act . . . . shall be enforced by sea-fishery officers," who are defined by that section:—Held, that the effect of the above words is that no one except a sea-fishery officer can prosecute for an offence against the act, and a rule calling upon justices to hear and determine a summons for an offence against the act, taken out by a private individual, was discharged. Reg. v. Cubitt, 58 L. J., M. C. 132 ; 22 Q. B. D. 622 ; 60 L. T. 638 ; 37 W. R. 492 ; 16 Cox, C. C. 618 ; 53 J. P. 470.

Appeal against Decision of Commissioners—Costs.—Upon appeal against a decision of the commissioners for English fisheries, under 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121, s. 45, which incorporates the provisions of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, as to the power of the superior court to give costs, the respondent on the inquiry before the commissioners contested the legality of a fishing mill-dam, and argued the case on the appeal:—Held, that the court, on quashing the order of the commissioners, had power to order the respondent to pay the appellant his costs. Garnett v. Backhouse, 9 B. & S. 306 ; 37 L. J., Q. B. 228 ; L. R. 3 Q. B. 699 ; 19 L. T. 145 ; 16 W. R. 1203.

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 24—Destroying Fish.] — See Caygill v. Thwaite, infra, 3. Private Fisheries, col. 103.

Water Bailiff—Right to search before Apprehension.]—Jackson v. Stevenson, 24 Sess. Cas. 4th ser. ; Justic. Cas. 38.

Beam Trawling—High and Low Water-Marks.]—Herring Fishery (Scotland) Act, 1889. Whyte v. Thompson, 24 Sess. Cas. 4th ser. ; Justic. Cas. 55.

Destruction of Fish—Shell-fish.]—The 3 Jac. 1, c. 12 (repealed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 39), which prohibited persons from "wilfully taking, destroying, or spoiling any spawn, fry, or brood, of any sea-fish in any weir or other engine or device whatsoever," seemed not to comprehend shell-fish ; and if it did, it meant a taking for destruction, and not a taking of oysters' spawn for the purpose of removing it to beds, for further growth and maturity to make it marketable. Bridger v. Richardson, 2 M. & S. 568.

Dredging for oyster-spat, in a common navigable river was illegal under 13 Ric. 2, st. 1, c. 19 (repealed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 39). Maldon Corporation v. Woolvet, 4 P. & D. 26 ; 12 A. & E. 13 ; 9 L. J., Q. B. 370.

3. Private Fisheries.

a. Origin and Existence.

Ownership of Soil.]—An owner of a several fishery is primâ facie the owner of the soil. Partheriche v. Mason, 2 Chit. 658. S. P., Anon., Lofft, 364. And see Seymour v. Courtenay, infra.

Grant of fishery held to pass the soil. Scratton v. Bond, 4 B. & C. 485 ; or an interest in the soil, so that the fishery is rateable to the poor. Rex v. Ellis, 1 M. & S. 652.

Semble, that an owner of a several fishery, in ordinary cases, and where the terms of the grant are unknown, may be presumed to be the owner of the soil. Somerset (Duke) v. Fogwell, 5 B. & C. 875 ; 8 D. & R. 747 ; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 49 ; 29 R. R. 449.

To an action for fishing in the plaintiff's fishery the defendant pleaded that the locus in quo was the soil and freehold of S., and that he ought to have a common fishery there:—Held, that such plea was bad, as a common fishery might be applicable to the sea, and extends to all mankind, and that a common fishery implied a right of enjoyment with certain other persons. Bennett v. Coster, 8 Taunt. 183 ; 2 Moore, 83 ; 19 R. R. 491. And see S. C., 1 Br. & B. 465 ; 4 Moore, 110.

It should have been a right of common of fishery. Ib.

A lord of a manor by deed granted and enfeoffed to M. part of his fishery, to hold to M., his heirs and assigns, at a yearly free or quit rent. On the deed, livery of seisin was indorsed:—Held, that M. was entitled to maintain an action against a wrongdoer for the erection of a pier on the soil of the part of the fishery so granted. Ib.

And see tit. Sea and Seashore.

—— Allegation of Several Fishery.] — An allegation of a several fishery, primâ facie, imports ownership of the soil, and the plaintiff can maintain trespass against the landowner erecting a jetty in the lake. Marshall v. Ulleswater Steam Navigation Co., 3 B. & S. 732 ; 32 L. J., Q. B. 139 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 988 ; 8 L. T. 416 ; 11 W. R. 489.

—— Mill-pond of a Manor.]—In an action by the lord of the manor against the owner of an ancient mill, for breaking and entering the mill-pond (by fishing and taking fish), the pond having originally been a portion of the ancient waste of the manor, the mill being copyhold of the manor, and passing, with a house, by the words "mill, messuage, with appurtenances," and an inclosure act making no mention of the pond, and there being contradictory evidence of acts of ownership:—Held, that, primâ facie, if the pond was parcel of the ancient waste at the time of the act, the soil still continued to be in the lord, but that he could not recover unless he had exclusive right to the fishing, as well as to the soil, and the jury finding that the soil was in him, but that the millowner had a right of fishing, the verdict was entered for the plaintiff, on the pleas of not guilty and not possessed, but for the defendant on a plea justifying under a prescriptive right of fishing. Clarke v. Mercer, 1 F. & F. 492.

Customary Rights—Validity.]—There can be no valid custom for the inhabitants of a parish to angle for, catch and carry away fish in a private fishery. Bland v. Lipscombe, 4 El. & Bl. 713, n. ; 3 C. L. R. 261 ; 24 L. J., Q. B. 155, n. ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 707, n. ; 3 W. R. 57. S. P., Lloyd v. Jones, 6 C. B. 81 ; 17 L. J., C. P. 206.

—— Commoners.]—A custom for the commoners, copyholders, and ancient freeholders of a manor and their tenants, and the dwellers in the parish and manor to have common of fishery over the lord's waters on the waste of the manor, and to take and to carry away fish as a profit à prendre, is unreasonable and bad. Allgood v. Gibson, 34 L. T. 883 ; 25 W. R. 60.

Freeholder's Right—Custom of Manor.]—P., as servant of a freeholder, who held a conveyance of the manor and the right of fishery, cut the nets of a copyholder while fishing. P., on being summoned for assault, produced the conveyance, but no evidence was given of the freeholder ever having exercised the right, while evidence was given that all copyholders had the right to fish, and had exercised it for 50 years :—Held, that the justices were right in convicting P., and in overruling the claim of right set up by him in the name of his master. Priest v. Archer, 51 J. P. 725.

Under Canal Company's Acts.[—In an action for fishing on the reservoir of a canal, the defendant justified as claiming title under the lord of a manor, who claimed under the act of parliament of the company, by which lords of manors through which the canal was cut and reservoir made should be entitled to the right of fishery, and of so much as should be made in, over or through the common or waste lands within their manors, and over or through any other lands or grounds in the waters whereof such lords had the right of fishery. The ownership of the part of the land taken by the company for the reservoir, was not in the lord :—Held, that the true construction of the act was to give lords of manors there referred to the right of fishery only where the ownership of the soil was in them, where there was then no water, fish, or fishery, and to continue it in the lords where there were already water and fish, and the fishery was in the lord. Grand Union Canal Co. v. Ashby, 6 H. & N. 394 ; 30 L. J., Ex. 203 ; 3 L. T. 673.

The defendant also claimed, under their act of parliament, the right of fishery, as owner of the land through or adjoining which the reservoir was made :—Held, that such owners were limited to fishing in the canal and collateral cut, omitting reservoirs. Ib.

A canal act provided that it should be lawful for the owners of the lands on which any reservoir should be made, to let all the water out of such reservoir once in seven years, for the purpose of taking the fish therein :—Held, that each owner had separate interests and a several right of fishery in the water which covered his own land, and that all were not tenants in common of such fishery. Snape v. Dobbs, 8 Moore, 23 ; 1 Bing. 202 ; 1 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 58 ; 25 R. R. 616.

Right of Public—Navigable Non-tidal River.]—The public cannot by prescription or otherwise obtain a legal right to fish in a non-tidal river, even though it be navigable. Smith v. Andrews, [1891] 2 Ch. 678 ; 65 L. T. 175.

Evidence of Ownership.]—S. was charged with unlawfully fishing in a river contrary to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 24. The prosecutor produced a lease of the lands executed by the preceding owner, and proved execution by the lessee, but the witness of the lessor's signature was not called. The lease contained an express reservation of fishing and the term was still current. Both the original lessor and lessee were dead, but rent had been received and paid under the lease for seven years :—Held, that there was sufficient evidence of a private right of fishing without producing the probate of the original lessor's will, and that the justices ought to convict. Greenbank v. Sanderson, 49 J. P. 40.

—— Tidal River—Norfolk Broad.]—B. was charged under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 24, with unlawfully taking fish in a private fishery. The water was part of a Norfolk broad or lake, 35 miles from the sea. The evidence showed that the tide did not reach the spot, though occasionally the fresh water was backed up so as to rise three or four inches when there was a high tide. Anglers had occasionally been turned off if no consent of the adjoining owners had been obtained by them :—Held, that there was sufficient evidence to support the finding of justices, that there was not a tidal navigable river where the public had a right to fish, but was a private fishery ; and the conviction was held right. Blower v. Ellis, 50 J. P. 326.

—— Fishery appurtenant to Manor—Licences to Fish.]—To prove a prescriptive right of fishery appurtenant to a manor, old licences on the court rolls, granted by the lords of the manor, in consideration of rents, to fish, are evidence, without proof of payment of the rents, if such rents have since been paid, or if the lords have exercised other acts of ownership. Rogers v. Allen, 1 Camp. 309.

—— Grant from Crown—Surrender—User.]—From the finding of an inquisition in 1540 there was clear evidence of the existence at and prior to that date of a several fishery in tidal waters, which had been surrendered to the crown. By subsequent instruments of title this several fishery was identified with that claimed by the plaintiff, who proved documentary title thereto. The evidence satisfied the court that a several fishery was in fact held and enjoyed in accordance with the documentary title :—Held, that the plaintiff had established his right to the several fishery claimed. Tighe v. Sinnott, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 140.

Prior to a grant in fee to T., a tenant in tail (one of the predecessors in title of the plaintiff), an inquisition was held in 1607. The jurors found inter alia that T. was entitled to a several fishery (describing it by metes and bounds), and found that the commons of J. were in the habit of fishing there :—Held, that the two findings must be taken together, and that as there was no allusion to any title existing in the commons of J. to fish in the several fishery found to exist, the latter finding must be looked on as a statement of fact, to be taken in connection with other circumstances in the case. Held also, that the several fishery found to exist in 1607 was not at that time subject to any rights, either of the public or of any specified or defined portion of the public, and that therefore the principle of Goodman v. Saltash (7 App. Cas. 633) was inapplicable. Ib.

—— User by Public Rate Books.]—In an action for trespass on a several fishery evidence of fishing by the public as of right was admitted in derogation of the plaintiff's title. Entries of the names of tenants in parish rate-books were admitted in proof of ownership of the fishery by the lessors, the plaintiff's predecessors in title. Smith v. Andrews, supra.

Lost Grant presumed Evidence of User.]—

Evidence of adverse user for sixty years of part of the plaintiff's fishery held to justify jury in presuming a grant to the defendant. Little v. Wingfield, 8 Ir. C. L. R. 279; 11 Ir. C. L. R. 63.

The plaintiff in support of a claim to a several fishery in the sea proved an adventurer's certificate of 1666, finding R. entitled to a salmon fishery and the lands of C. Acts of ownership over the fishery by A. and his grantee (between whom and R. no connection was shown), were proved, between 1668 and 1701. No such act was proved from 1701 to 1798; but from 1798 to 1857 there was proof of undisturbed user by the O'Neills from whom the plaintiff derived title. The O'Neill family were proved to have been entitled under A. to the C. lands from 1741 to 1857:—Held, that a several fishery in the plaintiff was rightly found. O'Neill v. Allen, 9 Ir. C. L. Rep. 152.

Weir—Obstructing River—Ancient Grant.]—A weir appurtenant to a fishery, obstructing the whole or part of a navigable river, is legal, if granted by the crown before the reign of Edward I. Such a grant may be inferred from evidence of its existence before that time. Williams v. Wilcox, 8 A. & E. 314; 3 N. & P. 606; 7 L. J., Q. B. 229.

Fishery in Gross—Crown Grant of Adjoining Lands.]—A grant by the crown of adjoining land with general words of fisheries does not pass an ancient several fishery in gross belonging to the crown. Royal Piscerie of the Bawne, Davys, 55.

Several Fishery — Oysters Reserved to Grantor.]—There may be a several fishery though oysters and fish for the grantor's table be reserved to the grantor. Seymour (Lord) v. Courtenay (Lord), 5 Burr. 2814.

Quære. Whether one can have a several fishery without ownership of the soil.

—— Right of Crown to Create.]—See Malcolmson v. O'Dea, 10 H. L. Cas. 593; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1135; 9 L. T. 93; 12 W. R. 178.

Ireland—Landed Estates Court—Declaration of Title.]—Upon a petition filed in the landed estates court for a declaration of title to a several fishery:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the petitioner ought to have taken proceedings in a common law court to have the nature of the fishery ascertained, and its limit defined before coming to the landed estates court. Acheson's Estate, In re, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 107.

b. Nature of Right.

Creation of.]—Where a subject is owner of a several fishery in a navigable river, where the tide flows and reflows, granted to him (as must be presumed) before Magna Charta, by the description of separatum piscarium, that is an incorporeal and not a territorial hereditament, and a term of years in it cannot be created without deed. Somerset (Duke) v. Fogwell, 5 B. & C. 875; 8 D. & R. 747; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 49; 29 R. R. 449.

The right of fishing, being an incorporeal hereditament, cannot be the subject of an exception in a deed or a lease. Corker v. Payne, Ir. R. 4 C. L. 380; 18 W. R. 436.

Use and Occupation.]—By agreement in writing, the plaintiff let to the defendant, at a yearly rent, the right of fishing in a certain river with rod and line only. The defendant having so used the fishery:—Held, that the plaintiff might recover the rent, under a count, for the use and occupation of the fishery, and that there was no objection to the particulars so describing his claim. Holford v. Pritchard, 3 Ex. 793; 18 L. J., Ex. 315.

In Respect of what Lands.]—In an action of trespass to a several fishery and to a free fishery, pleas of justification alleged prescriptive rights in the defendant (1) to a free fishery, (2) a common fishery, (3) to angle and fish with rod and line in the locus in quo, as appurtenant to lands of the defendant, which the pleas did not allege to be adjacent to the locus in quo; and, in other pleas of justification, grants in fee of a right to enter and fish in the locus in quo were alleged to have been made by a former owner in fee of the fisheries in the summons and plaint mentioned, to a former owner in a fee to certain lands, "whose estate therein," it was averred, "the defendant had" at the times of the alleged trespasses, without describing the situation of the lands, or deducing the defendant's title from the original grantee:—Held, first, that the absence of averments, showing proximity between the locus in quo and the lands in respect of which the alleged rights were claimed, was not a valid ground of demurrer; and that a sufficient appropriateness of position would, if necessary, be presumed. Acheson v. Henry, Ir. R. 7 C. L. 486.

Held, secondly, that the transmission of the rights conferred by the alleged grants to the defendant, as owner in fee of the lands, was sufficiently stated. Ib.

Construction of Patent for the Judge.]—The words "libera piscaria" in a patent do not mean an exclusive fishery, and are not to be so construed by a judge; and he ought not to leave it to the jury to say whether, from the acts and usage of the grantees, a several fishery was intended to pass. Johnston v. Bloomfield, Ir. R. 8 C. L. 68—Ex. Ch.

Right not Exclusive.]—The grant by the owner of the soil covered with water to another of a free fishery over the soil of the grantor is, as matter of construction, and especially in the case of the crown, the grant of a fishery not exclusive; and evidence cannot be received to show that it was intended to exclude the grantor. Ib.

Right of Public—Inland Waters.]—The public have not of common right, a common fishery in inland, non-tidal, navigable waters. Ib.

Easement—Profits à prendre.]—The 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, does not apply to easements or profits à prendre in gross, e.g. to a claim of a free fishery in the waters of another. Shuttleworth v. Le Fleming, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 687; 34 L. J., C. P. 309; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 840; 14 W. R. 13.

Grant—Reservation in.]—A. being seised of a mill, and having a sole fishery in the waters, granted the mill, with all waters, streams, &c. necessary in working the same, "except and always reserving the right and privilege of fishing in the waters of the mill":—Held, that this was an exception of the sole fishery, and not a reservation of a new easement. Paget (Lord) v. Milles, 3 Dougl. 43.

Right of—Norfolk Broads—Public Right of Way — Tidal Waters.] — A landowner who claimed to be owner of part of one of the Norfolk broads, brought an action for an injunction to restrain a person, claiming (inter alia) as one of the public, from shooting or fishing over the plaintiff's part of the broad, and from boating over such part, except within certain limits comprising what was called "the channel." The plaintiff claimed to be owner under an award made in 1808 by commissioners under a local inclosure act of 1801, and which award purported to allot the part of the broad so claimed to one of his predecessors in title. The defendant impeached the validity of the award, and challenged the claim to ownership on various grounds alleging (inter alia) that the broad was a tidal water, and therefore crown property, and open to the public for all purposes:—Held, upon the evidence, that the broad was not tidal, that the defendant's other contentions against the plaintiff's claim to the ownership and exclusive right of shooting and fishing failed, and that an injunction must be granted accordingly; but that the plaintiff had not made out his claim to restrict the public right of way and boating to the so-called "channel." Micklethwait v. Vincent, 67 L. T. 225.

Inland Non-tidal Lake—Right of Riparian Owners.]—The plaintiffs were the respective owners of the several lands adjoining and surrounding Lough Conn, in the county of Mayo (with the exception of a small portion of such lands), and of the islands in the lake. The defendants held portions of one of the islands as judicial tenants to one of the plaintiffs. The lake is a freshwater lake, some eight miles in length, and varying in breadth from one to four miles. Its waters discharge into a smaller lake known as Lough Cullen, and flow thence by the river Moy to the sea, the tide of which does not rise beyond a point some fifteen miles from Lough Cullen. For many years the public had, without interruption from the plaintiffs, fished the lake with rod and line, but in recent years the practice of fishing with cross-lines had been begun or become general. This mode of fishing, which is carried on by means of a long line with a large number of hooks attached, stretched between two boats, is very destructive to fish. The defendants obtained cross-line licences, and fished all parts of the lake. The plaintiffs cautioned them against so doing, but the defendants continued the practice. The plaintiffs brought an action to restrain the defendants from using such cross-lines. The defendants pleaded that the lake was a public navigable lake, in which every subject of the realm had the right of fishing. They gave some evidence that cross-lines had been used upon the lake for over twenty years:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendants from using such cross-lines. Pery v. Thornton, 23 L. R., Ir. 402.

Copyholder's Right to Fish—Right of Way to reach Fishery—Prescription.]—See Tilbury v. Silva, 45 Ch. D. 98; 63 L. T. 141.

Grant of Exclusive Right of Fishing—Pollution of Stream—Profit à prendre.]—The grant by deed of an "exclusive right of fishing" with rod and line in a non-navigable river implies a right to take away the fish when caught, and is not a mere licence, but confers a profit à prendre. The grantees under such a deed have a right of action for an injunction and damages against a person who by discharging water polluted with sand, mud, and gravel into the river has driven away the fish and injured the spawning beds. Fitzgerald v. Firbank, 66 L. J., Ch. 529; [1897] 2 Ch. 96; 76 L. T. 584—C. A.

Custom for Inhabitants of Parish to Fish.]—See Lloyd v. Jones, and cases, supra, col. 92.

Right of landing Nets—Grant presumed to Lessees of Fishery.]—Where the lessees of a fishery had publicly landed their nets on the shore at A. for more than twenty years, and had often dressed and improved the landing-place (which with the fishery originally belonged to the same person, but there being no evidence that he or those who under him owned the shore at A. knew of the landing of nets):—Held, that it was properly left to the jury to presume a grant of the right of landing to the lessees of the fishery by some former owner of A. Gray v. Bond, 2 Br. & B. 667; Moore, 527.

c. Rights, how Affected.

Grant of Land.]—A fee-farm grant by the ecclesiastical commissioners under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 37 (Ir.) of lands bounded by a river, does not affect the right of a third person to a several fishery in the river under a bishop's lease then existing and subsequently converted into a perpetuity. Hamilton v. Musgrove, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 129; 19 W. R. 443.

Change of Channel.]—The several fishery of a subject in a tidal river, the waters of which permanently recede from a portion of its course and flow through a new channel to the sea, where the soil and the land on both sides of the new channel belong to another subject, is not transferred from the old to the new channel. Carlisle Corporation v. Graham, 38 L. J., Ex. 226; L. R. 4 Ex. 361; 21 L. T. 133; 18 W. R. 318.

The plaintiff and defendant, and their respective predecessors in title, had respectively exercised the exclusive right of fishing in an estuary, each to the middle thread of a river flowing through it. No grant from the crown of the fisheries was proved, but it was the common case of both parties that the right of fishing in the entire estuary was vested in them, to the exclusion of the public. The river changed its course and formed a new channel, still passing through the estuary:—Held, per Ball, C., and Deasey, L.J., May, C.J., diss., that the local limit of each fishery was the middle of the new channel of the river, and not a landmark corresponding to what had been the medium filum aquæ of its former course. Miller v. Little, 4 L. R., Ir. 302—C. A.

—— When Gradual.]—The plaintiff, lord of the manor, claimed the exclusive right to fish in part of a river which was formerly locally situate within the manor, but which by gradual alteration of its course now flowed over land of the defendant. The manor had been granted by the crown to the predecessors in title of the plaintiff with the right of fishery in all its waters afterwards certain lands of the manor were enfranchised and now became vested in the defendant. At the time of the enfranchisement the river flowed wholly within the manor, but since then its course had gradually changed, approaching nearer and nearer to the defendant's land, until some portion of that land became part of the river bed. This part could be identified. The changing of the river course and consequent shifting of the bed was so gradual as not to be perceptible from day to day, but only by comparing its position of recent years with its position many years before :—Held, that the plaintiff had an exclusive right of fishery which extended over that part of the river flowing over the defendant's land. Foster v. Wright, 49 L. J., C. P. 97 ; 4 C. P. D. 438 ; 44 J. P. 7.

New Channel made.]—By letters patent of Jac. I and Car. 2, the crown granted a several fishery within certain limits in the river Bann, in Ireland. A channel, called the New Cut, divides the river within the limits of the fishery into two branches. It was found by a verdict on an issue directed by the court, that the New Cut is now part of the river Bann, but that there was no evidence to show whether it existed at the time of the grant, or whether it was a natural or an artificial channel :—Held, that the letters-patent did not give the right to a several fishery in the New Cut, unless it was a branch of the river Bann at the time of the grant. O'Neill v. M'Eilaine, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 280.

See also George v. Carpenter, infra, col. 105 ; Zetland (Earl) v. Glover Incorporation, infra, col. 106.

d. Actions for Interference with.

In Tidal River.]—The plaintiff, who was licensed to fish in the upper waters of a tidal river, held entitled to maintain an action against a person (not the owner of a several fishery) who, by unlawfully fishing in the lower waters of the river, within the prohibited limits of the mouth, as defined by the fishery commissioners, caused damage to the plaintiff in the exercise of his right to fish. Whelan v. Hewson, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 283.

Arm of the Sea—Pleading.]—To an action for trespass to a several fishery the defendant pleaded that the locus in quo was an arm of the sea, wherein all had a right to fish. The plaintiff joined issue :—Held, that the defendant was entitled to a verdict if it appeared that the locus in quo was in fact an arm of the sea ; and that if the plaintiff, admitting that the locus in quo was an arm of the sea, still claimed a several fishery, then he was bound to set up the claim in a replication. Critchton v. Collery, 19 W. R. 107.

Sea Fishing—Special Custom.]—The plaintiff, while fishing for pilchards, had nearly encompassed the fish with a net ; but the defendant, by rowing his boat to the opening, disturbed the fish and prevented the capture. The plaintiff brought trespass, and issues being joined on the plaintiff's possession of the fish, and on the fish being his :—Held, that he was not entitled to recover ; no special custom of the fishery being proved. Young v. Hitchins, D. & M. 592 ; 6 Q. B. 606.

In Inland Waters.]—In trespass to a several fishery in a large inland non-tidal lake at a place called Fenmore, the issue was, whether the fishery was the several fishery of the plaintiff ; the plaintiff gave evidence by documents of his title to a several fishery in the whole lake, and parol evidence of acts of ownership in portions of the lake, but not at Fenmore ; and the judge having, contrary to the requisition of the counsel of the defendant, directed a verdict for the plaintiff :—Held, that it ought to have been submitted to the jury to say, whether the plaintiff had a several fishery at Fenmore. Bristow v. Cormican, 3 App. Cas. 641—H. L.

Injunction.]—Where parties have established a right to a several fishery in part of a tidal river, the court of chancery will grant an injunction to restrain a party from inclosing the bed of the river (the effect of such inclosure being to destroy the fishery) without necessarily deciding or entering upon the question as to the ownership of the soil. Bridges v. Highton, 11 L. T. 653.

By letters patent of Charles II., the fishery of the river of Galway, from Lough Carrib to the sea, was granted to B., under whom A. claimed. The title of the crown and its grantees to the fishery was deduced from the reign of John ; and acts of ownership, and convictions of persons who had trespassed on the fishery, were given in evidence. The title of A. had been established by the verdict of a jury in a prohibition suit at law, to which some of the respondents were parties. The respondents admitted the right to a fishery in a part of the river, but contended that in other parts they and the public, from time immemorial, had exercised a right of angling ; and they proved that for many years persons had been in the habit of angling in all parts of the river. The court granted a perpetual injunction to restrain the respondents from fishing, without directing an issue or an action. Ashworth v. Browne, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 421.

—— Pollution.]—Injunction granted to restrain a board of health from discharging a sewer into a river where there was a several fishery. Oldaker v. Hunt, 6 De G. M. & G. 376 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 785 ; 3 Eq. R. 671 ; 3 W. R. 297.

Breaking and Entering Fishery on another's Land.]—Action for breaking and entering a fishery, to wit, the sole and exclusive fishery of the plaintiff, in a certain part of a river, flowing and being over the soil of F., and fishing for fish in the fishery of the plaintiff, and the fish of the fishery of the plaintiff there found, and being in the fishery, chasing and disturbing :—Held, first, that trespass lies for breaking and entering the several fishery of A. on the soil of B., and disturbing the fish. Holford v. Bailey, 13 Q. B. 426 ; 18 L. J., Q. B. 109 ; 13 Jur. 278—Ex. Ch.

Held, secondly, that the words "sole and exclusive fishery" were equivalent to several fishery. Ib.

Damage to Upper Fishery by Owner of Lower Fishery.]—A., the owner of a sole and several fishery in the upper part of a river brought an action against B., the owner of a sole and several fishery in the lower part of the river for keeping certain buildings across the river which prevented fish from coming into A.'s fishery. It was held that A. had a good cause of action. Hamilton v. Donegal (Marquis), 3 Ridgw., 311.

Bond not to Trespass on Fishery—Forfeiture—Relief.]—Bill was for relief against judgment on bond, in which plaintiff was jointly bound with his son in the penalty of 100*l.*, that the son should not commit trespass in the Duke of Beaufort's royalty, by shooting, hunting, fishing, &c., except with the licence of the gamekeeper, or in company with a qualified person. The son having caught two flounders with an angling rod, the bond was put in suit, and judgment for the penalty. The gamekeeper's brother-in-law, and another servant of the duke's, asked the plaintiff's son to angle with them, when he caught the two flounders, and the verdict was found merely on their evidence:—Decreed, that plaintiff should be relieved against the verdict, and that the duke should refund the 100*l.* recovered on the bond, and the 40*l.* damages. Roy v. Beaufort (Duke), 2 Atk. 190.

Bill to Quiet Possession—Right at Law not Established.]—Where there has been a possession of a fishery for a considerable length of time, a person who claims a sole right to it may bring a bill to be quieted in the possession, though he has not established his right at law; and it is no objection on demurrer to such bill, that the defendants have distinct rights, for upon an issue to try the general right, they may at law take advantage of their several exemptions and distinct rights. York Corporation v. Pilkington, 1 Atk. 282; 9 Mod. 273.

Demurrer—Bill to Establish Right.]—Demurrer to bill to establish a right to an oyster fishery, being a matter suable at law, allowed; the dispute, between only the lords of manors. Tenham (Lord) v. Herbert, 2 Atk. 483.

—— Bill for Injunction.]—Demurrer to a bill for an injunction to restrain injury to fishponds overruled. Bathurst v. Burden, 2 Bro. C. C. 64.

Trespass — Free Fishery.] — Trespass lies against the owner of the soil for fishing in liberâ piscariâ and taking fish. Smith v. Kemp, 2 Salk. 637; Carth. 285; Comb. 11, 433, 464; 4 Mod. 186.

Trespass for taking fish in liberâ piscariâ is not good, though after verdict. Upton v. Dawkins, 3 Mod. 97.

The owner of a several fishery hath a priviledged property in the fish therein. Child v. Greenhill, Cro. Car. 553.

And see next sub-head.

e. Prosecutions.

Trespass—Question of Title—Jurisdiction of Justices.]—Upon hearing of an information against a defendant for fishing in the prosecutor's fishery, the latter proved the purchase by him from the crown of a manor, with the fishery appurtenant thereto, and that previously to the purchase the crown had from time to time granted leases of the right of fishing. For the defendant, it was shown that the locus in quo was a navigable river, subject to the ebb and flow of the tide, and witnesses were called, who proved that for forty years they had exercised, without molestation, the right of fishing there:—Held, that the question of title fairly arose, and that the jurisdiction of the justices to determine the case was at an end. Reg. v. Stimpson, 4 B. & S. 307; 32 L. J., M. C. 208; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 41; 8 L. T. 536; 9 Cox, C. C. 356.

In answer to an information before two justices, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 24, for unlawfully and wilfully attempting to take fish in water where another person had a private right of fishery, by angling at an hour not between the beginning of the last hour before sunrise and the expiration of the first hour after sunset, the accused justified under a supposed right on the part of the public to fish in that water:—Concessum: that such a right of fishing by the public in a non-navigable river could not exist in law. Held, that the accused justifying himself under the bonâ fide, though mistaken notion, of such a right did not make such a claim of right as ousted the jurisdiction of the justices. Hudson v. M'Rae, 4 B. & S. 585; 33 L. J., M. C. 65; 9 L. T. 678; 12 W. R. 80.

Held, also, that it was no defence that the accused having acted without criminal intent, there was no mens rea. Ib.

Upon an information for attempting to take, otherwise than by angling, fish in part of a navigable tidal river, where the complainant had a private right of fishery, the appellant called a witness who said that during 1846 or 1847 he had fished with the appellant in the place in question, and had assisted him to fish there several times during the four years succeeding, and had seen him fish there once about eight or ten years ago. The appellant was aware that the lessees of the prosecutor had the exclusive occupation of the fishery for six years previous. The justices were of opinion that the appellant had not shown a bonâ fide claim of right so as to oust their jurisdiction, and convicted him:—Held, first, that 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 24, applied to a navigable tidal river in which there was a private right of fishery. Paley v. Birch, 8 B. & S. 336; 16 L. T. 410.

Held, secondly, that the justices were justified in finding that the appellant had not shown a bonâ fide claim of right so as to oust their jurisdiction. Ib.

Where justices convicted a party of unlawfully taking fish in a private fishery, the court refused to issue a prohibition against their proceeding to enforce it, on the ground that the defendant claimed a right of fishing before the justices; and they refused to require the informant to produce his title-deeds. Higgins, Ex parte, 10 Jur. 838.

—— Arrest—Action for—Protection.]—The servants of P. apprehended the plaintiff while fishing in the night-time, near the mouth of the river Ogwen, in Carnarvonshire, in which river P. had a several fishery. In an action for this arrest they gave much evidence, to show that P.'s fishery included the place where the plaintiff was apprehended. The jury, however, defined the limits of the fishery so as to exclude that place by a few yards, but they also found that P. and his servants reasonably believed that it included that place:—Held, that they were entitled to the protection of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, ss. 35, 36. Hughes v. Buckland, 15 M. & W. 346; 3 D. & L. 702; 15 L. J., Ex. 233; 10 Jur. 884.

A defendant formed an oyster-bed in a part of the Menai Straits where persons had been accustomed to dredge for oysters. The plaintiff bought of a dredger a quantity of oysters, when the defendant, having been informed that the oysters were taken from his bed, gave the plaintiff into custody on a charge of having in his possession stolen oysters. The plaintiff having been discharged, brought an action for false imprisonment, when the defendant relied on 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 36; and, in order to show that he acted bonâ fide, and under the belief that the oysters were stolen, he tendered in evidence the record of the conviction of a person who had shortly before been tried for taking oysters from the same bed of the defendant:—Held, that the record, merely as such, was inadmissible. Thomas v. Russell, 9 Ex. 764; 2 C. L. R. 542; 23 L. J., Ex. 233; 2 W. R. 418.

—— "Catching" Fish during Close Season—Angling by Leave of Owner.]—By the Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1878, s. 11, any person who, during the close season fixed by the act, fishes for, catches, or attempts to catch or kill any freshwater fish is liable to summary conviction. By the same section, its provisions shall not apply "to any person angling in any several fishery with the leave of the owner of such fishery." The respondent was seen fishing in a several fishery, and on his being searched fish were found upon him:—Held, that in the absence of any explanation on his part, there was evidence upon which he might be convicted of "catching" fish. Swanwick v. Varney, 45 L. T. 716; 30 W. R. 79; 46 J. P. 613.

The respondent was fishing with the leave of the "occupier" of the land by the water-side:—Held, that he was not within the exemption in s. 11, inasmuch as the "occupier" was not necessarily the "owner." Ib.

Crayfish—Unlawful Fishing.]—By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 24, whosoever shall unlawfully take or destroy, or attempt to take or destroy, "any fish" in any private fishery is liable on conviction to a penalty. The respondent took, or attempted to take, "crayfish" in a private fishery:—Held, that he had been guilty of an offence under this section. Caygill v. Thwaite, 33 W. R. 581; 49 J. P. 614.

Indictment — Taking and Carrying away Fish.] — An indictment lies for fishing in another's private ponds and taking and carrying away carps. Reg. v. Steer, 6 Mod. 183.

4. Salmon Fishery.

a. Districts.

Formation of.]—Where justices at quarter sessions, under 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121, ss. 3, 4, 5, make application to a secretary of state for the formation into a fishery district of salmon rivers lying wholly or partly in their county, the secretary of state is not bound to adopt the boundaries as proposed by the justices, but may vary them, as he may be advised, and make his certificate accordingly. Reg. v. Grey, 6 B. & S. 65; 35 L. J., M. C. 198; L. R. 1 Q. B. 469; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 685; 14 L. T. 477; 14 W. R. 671.

Definition of—Certificate of Secretary of State—Tributary.]—The Severn fishery district was defined by the certificate of the secretary of state as "so much of the river Severn and of the rivers Vyrnwy and Teme, and of all other tributaries of the said river Severn," &c. The rivers Vyrnwy and Teme both flow directly into the Severn. On an information charging the respondents with taking trout within the district without a licence, it appeared that the offence charged was committed in a tributary of a tributary of the river Teme:—Held, that the words "all other tributaries" mean all others of the same nature as the Vyrnwy and Teme, i.e. those which flow directly into the Severn and do not extend to the tributaries of those rivers. Merricks v. Cadwallader, 51 L. J., M. C. 20; 46 L. T. 29; 46 J. P. 216.

By 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121, the limits of a river shall be defined, and a fishery district shall be formed, for the purpose of the Salmon Fishery Acts, by a secretary of state's certificate describing the limits of the river and district, and by s. 3, "river" shall include "such portion of any stream with its tributaries" as may be declared in the certificate. Prior to 1845 the Whittle Burn in the county of Northumberland was a tributary of the Tyne. In 1845 a water company, under powers given by local acts, constructed works for the supply of water to a neighbouring town, by placing a dam across the stream of the Whittle Burn, and forming a series of reservoirs; the water being taken by underground pipes from the stream into the highest reservoir, and from thence to the others. All water not required for the reservoirs was allowed to pass down a watercourse running outside the reservoirs into the ancient watercourse of the burn, down which it flowed into the Tyne. Sometimes all the water coming down the Whittle Burn was taken into, and impounded in, the reservoirs, and none flowed into the Tyne. At other times all the water flowed into the Tyne without having entered the reservoirs. There were outlets with sluices from the reservoirs by which surplus water flowed into the Tyne down watercourses also running into the ancient watercourse of the burn. In 1866, the fishery district of the river Tyne was formed and the secretary of state's certificate defined the limits as "so much of the river Tyne with its tributaries" as was situate (inter alia) in the county of Northumberland:—Held, that the reservoirs were not tributaries of the Tyne within the meaning of the certificate. Harbottle v. Terry, 52 L. J., M. C. 31; 10 Q. B. D. 131; 48 L. T. 219; 31 W. R. 289; 47 J. P. 186. S. P., Hall v. Reid, 10 Q. B. D. 134, n.; 48 L. T. 221, n.

Jurisdiction of Justices.]—Upon an information on 7 & 8 Will. 4, c. 29, s. 34, which charged B. with having fished for salmon in certain waters in which A. had a private right of fishery, it appeared that the place where the offence was committed was part of the sea shore between high and low water mark, and at the time the offence was committed was covered with the sea:—Held, that the justices had jurisdiction to convict. Embleton v. Brown, 3 El. & El. 234; 30 L. J., M. C. 1; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1298.

—— Interest in Subject-Matter.]—A. was convicted of an offence under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, by three justices, of whom one was a riparian proprietor, another a leading member of the committee of an association formed for the preservation of salmon in the river in question, by whose direction the proceedings were instituted, and all three were members of the association:—Held, that the justices were incompetent to convict, being interested in the subject-matter of the information. Reg. v. Allen, 6 B. & S. 915; 33 L. J., M. C. 98; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 796; 9 L. T. 761; 12 W. R. 422.

Fishery District — Limits — River — "Tributary" — Reservoir formed by Embankment across Tributary.]—The river Severn fishery district included that river and all its tributaries. Under the provisions of the Liverpool Corporation Waterworks Act, 1880, an embankment was constructed across the river Vyrnwy, a tributary of the river Severn, and a reservoir was formed for the purpose of supplying water to the town of Liverpool. The act provided for a daily and monthly supply of "compensation" water from the reservoir into the part of the river Vyrnwy below the embankment:—Held, that so much of the river Vyrnwy as was above the embankment had ceased to be a tributary to the river Severn, and therefore was not within the jurisdiction of the conservators of the Severn fishery district. Harbottle v. Terry (supra) followed. George v. Carpenter, [1893] 1 Q. B. 505; 5 R. 266; 68 L. T. 714; 41 W. R. 366; 57 J. P. 311.

b. Rights of.

In Scotland.]—The salmon fishings in the open sea around the coast of Scotland, unless parted with by grant, belong exclusively to the crown, and form part of its hereditary revenue. Gammell v. Woods and Forests Commissioners, 3 Macq. H. L. 419.

By Barony Title and Immemorial Possession.]—In 1774, the crown granted to L. a barony charter to lands almost continuous on both sides of a river in Inverness-shire; included were older baronies containing express grants of salmon fishing to parts of the river, some above and some below certain falls, also an ancient barony grant giving the fishing on the Water of Forne, which was alleged to be the old name of the whole river from its source to the sea. From time immemorial L. had exercised his possession, up to 1862, taking all the fish in the whole river by means of close cruives just below the falls, which stretched right across the river, and which were narrower than then allowed by law. Above the falls he asserted his right (a) by occasionally fishing there; (b) by, during the spawning season, having watchers; (c) by making his tenants in their leases bound to protect the fishing, and prevent all others from fishing. All which he had done for a period much longer than forty years. Since 1862, when close cruives were abolished, he had regularly fished above the falls with net and coble. Neither the crown nor any one else had ever objected to L.'s entire possession of the whole salmon fishing in the river. The crown now, while admitting L.'s right to the salmon fishing below the falls to be incontestable, claimed, de jure coronæ, all the fishing above the falls:—Held, affirming the decision of the court below, that the river here was a unum quid—one continuous and connected subject—and that L.'s entire control and enjoyment of the whole profit of the fish in the whole river, for a time far beyond the period of prescription, coupled with his titles, gave him the right to the salmon fishing within the limits and ex adverso his barony lands wherever situated. Lord Advocate v. Lovat (Lord), 5 App. Cas. 273.

Held, also, that this decision was without prejudice to any right of the crown or its grantees to the salmon fishing ex adverso the ancient barony lands of C., which were lands on the banks of the above-mentioned river intermixed with L.'s barony lands. Ib.

See Lord Blackburn's opinion as to the extent of a grant to take fish by yairs or cruives. Ib. at p. 311.

Several Salmon Fishery—Reversion to Crown—Merger in Prerogative.]—See Northumberland (Duke) v. Houghton, supra, col. 90.

Scotch Law — Shifting Channel — Enjoyment for Forty Years—Merger.]—Where independent proprietors on the opposite banks of a river have rights respectively of fishing in the stream, each is entitled to fish from the bank of each, usque ad medium filum. If a shifting island springs up in the channel so as to impede or embarrass the fishings of one of the proprietors, he must submit, and hope for a change. The law can give him no redress. But if the shifting island becomes fixedly annexed to, and incorporated with, his bank, the permanent accretion will give rise to a new medium filum. Where a base right to salmon fishing has been followed by forty years' possession and enjoyment it is unimpeachable.—Per Lord Westbury: A thing surrendered by English law, so as to produce merger, is lost and destroyed; but a thing resigned by Scotch law is not lost, but simply surrendered to the superior. Zetland (Earl) v. Glover Incorporation, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 70.

Title by Prescription — Mode of Fishing.]—The prescriptive forty years' enjoyment may be by net and coble, as well as by stake-net.—Per Lord Cairns: The title, being baronial, will be a habile foundation for a claim to salmon fishing if the requisite enjoyment and user be established. A title by grant cum piscationibus will suffice if supported by the requisite enjoyment and user. The principle that stake-net fishing is the ordinary and well-understood mode of salmon fishing in the sea cannot be recognised.—Per Lord Hatherley: The mode must vary from time to time as improvements are suggested. McDonall v. Lord Advocate, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 431.

—— Recent Grant by Crown.]—Where a piece of land on the banks of a tidal river is exchanged, the right of salmon fishing therein being expressly reserved, a grant in 1873 of that salmon fishing, though from the crown, will not deprive the prior owner of his right. Richardson v. Gray, 3 App. Cas. 1—H. L. (Sc.)

—— Right to Fish on one or other side of River.]—It would seem that even a primâ facie title to fish for salmon on one side of a river will give a right of challenge against fishing for salmon on the opposite side. An ambiguous right of fishing may, upon evidence of user, be construed to embrace a right of fishing for salmon; and it is a mistake to suppose that for this purpose the evidence must establish the specific user of net and coble. Stuart v. McBarnet, L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 387.

Grant of Fishings — Salmon Fishings.]—Salmon fishings are inter regalia; they belong to the class of regalia which the crown may give away. A grant of "fishings," merely, is not a grant of salmon fishings, but a grant of "fishings," merely, if followed by the requisite endurance of possession, will establish a right of salmon fishing, even against the crown; for by the positive prescription of forty years under the Act 1617, c. 12, the rights of private parties are protected against all challenge, whether regal or popular. A party claiming a right of salmon fishings must either show a grant of salmon fishings, or a grant of fishings generally, followed, for the requisite period, by the exercise of the right of salmon fishing. Lord Advocate v. Sinclair, L. R. 1 H. L. (Sc.) 174.

Royal Charter—Competing Grants—Possession—Rod Fishing.]—The appellants were the proprietors of salmon fishings derived from the town of Inverness. They produced a crown charter, dated 1591, purporting to be a renewal grant confirming to the town of Inverness "all and whole the waters of Ness, with all the salmon fishings thereof from the stone 'C.' to the sea." Admittedly this grant did not include two fishings within those limits which had existed from a very early period under different grants. The respondent was the proprietor of the land "H.," which bordered one side of the river Ness, and is situated nearly equally above and below "C." He possessed one-half of "H." under a crown charter of confirmation on resignation, dated 1566, granting "Half the lands of 'H.,' with the salmon fishings pertaining to the same, on the water of 'Ness,'" with an infeftment taken in 1706, which ran, "Half the lands of 'H.,' and half the fishings." He held the other half of "H." under a grant which contained no mention of fishings. He and his predecessors had always enjoyed without question the salmon fishings opposite that part of "H." lying above "C." There was no exact description of the two halves of "H." The appellants claimed to have the exclusive right to the fishing below "C.," as against the respondent:—Held, that there was no contradiction between the two titles, and that the appellants were entitled to the exclusive enjoyment below "C.," as against the respondent; his possession of the fishings above "C." fully satisfying his title. Warrand v. Mackintosh, 15 App. Cas. 52—H. L. (Sc.)

Weirs and Obstructions.]—See next head.

Net or Fixed Engine.]—A net six yards in length, and one yard sixteen inches in depth, and stretched across a river by means of corks and lead, and fastened at one end to a large stone on the bank of the river, which keeps the net in its place, but gives way as soon as a salmon touches the net, which then rolls up, and the salmon gets entangled and dies, is not a fixed engine or net temporarily fixed to the soil, and as such illegal, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 11. Thomas v. Jones, 5 B. & S. 916; 34 L. J., M. C. 45; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 306; 11 L. T. 450; 13 W. R. 154.

But a net secured at one end to a pole temporarily fixed to the soil on the margin of the channels of a tidal river, one-half of the net being stretched across the channel at low water from a boat anchored to a buoy, and the fisherman in the boat waited his opportunity, then let out the rest of the net, and rowed round the pole, thus sweeping the river, is a fixed engine within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 11, and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121, s. 39. Olding v. Wild, 14 L. T. 402.

A claim to fish in that way, by immemorial usage, is bad. Ib.

—— Fixed Nets.]—The mere using of a net, fixed to the soil in tidal waters within the limits of a salmon fishery district, but which net is not peculiarly an instrument for catching salmon, and is not fixed for that purpose, is not an offence under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 11. Watts v. Lucas, 40 L. J., M. C. 73; L. R. 6 Q. B. 226; 24 L. T. 128; 19 W. R. 470.

—— Stop-net.]—A fisherman fixed his boat athwart the current of the river by lashing it at each end to a pole driven in the bed of the river, and the net, which was thirty feet wide at the mouth, and tapered to a point, was stretched by two poles twenty-two feet long, which were tied together at the upper end, and kept extended (to the width of the net at the mouth) by a pole lashed across at about seven feet from the upper end. The net was lowered overboard until the two poles rested at about eight feet from the upper end on the side of the boat. The net and poles were thus nearly on the balance, and the fisherman pressed slightly on the upper end, and so kept the net steady at about an angle of twelve degrees; he also held a string attached to the bottom of the net, and when he felt a fish he pressed down the upper end of the poles with both hands, using the edge of the boat as a fulcrum, and so raised the net out of the water and caught the fish:—Held, that the stop-net was a fixed engine within the definitions contained in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 11, and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121, s. 39. Gore v. English Fisheries Commissioners, 40 L. J., Q. B. 252; L. R. 6 Q. B. 561; 24 L. T. 702; 19 W. R. 1083.

—— Right to Take or Destroy.]—Under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 11, the right to take possession of or destroy any engine placed or used for catching salmon in contravention of that section, extends to all persons, and is not limited to conservators or overseers appointed under s. 33. Williams v. Blackwall, 2 H. & C. 33; 32 L. J., Ex. 174; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 579; 8 L. T. 252; 11 W. R. 621.

—— Forfeiture of Net.]—By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 21, no person shall fish for, catch, or kill by any means other than a rod and line any salmon between 12 o'clock at noon on Saturday and 6 o'clock on Monday morning; and any person acting in contravention of this section shall forfeit all fish taken by him, and any net or movable instrument used by him in taking the same. Two men fished for salmon with a net during the prohibited hours, but they did not catch any fish:—Held, that the net having been used for the purpose of taking salmon, it had become forfeited. Rutter v. Harris, 45 L. J., M. C. 103; 1 Ex. D. 97; 33 L. T. 825.

The water-bailiff of the river Thames has no right to take the nets of a person fishing in his own fishery. Bubrook v. Goodere, 3 Burr. 1768.

—— Position changed.]—A lord of a manor claimed to be entitled to use reasonable fixed engines in a river in reasonable places within the manor. In support of the claim he produced certain old documents showing that there had been a fishery from the earliest times in that part of the river. He also gave evidence to show that for many years previously to 1844 fixed engines had been used in various hollows formed in the sands of the river. That at that time a wall was built to improve the navigation under an act of parliament, by which the rights of all lords of manors were expressly saved, and that through the building of the wall the bed of the river was changed, and convenient hollows for placing the engines were formed close to the wall. That previously to 1844 the engines were never placed nearer than 200 yards to the place where the wall now stands, but it did not appear whether there were then any hollows worth fishing within that distance. That since that time the fixed engines had been placed in hollows close to the wall, and had never been placed on the sites where they had been used previously to 1844. In a case stated by the commissioners for the opinion of the court whether they were bound as matter of law to find that the claimant was entitled to use the fixed engines as claimed :—Held, that it was a mixed question of fact and law whether the using the engines in places since 1844 different from those in which they had been used previously amounted to an enhancement of the engines, and that the commissioners were not, therefore, bound as matter of law to find that the claimant was so entitled. Rawstorne v. Backhouse, 37 L. J., C. P. 26 ; L. R. 3 C. P. 67 ; 17 L. T. 441 ; 16 W. R. 249.

Permanent Structure Erected before the Passing of the Act.]—Section 15 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1873, enacts that no person between the 1st day of January and the 24th day of June shall place in any inland water any device whatsoever to catch or obstruct any fish descending the stream. A permanent structure for the purpose of catching eels had been erected at a weir upon a river before the passing of the above-mentioned act. The nature of such structure was as follows :—There were flood-gates or shuttles in the weir, and a grating of iron bars, through which the eels could not pass, was fixed below such flood-gates. When the flood-gates were raised the rush of water through them carried the eels on to and over the end of the grating into a trough, which communicated with a well from which they could not escape. The appellant, on a day between the 1st of January and the 24th of June, 1882, raised the flood-gates and so brought the trap into action, with the result that eels were caught in the trap :—Held, that by so doing the appellant had been guilty of an offence within the above-mentioned section. Briggs v. Swanwick, 52 L. J., M. C. 63 ; 10 Q. B. D. 510 ; 31 W. R. 565 ; 47 J. P. 564.

Mode of Fishing lawfully Exercised at Time of Passing of Act.]—In answer to an information under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 11, for catching salmon with fixed engines in tidal waters, where all the queen's subjects have a right to fish in the ordinary way, the defendant gave evidence that his father and his family and others of the public had for more than forty years been accustomed to fish for salmon in the locus in quo with stake nets :—Held, that this was not evidence of any ancient right or mode of fishing, lawfully exercised at the time of the passing of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, within the exception in s. 11. Bevins v. Bird, 12 L. T. 306.

The owner of a several fishery in a navigable and tidal river claimed a right to use putchers and stop-nets (which it was admitted were fixed engines within 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121, s. 39), for the purpose of catching salmon. The putchers and stop-nets had been in use for forty-five years up to 1862 ; there was no evidence of previous user, nor was there any evidence to the contrary. The commissioners having found the putchers and stop-nets illegal :—Held, that the user for forty-five years did not raise a conclusive presumption of law that the putchers and stop-nets had been used from time immemorial and were not of recent origin. Holford v. George, 37 L. J., Q. B. 185 ; L. R. 3 Q. B. 639 ; 18 L. T. 817 ; 16 W. R. 1204.

Held, also, that the 2 Hen. 6, c. 15, prohibits not only the use of nets which are permanently fixed day and night, but also those which are fixed for intervals of time only, if they obstruct the navigation of a river and the passage of fish. Ib.

Inquiry as to Right to Fish with Bag-nets.]—A primâ facie title to fish with bag-nets, under 26 & 27 Vict. c. 114, s. 4, must be shown to the inspectors of fisheries before they can be required to hold an inquiry as to the applicant's right to fish with bag-nets ; and unless such a title shall have been so shown, the court will not grant a mandamus to compel the inspectors to hold such an inquiry. Reg. v. Irish Fisheries Inspectors, Ir. R. 10 C. L. 213.

Production of Certificate.]—On the hearing of a summons against a person, not the owner of a several fishery, in the whole of the river fished in, for wrongfully using a fixed net in a part of the river less than three-quarters of a mile wide, the justices are not concluded by the production of a certificate from the inspectors of fisheries, stating merely that the net was duly erected in pursuance of the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 106. Alexander v. Shiel, Ir. R. 6 C. L. 510.

Distance from River—How Measured.]—In a local fishery act, to place nets within a river was an offence, and the river was described to extend four miles along the sea-coast from a certain pier. In another part of the statute, a distance was described as being in a straight line from another point ; but the words "straight line" were not used as regards the four-mile limit. W. committed an offence, and if the straight line were adopted he was within the four miles ; but if the sea-coast line were adopted he would not be within that limit :—Held, that in measuring along the sea-coast the measurement ought to follow the line of coast, and that the measurement in a straight line would be incorrect. Tweed Commissioners v. Wood, 46 J. P. 760.

Ancient Weir—2 Hen. 6, c. 15.]—Semble, a weir which does not destroy fish fry or impede navigation, and which has existed from time immemorial, is not certainly illegal under 2 Hen. 6, c. 15. Robson v. Robinson, 3 Dougl. 307.

Mouth of River—What is.]—Upon an issue, whether persons had wrongfully fished for salmon by means of stake-nets placed in situations prohibited by statute, where the question was, what was to be considered river and what sea, a direction that the thing to be looked to is the fact of the absence or the prevalence of the fresh water, though strongly impregnated with salt, is erroneous. The mouth of a river comprehends the whole space between the lowest ebb and the highest flood-mark. Horne v. Mackenzie, 6 Cl. & F. 628.

Size of Net.]—S., a fisherman, was using a net of small mesh in a salmon fishery district, without a licence. He shot the net several times in places where salmon are usually caught, and the net was calculated to catch salmon, but he was fishing for sea fish, and when he caught salmon he threw them out of the net, retaining only the sea-fish :—Held, that the justices were right in convicting S., for as the net was calculated to catch salmon, and was so used, it was immaterial whether salmon were caught or intended to be caught or not. Short v. Bastard, 46 J. P. 580.

The 1 Eliz. c. 17, s. 3 (repealed as to salmon, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 39) prohibits fishing, except with a net "whereof every mesh, or mask, shall be two inches and a half broad:"—Held, that the breadth of two inches and a half is to be measured by the length of thread between the adjacent knots. Thomas v. Evans, El. Bl. & El. 171 ; 27 L. J., M. C. 172 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 710 ; 6 W. R. 497.

Knowledge of Offence.]—Information charging A. with having in his possession the young of salmon, to wit, samlets, contrary to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 15 ; the justices dismissed the information, on the ground that A., though he had taken samlets, and had them in his possession, did not know that they were samlets :—Held, that the information was rightly dismissed. Hopton v. Thirlwall, 9 L. T. 327 ; 12 W. R. 72.

Salmon—Unlawful Taking.]—Section 22 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1873, by which the taking of salmon by means other than a licensed instrument is prohibited, refers only to taking living fish. Gazard v. Cooke, 55 J. P. 102.

Fishing "for trout" — Using rod without licence—No intention to catch trout.]—By s. 35 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1865, any person fishing with a rod and line "for salmon (or trout)" without a proper licence shall be liable to a penalty. The respondent was fishing for bait with a rod and line without a licence, with no intention of catching prohibited fish :—Held, that he was not guilty of an offence under s. 35. Marshall v. Richardson, 58 L. J., M. C. 45 ; 60 L. T. 605 ; 16 Cox, C. C. 614 ; 53 J. P. 596.

By-Law — Validity of.] — By sub-s. 11 of s. 39 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1873, it was provided that a board of conservators might make by-laws for the better protection, preservation, and improvement of the salmon fisheries within their district, to regulate during the annual and weekly close seasons the use within any river of nets for fish other than salmon, when such use at such times was prejudicial to the salmon fisheries. A board of conservators made a by-law that it should not be lawful for any person to use any net whatever inside the bar in any public water of their fishery district, except a trawl net, between the 1st Dec. and the 30th of April, both inclusive. Upon an information under the above by-law against fishermen for using a drift net inside the bar in a public water of the said fishery district on the 13th April, the magistrates found as a fact that trawl nets could not be advantageously used by fishermen in that part of the river, and that certain other kinds of nets could be used without prejudice to the salmon :—Held, that the said by-law was ultra vires and invalid, and that the conservators had no power under sub-s. 11 of s. 39 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1873, to make a by-law which was not a mere regulation, but an absolute prohibition, for a definite time, of the use of nets which were not prejudicial to the salmon fishery. Pidler v. Berry, 59 L. T. 230 ; 53 J. P. 6.

Fixed Engine—Evidence of Ownership.]—The defendants, who were charged with using a fixed engine for catching salmon contrary to the Salmon Fishery Acts, were seen in salmon waters to tie one end of their trammel net to the bank and the other end to the boat, and there leave it for fifteen minutes. The justices held it was a fixed net, but dismissed the information for want of evidence as to ownership :—Held, that possession was good primâ facie evidence of ownership, and that the justices should have convicted. Vance v. Frost, 58 J. P. 398.

Setting of Nets—Costs to Informer—Destruction of Nets.]—Held, that under 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 18, s. 14, a man may be convicted for setting a net with intent to prevent salmon going up a river to spawn, although the net be not fixed permanently with stakes or otherwise to the ground ; and that though the offence be committed partly in one ownership, and partly in another, the conviction is good which states the offence to have been committed in one ownership only ; and that costs might be awarded to the informer ; and that the conviction was not bad for not ordering the net to be destroyed. Reg. v. Pomfret, 4 W. R. 206.

By-law prohibiting all Nets — Question of Fact—Invalidity.]—A by-law, made by a board of conservators, prohibited all nets used for fish within certain limits. The justices found as a fact that some nets there used were not prejudicial to salmon, and held that the by-law was in excess of the powers given by s. 39 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1873 :—Held, that the justices were right, and that they were the proper judges of the fact whether nets prejudiced the salmon fisheries. Wood v. Venton, 54 J. P. 662 —D.

Production of Warrant by Water Bailiff.]—A water-bailiff, before searching J.'s boat, told him that he had his warrant of appointment in his hand, and offered it to be read, but as it was dark, J. said he could not read it :—Held, that the justices were wrong in refusing to convict J. for resisting the water-bailiff on the ground that the instrument of his appointment had not been produced pursuant to s. 36 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1873. Cowler v. Jones, 54 J. P. 660.

Powers of Water Bailiff — Obligation to produce Appointment.] — A water-bailiff appointed under the Salmon Fishery Acts, 1865, 1873 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 121, and 36 & 37 Vict. c. 71), is bound before attempting to exercise his power of searching boats, &c., used in fishing to produce the instrument of his appointment. Barnacott or Parnacott v. Passmore, 56 L. J., M. C. 99; 19 Q. B. D. 75; 35 W. R. 812; 51 J. P. 821.

Width of Cruives—Salmon Fisheries (Scotland). Act, 1862.]—See Fife (Duke) v. George, 24 Ct. of Sess. Cas. (4th ser.) 549.

Authority to Prosecute—Fresh-water Fishery.]—The appellant was summoned for fishing without a licence, in a fishery district subject to a board of conservators, upon the information and complaint of the respondent, a duly appointed water-bailiff in the employment of the board. It was not proved that the respondent was authorised by the board to institute the proceedings:—Held, upon a case stated by justices, that the penalty for the offence could only be recovered by the board of conservators, and, therefore, the respondent was not entitled to institute the proceedings, and the appellant was not liable to be convicted. Anderson v. Hamlin, 59 L. J., M. C. 151; 25 Q. B. D. 221; 63 L. T. 168; 17 Cox, C. C. 129; 54 J. P. 757.

Water Bailiff.]—Section 13 of the Fisheries Act, 1891, enables a water bailiff to lay the information and recover penalties without the express authority of the board of conservators by whom he is employed. That section overrules the decision in Anderson v. Hamlin, supra. Pollock v. Moses, 63 L. J., M. C. 116; 10 R. 169; 70 L. T. 378; 17 Cox, C. C. 737; 58 J. P. 527.

Limits defined by Certificate of Secretary of State—"Tributary."]—Where in the certificate of the secretary of state given under the Salmon Fishery Acts, 1861 to 1873, a fishery district is defined as comprising a river "and all its tributaries," the word "tributary" includes all streams flowing directly or indirectly into that river. Evans v. Owen, 64 L. J., M. C. 59; [1895] 1 Q. B. 237; 15 R. 228; 72 L. T. 54; 43 W. R. 237.

Fishing with Stake-nets—Scottish Law.]—Fishing with stake-nets on the sea-coast near a river mouth is not prohibited by Scottish statute or common law. Grantees from the crown of a fishery with net and coble cannot at the suit of owners of a river fishery be restrained from fishing with stake nets. Kintore v. Forbes, 4 Bli. (N.S.) 485.

d. Weirs and Obstructions.

Application of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109.]—The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 12, which annexes the condition of having a free gap to the continuance of existing weirs, though general in its terms, is applicable only to such weirs as come within s. 27, i.e. weirs not extending beyond the middle of the stream. Rolle v. Whyte, 8 B. & S. 116; 37 L. J., Q. B. 105; L. R. 3 Q. B. 286; 17 L. T. 560; 16 W. R. 593.

What Obstruction Illegal.]—A proprietor of salmon fishings in an estuary opposite his estate restored the foreshore by an embankment sixteen inches higher than the original, which had been swept away by the tide, and this he did for the legitimate purpose of confining the river to its proper channel, and to protect his shore, and not as a device to obstruct or catch fish. The effect of thus raising the embankment was, not to prevent or to substantially impede the passage of salmon, although it did to some extent delay them and alter the course which they would take in ascending the estuary, and so facilitated their capture by the proprietor:—Held, that the raising the embankment was not an illegal obstruction within the meaning of the Salmon Fishery Acts. Sutherland (Duke) v. Ross, 3 App. Cas. 736.

A fishing mill-dam is a fishery within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 20. Hodgson v. Little, 14 C. B. (N.S.) 111; 32 L. J., M. C. 220; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 46; 8 L. T. 358; 11 W. R. 782; 9 Cox, C. C. 327.

A proprietor or an occupier of a fishing mill-dam on a salmon river is bound by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, during the close season, to remove all obstructions to the free passage of fish up the stream, even though he has ceased to use the dam for the purpose of fishing. Ib.

It is no answer to a complaint against an occupier of a fishing mill-dam, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 20, for not lifting or removing the hatches or sliding doors of his fishery during the close season, that the doing so would to some degree injuriously affect, but not ruinously, his milling power. Hodgson v. Little, 16 C. B. (N.S.) 198; 33 L. J., M. C. 229; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 953; 11 L. T. 135; 12 W. R. 1103.

—— Fishing near.]—The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 12, absolutely prohibits the catching or attempting to catch, except by rod and line, any salmon within fifty yards below any dam, unless it has attached to it a fish-pass, notwithstanding any ancient right by charter, grant, or immemorial usage of fishing in a salmon-cage. Moulton v. Wilby, 2 H. & C. 25; 32 L. J., M. C. 164; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 472; 8 L. T. 284; 11 W. R. 670; 9 Cox, C. C. 318.

Removing Obstruction.]—Where a dam had been used as a fishing mill-dam up to a date subsequent to the passing of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861, but the use of it for fishing purposes was then abandoned and all appliances for fishing removed:—Held, that the dam had ceased to be a "fishing mill-dam" within the statute, and had become an ordinary mill-dam, and that consequently s. 20 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861, did not apply, and the occupier of the dam was not bound to remove obstructions to the free passage of fish as required by the section. Rossiter v. Pike, 48 L. J., M. C. 81; 4 Q. B. D. 24; 39 L. T. 496; 27 W. R. 339.

When Dam Unused.]—B. was charged before justices, under s. 22 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 109), with omitting to maintain a clear opening of not less than four feet wide through the crib, box, or curve of a fishery occupied by him, during the weekly close time. His mill-dam had been a fishing mill-dam before 1859, and there were now the remains of a box with fenders over openings of the required size. But part of the old box was broken away; there were no internal appliances, and the box had ceased to be used, or capable of being used, for catching fish. A certificate of the fishery commissioners in 1871, however, referred to this dam as a fishing mill-dam, but there was no evidence of any alteration since the passing of the act, by which increased obstruction to fish was created:—Held, that this dam had ceased to be a fishing mill-dam before the said act; that s. 22 did not apply, and that the justices were right in dismissing the charge. Pike v. Rossiter, 37 L. T. 635.

In what Rivers.]—Although the provision in Magna Charta prohibiting the putting down of weirs in rivers is general, that generality is restrained by 25 Edw. 3, 45 Edw. 3, 1 Hen 4, c. 12, 4 Hen. 4, c. 12, and 12 Edw. 4, c. 7, and therefore there may be fishing-weirs in non-navigable rivers, of which the easement has been acquired since 12 Edw. 4, c. 7. Rolle v. Whyte, supra; and see Robson v. Robinson, col. 111.

The provisions of Magna Charta and of the other early statutes (including 17 Ric. 2, c. 9, and 12 Edw. 4, c. 7), which prohibit weirs, apply only to navigable rivers. Leconfield (Lord) v. Lonsdale (Earl), 39 L. J., C. P. 305; L. R. 5 C. P. 657; 23 L. T. 155; 18 W. R. 1165.

A fishing mill-dam was erected between 1741 and 1751, in a river above the flow of the tide, and where the river was not navigable. For sixty years before 1861, and as far back as living memory could go, it had been used in substantially the same way as it was used in 1861:—Held, that the fishing mill-dam was not a public nuisance. Ib.

Evidence of Right.]—Held, also, that, as a grant may be proved either by production of the grant itself, or by evidence of enjoyment consistent only with the existence of such a grant, and from which it may be presumed, the commissioners were bound, on the evidence, to find that the right to the fishing mill-dam existed by grant from all the proprietors whose interests could be affected by the fishing mill-dam, and consequently that the fishing mill-dam was "lawfully in use" at the time of the passing of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861, by virtue of a grant, within s. 12. Ib.

Acquisition of Right.]—A right to fishing-weirs in private waters on non-navigable rivers may be acquired by grant from other riparian owners, or by enjoyment, or by any other means by which such rights may be constituted. Rolle v. Whyte, supra.

Semble, that the claim to such a fishing mill-dam is within the Prescription Act (2 & 3 W. II. 4, c. 71). Leconfield (Lord) v. Lonsdale (Earl), supra.

A qualified easement, as to use the weir for fishing purposes, when the whole body of water is not wanted for the use of the mill, may be acquired by user for the time required to confer easements in respect of water. Rolle v. Whyte, supra.

—— Alteration.]—A fishing-weir having existed for so long a time, could not be said to be illegal in consequence of the alteration being made by cutting through the island, and by erecting the lower fenders and needles. Ib.

Jurisdiction of Commissioners—Mill-dam.]—The owners of a dam in the Ribble, where it was not navigable, in connection with a mill, were the owners or lessees of the land on both sides of the river between the dam and the point where the water after passing through the mill was returned to the channel. The dam was built since 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 18, and had been raised to its present height since 1829; at one end of it a balk had been put to enable the fish to get over it; and they could by means of an artificial pass get through it when it was lifted. But when it was shut salmon could not jump over the dam. When the balk was shut the whole of the water of the river passed down the mill race, and the river below the dam for about two-thirds of a mile was nearly dry; during the night the balk was usually left open. During flood the balk was kept open night and day. There was no appliance for catching fish placed behind or as part of the mill-dam. In their efforts to get up to the dam the salmon were found lying in small pools below the dam, and the proprietors caught them, but not for sale. The commissioners found that the dam had been used by the owner for catching fish, and that it hindered the fish from passing up the river; and made an order by which it was rendered incapable of catching fish:—Held, first, that though the dam was erected in contravention of the 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 18, s. 14, a right to it by prescription might be acquired. Garnett v. Backhouse, 8 B. & S. 490; 37 L. J., Q. B. 1; L. R. 3 Q. B. 30; 17 L. T. 170; 16 W. R. 201.

Held, secondly, that it was not a fishing mill-dam within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 4, and therefore the fishery commissioners had no jurisdiction under 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121, s. 42, to order it to be rendered incapable of catching fish. Ib.

Conversion to a Stone Weir.]—Under ancient deeds recognising a right in the owner of an estate to have a weir across a river for taking fish, if it appears that such weir was heretofore made of brushwood through which fish might escape into the upper part of the river, he cannot convert it into a stone weir, whereby the possibility of escape is debarred, though the fish might still leap over in flood tide. Weld v. Hornby, 7 East, 195; 3 Smith, 244; 8 R. R. 608.

Prosecution for Constructing new Weir.]—The survey contemplated by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 106, s. 63, is not a condition precedent to the maintenance of a prosecution for constructing a new weir across a salmon river in violation of the provisions of that section; but, as no penalty is attached, it is the subject of an indictment and not of a summary proceeding before a magistrate. Kavanagh v. Glorney, Ir. R. 10 C. L. 210.

5. Licences.

To use Putts.]—A person who had no licence under 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121, s. 33, put down in a salmon fishery seventy putts, with circles in them, that is, wire gratings which could be removed at pleasure, and which, when in the putt, prevented salmon from entering, and alleged he laid down the putts for the purpose of catching shrimps and flat fish:—Held, that he was liable to a penalty, as it was made unlawful for any person to use putts in a salmon fishery for any purpose without a licence. Lyne v. Leonard, 9 B. & S. 65; L. R. 3 Q. B. 156; 18 L. T. 55; 16 W. R. 562.

To use Nets—Stranger helping.]—Under 28

& 29 Vict. c. 121, a licence may be granted to a person for the use of a net for catching salmon, and a penalty is imposed upon any person for using a net without such licence. And where A. and B. had each a licence for the use of a net, and on a certain day they and two others were together using two coracle-nets, each of which required the assistance of two persons, and A. and B. were using one net, and the two other persons, who had no licence, were using another; the justices (upon an information against these two) found that no fraud was intended, and as one of the licences would have conferred the right to the assistance of one of the two persons, and the two licences therefore would have protected all four, they dismissed the information:—Held, that they were right. Lewis v. Arthur, 24 L. T. 66.

Trout Licence—Rod and Line—Night Line.]—In a fishery district the scale of licences included, for trout rod and line, 1*s.*; for the use of night lines, 5*s.* L. took out a rod and line licence, and also, without further licence, used a night line. On being charged for fishing without a licence for night line, the justices held the rod and line licence to include use of a night line:—Held, the justices were wrong. Williams v. Long, 57 J. P. 217.

To use Night Lines, when Necessary.]—The appellant set night lines in a river situated in a fishery district, subject to the control of a board of conservators, with the intention of catching eels. No trout were caught, but the lines were reasonably calculated to catch trout:—Held, that the appellant was bound to take out a licence to use the lines. Hill v. George, 44 J. P. 424.

Colchester Oyster Dredgers.]—See Mills v. Colchester Corporation, supra, col. 88.

Licence to Fish with "a rod and line"—Licensee Fishing with Three Rods and Lines at the same time.]—A licence to fish with "a rod and line" is not a general licence, enabling the holder to fish with more than one rod and line at the same time. Combridge v. Harrison, 64 L. J., M. C. 175; 15 R. 327; 72 L. T. 592; 59 J. P. 198.

6. Fence Season.

Eels.]—The Thames Conservancy Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 113), s. 65, empowers the conservators to make by-laws for "determining the times during which the taking of any particular or specified kinds of fish shall not be practised." One of the by-laws was as follows:—"The following respective periods shall be deemed to be the fence season in the upper river, that is to say,—(a) For salmon, salmon-trout, and trout, the period between the 10th September in each year and the 31st March following, both inclusive,—(b) For pike, jack, perch, roach, rudd, barbel, bream, chub, carp, tench, grayling, gudgeon, pope, dace, crayfish, bleak, minnow, and every kind of fish known as river fish (except salmon, salmon-trout, and trout), the period between the 14th February in each year and the 31st May following, both inclusive":—Held, that "eels" were included in the general words, "every kind of fish known as river fish." Woodhouse v. Etheridge, L. R. 6 C. P. 570; 24 L. T. 709.

Exposing Eels for Sale—Close Season—Eels caught out of England.]—The 4th sub-s. of the 11 section of the Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1878, which forbids the sale or exposure for sale of freshwater fish during the close season, applies to fish caught beyond the limits of that part of the United Kingdom to which the act applies. Price v. Bradley, or Bradley v. Price, 55 L. J., M. C. 53; 16 Q. B. D. 148; 53 L. T. 816; 34 W. R. 165; 50 J. P. 150—D. See now 49 Vict. c. 2.

Oysters—Sale—Taken in French and relaid in English Waters.]—Oysters imported alive from foreign oyster-beds and relaid for purposes of storage in English waters, although remaining in the English waters for several months, are oysters "taken within the waters of a foreign state" within the proviso to s. 4 of the Fisheries (Oyster, Crab, and Lobster) Act, 1877, and a person who has lifted them from the English waters and sold them during the close season cannot be convicted of an offence under that section. Robertson v. Johnson, 62 L. J., M. C. 1; [1893] 1 Q. B. 129; 5 R. 108; 67 L. T. 560; 41 W. R. 223; 17 Cox, C. C. 580; 57 J. P. 39—D.

7. Whale Fishery.

To whom Fish belongs.]—Unless he who first strikes a fish continues his dominion until he has reduced it into possession, any other person who kills it acquires the entire property. Fennings v. Grenville (Lord), 1 Taunt. 241; 9 R. R. 760. And see Littledale v. Scaith, 1 Taunt. 243, n.

By the custom of the whale fishery among the Gallipagos islands, he who strikes a whale with a loose harpoon is entitled to receive half the produce from him who kills it. Ib.

By the usage of the whale fishery, a fish is to be considered as a fast fish, which is attached by any means (such as the entanglement of the line round it) to the boat of the first striker, though the harpoon does not continue in the body of the fish, and this is a more reasonable usage than that mentioned in a note in the case of Fennings v. Grenville (Lord), in 1 Taunt. 243. Hogarth v. Jackson, 2 Car. & P. 595.

If, while the fish is fast to the harpoon of the first striker, another unsolicited so disturbs the fish that she breaks from the first harpoon, and then he strikes her himself with a harpoon, and secures her, the fish belongs to the first striker. Skinner v. Chapman, M. & M. 59, n.

By the general custom of the Greenland whale fisheries, a whale does not become appropriated by merely being harpooned: it is necessary that the line should remain attached to the boat. The whale is then a fast fish. If the line gets detached the whale becomes a loose fish, and is consequently the lawful prey of any one who captures and secures it. Aberdeen Arctic Co. v. Sutter, 4 Macq. H. L. 355; 6 L. T. 229; 10 W. R. 516.

Premiums under 28 Geo. 3, c. 20.]—The time for ships engaged in the southern whale-fishery to be out on their voyage, in order to gain the premiums under 28 Geo. 3, c. 20, was fourteen lunar months from the time of their clearing out, without regard to the time of their actual sailing. Lacon v. Hooper, 6 Term Rep. 224; 1 Esp. 246.

1. WHAT ARE.

a. Generally.

Affixed to Freehold.]—By the word "fixtures" the court understood such things as are ordinarily affixed to the freehold for the convenience of the occupier, and which might be removed without material injury to the freehold, and the removal of which by a tenant would not give a ground of action to the landlord. Barclay, Ex parte and In re, 5 De G. M. & G. 403 ; 25 L. J., Bk. 1 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1145 ; 4 W. R. 80.

Where the owner of the inheritance annexed thereto fixtures (which would in the ordinary case of landlord and tenant be removable by the latter during his term) for a permanent purpose, and for the better enjoyment of his estate, they become part of the freehold. Walmsley v. Milne, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 115 ; 29 L. J., C. P. 97 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 125 ; 1 L. T. 62 ; 8 W. R. 138.

A., the owner of land in 1853, mortgaged it in fee to B., and afterwards erected buildings thereon, to which, for the more convenient use of the premises in his business of an innkeeper, brewer, and bath-proprietor, he affixed a steam-engine and a boiler, a hay-cutter, a malt-mill, or a corn-crusher, and a pair of grinding-stones. The lower grinding-stone was boxed on to the floor of part of the premises by means of a frame screwed thereto, the upper one being fixed in usual way, and the steam-engine and other articles (except the boiler) were fastened by means of bolts and nuts to the walls or floors, for the purpose of steadying them, but were all capable of being removed without injury either to themselves or to the premises. The engine was used to supply water to the baths, and to put the other machines in motion, and the whole were subservient to the business carried on by A. He continued in possession until 1858, when he became bankrupt :—Held, that his assignees were not entitled to claim these fixtures, but that they passed to the assignee of the mortgagee as part of the freehold. Ib.

A. being the landlord of premises occupied by B., seized, as a distress for rent, spinning machines which were fixed by screws, some into the wooden floor and some into lead, which had been poured in a melted state into holes in the stone for the purpose of receiving the screws :—Held, that the machines never became part of the freehold, and were distrainable. Hellawell v. Eastwood, 6 Ex. 295 ; 20 L. J., Ex. 154.

Mortgage by two, described in the deed as copper roller manufacturers, reciting a conveyance to them of land, and mills or factories, in a manufacturing town, as tenants in common in fee, and that they were carrying on business at the mills or factories as copper roller manufacturers, and in such capacity had lately affixed to or placed upon the land mills, or factories, a steam-engine and boilers, together with a large quantity of mill-gear and millwright work, and granting the land, mills, or factories, and hereditaments comprised in the recited conveyance, to the use of the plaintiffs in fee, subject to a proviso for redemption :—Held, as between them and the mortgagors' assignees in bankruptcy, first, that, assuming it possible to distinguish between the case of machinery placed upon land for the purpose of trade or manufacture, as collateral to and independent of the use and enjoyment of the land, and that of machinery placed upon land for the purpose of better and more profitably enjoying the land, the recitals showed that this was a case of the latter description ; and although the proposed use and enjoyment of the land was manufacture or trade, all articles fixed to the freehold, whether by screws, solder, or any other permanent means, or by being let into the soil, partook of the nature of the soil, and would have descended to the heir, along with and as part of the soil itself. Mather v. Fraser, 2 Kay & J. 536 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 361 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 900 ; 4 W. R. 387.

Held, secondly, that the mere grant of the land, following upon the preceding recitals, was sufficient to pass all articles so fixed, and that a subsequent enumeration of certain of such articles did not rebut the inference that all articles so fixed passed by the mere grant of the land, as forming part of the freehold. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that, the fixtures passing by the grant of the land, the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, could have no application. Ib. See Waterfall v. Penistone, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 15.

Held, fourthly, articles standing merely by their own weight are not fixtures. Ib.

But where part of a machine is a fixture, and another and essential part of it is movable, the latter also will be held a fixture. Ib.

Examination of the authorities upon this subject, and a dictum in Hellawell v. Eastwood (6 Exch. 313) observed upon. The principle upon which the rule of law, that fixtures pass with the soil, is relaxed in favour of trade, has no application where the parties who affix the machinery are themselves owners in fee of the soil. Ib.

B. bought from A. the lease of a house, and in the lease was contained a covenant to convey all the fixtures on the premises generally. Under this clause A. claimed a right to remove certain gasaliers which were affixed to the gas-pipes by means of screws, and could easily be removed without causing any injury to the freehold, on the ground that they came within the rule of tenants' fixtures :—Held, that the gaseliers passed under the general description of fixtures in the lease, and became the property of B., as although they were removable without injury to the freehold, yet they were necessary to the practical enjoyment of the gas-pipes to which they were affixed, which without the gasaliers would be useless. Sewell v. Angerstein, 18 L. T. 300.

Weighing-machines which rest in brick cavities constructed in the ground for that purpose, but which are not attached to the brickwork, and can be lifted out of the cavity at pleasure, are not fixtures. Astbury, Ex parte, and Lloyd's Banking Co., Ex parte, Richards, In re, 38 L. J., Bk. 9; L. R. 4 Ch. 630; 20 L. T. 997; 17 W. R. 997.

Straightening-plates, formed of flat plates of iron and let into the iron flooring of a room so as to be on a level with the surrounding floor and united to it, are fixtures. Ib.

Degree of Annexation.]—The question whether a particular article is a movable chattel or a fixture depends on the degree of annexation to the freehold, and the object of annexation. Cosby v. Shaw, 19 L. R., Ir. 307.

A.'s Chattel Fixed on B.'s Land.]—It is a question of evidence, depending on circumstances and the intention of the parties, whether A.'s chattel, fixed on B.'s soil, becomes part of the soil or remains the chattel of A. Lancaster v. Eve, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 717; 28 L. J., C. P. 235; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 683; 7 W. R. 260.

Piles fixed in the bed of the Thames, in front of a wharf for the purpose of mooring vessels making to the wharf, and long enjoyed for such purpose without interruption by the crown or the conservators of the river, will be taken to have been put down in the exercise of an easement, and to remain as chattels in the owners of the wharf, so as to give them a right of action against anyone injuring the piles. Ib.

Where a chattel has been annexed by its owner to another's freehold, but may, without injury to the freehold, be severed, it is not necessarily to be inferred from the annexation that such chattel becomes the property of the freeholder. Wood v. Hewitt, 8 Q. B. 913; 15 L. J., Q. B. 247; 10 Jur. 390. S. P., Mant v. Collins, referred to in the last case.

Whether, in a particular case, it has become so or not, may be a question on the evidence; and a jury may infer, from use or other circumstances, an agreement, when the chattel was annexed, that the original owner should have liberty to take it away again. Ib.

—— Hire-Purchase Agreement—Mortgagee in Possession.]—Where the owner of a chattel lets the chattel to the owner of land for the purpose of being fixed on the land and used thereon, reserving to himself the right to unfix and take possession of it in certain events, and it is in fact annexed to the land, it will become a fixture—that is, part of the soil—subject to the right of the owner to retake possession of it in the events specified; but such right, if it is not an easement created by deed, nor is conferred by a covenant running with the land, cannot be enforced against a purchaser of the land without notice of it. Consequently, a mortgagee in fee of land on which is affixed a chattel belonging to a third person placed there under a hiring agreement not under seal, of which the mortgagee has no notice, can take possession of the fixture under his mortgage with the land, and hold it as against the original owner. Wood v. Hewett (8 Q. B. 913; 15 L. J., Q. B. 247) and Lancaster v. Eve, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 717; 28 L. J., C. P. 235) discussed. Hobson v. Gorringe, 66 L. J., Ch. 114; [1897] 1 Ch. 182; 75 L. T. 610; 45 W. R. 356—C. A.

b. Trade.

Machinery.]—Certain parts of a machine had been put up by the tenant during his term, and were capable of being removed without either injuring the other parts of the machine or the building, and had been usually valued between the outgoing and incoming tenant:—Held, that these were the goods and chattels of the outgoing tenant, for which he might maintain trover. Davis v. Jones, 2 B. & Ald. 165; 20 R. R. 396.

The machinery of a mill is part of the freehold, and cannot be legally removed by the tenant. Farrant v. Thompson, 2 D. & R. 1; 5 B. & Ald. 826; 24 R. R. 571.

Various engines and other fixtures used in mining and smelting were standing on the premises at the date of the demise, of which the engines were purchased by the incoming from the outgoing tenant, and were not mentioned in the general words of the demise, nor in the clause of re-entry; but the lessee covenanted to keep the "said engines" (the word "engines" never having occurred before) in good and tenantable repair, and the same in such state to yield up at the end or other sooner determination of the term; and the lessor covenanted that the lessee might remove (at the end of the term or sooner, except, as in the cases and events before mentioned, in any of which—a taking in execution being one—it was made lawful for the lessor to re-enter) all such engines, &c., as had theretofore been erected, and all such as should by himself be erected for carrying on the smelting business:—Held, that upon a forfeiture of the demise by a taking in execution, the lessee had lost his right to recover any of the fixtures, and that they all belonged to the lessor, such being the intention of the parties as collected from the covenants. Rex v. Topping, M'Clel. & Y. 544; 29 R. R. 839.

The plaintiff demised salt-springs to the defendant, who was to erect salt-works on the premises, and pay a rent in proportion to the number of works erected; the defendant covenanted to leave the works in good repair at the end of the term:—Held, that iron salt-pans placed by the defendant on a frame of brick, and used in the boiling of salt, were parcel of such works, and that the defendant was not entitled to remove them. Mansfield (Earl) v. Blackburne, 8 Scott, 720; 6 Bing. (N.C.) 427; 10 L. J., C. P. 178.

A mortgage of a silk-mill with the steam-engines, boilers, steam-pipes, main-shafting, millgearing, millwrights' work, and all other machinery whatsoever being, or which should thereafter be, on the land described in the mortgage, as against a second mortgage, is not confined to machinery necessary for giving power to the mill, as being ejusdem generis with the specified particulars, but extends to silk-spinning machines resting by their weight only on the ground, but attached by movable bolts to iron rods fixed to mill-beams overhead. Haley v. Hammersley, 3 De G. F. & J. 587; 30 L. J., Ch. 771; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 765; 4 L. T. 269; 9 W. R. 562.

trade, but such removal must be during the term. Where engines, coppers, &c., are the principal, and the house only the accessory, they may be removed, though the house is thereby injured. A colliery is not only an enjoyment of the estate, but in part carrying on a trade. Dudley v. Warde, Ambl. 113.

A lessee of a mill and steam-engine covenanted to repair, reasonable wear and tear excepted. During the lease he added both to the height and extent of the mill, and removed all the works of the engine except the fly-wheel, fly-wheel shaft, and boiler, and attached to them a new engine of greater power. Injunction granted to restrain the assignees of the lessee, who had become bankrupt, from removing the parts of the new building, and the new parts of the engine, subject to an action to be brought by the lessors to try the right. Sunderland v. Newton, 3 Sim. 450; 30 R. R. 186.

An engine affixed by means of screws and bolts to a concrete bed in freehold land, for the purpose of driving a saw-mill on the land, will, in the absence of special circumstances, cease to be a chattel, and become part of the freehold. Hobson v. Gorringe, 66 L. J., Ch. 114; [1897] 1 Ch. 182; 75 L. T. 610; 45 W. R. 356—C. A.

Rights of Mortgagees.]—Trade fixtures affixed to mortgaged freehold premises after the mortgage, by the mortgagor and his partner, occupying the premises for the purpose of their trade, pass to the mortgagee. Cullwick v. Swindell, 36 L. J., Ch. 173; L. R. 3 Eq. 249; 15 W. R. 216.

Trade fixtures which have been annexed to the freehold for the more convenient using of them, and not to improve the inheritance, and which are capable of being removed without any appreciable damage to the freehold, pass under a mortgage of the freehold to the mortgagee. Climie v. Wood, 37 L. J., Ex. 158; L. R. 3 Ex. 257; 18 L. T. 609. Affirmed, 38 L. J., Ex. 223; L. R. 4 Ex. 328; 20 L. T. 1012—Ex. Ch.

Fixtures belonging to a lessee and removable by him at pleasure (as between himself and the lessor) form part of the security under an equitable mortgage by deposit of the lease. Richards, In re, 38 L. J., Bk. 9; L. R. 4 Ch. 630; 20 L. T. 997; 17 W. R. 997.

—— First Mortgage of Lands and Buildings—Second Mortgage of same, with Ores, Stock-in-Trade, and Chattels.]—The S. Company carried on the business of manufacturing zinc and spelter, sulphuric acid, and zinc oxide on leasehold premises. They had erected a number of cupola and other furnaces for the purposes of their manufacture, which, as between them and their landlords, were admitted to be trade fixtures. In 1880 the company conveyed the land and buildings comprised in its lease to trustees for debenture-holders upon trust to permit the company to carry on business until default in payment of the debentures or winding-up, and then to sell. In 1883 the company executed a second mortgage to trustees for a second set of debenture-holders, which comprised, besides the land and buildings, all stock-in-trade, stock of ores, and loose plant and material. It appeared that in the course of smelting metals for the company's business small quantities of gold and silver were given off in the form of vapour, and became imbedded in the bricks lining the furnaces. The company having been ordered to be wound up, the trustees of the first mortgage deed entered and sold. The second mortgagees took out a summons that they might be allowed to enter and remove the gold, silver, and other metal embedded in the said bricks, claiming that it was included in their mortgage, and not in the first. It was admitted that the metals could not be extracted without pulling down the furnaces and pounding up some of the bricks:—Held, that the doctrine of trade-fixtures has no application as between mortgagee and mortgagor; that, whatever might have been the case between landlord and tenant, the mortgagee was entitled to everything which his mortgagor, intentionally or not, or for trade purposes or otherwise, had fixed to the mortgaged premises, and the summons must be dismissed with costs. Tottenham v. Swansea Zinc Ore Co., 52 L. T. 738.

—— Lease by Mortgagor—Rights of Tenant.]—A mortgagor in possession of premises let them to a tenant who brought on to them certain trade fixtures. The mortgagee subsequently entered and sold the premises under the power of sale contained in the mortgage:—Held, that the fixtures did not pass under the mortgage, but remained the property of the tenant. Sanders v. Davis, 54 L. J., Q. B. 576; 15 Q. B. D. 218; 33 W. R. 655.

Looms Fixed to Floor with Nails.]—Tenants of a leasehold mill executed a mortgage of the mill and fixed machinery therein comprised in their lease, together with all looms and other machinery, fixed or movable, which then or thereafter during the continuance of the security should be in or about the mill. There were a number of looms fixed to the floor of the mill by nails driven through two of the feet of each loom into wooden plugs in the soil beneath. These looms were removable, for the convenience of working them, to other parts of the mill; but the primary intention was, that they should remain fixed during the term of the mortgagors. The mortgagors having become bankrupt:—Held, that as between the mortgagees and the mortgagors' assignees, the looms were fixtures. Boyd v. Shorrock, 37 L. J., Ch. 144; L. R. 5 Eq. 72; 17 L. T. 197; 16 W. R. 102.

Power looms nailed to the flooring are fixtures. Dawson, In re, 16 W. R. 424.

Brick Buildings.—Upon a question arising between landlord and tenant as to trade fixtures, buildings built of brick, with brick foundations let into the soil, although erected for the sole purpose of trade, cannot be removed by the tenant, although machinery, engines, vats, and utensils, with their accessories, may be removed. Whitehead v. Bennett, 27 L. J., Ch. 474; 6 W. R. 351.

Though a building may be raised on a brick foundation, and have a brick chimney, if the erection of such foundation is of wood, and the building is used for the purpose of trade or manufacture, the tenant may remove it at the end of his term. Penton v. Robart, 4 Esp. 33; 2 East, 88; 6 R. R. 376.

Erections—What Included in.]—A lease was made to an oil-refiner of some land "and also the erections and buildings then already erected and built or to be erected and built" thereon, and the lessee covenanted to lay out 2,500*l.* in such buildings, which were to be of a permanent character, and to keep them in repair, and deliver them up at the end of the term, together with all the doors, wainscots, &c., "pumps, pipes, cisterns, and other things which now are or at any time during the term shall be fixed or fastened to the freehold of the premises, or belong thereto:"—Held, that the general words included the trade fixtures of the oil-refinery, and they were consequently irremovable by the lessee. Bidder v. Trinidad Petroleum Co., 17 W. R. 153.

An agreement was made with a company to grant them a lease of land as soon as they had spent 3,000*l.* "in the erection of permanent and substantial buildings and works such as are usually erected for the distillation of oil," and there was a covenant to cover in the erections and buildings when necessary:—Held, that "erections" was a wider term than buildings, and might include trade fixtures. Ib.

Hydraulic Press.]—An hydraulic press was fixed by means of bricks and mortar to the floor of a factory. The press was not essential to the carrying on of the works at the factory, but merely a convenience:—Held, that such a press remained a chattel, and did not become a part of the freehold. Parsons v. Hind, 14 W. R. 860.

Windmill.]—A pauper rented a windmill and a brick-built cottage and garden at the rent of 30*l.* per annum for six years, and during that time held and occupied the same, and actually paid that rent. The mill was of wood, and had a foundation of brick; but the woodwork was not inserted in the brick foundation, but rested upon it by its own weight alone; no part of the machinery of the mill touched the ground or any part of the foundation:—Held, that the windmill not being affixed to the freehold, nor anything connected with it, was not parcel of the freehold. Rex v. Otley, 1 B. & Ad. 161; 9 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 11.

A., being seised in fee of a close on which a windmill was erected, mortgaged the close to B. for 1,000 years, and in the same deed there was a conveyance, by bargain and sale, of the mill to him in fee; the mill was built of wood, removable at pleasure, and fixed to brickwork which was let into the ground:—Held, that the mill could not be taken in execution under a fi. fa. sued out against A. by one of his creditors, although he had continued in possession, and carried on his trade therein. Steward v. Lombe, 4 Moore, 281; 1 Br. & B. 506; 21 R. R. 700.

Lime Kilns.]—Lime kilns, though erected for the purposes of trade, during the continuance of a lease by indenture, containing a general covenant to repair, cannot be removed by the tenant without a breach of such covenant. Thresher v. East London Waterworks Co., 4 D. & R. 62; 2 B. & C. 608; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 100.

Of Tavern Keeper.]—A lessee for a long term of years of an unfinished house covenanted with the lessor to surrender at the end of the term the premises, "together with all locks, keys, bars, bolts, marble and other chimney-pieces, foot-bolts, slabs, and other fixtures, and articles in the nature of fixtures, which shall at any time, during the term, be fixed or fastened to the demised premises, or be thereto belonging." At the time of the lease the house was intended to be used as a tavern, and was subsequently completed and fitted up by the lessee with things necessary for carrying on the business of a tavern keeper, including articles to a considerable value known as trade fixtures, and others known as tenant's fixtures. These were all fixed to the premises in the usual way, and, in the absence of any covenant to the contrary, would have been removable by the lessee:—Held, that the lessee was not restrained. Wilde v. Waters, 16 C. B. 637; 24 L. J., C. P. 193; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1021; 3 W. R. 570.

Taking by Railway Company.]—A railway company gave notice to take part of a manufactory, and was required by the owner to take the whole. A valuer, on behalf of the company, went to the manufactory, and, without entering it, valued it at a specified sum, and that amount was paid into court in the usual way. The company was then proceeding to take possession, and to issue its warrant to summon a jury when the owner of the manufactory insisted that the valuation had not included certain fixtures upon the premises, such as a steam-engine, shaping and turning lathes, and that the company was bound to take such fixtures. The company contended that the fixtures being trade fixtures, and removable by the owner, he could not compel the company to take them:—Held, that although the fixtures were trade fixtures, which the lessee might remove during the term, the company was bound to take them; and that whatever a railway company is bound to take under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 18, s. 92, they must, in proceeding under s. 85, cause to be valued, and pay the value into court. Gibson v. Hammersmith Ry., 32 L. J., Ch. 337; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 221; 8 L. T. 43; 11 W. R. 299.

Tramways and Steam Crane.]—By a deed of mortgage of a quarry, the quarry was granted together with fixtures of every description:—Held, that a tramway and steam crane thereon were fixtures. Moore and Robinson's Banking Co., Ex parte, Armytage, In re, 49 L. J., Bk. 60; 14 Ch. D. 379; 42 L. T. 443; 28 W. R. 924.

Plant used for Rolling Machine.]—Weighing machines which rest in brick cavities constructed in the ground for that purpose, but which are not attached to the brickwork, and can be lifted out of the cavity at pleasure, are not fixtures. Astbury, Ex parte, and Lloyd's Banking Co., Ex parte, Richards, In re, 38 L. J., Bk. 9; L. R. 4 Ch. 630; 20 L. T. 997; 17 W. R. 997.

Straightening plates, formed of flat plates of iron and let into the iron flooring of a room so as to be on a level with the surrounding floor and united to it, are fixtures. Ib.

c. Agricultural.

A tenant in agriculture, who erected at his own expense, and for the more necessary and convenient occupation of his farm, a beast-house, carpenter's shop, fuel-house, cart-house, pump-house, and fold-yard wall, which buildings were of brick and mortar, and tiled, and let into the ground, cannot remove the same, though during his term, and though he thereby left the premises in the same state as when he entered. There appears to be a distinction between annexations to the freehold of that nature for the purposes of trade, and those made for the purposes of agriculture and better enjoying the immediate profits of the land, in favour of the tenant's right to remove the former; that is, whether the superincumbent building is erected as a mere accessory to a personal chattel, as an engine; but where it is accessory to the realty, it can in no case be removed. Elwes v. Maw, 3 East, 38; 6 R. R. 523. And see Williams v. Williams, 12 East, 209; 11 R. R. 357.

A tenant is entitled, at the expiration of his term, to remove a wooden barn which he has erected upon a foundation of brick and stone; the foundation being let into the ground, but the barn resting upon it by weight alone. Wansbrough v. Maton, 4 A. & E. 884; 6 N. & M. 367; 2 H. & W. 37; 5 L. J., K. B. 150.

d. Useful or Ornamental.

Greenhouses.]—The executors of a deceased rector are at liberty to remove hothouses erected by such rector which did not form part of the rectory house. Such erections are not necessary for the enjoyment of the rectory, but are only conveniencies which the deceased rector might have removed during his lifetime. Martin v. Rowe, 7 El. & Bl. 237; 26 L. J., Q. B. 129; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 465; 5 W. R. 263.

Greenhouses built in a garden, and constructed of wooden frames fixed with mortar to foundation walls of brickwork, are fixtures, and not removable by the occupier who built them. Jenkins v. Gething, 2 Johns. & H. 520.

A boiler built in the masonry of the greenhouse, also, is irremovable; but the pipes of a heating apparatus, which were connected with the boiler by screws, are removable. Ib.

A conservatory erected on a brick foundation, affixed to and communicating with rooms in a dwelling-house by windows and doors, cannot be removed by a tenant for years, who erected it during his tenancy, although he had a reversion in fee after the death of his lessor. Buckland v. Butterfield, 4 Moore, 440; 2 Br. & B. 54; 22 R. R. 649.

Chimneypiece.] — An out-going tenant may remove an ornamental chimneypiece put up by himself during his tenancy, but not a chimney piece which is not ornamental. An outgoing tenant has no right to remove pillars of brick and mortar built on a dairy floor to hold pans, although such pillars are not let into the ground. Leach v. Thomas, 7 Car. & P. 328.

A tenant during the term has a right to remove a chimneypiece of an ornamental character put up himself, but he has no such right with respect to a plain chimneypiece merely because it is of marble. Bishop v. Elliott, 11 Ex. 113; 24 L. J., Ex. 229; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 662; 3 W. R. 454—Ex. Ch.

A tenant during the term may take chimneypieces or wainscot put up by himself; afterwards he is a trespasser. Quincy, Ex parte, 1 Atk. 477. See also Dudley v. Warde, Ambl. 113.

Chimneyglasses.] — Hangings, chimneyglasses, or pier glasses are matters of ornament and furniture, and not fixtures made to go with the house. Beck v. Rebow, 1 P. W. 94.

—— And Bookcases.]—A testator by his will devised his house with the grates, stoves, coppers, &c., and the "fixtures and fixed furniture" to his executors upon trust to permit E. to have the use thereof for life, and he also bequeathed his furniture, plate, &c., to E. absolutely:—Held, that chimneyglasses fixed to the wall and a bookcase screwed or fastened to the wall, were fixed furniture; but that a bookcase merely placed in a wall was not so. Birch v. Dawson, 6 Car. & P. 658.

Beds.]—Beds fastened to the ceiling, or even nailed, are not fixtures. Quincy, Ex parte, 1 Atk. 477.

Carpet.]—Whether a carpet tacked to the floor is fixed furniture, quære. Birch v. Dawson, 6 Car. & P. 658.

Tapestry.]—See D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, 36 L. J., Ch. 107; L. R. 3 Eq. 382; 15 W. R. 186; Norton v. Dashwood, 65 L. J., Ch. 737; [1896] 2 Ch. 497; 75 L. T. 205; 44 W. R. 680, post, col. 130.

Brass Plate on Door.]—A. hired of B. rooms in his house, at a yearly rent, with the privilege of putting a brass plate, with his name engraved thereon, upon the front door, there to remain so long as he should continue to occupy the apartments. The rent being in arrear, B. removed the brass plate from the door, and refused to allow A. to have access to the apartments. In an action, charging that B. broke and entered the apartments of A., and expelled him therefrom, and removed the plate, and seized and converted his goods, B. pleaded that A. was not possessed of the brass plate:—Held, that the facts warranted the jury in finding that B. was guilty of breaking and entering the apartments; that the removal of the plate was properly treated as a substantive trespass, having been pleaded to as such; and that, in the absence of evidence to show that it was affixed to the freehold, it must be assumed to be a chattel only. Lane v. Dixon, 3 C. B. 776; 16 L. J., C. P. 129; 11 Jur. 89.

Window Sashes.]—Window sashes, which are neither hung nor beaded into the frames, but merely fastened by laths nailed across the frames to prevent their falling out, are not fixed to the freehold. Rex v. Hedges, 1 Leach, C. C. 201; 2 East, P. C. 590, n.

Bells.]—Where a yearly tenant of a house had, at his own expense, during his term hung bells, but quitted the premises without removing them:—Held, that by remaining fixed to the freehold after the expiration of the term, they became the property of the landlord, and that the tenant could not maintain trover for them after the landlord had severed them from the freehold. Lyde v. Russell, 1 B. & Ad. 394; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 26.

Ranges and Ovens.]—A sheriff cannot take in execution fixtures consisting of ranges, ovens, and set-pots affixed to a freehold house which was built by the person against whom the execution issued. Wynne v. Ingleby, 1 D. & R. 247; 5 B. & A. 625; 24 R. R. 503.

Pump.]—A pump erected by a tenant, and so fixed as to be removable without injury to the freehold, may be taken away by him at the expiration of his term, as being an article of domestic use or convenience. Grymes v. Boweren,

4 M. & P. 143 ; 6 Bing. 437 ; 8 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 140 ; 31 R. R. 460.

Cornice.]—A plea to an action by a landlord against his tenant for removing a cornice, stated, that it was the property of the tenant, that it was fixed up by him with screws only, for the purpose of ornament ; that he carefully removed it during the term, doing no unnecessary damage ; and that he repaired all the damage done. The replication stated that it was affixed to the freehold of the house, and was not removable by law. Issue on that question :—Held, that it was not a misdirection to leave it to the jury to say whether they were of opinion that the cornice was ornamental, and was so affixed to the freehold that it could be removed without substantial injury ; and that if they thought so, and that it had been so removed, the tenant had a right to remove it. Avery v. Cheslyn, 5 N. & M. 372 ; 3 A. & E. 75 ; 1 H. & W. 283.

Box Border — Garden.]—A tenant (not a gardener by trade) cannot remove a border of box, planted by himself on the premises demised, unless by special agreement with the landlord. Empson v. Soden, 4 B. & Ad. 655 ; 1 N. & M. 720.

Dove-cot — Presses.] — Injunction granted against waste by tenant. Waste is committed by destruction of dove-cot, but not by removing presses, &c., unless fixed. Kimpton v. Eve, 2 Ves. & B. 349 ; 13 R. R. 116.

e. Between Heir and Executor.

Things fixed to the freehold by and at the expense of the tenant in fee, which are removable, but necessary to the enjoyment of the inheritance, go to the heir and not to the executor ; therefore, trover will not lie by the executor against the heir for salt-pans erected by the testator. Lawton v. Salmon, 1 H. Bl. 259, n. ; 2 R. R. 764.

The absolute owner of land, for the purpose of better using that land, erected upon and fixed to the freehold certain machinery :—Held, that, in the absence of any disposition by him of this machinery, it would go to the heir as part of the real estate. Fisher v. Dixon, 12 Cl. & F. 312; 9 Jur. 883.

If the corpus of such machinery belongs to the heir, all that belongs to that machinery, although more or less capable of being detached from it, and more or less capable of being used in such detached state, must also be considered as belonging to the heir. Ib.

No distinction arises in the application of this rule from the circumstance that the land did not descend to, but was purchased by, the owner. Ib.

Pictures and glasses put up instead of wainscot, or where wainscot would otherwise have been put, shall go to the heir, and not to the executor. Cave v. Cave, 2 Vern. 508.

Plaintiffs, as administrators, brought trover for certain salt-pans set up in the wyche-houses in Cheshire ; the pans were fixed with brick and mortar to the floor, with a furnace under them, and were worth, with the buildings and lodging-rooms, 8*l.* per week. The ancestor who fixed the pans was seised in fee, and the inheritance was of little value without them, and a salt-brine and salt-pans form the most valuable inheritance in Cheshire :—Held, that these salt works should go to the heir. Lawton v. Lawton, 3 Atk. 16, n.

Though the strictness of the old rule with regard to fixtures and other appendants to the freehold has of late years been much relaxed, as between tenant for life or in tail and remainderman, as also between landlord and tenant, yet the rule still holds as between heir and executor. Ib. 13. And see Poole's Case, 1 Salk. 368.

f. Between Tenant for Life and Remainderman.

If a tenant for life or in tail erects a fire-engine to work a colliery, it will, on his death, be considered as part of his personal estate, and not go with the estate to the remainderman. Dudley (Lord) v. Ward (Lord), Amb. 113.

A tenant for life of mines and collieries erected machinery for the purpose of working them and rendering the minerals merchantable : —Held, that if such machinery was capable of being removed by disturbing the soil, without destroying the land, it was to be deemed trade fixtures, and as such passed on his death to his executor, and not to the owner of the land. Ward v. Dudley (Countess), 57 L. T. 23.

A tenant for life of an estate, on which he had built and furnished a house (an old one having fallen into decay), bequeathed all the tapestry, marbles, statues, pictures with their frames and glasses, which should be in or about the house at his death, and of which he had power to dispose, to A., the remainderman, for life, and then to B. after A.'s death :—Held, that tapestry, pictures in panels, frames filled with satin and attached to the walls, and also statues, vases, and stone garden-seats, essentially part of the architectural design, however fastened, were fixtures, and could not be removed ; but that glasses and pictures, not in panels, passed under the will to B. D'Eyncourt v. Gregory, 36 L. J., Ch. 107 ; L. R. 3 Eq. 382 ; 15 W. R. 186.

Held, also, that articles bought by the testator, but fixed by A. after his death, passed under the will. Ib.

Tapestry attached to the walls of a room in a mansion-house in the manner described in the case of D'Eyncourt v. Gregory (36 L. J., Ch. 107 ; L. R. 3 Eq. 382) :—Held, following that case, to pass as a fixture with the devise of the house. Norton v. Dashwood, 65 L. J., Ch. 737 ; [1896] 2 Ch. 497 ; 75 L. T. 205 ; 44 W. R. 680.

The strictness of the old rule with regard to fixtures and other appendants to the freehold, has of late years been much relaxed, as between tenant for life or in tail and remainderman, as also between landlord and tenant. Lawton v. Lawton, 3 Atk. 13. And see Poole's Case, 1 Salk. 368. Quincy, Ex parte, 1 Atk. 477.

A collection of stuffed birds, fixed for the purpose of display upon twigs or pieces of imitation rock-work, which are in their turn fastened to movable wooden trays fitting into solid metal cases fixed to the walls of a museum in a settled family mansion, cannot be considered as fixtures forming part of the architectural design and structure of the mansion-house so as to devolve with the settled estate, but are movable personal chattels. D'Eyncourt v. Gregory (36 L. J., Ch. 107 ; L. R. 3 Eq. 382), distinguished. Hill (Viscount) v. Bullock, 66 L. J., Ch. 705 ; [1897] 2 Ch. 482 ; 77 L. T. 240 ; 46 W. R. 84—C. A.

2. When Removable.

Generally.]—Whether removable by law or not is a mixed question of law and fact. Avery v. Cheslyn, supra.

Within what Time.]—In the absence of a special contract tenant's fixtures cannot be removed after the termination of the lease, and this rule applies whether the lease determines by effluxion of time or by re-entry on forfeiture. Pugh v. Arton, 38 L. J., Ch. 619; L. R. 8 Eq. 626; 20 L. T. 865; 17 W. R. 984.

Where a tenant forfeited his lease by an act of bankruptcy, and the landlord re-entered:—Held, that the landlord was absolutely entitled to all fixtures remaining upon the premises at the date of the re-entry. Ib.

If a tenant, in exercising his trade, puts up fixtures, he is entitled to remove them, if he does so within the term. The tenant of a house is also entitled to remove ornamental fixtures not connected with trade, they being considered built in merely for a temporary domestic purpose. Gibson v. Hammersmith and City Ry., 2 Drew. & Sm. 603; 1 N. R. 305; 32 L. J., Ch. 337; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 221; 8 L. T. 43; 11 W. R. 299. See Lyde v. Russell, 1 B. & Ad. 394; 9 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 26.

The purchaser of lands having brought an ejectment against the tenant from year to year, the parties entered into an agreement that judgment should be signed for the plaintiff, with a stay of execution till a given period: the tenant cannot in the interval remove buildings, &c., from the premises which he had himself erected during his term, and before the action was brought. Fitzherbert v. Shaw, 1 H. Bl. 258.

The right of a tenant to remove tenant's fixtures continues only during his original term, and during such further period of possession by him as he holds the premises under a right still to consider himself as tenant. Weeton v. Woodcock, 7 M. & W. 14; 10 L. J., Ex. 183.

An outgoing tenant has no right to enter, for the purpose of severing and removing fixtures after the expiration of his term, and a new tenant has been let into possession. Leader v. Homewood, 5 C. B. (N.S.) 546; 27 L. J., C. P. 316; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1062.

The right of a tenant to tenant's fixtures is a qualified right, and is dependent on the tenant removing them during the term, or during some period after its termination in which he may be considered as still in possession under the landlord. Lavies, In re, Stephens, Ex parte, 47 L. J., Bk. 22; 7 Ch. D. 127; 37 L. T. 613; 26 W. R. 136—C. A.

What is annexed to the freehold is to be considered as part of it; but between landlord and tenant, the latter may remove what he erects for trade, but such removal must be during the term. So, tenant may remove chimney-pieces, &c.; and where engines, coppers, &c., are the principal, and the house only the accessory, they may be removed, though the house is thereby injured. Dudley v. Warde, Ambl. 113.

When Tenant not Prevented by Delay.]—A lessee of business premises having become insolvent, the trustee in liquidation put up the fixtures for sale by auction, under conditions which required them to be cleared by the purchaser in two days from the sale. The plaintiff bought the fixtures; but with the knowledge of the trustee, allowed them to remain on the premises whilst he was treating with the landlord for a new lease. This negotiation fell through, and the trustee surrendered the premises to the landlord, who relet them, the fixtures still remaining affixed. About a fortnight afterwards the plaintiff, learning of the surrender, applied to the landlord for the fixtures. In an interpleader issue between the plaintiff and a person claiming title through the new tenant:—Held, that the plaintiff had not lost his right by delay or laches, and that he was entitled to the fixtures. Saint v. Pilley, 44 L. J., Ex. 33; L. R. 10 Ex. 137; 33 L. T. 93; 23 W. R. 753.

Landlord's Rights on Wrongful Removal.]—See post, col. 153.

Reasonable Time after Surrender.]—The lessee of premises erected a greenhouse thereon, which, though a fixture by agreement with the lessor, he was entitled to remove. He subsequently assigned the greenhouse by a bill of sale, and the assignee immediately entered under the powers of the bill of sale. The greenhouse was put up to auction a month after the entry, but not sold. Ten days after the auction the keys of the premises were given up to the lessor by the auctioneer, who had been in possession for the assignee, and the lessor took possession: on the same day the assignee had notice of the surrender. The lessee made no attempt or claim to recover the premises after the entry under the bill of sale. Between three and four weeks after possession had been given up to the lessor the assignee sold the greenhouse to the plaintiff, who claimed to be entitled to enter and remove it:—Held, that the facts showed a surrender by operation of law, and that the greenhouse, not having been removed by the assignee within a reasonable time after notice of the surrender, had become the property of the lessor, and could not be removed. Moss v. James, 38 L. T. 595—C. A. Affirming, 47 L. J., Q. B. 160.

Agreements as to.]—The defendant let to the bankrupt certain premises, upon which he covenanted to erect fixtures for shipbuilding, and to leave them at the end of the term; provided that this covenant was not to include any fixtures other than shipbuilding fixtures which he might erect during the term; provided also, that, in case the lessee became bankrupt the plaintiffs (his assignees) might re-enter and take possession of the shipbuilding fixtures. The lessee became bankrupt:—Held, that the assignees were, under these provisions, entitled to the possession of the premises for a reasonable time in order to remove the fixtures other than shipbuilding fixtures. Stansfield v. Portsmouth Corporation, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 120; 27 L. J., C. P. 124; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 440; 6 W. R. 296.

A tenant from year to year disclaimed his landlord's title; upon which the landlord demanded possession, and served him with a declaration in ejectment on the 8th February. On the 19th February the parties signed the following agreement:—"In consideration of Mr. B. (the tenant) not appearing to this action, I undertake not to issue a writ of possession until after the 25th March next":—Held, that the meaning of this agreement was, that the premises should be given up on the 25th in the same condition as they were in on the 19th, and that therefore the tenant (whatever his rights might otherwise be) was precluded by it from removing in the interval his fixtures, which he had put up during his term. Heap v.

Implied Covenant to allow.]—An underlease of a nursery ground contained an express covenant by the underlessee to deliver up all landlord's fixtures thereon at the end of the time:—Held, that a representation and covenant by the grantors of the underlease that the underlessee should be at liberty, without hindrance from any one, to remove trade fixtures during the term, and that the grantors had not entered into covenants inconsistent with such right, could not be implied. Porter v. Drew, 49 L. J., C. P. 482; 5 C. P. D. 143; 42 L. T. 151; 28 W. R. 672; 44 J. P. 267.

Rights of Assignee in Bankruptcy.] — The rent of a cotton mill was made payable in advance, and the tenant covenanted with the landlord to keep in the mill machinery of a certain value, as a security for the rent. The lessee became bankrupt, no rent being due. The official assignee immediately entered and claimed to be entitled to remove the machinery before the next instalment of rent became due, which claim the landlord resisted, on the ground that the covenant gave him a lien on the machinery:—Held, that the provision as to reputed ownership applied, and that the assignee was entitled to remove the machinery. Shuttleworth v. Hernaman, 1 De G. & J. 132. See also Gould or Goold, Ex parte, Walker, In re, post, col. 138.

When a trustee in bankruptcy disclaims a lease, then, as under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 23, the disclaimer relates back to the adjudication, the trustee has no interest in the lease, and no right to the tenant's fixtures, which pass to the landlord. Lavies, In re, Stephens, Ex parte, 47 L. J., Bk. 22; 7 Ch. D. 127; 37 L. T. 613; 26 W. R. 136—C. A.

Sale under Execution.]—A landlord filed a bill, to which there was a demurrer, alleging that, under an execution against his tenant, the sheriff was about to sell all the property on the demised premises, and that it appeared by the handbills that it was intended to sell the fixtures on the premises. Demurrer overruled. Richardson v. Ardley, 38 L. J., Ch. 508.

Machinery.]—A lease contained covenants by the lessee to erect certain machinery in the buildings demised, and to keep the buildings and machinery in repair during the term; and a covenant to deliver up the buildings at the end of the term, not mentioning the machinery:—Held, nevertheless, that the machinery was made a landlord's fixture, as, practically, the tenant could never remove it. Daglish, Ex parte, Wilde, In re, 42 L. J., Bk. 102; L. R. 8 Ch. 1072; 29 L. T. 168; 21 W. R. 893.

Partly-erected Cattle Shed—Shed Built of Timber taken from the Land.]—A tenant, by permission of his landlord, cut down some trees for the purpose of building a cattle house upon the land. When the building was completed, with the exception of the roof, the landlord sold his reversion, and the tenant gave the new landlord notice to quit, and took down the unfinished building and removed the materials:—Held, that the new landlord was entitled to the building although it was not completed, since the materials of which it was constructed consisted of timber taken from the land by permission of the owner for the purpose of its erection. Smith v. Render, 27 L. J., Ex. 83; 5 W. R. 875.

—— Shed Built of Tenant's Materials.] — Quære, whether where a tenant uses his own materials in the construction of a building, he may, before it is completed, pull it down again, doing no injury to the soil. Ib.

By Law of Cape Colony.]—See London and South African Exploration Co. v. De Beers Consolidated Mines, 64 L. J., P. C. 123; [1895] A. C. 451; 72 L. T. 609; 11 R. 511—P. C.

3. Contracts respecting.

a. Between Landlord and Tenant.

Removal of Fixtures.]—See ante, col. 132.

Construction of Covenants—To yield up Fixtures.]—A covenant to yield up at the expiration of the term all erections and improvements erected, made, or set up, during the term, is broken by the removal of the sashes and framework of a greenhouse erected during the term, the framework of which was laid upon walls, built for the purpose of receiving it, and imbedded in mortar thereon. West v. Blakeway, 3 Scott (N.R.) 199, 218; 2 Man. & G. 729; 9 D. P. C. 846; 10 L. J., C. P. 173; 5 Jur. 630.

A lease contained a covenant to repair and yield up in repair the furnaces, fire-engine, ironworks, dwelling-house, and all other erections, buildings, improvements, and alterations to be erected, built, or set up, except the ironwork castings, railways, winseys, gins, machines, and the movable implements and materials used in or about the furnaces, fire-engine, ironworks, stone pits, and premises; and there was a power given to the lessors to purchase those articles, on giving notice before the expiration of the lease:—Held, that the lessees had a right to remove whatever was in the nature of a machine or part of a machine, but not what was in the nature of building, or support of building, although made of iron; and that, in such removal, the lessees might disturb such brickwork as was necessary, and were not bound to restore it to a perfect state, as if the article it was intended to support or cover was still there; but that the lessees were liable for any unnecessary disturbance of brickwork. Foley v. Addenbrooke, 13 M. & W. 174; 14 L. J., Ex. 169.

By a covenant in a lease for a term of years the lessee was bound peaceably to surrender and deliver up to the lessor the premises, together with "all locks, keys, bars, bolts, marble and other chimney-pieces, foot-paces, slabs, and other fixtures, and articles in the nature of fixtures, which should at any time during the term be fixed or fastened to the premises, or be thereto belonging." At the date of the lease the house was intended to be used as a tavern, and the lessees subsequently completed and fitted up the house with things necessary for carrying on the business of a tavern-keeper, and for that purpose caused to be put in and fixed to the premises, in the usual way, fixtures of the description known as trade and tenants' fixtures:—Held, that the words of the covenant referred only to what are commonly called landlords' fixtures, and the lessee was therefore not restrained from selling either the trade or tenants' fixtures. Bishop v. Elliott, 11 Ex. 113; 24 L. J., Ex. 229; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 662; 3 W. R. 454—Ex. Ch.

The assignee of a house held under a lease for twenty-one years erected during the term a plate-glass shop-front or window, fixed with wooden wedges, without screws, nails, or glue, and which could be removed without doing any injury to the premises:—Held, that the removal by the assignee of this plate-glass shop-front or window was a breach of a covenant contained in the lease, to yield up at the end of the term all windows which then were, or at any time thereafter should be, thereunto affixed or belonging, together with all sheds and other erections, buildings, and improvements which should be erected, built, or made upon the premises; because the plate-glass front was either a window or an improvement within the meaning of the covenant, and therefore irremovable at the end of the term, although erected for the purposes of trade. Burt v. Haslett, 18 C. B. 893; 25 L. J., C. P. 295; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 974; 4 W. R. 679—Ex. Ch.

A lessee of a mine covenanted by his lease, at the end of the term, if the lessor should require it, to leave him all the engines, machinery, things, and materials which should have been used in and about the working of the mine, upon receiving twelve months' notice from the lessor, and being paid for the same according to valuation. In a subsequent part of the lease it was provided that it should be lawful for the lessee at any time or times during the term, or within twelve months after its expiration, to remove all the machinery, engines, things, and materials which should be erected or brought by him upon the premises, unless the lessor should be minded to purchase the same, which he should have liberty to do upon giving the notice thereinbefore mentioned, and upon paying the price estimated. The lease also contained a covenant by the lessee not to do any act which might occasion or tend to produce the drowning of the mine. Fourteen years before the expiration of the term the lessee became insolvent, and assigned everything he had brought upon the premises to trustees, who gave notice to the lessor of their intention to remove the same unless he should be minded to purchase. To a bill by the lessor, averring that such removal would occasion or tend to produce the drowning of the mine, and praying for an injunction to restrain the same until the end of the term, and until he had the opportunity of exercising his option to purchase, a demurrer was allowed, the court being of opinion, that, according to the true construction of the lease, the lessee was to be at liberty to remove all the property in question, unless the lessor gave notice of his intention to purchase, and paid for the same. Rolleston v. New, 4 Kay & J. 640.

A lease contained a covenant to yield up certain scheduled articles, together with all doors, wainscots, shelves, presses, dressers, drawers, locks, keys, bolts, bars, staples, hinges, hearths, chimney-pieces, mantel-pieces, chimney-jambs, foot-spaces, slabs, covings, window-shutters, partitions, sinks, watercloset, cisterns, pumps and rails, water-tanks, "and other additions, improvements, fixtures, and things," which were and should be anyways fixed or fastened upon the premises:—Semble, that the general words could not be restricted (there being no assignable genus to which the enumerated articles belonged). Wilson v. Whateley, 1 John. & H. 436; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 908; 3 L. T. 617; 9 W. R. 331.

Held that the lessee could not make a marketable title even to articles in the nature of tenant's fixtures. Ib.

In 1804, owners of the fee-simple of certain premises agreed, by indented articles, to demise them for lives renewable for ever, and the intended lessees agreed to pull down a mill on the premises, and build a new one, and covenanted to keep the mills and works in constant working order, repair, and condition. On the 30th July, 1823, a lease was executed in pursuance of this agreement, and the lessee thereby covenanted to preserve and keep the premises, and all buildings and improvements then or thereafter to be made thereon, in good order and repair: to keep the mills, works, and machinery therein in working order, repair, and condition: to yield up the premises, and all buildings and improvements, in like good order, repair, and condition, and to keep the mills and works thereto belonging, or in anywise appertaining, in constant working order and repair. The lease was renewed in 1829, the renewal containing similar covenants by the tenant. On the 8th November, 1834, an underlease, at a profit rent, was made of the mills and premises for 999 years, which disclosed the existence of a head lease. In 1862 S. & Co. became assignees of the sub-lease, and, having entered into possession, took out the old mill-stone, and erected a quantity of new machinery in the mill, of an improved description. In 1865 a fee-farm grant was made by the plaintiff, as owner of the reversion, to the owners of the superior lease, with covenants by the grantees similar to the lessee's covenants in the original lease and renewal, and also to keep the mills and works in constant working order, repair, and condition. In 1874 an agreement was executed between the head landlord and S. & Co. reciting the original lease, its renewal, the underlease, and the derivative title to it, and giving S. & Co. liberty to erect an engine-house and shed, in pursuance of which the defendants erected a steam-engine and boiler, and buildings for the same. In 1886 S. & Co. sold, and proceeded to remove, the new machinery placed by them in the mill:—Held, that S. & Co. were precluded by the terms of the contract of tenancy having regard to the covenants in the several instruments constituting their title, and of which they had notice, from removing tenants' fixtures, including the new and improved machinery, and its accessories. Cosby v. Shaw, 19 L. R. Ir. 307.

—— Estoppel.]—A tenant covenanted in a lease to deliver up, at the expiration of his term, certain fixtures on the premises. The term expired on the 1st of April. On the 10th the landlord demanded possession. On the 13th the tenant received notice from a mortgagee that he was entitled to possession, and that he demanded payment of the rent; and on the same day the tenant bought the mortgagee's interest. The landlord having afterwards brought an action for breach of the covenant in not delivering up the fixtures:—Held, first, that the tenant was not estopped from denying the landlord's title to the fixtures. Watson v. Lane, 11 Ex. 769; 25 L. J., Ex. 101; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 119; 4 W. R. 293.

—— Damages for Breach of.]—Held, secondly, that the landlord could not recover the value of the fixtures, but only the actual damages sustained by him in consequence of their detention from the 10th to the 13th of April. Ib.

—— To Protect Landlord against Execution Creditor.]—Tenants' fixtures are not chattels until severed; and it is competent to a landlord to make an agreement with his tenant which shall, without an abandonment by the tenant of his property in such fixtures during the term, in the event of an execution against the tenant, enable the landlord to re-enter and retain such fixtures against the execution creditor. Dumergue v. Rumsey, 2 H. & C. 777; 33 L. J., Ex. 88; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 155; 9 L. T. 775; 12 W. R. 205—Ex. Ch.

D. demised to F. a music-hall. F. covenanted, at the determination of the lease, to deliver up the music-hall, together with all locks, doors, and other fixtures, and that no fixtures should be removed during the term, except for the purpose of repair; and if the lease should determine by efflux of time, it should be lawful for F. to remove the fixtures within twenty-one days; but that if F. should become bankrupt, or if any distress or execution should be levied or executed by seizure on the premises, then it should be lawful for D. to re-enter, and to seize and retain for her own use all fixtures whatsoever, whether tenants' or trade fixtures, or otherwise. During the term, the sheriff entered on the premises, and seized the fixtures in execution under a fi. fa.:—Held, that, by the terms of the lease, the tenant had no right to remove the fixtures during the tenancy, and therefore the fixtures were not seizable by the sheriff. Ib.

—— Covenant in Second Lease to Repair—Fixtures Erected under First Lease.]—Where a tenant erected fixtures for the purposes of his trade on the demised premises, and afterwards took a new lease to commence at the expiration of the former one, and the latter lease contained a general covenant to repair, such lessee is bound to repair such fixtures, unless it can be satisfactorily shown that they were not intended to pass under the general words of the second lease. Thresher v. East London Waterworks Co., 4 D. & R. 62; 2 B. & C. 608; 2 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 100.

—— As to Ways and Roads in Mine.]—Coal and iron works were demised, together with lands, and mines under other lands not included in the demise, with liberty to the lessees to make and use roads and ways over any of the lands, and to do all such other acts upon the lands as should be necessary for the purposes of the works; and the lessees covenanted to uphold and keep in good repair the furnaces and other works, houses and other buildings then standing, and which during the term should be erected and built on the demised land and all other the demised premises, and at the expiration of the term to deliver up the property, and all ways and roads in, upon, or under the same lands, in such good order that the works might be continued by the lessor:—Held, that this covenant did not extend to trams fastened to sleepers not affixed to the freehold, which the tenant had placed upon roads for the purpose of using them as tramways, and that the landlord, therefore, was not entitled to an injunction to restrain the tenant from disposing of them during the term. Beaufort (Duke) v. Bates, 3 De G. F. & J. 381; 31 L. J., Ch. 481; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 270; 6 L. T. 82; 10 W. R. 200.

—— As to Removals—Exceptions.]—Lessors demised land, on which the lessees covenanted to erect saltworks, and at the end of their term to leave at the disposal of the lessors all the fixed materials, of what nature or kind soever, that should be in or about the works, or in anyways relating thereto, "save and except all the salt-pans and other movable articles made use of at all or any of the works." Afterwards the representatives of the original lessees surrendered their term in the premises, and took a fresh lease covenanting as to the salt-pans and other articles made use of in the works, that they should at the end of the term be at liberty to take and carry them away, making good such damages to the freehold as might be consequential upon their removal, but with an option to the lessors of purchasing the salt-pans and movable articles. On the 13th of December, 1861, they underlet the premises, in violation of the terms of the lease, whereupon, on the 23rd of June, 1862, the lessors demanded repossession, and on the 7th of July, 1862, brought ejectment. Between the 18th of January and the 17th of March, 1863, on which latter day they confessed judgment, the lessees removed, and sold a quantity of the fixtures:—Held, that there was nothing in the covenant to restrain them from removing trade fixtures, and that they were entitled to a reasonable time for removing them, dating from the day on which the lessors demanded repossession. Sumner v. Bromilow, 34 L. J., Q. B. 130; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 481.

—— Removal before Termination of Lease—Bankruptcy.]—A lease of a mill and warehouse for twenty-one years contained a covenant by the lessors (inter alia) (4) that certain articles mentioned in a schedule should be the property of the lessees, and should be removable by them, they making good all damage done by such removal. The articles mentioned in the schedule were iron columns, beams, floors, brick piers and things ejusdem generis. There was a proviso (2) that the lessees might by notice determine the term at the end of seven or fourteen years, (1) that on the tenant's bankruptcy the term should cease, and (3) that on the determination or cesser of the term, all the machinery and also all the buildings erected by the lessees should be their property, and should be removed by them previously to the determination or cesser of the term, unless it should then be mutually agreed that the lessors should purchase them, the lessees in cases of removal to make good all damages which might be caused by such removal. The tenants failed and the lease determined:—Held, that the official receiver was nevertheless entitled to the articles mentioned in clause (4) of this covenant and clause (3) of the proviso, as being the property of the lessees. Gould or Goold, Ex parte, Walker, In re, 13 Q. B. D. 454; 51 L. T. 368; 1 Morrell, 168.

—— To yield up Buildings.]—A covenant by a tenant to yield up in repair at the expiration of his lease all buildings which should be erected during the term upon the demised premises, includes buildings erected and used by the tenant for the purpose of trade and manufacture, if such buildings are let into the soil, or otherwise fixed to the freehold, but not where they merely rest upon blocks or pattens. Naylor v. Collinge, 1 Taunt. 19. See also Cosby v. Shaw, 23 L. R. Ir. 181.

The mere removal and sale by a tenant, during the term, of fixtures, which he does not immediately replace, but which can be replaced before the end of the term, is not in itself a breach of his covenant to repair and uphold the demised premises, and to deliver up the same at the end of the term, together with all things affixed thereto. Doe d. Burrell v. Davis, 15 Jur. 155.

—— Meaning of "Improvements."]—A tenant occupied a mill, under a lease containing a covenant, on the part of the tenant, to deliver up the premises at the end of the term in good repair, "together with all locks, bolts, bars, and all other fixtures, fastenings, and improvements that should at any time during the term be erected, set up, or fixed upon the premises" :—Held, that mill-stones, set up by the tenant, came within the term "improvements" in the covenant, and consequently could not be removed by him at the end of the term. Murter v Bradley, 2 M. & Scott, 25; 9 Bing. 24; 1 L. J., C. P. 147.

Although the custom of the country authorised him to remove them. Ib.

A covenant to keep in repair the premises and all erections, buildings, and improvements erected on the same during the term, and yield up the same at the end of the term, is broken by the removal of a verandah, erected during the term, the lower part of which was affixed to the ground by means of posts. Penry v. Brown, 2 Stark. 403.

A lease contained a covenant to yield up certain scheduled articles, together with all doors, wainscots, shelves, presses, dressers, drawers, locks, keys, bolts, bars, staples, hinges, hearths, chimney-pieces, mantel-pieces, chimney-jambs, foot-paces, slabs, covings, window-shutters, partitions, sinks, water-closets, cisterns, pumps and rails, water-tanks, "and other additions, improvements, fixtures and things," which were and should be anyways fixed or fastened upon the premises :—Semble, that the general words could not be restricted, there being no assignable genus to which the enumerated articles belonged. Wilson v. Whateley, 1 Johns. & H. 436; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 908; 3 L. T. 617; 9 W. R. 331.

Held, that the lessee could not make a marketable title even to articles in the nature of tenant's fixtures. Ib.

Re-entry under Covenant.] — In 1824, A. leased to B. for twenty-one years a colliery (with the right of putting up steam-engines for working it), subject to a proviso for re-entry, on non-payment of rent or insolvency. B. erected on the colliery several steam-engines, affixed in the ordinary way to the soil; and afterwards, in 1827, assigned the colliery, with the engines, implements, &c., in use upon it, to trustees to permit B. to enjoy them until default in payment of an annuity granted by him; and on such default to take possession and sell them, and pay the arrears. In June, 1829, A. recovered possession of the premises in ejectment, brought in pursuance of the proviso for re-entry. In November, 1829, the engines and other articles on the colliery were seized under a fi. fa., at the suit of an execution creditor of B. :—Held, that the steam-engines passed to the landlord on the re-entry, and that the trustees could not recover them in trover against the sheriff. Minshall v. Lloyd, 2 M. & W. 450; M. & H. 125; 6 L. J., Ex. 115; 1 Jur. 336.

Forming Part of Personal Estate.]—In January, 1797, several persons carried on business in partnership as calico printers; and in the same month, premises on which their works were principally carried on were conveyed to one of the partners in fee. The conveyance mentioned the premises to consist, besides land, of dwelling-houses, machine-house, and other buildings and erections, and stated them to be then in the possession of the partner to whom they were conveyed, and another partner. Various buildings and machines were afterwards, from time to time, erected on the premises by the firm, for the purpose of extending the works. The whole was firmly fixed to the freehold, and stood on that part of the land which was conveyed to one of the partners in 1797, but the part in question could be removed without material injury to the buildings. In the different stock-takings of the firm, the land and buildings were always valued and classed separately from the machinery and fixtures. In the part of the country where the premises were situated, machinery of this description was constantly bought and sold distinctly from the freehold. The freehold in the premises having been subsequently conveyed to two of the partners, they, in 1828, mortgaged them to the plaintiff's wife, under the description of all the messuages, dwelling-houses, lands, and buildings therein mentioned; "and also all that and those the steam-engine, mill-gearing, heavy gear to millwright work, fixed machinery, and other matters and things then standing and being in and upon the demised buildings, works, and premises, which in any manner constituted fixtures and appendages to the freehold of the same, or any part thereof." All the machinery, fixtures, &c., appeared to have been in the reputed ownership of the partners who carried on the works until 1831, when they became bankrupt. The mortgagee had inspected statements of the affairs of the partners, which treated the machinery as not included in the mortgage, and had made no objections to such statements. In April, 1831, the assignees sold all the machinery and fixtures, with the exception of two steam-engines, two water-wheels, an iron flooring, and other small articles, and the greater part of them was removed by the purchasers. The articles claimed by the mortgagee were all firmly fixed to the freehold, in such a manner, however, that they might easily be removed without material injury to themselves or to the buildings :—Held, that the machinery did not belong to the inheritance, but was part of the personal estate of the bankrupts; and that it passed to the assignees, and that the machinery was not intended to pass, and did not pass, to the mortgagee under the mortgage deed. Trappes v. Harter, 2 C. & M. 153; 3 Tyr. 604; 3 L. J., Ex. 24.

Agreement to leave Fixtures on Premises after Determination of Term.]—A tenant of a house for a term of years, being possessed of shelves, stoves, ranges, ovens, boilers, and other articles of household use, his own property, but annexed to the freehold, requested the landlord to purchase them at the expiration of the term, or let them remain for purchase by the incoming tenant, but to be taken away if the tenant should refuse them. The landlord wrote an answer, declining to purchase, but adding, "I have no objection to your leaving them on the premises, and making the best terms you can with the incoming tenant." The articles remained un-severed from the freehold till the entry of the new tenant, who came in under a demise from the same landlord, but who declined to take them. The old tenant then (after the new tenant had been two months in possession) demanded liberty to enter and remove the fixtures, but the tenant refused permission; and thereupon brought an action for the hindrance, and trover against the tenant:—Held, that if the landlord's letter amounted to a licence to take away the articles, yet not being under seal, it was no valid grant of such privilege as against a new tenant in possession, and not party to the licence. Ruffey v. Henderson, 17 Q. B. 575; 21 L. J., Q. B. 49; 16 Jur. 84.

Held, also, that trover did not lie for the articles unsevered from the freehold. Ib.

As between landlord and tenant an agreement by the landlord that the tenant shall be at liberty to leave tenant's fixtures on the premises after the expiration of the tenancy, and to sever and remove them after they have thus become part of the freehold, may, in the event of the landlord's subsequent refusal to permit severance and removal, give the tenant a right of action for the value of the fixtures. But such an agreement gives the tenant no such right of action against the landlord's mortgagees who have in the meantime entered into possession under a prior mortgage. Thomas v. Jennings, 66 L. J., Q. B. 5; 75 L. T. 274; 45 W. R. 93.

Tenant's fixtures not removed during the continuance of the tenancy become on its expiration part of the freehold even though they are on the premises by the parol consent of the lessor; and though such consent might give the tenant a right of action for the value of the fixtures against the lessor if he subsequently refused to permit their removal, it will give no such right as against the lessor's mortgagees who were no parties to it, should they refuse. Ib.

Implied Agreement.]—The acceptance of a demise of a house containing fixtures does not raise an implied contract to pay for such fixtures. Goff v. Harris, 5 Man. & G. 573; 12 L. J., C. P. 273.

Declaration—As to Fixtures Scheduled.]—A declaration stated that the plaintiff agreed to let, and the defendant to take for one year, a dwelling-house, together with the furniture, fixtures, and effects mentioned in the inventory thereof, "which was to be examined or signed by both parties." And the defendant agreed, at the end of the term, to deliver up the dwelling-house, furniture, fixtures, and effects, as per inventory, in as good condition as the same were then in, or pay for the damage. The declaration averred that the defendant entered and enjoyed the house, furniture, fixtures, and effects, and alleged as a breach, that, at the end of the term, he delivered up the furniture, fixtures, and effects, as per inventory, in a broken condition, and refused to pay for the damage:—Held, that the declaration was good, although it contained no averment that the inventory was examined or signed by either party. Dumpier v. Pole, 4 Ex. 678.

Costs of Agreement.]—A lessee of a house and fixtures, agreeing to pay the expense of preparing the agreement, is liable to pay the costs of preparing the agreement, and of copies of an inventory of the fixtures referred to by it. Thomas, In re, 8 Beav. 145.

Included in "Erections."]—An agreement was made with a company to grant them a lease of land as soon as they had spent 3,000*l.* "in the erection of permanent and substantial buildings and works such as are usually erected for the distillation of oil," and there was a covenant to cover in the "erections" and buildings when necessary:—Held, that "erections" was a wider term than buildings, and might include trade fixtures. Bidder v. Trinidad Co., 17 W. R. 153.

b. Sale and Assignment.

Meaning of Fixtures.]—The word "fixtures" means the right of severance of chattels attached to the soil, but not part of the freehold. A transfer of fixtures is therefore, at least, the transfer of the right of severance; and, whether a memorandum of the sale of fixtures transfers any interest in the chattels themselves or not, is a conveyance within the words of the Stamp Act, which include the transfer of any right; and as fixtures are not goods, wares, and merchandise, it is not within the exemption. Horsfall v. Key, 2 Ex. 778; 17 L. J., Ex. 266.

Parol Agreement as to Reversionary Interest.]—A reversionary interest in trade fixtures will pass to a purchaser under a parol agreement. Petrie v. Dawson, 2 Car. & K. 138.

Wrongful Sale of.]—By agreement, reciting (as the fact was) that the plaintiff had discounted a bill for S., and that S., in consideration thereof, had deposited with the plaintiff as a collateral security for repayment, the lease of his house, and had also assigned to him the fixtures as per inventory, S. undertook, if the bill should be dishonoured, to execute a mortgage to the plaintiff of the lease (such mortgage to contain the usual power of immediate sale), together with the fixtures as per inventory, such lease and fixtures to be sold by auction, or otherwise, and, after repayment of debt and expenses to the plaintiff, the balance to be paid over to S. But if the plaintiff should wish to sell the fixtures by auction, or otherwise, S. undertook to allow him to do so on the premises, without his being liable to an action of trespass. S. also undertook to pay all arrears of rent and taxes within three months; and, in default of such payment, authorised the plaintiff to sell the lease and fixtures on the premises, by auction or otherwise, without previous mortgage, and to pay the proceeds as before stated. S. signed a receipt for 80*l.*, as paid for purchase of the fixtures. S. became bankrupt, having continued in possession of the house and fixtures until that event, and the bill having then three weeks to run. The assignees took possession of the fixtures and sold them:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the value from them, the agreement having vested in him an immediate interest in the fixtures. Thompson v. Pettitt, 10 Q. B. 101; 16 L. J., Q. B. 162; 11 Jur. 748.

—— Damages for.]—The fixtures were sold by auction for 36*l.*, a fair price on such sale; but if they had been valued as between outgoing and incoming tenant they would have been worth 80*l.*:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to damages according to the latter estimate. Ib.

Removal of, after Sale.]—The plaintiff purchased a farm from the devisees in trust of the father of the defendant, and the premises were conveyed by a deed, to which the defendant was a party, as one of the devisees. The plaintiff demised the premises to M. immediately after the conveyance, and the defendant, who was in the occupation of the farm at the time of the conveyance, under a lease from the devisees, removed some rick staddles, a threshing-machine, and a granary from the premises after the demise to M. The deed conveyed the land and all fixtures. The articles in question had been put on the land by the defendant's father:—Held, first, that, everything attached to the land having passed by the deed, the defendant had no right to remove the articles as fixtures removable by an outgoing agricultural tenant. Wiltshire v. Cottrell, 1 El. & Bl. 674; 22 L. J., Q. B. 177; 17 Jur. 758.

Held, secondly, that the removal of the rick staddles, which were stone pillars mortared to a foundation of brick and mortar let into the earth, with stone caps mortared on the pillars, and of the threshing-machine, which was fixed by bolts and screws to posts, which were let into the ground, was an injury to the plaintiff's reversionary estate, for which the defendant was liable in an action. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that a granary laid on a wooden foundation, supported by staddles, and which could be lifted from them by sufficient power without disturbing them, was a chattel, though it might pass under the word "fixtures" in a deed of conveyance, if there were other words in the deed denoting an intention of passing chattels, and it appeared, from the circumstances of the case, to be comprehended under that word; but that the removal of it would not support a count for an injury to the reversionary estate of the plaintiff, nor a count in trover. Ib.

What pass under Sale of Mill.]—Upon the sale of a mill or of a factory, looms used in the mill are not within the words "steam-engines, boilers, shafting, piping, mill-gearing, gasometer, gas-pipes, drums, wheels, and all and singular other the machinery, fixtures, and effects fixed up, in, attached or belonging to the mill or factory or premises." Hutchinson v. Kay, 23 Beav. 413; 26 L. J., Ch. 457; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 652; 5 W. R. 341.

Looms standing upon a loom-foot, from which they may be removed at pleasure, will not pass by the general terms of machinery, though they are worked by steam-power which is attached to the mill and mortgaged with it. Ib.

Of Iron Foundry.]—Where by a deed were granted "all that iron-foundry, together with the said dwelling-houses and appurtenances thereto belonging, and the dwelling-houses and buildings erected thereon, and all and singular other the hereditaments, &c., together with all grates, boilers, bells, and other fixtures in and about the said dwelling-houses, and the brew-houses thereto belonging"; it was held that the fixtures of the iron-foundry did not pass. Hare v. Horton, 5 B. & Ad. 715; 2 N. & M. 428; 3 L. J., K. B. 41.

Of Brewhouse.]—By the sale of a brewhouse the utensils will not pass. Quincy, Ex parte, 1 Atk. 478.

Agreement to Assign—Refusal of Defendant to Sign.]—A declaration, after reciting that the defendant was possessed, for the residue of a term of years, of a messuage and premises, and also of fixtures annexed to the premises, averred that the plaintiff agreed to purchase of the defendant the residue of the term of the messuage and premises, with the appurtenances and the fixtures; and the defendant agreed to give up possession of the messuage, with the appurtenances and the fixtures, on a certain day. The declaration averred, that the plaintiff tendered to the defendant for execution an instrument, which contained a recital that the plaintiff had lately contracted with the defendant for the sale to him of the residue of the term granted to him by P., in the messuage or tenements and hereditaments, with their appurtenances, and also all and singular the fixtures belonging to the messuage or tenements and hereditaments, for a certain sum, the receipt of which was acknowledged:—Held, that as the agreement between the parties was for the assignment of the fixtures only, which belonged to the defendant, the recital in the instrument tendered was too large, and therefore that it was not such an one as the defendant was bound to execute, and the judgment was arrested. Manning v. Bailey, 2 Ex. 45.

c. Mortgage.

i. Of Freeholds.

Fixtures included.] — Trade fixtures pass by a mortgage of the freehold or of a freeholder's interest in the property to which they are attached, whether such mortgage is effected by a regularly-executed deed, or by deposit with memorandum, and such mortgage will be effectual, though not registered, as against any subsequent unregistered bill of sale. Trade fixtures added subsequently to the mortgage are subject to this rule as much as those attached before the mortgage. Meux v. Jacob, 44 L. J., Ch. 481; L. R. 7 H. L. 481; 32 L. T. 171; 23 W. R. 526.

A portable engine and boiler brought on to colliery premises to be used in sinking a new shaft, and for the purpose of steadying the machinery, bolted to a wooden framework, and then the frame embedded in a layer of wet mortar laid upon a brick foundation, pass to the mortgagee of the realty as affixed to the freehold, and cannot be seized by the judgment creditors of the mortgagor. Cross v. Barnes, 46 L. J., Q. B. 479; 36 L. T. 693.

When an article is affixed to the soil by the owner of the fee, though only by means of bolts and screws, it is to be considered as part of the land; at all events where the object of setting up the article is to enhance the value of the premises to which it is annexed for the purposes to which those premises are applied. Holland v. Hodgson, 41 L. J., C. P. 146; L. R. 7 C. P. 328; 26 L. T. 709: 20 W. R. 990—Ex. Ch.

The owner in fee of a worsted mill at which he carried on the business of a worsted spinner and stuff manufacturer, mortgaged it. By a deed of arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, subsequently executed, the mortgagor assigned all his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. Under this latter deed the trustees seized looms which were in the mill that was mortgaged. These looms were attached to the stone floors of the rooms of the mill by means of nails driven through holes in the feet of the looms, in some cases into beams which had been built into the stone, and in other cases into plugs of wood driven into holes drilled in the stone for the purpose. It was necessary that the looms should be so attached for the purpose of steadying them and keeping them in a true direction, perpendicular to the line of the shafting, by means of which the steam power was applied to them. It was impossible to remove the looms without drawing the nails; but this could be done easily and without any serious damage to the flooring. The mortgagees brought trover for the looms:—Held, that the looms passed by the mortgage of the mill as part of the realty, and the action was therefore maintainable. Ib.

Things firmly annexed to the freehold by a mortgagor in possession after the date of the mortgage, for the purpose of improving the inheritance, pass to the mortgagee, and do not pass to the assignees of the mortgagor upon his bankruptcy; and that rule applies as well to trade as to other fixtures, the mortgagor not being in possession as tenant to the mortgagee. Walmsley v. Milne, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 115; 29 L. J., C. P. 97; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 125; 1 L. T. 62; 8 W. R. 138.

A trader mortgages the trade premises in fee, and then enters into partnership, and the firm carry on business on the same premises, and erect trade fixtures:—Held, on their bankruptcy, that the mortgagee was entitled to the trade fixtures. Cotton, Ex parte, Nutter, In re, 2 Mont. D. & D. 725; 6 Jur. 1045.

The owner of a mill mortgaged it in fee together with all the engines, plant, and machinery described in the schedule to the mortgage deed. The schedule included certain driving belts which were necessary for connecting the power machinery with certain machines which were so affixed as to be part of the realty:—Held, that the belts, being essential parts of the fixed machines, formed part of the realty, and as such passed under the mortgage. Sheffield and South Yorkshire Permanent Building Society v. Harrison, 54 L. J., Q. B. 15; 15 Q. B. D. 358; 51 L. T. 649; 33 W. R. 144.

By a mortgage of a mill, the stones, tackling and instruments necessary for working the mill pass to the mortgagee. Place v. Fagg, 4 M. & Ry. 277; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 195.

A bankrupt being the owner, as well as occupier, of a freehold cotton-mill, gave the petitioners an equitable mortgage on it, "together with the steam-engines, and also all and singular other the movable and fixed machinery, and steam-pipes then in, upon, about, and belonging to the said steam-mill and premises, or occupied or used therewith"; and the bankrupt continued in possession of the mill and fixtures up to the period of his bankruptcy:—Held, that all parts of the machinery and fixtures which were so attached to the premises as to be legally affixed to the freehold, were not to be considered as goods and chattels within s. 72 of the Bankrupt Act, and that the assignees had no right to them, as against the equitable mortgagee. Wilson, Ex parte, 4 Deac. & C. 143; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 61; 4 L. J., Bk. 24.

Where the memorandum of deposit accompanying an equitable mortgage stated, that the bankrupt had deposited "the deeds and documents under which he held the steam-mills, cottages, land, buildings, and premises at L.":—Held, upon construction of the contract, the point of "order and disposition" not having been taken, that the equitable mortgagee had a lien on the fixtures, whether erected before or after the time of the deposit, and including tenant's fixtures. Price, Ex parte, Stead, In re, 2 Mont. D. & D. 518; 11 L. J., Bk. 27; 6 Jur. 327.

A., who was a partner with B., deposited with their bankers the deeds of a freehold cotton-mill belonging to A., as a security for advances to be made by the bankers for the use of the firm of A. & B.; and in the memorandum of deposit it was stated, that the buildings were insured for 2,000*l.*, and "the machinery, &c., for 2,000*l.* more." A steam-engine and other machinery having been, previous to the deposit, erected by A. & B. for the purposes of their trade, A. & B. continued in possession of the premises, with all the machinery, up to the period of their bankruptcy:—Held, that the bankers had a lien on the steam-engine and machinery as well as on the buildings. Lloyd, Ex parte, Ogden or Walmsley, In re, 3 Deac. & C. 765; 1 Mont. & Ayr. 494; 3 L. J., Bk. 108. And see Hobson v. Gorringe, 66 L. J., Ch. 114; [1897] 1 Ch. 182; 75 L. T. 610; 45 W. R. 356—C. A. Ante, cols. 122, 123.

With Appurtenances.] — Where real property "with its appurtenances" (without other evidence of intention) was mortgaged by the owner of the fee, articles of furniture, as rolling maps, affixed before and after the mortgage to the freehold, although they might have been removable as between a landlord and tenant, and although he continued in possession up to the time of his bankruptcy, passed by the mortgage, and were taken out of the order and disposition of the bankrupt owner. Whatever is affixed to freehold by the owner of the inheritance is to be considered as a fixture till severed by him; and whether so affixed before or after a mortgage, passes absolutely to the mortgagee. Belcher, Ex parte, 4 Deac. & C. 703; 2 Mont. & Ayr. 160; 4 L. J., Bk. 29.

A mortgage of a brewhouse, with the appurtenances, will not carry the utensils, but the things only belonging to the outhouses. Quincy, Ex parte, 1 Atk. 477. See also cases, ante, cols. 123, 124.

As against Bill of Sale Holder.] — The owner in fee in possession of land and premises deposited the title-deeds with a banking company as an equitable mortgage, to secure the balance of his account with them for the time being. He then erected a mill, and set up, not only steam power applicable to all mills, but machinery applicable only to the purposes of a particular manufacture which he carried on there. He afterwards granted a bill of sale of all the machinery, the assignee having notice of the previous deposit of the deeds:—Held, as between the mortgagees and the assignee, that all of the machinery which was annexed to the floor, ceilings, or sides of the building, in a quasi-permanent manner, by means of bolts and screws, passed to the mortgagees; and that it made no difference that the object of annexation was merely to steady the machines when in use, and that they could be removed without any injury to them or the freehold, nor that the machines were in the nature of trade fixtures, which would, as between landlord and tenant, belong to the tenant. Longbottom v. Berry, 10 B. & S. 852; 39 L. J., Q. B. 37; L. R. 5 Q. B. 123; 22 L. T. 385.

ii. Of Leaseholds.

A mortgage of a lease made by the lessee will carry the fixtures of that property which is in lease, and the power to remove which fixtures was in the tenant. Meux v. Jacobs, 44 L. J., Ch. 481; L. R. 7 H. L. 481; 32 L. T. 171; 23 W. R. 526.

Trade fixtures removable as between landlord and tenant pass to equitable mortgagee by deposit of lease, though not specified therein nor in the memorandum of deposit. Quære, as to fixtures subsequently erected. Broadwood, Ex parte, M'Neil, In re, 1 Mont. D. & D. 631.

Fixtures belonging to a lessee and removable by him at pleasure (as between himself and the lessor) form part of the security under an equitable mortgage by deposit of the lease. Richards, In re, Lloyds Banking Co., Ex parte, and Astbury, Ex parte, 38 L. J., Bk. 9; L. R. 4 Ch. 630; 20 L. T. 997; 17 W. R. 997.

Leases are deposited by way of equitable mortgage, accompanied by a memorandum of deposit. Tenant's fixtures are included in the security, although they are not mentioned in the memorandum. Cowell, Ex parte, 17 L. J., Bk. 16; 12 Jur. 411.

Where a lessee for years mortgaged his lease, and all his estate and interest in the premises, and afterwards became bankrupt:—Held, that the mortgagee might declare as reversioner against the assignee of the tenant for the removal of the fixtures from the premises, whereby they were dilapidated and injured; and that he was also entitled to recover in trover against such assignee the value of all the fixtures, whether landlord's or tenant's, which were affixed to the premises before the execution of the mortgage, although there was a covenant in the original lease to the mortgagor to yield up to the lessor, at the determination of the term, "all fixtures and things to the premises belonging or to belong." Hitchman v. Walton, 4 M. & W. 409; 1 H. & H. 374; 8 L. J., Ex. 31.

The lessee of a house containing fixtures executed an assignment of the premises by way of mortgage, not mentioning the fixtures. He afterwards assigned the premises and all his estate and effects to trustees. The trustees being in treaty for a sale of the fixtures, the mortgagee, whose principal and interest were due, took forcible possession of the house, and refused, on demand, to deliver the fixtures up. The trustees brought trover:—Held, that they could not recover for the fixtures. Longstaff v. Meagoe, 2 A. & E. 167; 2 N. & M. 211; 4 L. J., K. B. 28.

A lessee annexed tenant's fixtures, and then deposited the lease, by way of mortgage, with a memorandum not noticing the fixtures:—Held, on his becoming bankrupt, that the security extended to the fixtures. Tagart, Ex parte, De Gex, 531.

A lessee erected trade fixtures, firmly attached to the freehold, but removable as between himself and the landlord. He then mortgaged the premises, without referring to the new erections, for an amount greater than the premises would be worth without the fixtures. He became bankrupt:—Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to the fixtures. Bentley, Ex parte, 2 Mont. D. & D. 591; 6 Jur. 719.

A publican deposited a lease of a public-house and other leases with his brewers, with a memorandum stating that they were to be equitable mortgagees of the leases and premises, and fixtures and appurtenances. The publican became bankrupt, and the brewers petitioned for a realisation of their security. The leases, and trade and other fixtures and fittings-up of the public-house were ordered to be sold, and were sold. The commissioner decided that the proceeds of the trade fixtures belonged to the general creditors, on the ground that these fixtures were in the order and disposition of the bankrupt within the meaning of s. 125 of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106; but upon appeal:—Held, that the mortgagees were entitled to the entire produce of the sale, as the trade fixtures were included in their security, and were not in the order and disposition of the bankrupt. Gawan v. Barclay, Barclay, Ex parte, 5 De G. M. & G. 403; 25 L. J., Bk. 1; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1145.

Under an equitable mortgage by the simple deposit of a lease, unaccompanied by any memorandum, the tenant's fixtures will be included. Williams v. Evans, 23 Beav. 239.

A. and B. agreed that B., on payment of 1,000*l.* premium, and putting up fittings to the value of 500*l.*, should have a lease from A. of certain premises, and that he should advance 1,000*l.* to be secured by the premises so fitted up. B. entered, put up the fittings, and continued in possession; but nothing more was done, except that B., preferring to have only the agreement, and desiring to deposit it as a security to others, A. allowed him to deposit his part of the agreement (which was in duplicate) as a security, subject to his claim for 1,000*l.* B. became bankrupt, and his assignees, under an order of the court of bankruptcy, severed and sold the fittings:—Held, that A. was equitable mortgagee of the premises and fittings, and that the assignees had no right to remove the fittings. Tebb v. Hodge, 39 L. J., C. P. 56; L. R. 5 C. P. 73; 21 L. T. 499—Ex. Ch.

The defendants supplied and fixed for E., a nurseryman, on his premises, which were mortgaged to the plaintiff, a trade fixture, which, according to a hire-and-purchase agreement between E., E.'s landlord, and the defendants, prior to the mortgage, was to remain the property of the defendants till the instalments of purchase-money were paid. The plaintiff took the mortgage without notice of the agreement. E. having made default in payment of the instalments, the defendants removed the fixture before the plaintiff entered into possession:—Held, that the defendants were entitled to remove the fixture. Sanders v. Davis (15 Q. B. D. 218) and Cumberland Union Banking Co. v. Maryport Hematite Iron and Steel Co. ([1892] 1 Q. B. 415) followed. Gough v. Wood, 63 L. J., Q. B. 564; [1894] 1 Q. B. 713; 9 R. 509; 70 L. A mortgagor in possession has no right as against his mortgagee to remove fixtures otherwise than in the ordinary course of his trade and as a legitimate act of that trade. Gough v. Wood ([1894] 1 Q. B. 713) explained. Huddersfield Banking Co. v. Lister, 64 L. J., Ch. 523; [1895] 2 Ch. 273; 12 R. 331; 72 L. T. 703; 43 W. R. 567—C. A.

iii. Of Fixtures.

When a rolling-machine (which itself was admittedly a fixture) was fitted with a number of different sets of loose rollers, one of which only could be actually attached to the machine and used at one time, but the duplicates were kept for the purpose of effecting different kinds of work:—Held, in a contest between mortgagees and the assignees in bankruptcy of the mortgagor, that all the rollers that had been fitted to the machine thereby became part of it, and passed to the mortgagees by virtue of an equitable mortgage by deposit of the lease of the mill. Richards, In re, Lloyds Banking Co., Ex parte, and Astbury, Ex parte, 38 L. J., Bk. 9; L. R. 4 Ch. 630; 20 L. T. 997; 17 W. R. 997.

Held, also, that other rollers which had been purchased with the view of using them in the machine, but had not been fitted to the machine, were not part of the machine, and did not pass to the mortgagee. Ib.

A lessee mortgaged tenant's fixtures, and afterwards surrendered his lease to the lessor, who granted a fresh term to a third party:—Held, that the mortgagee had a right to enter and sever the fixtures, it not being competent to the tenant to defeat his grant by a subsequent voluntary act of surrender. London Loan and Discount Co. v. Drake, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 798; 28 L. J., C. P. 297; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1407; 7 W. R. 611.

Under a mortgage of an iron rolling-mill, with certain specified machinery, and all engines, machinery, fixtures, and things which might thereafter be fixed or fastened in or upon the premises, whether in addition to or substitution for the fixtures, machinery, articles, and things:—Held, that entirely new machinery, as well as additions to existing machinery, passed to the mortgagee. Metropolitan Counties Insurance Society v. Brown, 26 Beav. 454; 28 L. J., Ch. 581; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 378; 7 W. R. 303.

Under an assignment of the machinery fastened in or upon a mill:—Held, that an anvil, though not fastened or fixed to it, passed as essential to a fixed steam hammer. Ib.

A mortgage of a silk mill with the steam-engines, boilers, steam pipes, main shafting, millgearing, millwright's work, and all other machinery whatsoever being, or which should thereafter be, on the land described in the mortgage:—Held, as against a second mortgagee, not to be confined to machinery necessary for giving power to the mil, as being ejusdem generis with the specified particulars, but to extend to silk-spinning machines resting by their weight only on the ground, but attached by movable bolts to iron rods fixed to mill-beams over head. Haley v. Hammersley, 3 De G., F. & J. 587; 30 L. J., Ch. 771; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 765; 4 L. T. 269; 9 W. R. 562—L. C.

A tenant in fee of a cotton-mill, in which there were a steam-engine, boilers, &c., mortgaged the mill, engine, boilers, &c., to B., but remained in possession until his bankruptcy. The entablature plate of the engine, which, however, formed no part of the working apparatus, was fixed to the frechold of the mill; every other part of the engine was secured by bolts and screws, and might be removed without injury to the building:—Held, that the steam-engine was not in the order and disposition of A. at his bankruptcy. Hubbard v. Bagshaw, 4 Sim. 326; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 190.

The mortgagee of tenant's fixtures in a leasehold house, the house not being included in the security, petitioned that the fixtures might be sold, and the produce applied in discharge of the mortgage money, or pro tanto, and that he might be permitted to prove against the bankrupt's estate for the difference; but the petition was dismissed, with costs, the petitioner declining to accept the offer of the court to file a bill. Sykes, Ex parte, 18 L. J., Bk. 16; 13 Jur. 486.

iv. Other Matters.

Meaning of Fixtures.]—A house fitted up for and intended to be used as a club was mortgaged with all fixtures therein:—Held, that in determining what articles were included as "fixtures," regard must be had to the intentions of the parties, the one in mortgaging and the other in taking a security for the sum advanced; and that such things as were substantially part of the house so that they could not be removed without depriving the house of what was intended to be used with it must be regarded as fixtures. Smith v. Maclure, 32 W. R. 459.

By a mortgage by sub-demise a corn-mill and other leasehold premises, together with certain fixtures specifically mentioned, and constituting the motive power of the mill, were conveyed to the mortgagees, to secure a sum due to them by the mortgagors. The deed contained the following general words:—"Together with all buildings, fixtures, rights, lights, easements," &c.:—Held, that the word "fixtures" in the general sense was not restricted to fixtures ejusdem generis with those specifically mentioned, but was intended to extend and enlarge that class, and that therefore the trade fixtures in the mill passed by the sub-demise to the mortgagees. The observations of Blackburn, J., in Hawtry v. Butlin (L. R. 8 Q. B. 293) explained. Southport Banking Co. v. Thompson, 57 L. J., Ch. 114; 37 Ch. D. 64; 58 L. T. 143; 36 W. R. 113.

Fixtures are not goods and chattels within 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 72. Smith v. Grazebrooke, 4 Scott (N.R.) 565. S. P., Heathcote, Ex parte, Oybourne, In re, 2 Mont. D. & D. 711; 6 Jur. 1001.

Registration under Bills of Sale Acts, when necessary.]—An agreement to mortgage paper-mills and machinery does not extend to any property which requires registration under the Bills of Sale Acts, and trade machinery is therefore not included in the security. London and Lancashire Paper Mills Co., In re, 58 L. T. 798.

When there is a mortgage of leasehold property and fixtures with a power of sale, the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, applies, not only where the power of sale authorises the mortgagee to sell the fixtures separately from the leasehold property, but also where there is a separate assignment of the fixtures. Brown, Ex parte, Reed, In re, 9 Ch. D. 389; 39 L. T. 338; 27 W. R. 219—C. A.

In suits for redemption and foreclosure, F., a third mortgagee (who was also first mortgagee), attempted to impeach the security of B., the second mortgagee, on the ground of fraud, but at the hearing his bill was dismissed with costs in this respect, and an ordinary decree for foreclosure and redemption was made. On taking the accounts, F. attempted to raise the question whether B.'s security, which comprised leasehold premises and also trade fixtures, machinery, and loose chattels, was not invalid as to the trade fixtures, machinery, and loose chattels, because it had not been registered under the Bills of Sale Act. F., who had registered his later security, contended that he was not bound to account as mortgagee in possession of the trade fixtures, machinery, and chattels, on the ground that his registration had been the means of preventing any claim on the part of the assignees in bankruptcy of the mortgagor:—Held, that this contention ought to have been raised at the hearing, and that it was too late to raise it afterwards, and consequently that the respective mortgages must be taken to comprise what was expressed to be included in them. Beghie v. Fenwick, L. R. 6 Ch. 869; 25 L. T. 441; 20 W. R. 67.

4. Recovery of Fixtures or their Value.

Sufficiency of Claim.]—In a declaration for taking the plaintiff's goods, chattels, and effects:—Held, that the value of fixtures might be recovered under these words. Pitt v. Shaw, 4 B. & Ald. 206.

The price of fixtures in a house cannot be recovered under a declaration for goods sold and delivered. Lee v. Risdon, 7 Taunt. 188; 2 Marsh. 495; 17 R. R. 484. S. P., Nutt v. Butler, 5 Esp. 176.

A. having occupied a house as tenant to B., in which there were fixtures which A. had purchased on entering the house, and which he had a right to remove during his tenancy, agreed at B.'s request, a few days before the expiration of his tenancy, to forbear to remove his fixtures, B. agreeing to take them at a valuation of two brokers. A., at the expiration of his tenancy, delivered up possession of the house to B., leaving the fixtures on the premises. On the following day the fixtures were valued by two brokers at 40*l.* 10*s.*, and the valuation was signed by them accordingly. A. having brought an action for the price and value of fixtures, bargained, sold, and delivered:—Held, that the action was maintainable, and that this was not a sale of an interest in land. Hallen v. Runder, 1 C., M. & R. 266; 3 Tyr. 959; 3 L. J., Ex. 260.

If a landlord, under a distress for rent in arrear, severs fixtures from the freehold and disposes of them, he is liable in trover, and the articles may be described in the declaration as goods and chattels; and the plaintiff does not thereby waive his right of maintaining that the distress is illegal, because fixtures cannot be distrained for rent in arrear. Dalton v. Whittem, 3 G. & D. 260; 3 Q. B. 961; 12 L. J., Q. B. 55; 6 Jur. 1063.

Under a count in trover, to recover damages for wrongfully removing fixtures under a distress, the plaintiff is entitled to recover the value of fixtures removed from the premises, and sold as chattels merely. Clarke v. Holdford, 2 Car. & K. 540.

When Left in House.]—Where a freehold mansion-house was sold by public auction, without any stipulation on the part of the owner that the fixtures were to be taken and paid for separately, and the vendee, who had paid the purchase-money, entered into possession under a conveyance:—Held, that the fixtures still remaining in the house passed to the vendee by the conveyance of the freehold, and were not the subject of trover. Colgrave v. Dios Santos, 3 D. & R. 255; 2 B. & C. 76; 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 239.

Held, also, that a demand of and refusal to deliver the fixtures would not entitle the vendor to such articles left in possession of the vendee as appeared to be movable goods and chattels. Ib.

Trover will not lie for fixtures which a tenant has left annexed to the freehold, after he has quitted possession with the leave of his landlord, for the purpose of enabling him to make terms as to their purchase by the incoming tenant. Ruffey v. Henderson, 17 Q. B. 575; 21 L. J., Q. B. 49; 16 Jur. 84.

A ladder, a crane, and a bench were left by an outgoing tenant upon the demised premises at the expiration of his term; the ladder and crane were fastened with nails or screws to the floor and to the joists above, in the usual way, and the bench was fixed to the wall:—Held, that, in the absence of anything to show that they were put up for the purposes of ornament or trade, trover would not lie for them. Wilde v. Waters, 16 C. B. 637; 24 L. J., C. P. 193; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1021; 3 W. R. 570.

Attached to the Freehold.]—An auctioneer put into possession of fixtures attached to the freehold, for the purpose of selling them, the purchaser being bound to detach and remove them, has not such a possession as will support trespass de bonis asportatis for their wrongful removal. Davis v. Danks, 3 Ex. 435; 18 L. J., Ex. 213.

A lessee cannot, even during his term, maintain trover for fixtures attached to the freehold. Mackintosh v. Trotter, 3 M. & W. 184.

The word "fixtures" does not necessarily mean things fixed to the realty; and therefore, in an action of trover for goods, chattels, and fixtures, where damages were assessed generally on the whole declaration:—Held, that it must be intended after verdict, that the jury had not awarded damages in respect of fixtures attached to the freehold. Sheen v. Rickie, 5 M. & W. 175; 7 D. P. C. 335; 3 Jur. 607.

Sale of Fixtures—Vendor's Title to House.]—The defendant agreed verbally with the plaintiff to take a house, and purchase the fixtures at a valuation to be made by two brokers. An inventory of the furniture and fixtures was accordingly made, described generally as "an inventory of the fixtures," &c., with the gross amount placed at the foot. In an action for goods sold and delivered, and on an account stated:—Held, that the defendant having taken possession of, and enjoyed the furniture and fixtures, and paid part of the sum determined by the brokers to be due for the same, he was liable on the account stated for the remainder, and could not afterwards object to the plaintiff's defective title to the house. Salmon v. Watson, 4 Moore, 73.

Non-assignment of Lease.]—By an agreement between the plaintiffs and defendant, the defendant was to accept of the assignment of the lease of a farm from the plaintiffs, and to take the fixtures and crops at a valuation; he was afterwards let into possession of the fixtures, and the crops were valued to him; but the lease was never assigned:—Held, that indebitatus assumpsit would not lie for the price of the fixtures and crops, and that the plaintiff's only remedy was by a special action on the agreement. Neale v. Viney, 1 Camp. 471.

Goods and Chattels of Tenant.]—Certain parts of a machine had been put up by the tenant during his term, and were capable of being removed without either injuring the other parts of the machine or the building, and had been usually valued between the outgoing and incoming tenant:—Held, that these were the goods and chattels of the outgoing tenant, for which he might maintain trover. Davis v. Jones, 2 B. & Ald. 165 ; 20 R. R. 396.

Owner estopped from denying Vendor's Title.]—Where the owner of the goodwill and fixtures of a public-house allowed A. to represent himself as such to the landlords, and the latter thereupon let the public-house to A., and A. sold the lease and fixtures to the defendant, who was informed by the landlords that A. was their tenant :—Held, that the owner had estopped himself from recovering the fixtures from the defendant, who had purchased bonâ fide. Gregg v. Wells, 2 P. & D. 296 ; 10 A. & E. 90 ; 8 L. J., Q. B. 193.

Wrongful Removal by Tenant.] — Where the owner of a mill demised it to a tenant for a term, and the latter clandestinely, and without permission of his landlord, dismantled the mill of the machinery, which, on its being removed, was seized by the sheriff under a fi. fa., and sold under his authority to a bonâ fide purchaser :—Held, that the landlord might maintain trover against such purchaser, though the tenant's term was unexpired. Farrant v. Thompson, 2 D. & R. 1 ; 5 B. & Ald. 826 ; 24 R. R. 571.

The tenant of a public-house held over after the expiration of his lease because the incoming tenant, who was to rebuild the premises, had failed to pay him a sum agreed for fixtures. His landlords brought ejectment, and he removed the fixtures. The landlords sued him for wrongful removal and conversion :—Held, that no inference of a subsisting tenancy could be drawn, and that the tenant was a trespasser at the time he removed the fixtures, but that the landlords were entitled only to the auction or breaking-up value of the fixtures. Penton v. Robart (2 East, 88), and Weeton v. Woodcock (7 Mee. & W. 14) commented on. Barff v. Probyn, 64 L. J., Q. B. 557 ; 73 L. T. 118.

1. EPPING FOREST.

Bill, Parties to.]—The plaintiffs filed a bill on behalf of themselves and all other the owners and occupiers of lands and tenements lying within a royal forest, against the lords of manors within the forest, praying for a declaration that they were entitled to a right of common of pasture upon all the waste grounds within the forest, and that the lords might be restrained from inclosing or permitting to remain inclosed any part of the waste lands of the forest subject to such commonable rights :—Held, that the bill was not demurrable on the ground of multifariousness, but that the relief prayed in respect of the inclosures already made could not be granted in a suit wherein the persons interested in the inclosures were not represented, or were made plaintiffs by misjoinder. Sewers Commissioners v. Glasse, 41 L. J., Ch. 409 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 456 ; 26 L. T. 647 ; 20 W. R. 515.

The names of all the persons interested in the inclosures not being known to the plaintiffs, the bill ought to have been on behalf of themselves, and all other the owners and occupiers of lands, &c., within the forest except the persons interested in the inclosures. Ib.

Jurisdiction of Chancery.]—A bill was filed in equity on behalf of all the owners and occupiers of land within a forest, other than the waste lands of the forest, except such of them as were defendants, or were alleged to be sufficiently represented by the defendants or some of them, to establish a right of common over all the wastes of the forest. The defendants to the bill were the lords of the several manors within the forest, who had, as the bill alleged, improperly inclosed portions of the wastes of the forest ; two persons who claimed to be owners and were occupiers of portions of the wastes so inclosed ; and the attorney-general :—Held, that the right claimed was one to which there was no objection in law ; and the suit was rightly constituted as to parties, and was the most proper method of enforcing the general right claimed; and that the Court of Chancery had jurisdiction in the matter. Ib.

Rights of Pasturage.]— In a suit by the owners and occupiers of lands in Epping Forest against the lords of the several manors within the forest, claiming to be entitled, in right of, and as appurtenant to their several lands and tenements to common of pasture for cattle, levant and couchant, on their respective tenements over all the waste lands of the forest, and praying an injunction to restrain the inclosure of any part of the waste:—Held, on the evidence in the case, that such right had been established; that the defendants had failed to show that the right of common was only common of vicinage; that the other grounds of defence wholly failed; and that any further inclosure of the waste must be restrained. Sewers Commissioners v. Glasse, 44 L. J., Ch. 129; L. R. 19 Eq. 134; 31 L. T. 495; 23 W. R. 102.

Orders of Commissioners.]—By the Epping Forest Amendment Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 95), the Epping Forest Commissioners were authorised to make orders prohibiting, until the expiration of the session of parliament next after they should have made their final report under the Epping Forest Act, 1871, any inclosures of any land within the forest, not inclosed before the passing of the Epping Forest Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 93); and for the prevention of any waste, injury or destruction of vert, herbage, trees, shrubs or other growing things in or upon any land within the forest, subject in their judgment to any forestal or common rights. The commissioners made an order that, until the expiration of the session of parliament next after they should have made their final report under the Epping Forest Act, 1871, "all persons whosoever be and they are hereby prohibited from committing any waste, injury or destruction of or to the vert, herbage, trees and shrubs, or other growing things in or upon the waste lands of Epping Forest within the Manor of Theydon Bois, in the county of Essex (including the inclosures of waste lands within the manor made within twenty years next preceding and since the 21st of August, 1871), and all which lands are distinguished on the plan hereto annexed by the colour green." The defendant, who was in occupation, as tenant, of a piece of land which was part of that coloured green on the plan, and had been inclosed before the passing of the act of 1871, but within the twenty years previously, committed waste by digging marl and clay, and was indicted for a misdemeanour in doing so contrary to the order of the commissioners:—Held, that the order was rightly made, and that a breach of it was an indictable offence punishable as a misdemeanour at common law. Reg. v. Walker, 44 L. J., M. C. 169; L. R. 10 Q. B. 355; 33 L. T. 167; 13 Cox, C. C. 94.

Effect of Declaration of Right.]—The statement of claim set out a decree in a suit by the same plaintiffs declaring that the plaintiffs and other owners and occupiers of lands in Epping Forest were entitled to a right of common upon all the waste lands of the forest, and giving liberty to the plaintiff to apply for injunctions in pursuance of such declaration of right; and stated that the defendant occupied waste lands as grantee from the lord of a manor within the forest; that the lands were inclosed, and the defendant thereby interfered with the enjoyment of the right of common; that the defendant was not a party to the suit, but his grantor was a defendant thereto, and two grantees of inclosed waste were also defendants thereto, and sufficiently represented the grantees of inclosed waste lands; but that the defendant disputed the validity of the decree and denied that he was bound thereby; and the plaintiffs claimed that the action might be taken as supplemental to the suit, and that they might have the same benefit of the decree and the same relief against the defendant as they would have been entitled to if he had been a defendant to the suit:—Held, that the defendant, as one of a class represented in the suit, was bound by the declaration of general right, although it was open to him to show some special ground of exemption, or that the decree was fraudulently obtained. Sewers Commissioners v. Gellatly, 45 L. J., Ch. 788; 3 Ch. D. 610; 24 W. R. 1059.

Leave to deliver Statement of Claim, when Necessary.]—The Epping Forest Amendment Act, 1872 (which was passed during the pendency of the suit in question), provided that, for a period which at the date of the action had not expired, no new legal proceeding, except such supplemental or amended bills as might be filed by the plaintiffs for the purpose of making the suit effectual, should be instituted, brought, or taken respecting the matters in question except with the leave of the Epping Forest Commissioners:—Held, that, assuming that s. 76 of the Judicature Act, 1873, enabled the plaintiffs to institute a supplemental action in a proper case under the above act, the present statement of claim was not supplemental, and ought not to have been delivered without the leave of the commissioners. Ib.

Held, also, that, the statement of claim not showing that the leave had been obtained, the objection was properly taken by demurrer. Ib.

Semble, that if upon an amended statement of claim it should appear that the leave of the commissioners had been obtained, a demurrer to the amended statement on the ground that the leave ought to have been obtained before action brought would not lie, for the delivery of the amended statement would be a "proceeding taken" with leave as required by the act. Ib.

The defendant having demurred to the statement of claim on two grounds; one of substance, which failed; and the other a ground which, in the event of leave being obtained to prosecute the action, would prove merely technical; and the demurrer being allowed with liberty to amend if the leave were obtained, in that event the costs of the demurrer were reserved. Ib.

Leave to Prosecute, when Necessary.]—A commoner of Epping Forest, who objected to the proceedings of the corporation of London as owners of the forest, removed and destroyed their notice boards and gave them warning that he should remove their fences and other obstructions. The corporation promptly commenced an action against him and obtained an injunction to restrain him from carrying out his threats. They also summoned him under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 52, for destroying their boards. At the hearing of the summons before two justices, the applicant objected to one of them on the ground that he was disqualified by interest in adjudicating on the summons. This justice had made an affidavit on behalf of the corporation in the action, in which he stated that he was a commoner, and that the corporation had by their proceedings rendered the forest better fitted for the use of the commoners and the public. The applicant also objected that no leave of the Epping Forest commissioners had been obtained under 35 & 36 Vict. c. 95, s. 3, for this prosecution. The justices overruled these objections and convicted the applicant:—Held, that the justice was not disqualified from adjudicating on this summons; that no leave of the commissioners was required for a criminal prosecution; and that the conviction was right. Reg. v. Alcock, Chilton, Ex parte, 37 L. T. 829.

I. WHAT AMOUNTS TO.

1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

Generally.]—Suppression of the truth, or misrepresentation of a material fact, will vitiate any contract or gift, the validity of which depends upon the truth and accuracy of the representation on which it was made. Prideaux v. Lonsdale, 4 Giff. 159 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 317 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 488; 8 L. T. 109 ; 1 N. R. 565 : 11 W. R. 531.

Suppressio veri or suggestio falsi is each of them a good reason to set aside any deed or conveyance. Broderick v. Broderick, 1 P. Wms. 240.

Misrepresentations may be either by a suppression of the truth or an assertion of what is false. Pulsford v. Richards, 17 Beav. 87 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 559 ; 17 Jur. 865 ; 1 W. R. 295.

Circumstances which constitute a case of fraudulent misrepresentation. Smith v. Kay, 7 H. L. Cas. 750 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 45.

Misrepresentation of a fact, misleading others to deal for value upon the face of it, binding on the person making it. Carr, Ex parte, 3 V. & B. 111 ; 13 R. R. 158.

Consideration of the effect in equity of misrepresentation made by parties entering into contracts. Clapham v. Shillito, 7 Beav. 146.

Distinction between actual and presumed fraud ; in the latter left to law. Bennet v. Musgrove, 2 Ves. 51.

General Principles, what.]—The principles by which, in the administration of justice, the limits of responsibility for the consequences of a false representation are to be ascertained, are these : first, every man must be held responsible for the consequences of a false representation made by him to another, upon which that other acts, and, so acting, is injured or damnified : secondly, every man must be held responsible for the consequences of a false representation made by him to another, upon which a third person acts, and, so acting, is injured or damnified ; provided it appear that such false representation was made with the direct intent that it should be acted on by such third person in the manner that occasions the injury or loss ; and thirdly, but to bring it within the second principle, the injury must be the immediate and not the remote consequence of the representation thus made. Barry v. Croskey, 2 J. & H. 21.

—— Application of Principles to Contracts with Companies.]—The same rules as to false or deceptive representations which are applicable to contracts between individuals are also applicable to contracts between an individual and a company. No misstatement or concealment of any material facts or circumstances ought to be permitted in a prospectus issued to invite persons to become shareholders in a projected company. Venezuela Central Ry. v. Kisch, 36 L. J., Ch. 849 ; L. R. 2 H. L. 99 ; 16 L. T. 500 ; 15 W. R. 821.

The public are, in such a case, entitled to have the same opportunity of judging of everything material to a knowledge of the true character of the undertaking as the promoters themselves possess. Ib.

——Fair Arrangement between Parties fraudulently concocted by Third.]—If an arrangement between two parties is on general principles fair as between them, it is not invalid merely because it may have been concocted by a third party fraudulently to benefit himself ; and so far as regards the third party, to judge of his motives, and construe his acts, the whole may be looked on as one transaction. As regards the other two, however, who, though affected by one part of the transaction, may be total strangers to the other part, it is not necessary to consider every part of the transaction affected by objections which only apply to portions of it. Bellamy v. Sabine, 2 Ph. 425; 17 L. J., Ch. 105.

Fraud, What is.]—Fraud is what is done in secret, and where there is a concealment from the party in a matter which concerns him in interest. Tyrrell v. Hope, 2 Atk. 560.

Fraud, in a legal sense, means an act unwarranted by law, to the prejudice of a third person. Harman v. Fisher, Lofft, 472; Cowp. 117.

"Legal Fraud."] — The expression "legal fraud" considered and explained. Peek v. Derry, 57 L. J., Ch. 347; 37 Ch. D. 541; 59 L. T. 78; 36 W. R. 899—C. A.

There is no such thing as "legal" fraud in the absence of moral fraud. Jolliffe v. Baker, 52 L. J., Q. B. 609; 11 Q. B. D. 255; 48 L. T. 966; 32 W. R. 59; 47 J. P. 678.

Covin.]—Party in possession under the title of A., taking a conveyance, though for valuable consideration, from one who claims a title adverse to that of A., is guilty of covin, which would avoid the transaction at law. Underwood v. Courtown (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 64.

Fraud in Law.]—The making of a representation which a party knows to be untrue, and which is intended, or is calculated, from the mode in which it is made, to induce another to act on the face of it, so that he may incur damage, is a fraud in law. Polhill v. Walter, 3 B. & Ad. 114. See Wilson v. Butler, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 748; 6 Scott, 540; 8 L. J., C. P. 143.

Therefore, where a bill was presented for acceptance at the office of the drawee when he was absent: and A., who lived in the same house with the drawee, being assured by one of the payees that the bill was perfectly regular, was induced to write on the bill an acceptance, as by the procuration of the drawee, believing that the acceptance would be sanctioned, and the bill paid by the latter. The bill was dishonoured when due, and the indorsee brought an action against the drawee, and on proof of the above facts was nonsuited. The indorsee then sued A. for falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully representing that he was authorised to accept by procuration; and on the trial the jury negatived all fraud in fact:—Held, notwithstanding, that A. was liable, because he must be considered as having intended to make such representation to all who received the bill in the course of its circulation. Ib.

In an action for falsely and fraudulently representing a ship to be sound, the jury was directed to find for the plaintiff, if the representation was false to the defendant's knowledge, and the plaintiff sustained damage in consequence. The jury returned a verdict, "We find for the plaintiff, but acquit the defendant of any fraudulent intention." The judge thereupon directed a verdict to be entered for the plaintiff:—Held, no misdirection. Milne v. Marwood, 15 C. B. 778; 3 C. L. R. 228; 24 L. J., C. P. 36.

A false statement knowingly made, for the purpose of enabling another to enter into a contract, is a fraud in law. Stevens v. Lee or Legh, 2 C. L. R. 251; 2 W. R. 16.

Any false statement knowingly made with a view to induce another to alter his condition, and thereby altering it, is a fraud in law. Murray v. Mann, 2 Ex. 538; 17 L. J., Ex. 256; 12 Jur. 634.

What are Representations.]—It seems to me that every representation, false when made or falsified by the event, (A.) in order to produce any legal consequences, must operate in one of three ways:—1. It may be a term in the contract (e.g. a warranty), in which case its falsity will, according to circumstances, either render the contract voidable, or render the person making the representation liable either to damages or to a decree that he or his representatives shall give effect to the representation. 2. It may operate as an estoppel, preventing the person making the representation from denying its truth, as against persons whose conduct has been influenced by it. (Pickard v. Sears and other well-known cases are instances of this.) 3. It may amount to a criminal offence (e.g. false pretences). (B.) Besides these there is a class of false representations which have no legal effect. These are cases in which a person excites expectations which he does not fulfil, as, for instance, where a person leads another to believe that he intends to make him his heir and then leaves his property away from him. Though such conduct may inflict greater loss on the sufferer than almost any breach of contract, and may involve greater moral guilt than many common frauds, it involves no legal consequences, unless the person making the representation not only excites an expectation that it will be fulfilled, but legally binds himself to fulfil it, in which case he must, as it seems to me, contract to fulfil it—Per Stephen, J. Alderson v. Maddison, 49 L. J., Ex. 801; 5 Ex. D. 293; 43 L. T. 349; 29 W. R. 105.

A representation is a statement, or an assertion, made by one party to the other, before or at the time of a contract, of some matter or circumstance relating to it. Behn v. Burness, 3 B. & S. 751; 32 L. J., Q. B. 204; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 620; 8 L. T. 207; 11 W. R. 496—Ex. Ch.

Although a representation is sometimes contained in the written instrument, it is not an integral part of the contract; and, consequently, the contract is not broken though the representation proves to be untrue; nor (with the exception of the case of policies of insurance, at all events marine policies, which stand on a peculiar anomalous footing) is such untruth any cause of action, nor has it any efficacy whatever, unless the representation was made fraudulently, either by reason of its being made with a knowledge of its untruth, or by reason of its being made dishonestly, with a reckless ignorance whether it was true or untrue. Ib.

Whether a descriptive statement in a written instrument is a mere representation or a substantive part of the contract is a question of construction which the court, and not the jury, must determine. Ib.

When that question is raised by pleading, the court may, in aid of the construction, take into consideration the surrounding circumstances; such as the circumstances under which, and the purposes for which, a charterparty was entered into; aliter, if the question is raised by demurrer or on an application for judgment non obstante veredicto. Ib.

If the former, the question arises whether that part of the contract is a condition precedent or only an independent agreement, a breach of which will not justify a repudiation of the contract, but will only be a cause of action for a compensation in damages. Ib.

With respect to statements in a contract descriptive of the subject-matter of it, or of some material incident thereof, the true doctrine is that, generally speaking, if the descriptive statement was intended to be a substantive part of the contract, it is to be regarded as a warranty, that is to say, a condition on the failure or non-performance of which the other party may, if he is so minded, repudiate the contract in toto, and so be relieved from performing his part of it, provided it has not been partially executed in his favour. If, indeed, he has received the whole or any substantial part of the consideration for the promise on his part, the warranty loses the character of a condition, or, to speak perhaps more properly, ceases to be available as a condition, and becomes a warranty in the narrower sense of the word; viz., a stipulation by way of agreement, for the breach of which a compensation must be sought in damages. Ib.

Although a mere false statement of the consideration does not in itself necessarily vitiate a deed, yet there may be cases where a false statement of itself may destroy the whole transaction. Bowen v. Kirwan, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 47.

—— On Assignment of Term of a House.]—In an action for the fraudulent misrepresentation of the value of a term of years of a house, on the assignment of it from the defendant to the plaintiff, the jury found a special verdict that the defendant directed her attorney to instruct the plaintiff, who was an auctioneer, to prepare particulars for the sale of the premises by auction. The attorney represented the premises to be let at a rent of 100*l.* per annum. They were let at that rent, but the defendant paid the rates and taxes, and not the tenant, but that was not known by the attorney. On this instruction the plaintiff, with the assent of the attorney, described the premises as let at 100*l.* per annum, clear of taxes and rates. The plaintiff purchased the premises himself, and for a larger sum than he would have given, if he had known that the landlord paid the rates and taxes:—Held, that upon this finding it did not appear that the defendant had been guilty of any actual fraudulent representation or concealment or had authorised any; that, if her agent had been guilty of any fraudulent representation and concealment, she would herself have been liable, but that no such misfeasance appeared from the verdict, and therefore that the defendant was entitled to judgment. Wilson v. Fuller, 3 Q. B. 68, 1009; 3 G. & D. 570—Ex. Ch.

—— Sale of Goods.]—The defendant sent for sale to a public market pigs which he knew to be infected with a contagious disease; they were exposed for sale subject to a condition that no warranty would be given and no compensation would be made in respect of any fault. No verbal representation was made by or on behalf of the defendant as to the condition of the pigs. The plaintiff having bought the pigs, put them with other pigs, which became infected; some of the pigs bought from the defendant, and also some of those with which they were put, died of the contagious disease. The plaintiff having sued to recover damages for the loss which he had sustained:—Held, that, although the defendant might have been guilty of an offence against the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1869, he was not liable to the plaintiff, for that his conduct in exposing the pigs for sale in the market did not amount to a representation that they were free from disease. Ward v. Hobbs, 47 L. J., Q. B. 90; 3 Q. B. D. 150; 37 L. T. 654; 26 W. R. 151—C. A. Affirmed, 48 L. J., Q. B. 281; 4 App. Cas. 13; 40 L. T. 73; 27 W. R. 114—H. L. (E.) —— Fact, not Opinion.]—Misrepresentation entitling to relief must be a misrepresentation of fact, and not merely a conclusion of opinion. New Brunswick and Canada Ry. and Land Co. v. Conybeare, 9 H. L. Cas. 711; 31 L. J., Ch. 297; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 575; 6 L. T. 109; 10 W. R. 305.

—— Simplex Commendatio.]—The plaintiffs advertised for sale by auction an hotel, stated in the particulars to be held by a "most desirable tenant." The defendants sent their secretary down to inspect the property and report thereon. The secretary reported very unfavourably, stating that the tenant could scarcely pay the rent (400*l.*), rates and taxes. The defendants, relying on the statements in the particulars, authorised the secretary to attend the sale and to bid up to 5,000*l.* The property was bought in at the sale, and the secretary purchased it by private contract for 4,700*l.* It appeared subsequently that the quarter's rent previously to the sale had not been paid; the previous quarter had been paid by instalments; and six weeks after the sale the tenant filed his petition. It appeared, however, that the hotel business was as good during the last year as previously, and that the month of the tenant's failure was the best he had had. The plaintiffs brought an action for specific performance, relying (in answer to the defence and counterclaim for rescission on the ground of misrepresentation) on the fact that the defendants had made their own inquiries:—Held, that the statement that the property was held by a "most desirable tenant" was not a mere expression of opinion, but contained an implied assertion that the vendors knew of no facts leading to the conclusion that he was not; that the circumstances relating to the payment of rent showed that he was not, and that there was a misrepresentation. Smith v. Land and House Property Corporation, 28 Ch. D. 7; 51 L. T. 718; 49 J. P. 182—C. A.

Estoppel.]—If a man misrepresents a fact, to that fact he is bound, if any other person, misled by such misrepresentation, acts upon it, and thereby suffers damage. Beattie v. Ebury (Lord), L. R. 7 H. L. 102; 30 L. T. 581; 22 W. R. 897.

I have always understood it to have been decided that the doctrine of estoppel by representation is applicable only to representations as to some state of facts alleged to be at the time actually in existence, and not to promises de futuro, which, if binding at all, must be binding as contracts—Per Selborne, L. C. Maddison v. Alderson, 52 L. J., Q. B. 737; 8 App. Cas. 473; 49 L. T. 303; 31 W. R. 820; 47 J. P. 821.

Where one wilfully induces another to believe in the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at that time. Wilful representation means, if not that the party represents that to be true which he knows to be untrue, at least that he means his representation to be acted upon, and it is acted upon accordingly. Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Ex. 633.

The defendant, an auctioneer, being owner of a sum of 500*l.* stock standing in the names of directors, which had been made an indemnity to provide against costs in a pending chancery suit, put the fund up for sale, under a particular, which stated the above fact, and, further, that there was a considerable sum applicable for payment of costs, and that such costs would be paid thereout; also, that the fund of 500*l.* might be looked upon as a secure and sound investment. The plaintiff purchased the fund for 230*l.*, and found afterwards that it was all required to answer the indemnity. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant knew at the time that the fund was liable to be wholly swallowed up in costs. The court being of opinion that the defendant had knowledge of this fact:—Held, that he could not be heard to say it was not present to his mind when he put the property up for sale, and decreed rescission of the contract. As against a co-defendant, a solicitor, who had taken no part in the misrepresentation, the action was dismissed. Mathias v. Yetts, 46 L. T. 497—C. A.

Negligence.]—Negligence may be evidence of, but it is not the same thing as, mala fides. Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare, 43; 11 L. J., Ch. 83; 6 Jur. 8. Affirmed, 1 Ph. 245; 12 L. J., Ch. 381; 7 Jur. 431.

Married Woman bound by Fraud.]—A feme covert is as much bound by fraud in a court of equity as if she were a feme sole. Jones v. Kearney, 1 Dr. & War. 134; 1 Con. & L. 34; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 74.

Fraud between Vendor and Purchaser.]—There being no fiduciary relation between a vendor and a purchaser, the purchaser is not bound to disclose any fact exclusively within his knowledge which might be expected to influence the price of the subject to be sold. Simple reticence does not amount to legal fraud, but a word or a gesture intended to induce the vendor to believe in the existence of a non-existing fact, which might influence the price of the subject to be sold, would be a sufficient ground for a court of equity to refuse a decree of specific performance, and so, à fortiori, would any contrivance on the part of the purchaser, better informed than the vendor as to value, to hurry the vendor into an agreement without giving him an opportunity of being fully informed on that subject, or taking advice as to the terms of the bargain. Walters v. Morgan, 3 De G. F. & J. 718; 4 L. T. 758.

Lease—Evidence.]—A lease impeached for alleged fraud and undervalue:—Held, under the circumstances, valid. Donegal (Marquis) v. Greg, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 12.

Concealment and misrepresentation relied on in such a case must be proved fraudulent, and the contract shown to be based upon it, and the very fraud alleged in the bill proved. Ib.

Materiality—Dans locum contractui.]—Suggestio falsi or suppressio veri to operate as a ground for the postponement of an equity must occur in the transaction which dat locum contractui. Rolt v. White, 3 De G. J. & S. 360.

Representations inducing a person to enter into a particular contract, though not made at the moment the contract is actually entered into, constitute, if fraudulently made, dolus dans locum contractui. Smith v. Kay, 7 H. L. Cas. 750; 30 L. J., Ch. 45.

To be the ground for avoiding the contract, a misrepresentation must be one dans locum contractui, or such that it is reasonable to infer, that in its absence the party deceived would not have entered into the contract. Pulsford v. Richards, 17 Beav. 87; 22 L. J., Ch. 559; 17 Jur. 865; 1 W. R. 295.

—— Prospectus of Company.]—Persons who take shares on the formation of a company, and the directors who form it, are contracting parties, and the prospectus issued is a representation quæ dat locum contractui. Ib.

Upon the formation of a company the directors and the persons who take shares are contracting parties, and the prospectus and advertisements issued by the directors are the representations quæ dant locum contractui. If these be false, and cannot be made good by the persons making them, the contract may be avoided. It has, however, to be considered whether it is reasonable to believe that if the real truth had been stated, the shares would not have been taken. Jennings v. Broughton, 17 Beav. 234; 22 L. J., Ch. 585: 17 Jur. 905; 1 W. R. 441.

2. MISREPRESENTATION OF MATTERS OF LAW.

Generally.]—The doctrine, that a person, who by a false representation induces another to do an act which results in a loss, is liable to make good his representation, does not apply where the misrepresentation is one of law only. Beattie v. Ebury (Lord), 41 L. J., Ch. 804; L. R. 7 Ch. 777; 27 L. T. 398; 20 W. R. 994.

Rescission of Contract.]—When an alleged misrepresentation is not of fact, but upon a doubtful question of law, it can scarcely be a sufficient ground for rescinding a contract. Conybeare v. New Brunswick and Canada Ry. and Land Co., 6 Jur. (N.S.) 164.

Misrepresentation by Third Persons.]—A plaintiff alleged that, being desirous of advancing money on debentures, he applied to a secretary of a railway company, who wrote, offering him a bond of the company for 1,500*l.*, and stating that the company was not yet in a position to issue permanent debentures, but that they expected to be able to do so in four or five months' time. With the letter was sent a prospectus, from which it appeared that the company was incorporated by act of parliament, and that three persons named were directors. The plaintiff advanced the money, and received in return a Lloyd's bond, signed by the secretary, whereby the company purported to acknowledge the debt, and to covenant to pay the same at 6*l.* per cent. The company having ceased to pay interest, and being in difficulties, the plaintiff filed a bill against two of the three directors, and the representatives of the third, praying that they might be decreed to pay the amount advanced by the plaintiff with interest :—Held, that the principle of relief on the ground of misrepresentation by third persons did not extend to an incorrect statement of a matter of law ; and a demurrer by the representatives of the third director was allowed. Rashdall v. Ford, 35 L. J., Ch. 769 ; L. R. 2 Eq. 750 ; 14 L. T. 790 ; 14 W. R. 950.

3. Matters of Fact.

a. Knowledge and Intention of Defendant.

Mistake.]—A person making a false representation through mistake, but where he might have had notice of the truth, it shall bind him. Pearson v. Morgan, 2 Bro. C. C. 388.

—— Unintentional Misrepresentation.] — If one party be acting under a misrepresentation, and the other is accessory to it, although unintentionally, the transaction cannot stand. Hartopp v. Hartopp, 21 Beav. 259 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 471 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 794.

Mere Untruth.]—The mere assertion of that which is not true shall not vitiate dealings. The party to be visited by fraud must have made the false assertion wilfully and knowingly. Pike v. Vigers, 2 Dr. & Wal. 252. And see S. C., nom. Vigers v. Pike, 8 Cl. & F. 562.

When there was much evidence of fraud, misrepresentation, and of deficient value :—Held, that such evidence is not to be regarded, unless it goes also to fix the vendor with a knowledge or belief of such insufficient value, in which case it is evidence of fraud. Ib.

Defendant having Means of Knowledge.]—A representation false in fact may be fraudulent so as to sustain an action, if made by one having the means of knowledge of its falsehood, provided the jury is satisfied that, having regard to the particular means of knowledge and the nature of the representation, a man paying that attention which any man owes his neighbour in making a representation ought to have known by the use of these means the fact of its falsehood—Per Palles, C. B. Doyle v. Hort, 4 L. R. Ir. 661.

Circumstances Altered—Defendant's Duty to Disclose.]—If a person make a representation calculated to induce another to assume a particular liability, and the circumstances are afterwards, before liability assumed, so altered to the knowledge of the person making the representation that the alteration might affect the course of conduct of the person to whom the representation was made, it is the imperative duty of the person who made the representation to communicate to the person to whom he made it the alteration of those circumstances ; and a court of equity will not hold the person to whom the representation has been made to be bound by any contract entered into on the faith thereof, unless such a communication has been made. Traill v. Baring, 33 L. J., Ch. 521 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 377 ; 3 N. R. 681 ; 10 L. T. 215 ; 12 W. R. 678—L.JJ.

Enforcing Contract obtained by Misrepresentation.]—If A., in contracting with B., falsely represents himself to be the agent of C., and thereby obtains better terms, the court will, notwithstanding, enforce the contract, unless A. knew that such would be the effect of the misrepresentation. Fellowes v. Gwydyr (Lord), 1 Sim. 63 ; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 43. Affirmed, 1 Russ. & M. 83.

Marriage Settlement, based on unintentional Misrepresentation of Wife's Brother.]—On a treaty of marriage, the husband applied to the wife's brother to know her fortune, and how it was secured. The brother represented it fairly, as he then conceived it, and as being charged on a real estate under the father's will, and added that the husband need not examine the will, nor the father's family deeds, for the fact was as he represented. A recital to the same fact was also made in the settlement, to which the brother was a party. It afterwards turned out that the father had no power to charge the estate by his will, but this fact was unknown to all the family at the time of the marriage :—Held, that the representation of the brother would not bind him to make it good. Merewether v. Shaw, 2 Cox, 124.

Fraud as between Vendor and Purchaser—Reticence.]—When the owner of mines adduces to the intended purchaser thereof evidences of their value :—Held, that the fact of his not having brought forward evidence of what he was aware, showing the mines to be of less value than he represented them, did not constitute such fraud or misrepresentation as to vitiate the contract. Pike v. Vigers, 2 Dr. & Wal. 260, 261.

—— Sale of Vendor's own Shares, represented to be a Third Person's.]—A., in consequence of an advertisement in a newspaper for the sale of shares in mines, which were offered at lower prices than the current list of sales of the same shares in the same publication, purchased of B., a shareholder, the shares so advertised, which he (A.) believed from the advertisement to be the property of a third person. They turned out to be the property of B., the broker :—Held, that such a sale was voidable on the ground of misrepresentation. Maturin v. Tredinnick, 9 L. T. 82.

—— Bonâ fide Misrepresentation—Selling Copyhold as Freehold.]—A vendor sold copyhold as freehold :—Held, that, assuming the vendor made the representation bonâ fide, he had committed a legal fraud, and the sale was set aside. Hart v. Swaine, 7 Ch. D. 42.

—— Action for Compensation after Completion.]—A vendor of real property, during the negotiations for the sale, made a representation to the purchaser, bonâ fide, and believing it to be true, that the pieces of land sold contained three acres, whereas in truth they contained a less quantity. After completion of the contract and execution of the conveyance, the purchaser sought to recover compensation from the vendor for the false representation :—Held, that, after completion, such compensation could not be recovered unless there had been fraud or the breach of some contract or warranty contained in the conveyance, and therefore the action would not lie. Jolliffe v. Baker, 52 L. J., Q. B. 609 ; 11 Q. B. D. 255 ; 48 L. T. 966 ; 32 W. R. 59 ; 47 J. P. 678.

Valuer—Action by Mortgagee for Misrepresentation.]—An intending mortgagor, at the request of the solicitors of an intending mortgagee, applied to a firm of valuers for a valuation of the property proposed to be mortgaged. A valuation at the sum of 3,000*l.* was sent in by the valuers direct to the mortgagee's solicitors, and the mortgage was subsequently carried out. Default having been made in payment by the mortgagor, and a loss having resulted to the mortgagee, he commenced an action against the valuers for damages for the loss sustained through their negligence, misrepresentation, and breach of duty. The court being satisfied on the evidence that the defendants knew at the time the valuation was made that it was for the purpose of an advance, and that the valuation as made was in fact no valuation at all :—Held, that, under the circumstances, the defendants were liable on two grounds : (1), that they (independently of contract) owed a duty to the plaintiff which they had failed to discharge ; (2), that they had made reckless statements on which the plaintiff had acted. George v. Skivington (L. R. 5 Ex. 1), and Heaven v. Pender (11 Q. B. D. 503), followed ; Peek v. Derry (37 Ch. D. 541) discussed. Cann v. Willson, 57 L. J., Ch. 1034 ; 39 Ch. D. 39 ; 37 W. R. 23.

Matter equally open to both Parties.]—The inference of fraud (when there is no direct evidence thereof) will be rebutted by the fact of the subject matter of the alleged misrepresentations being equally open to the examination of both parties. Pike v. Vigers, 2 Dr. & Wal. 260, 261.

Means of Knowledge open to both Parties.]—An agreement will not be avoided by reason that representations, made by one party to the other, upon the subject of the agreement, are not correct, if it be manifest that the party making the representation is speaking, not from personal knowledge, but with reference to accounts which were equally open to both parties, and if the representations be justified by those accounts. Harris v. Kemble, 1 Sim. 111 ; 5 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 131. Reversed, 2 Dow & Cl. 463 ; 5 Bligh (N.S.) 730 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 79.

Deed Vitiated by Reckless Statement.]—Semble, per Maule, J., that, if a person, having no knowledge on the subject, represents a fact to be true which is not so, in order to induce another to enter into a deed for the advantage of the former, and to the prejudice of the latter, such misrepresentation amounts to fraud, so as to vitiate the deed. Evans v. Edmonds, 13 C. B. 777 ; 1 C. L. R. 653 ; 22 L. J., C. P. 211 ; 17 Jur. 883 ; 1 W. R. 412.

Setting Aside Contract.]—It is not now necessary, in order to set aside a contract, to prove that the person who obtained it by material false representation knew at the time the representation was made that it was false, or even made it recklessly and without care.—Judgment of Lord Cairns, L.J., in Reese River Silver Mining Co., In re (L. R. 2 Ch. 604), approved. Redgrave v. Hurd, 51 L. J., Ch. 113 ; 20 Ch. D. 1 ; 45 L. T. 485 ; 30 W. R. 251—C. A.

Practice—Pleading.]—A paragraph in a statement of claim in substance stated that A., and B. his agent, by fraudulently representing that A. had power to make a lease to the plaintiff of certain premises to be used as a butcher's shop, that careful inquiry had been made as to A.'s rights in relation to the premises, and that their representation as to his power to make the lease was the result of such inquiry, induced the plaintiff to take a lease of the premises from A., and to expend money thereon ; and it alleged that these representations were false, as A. and B. respectively then had the means of knowing, and ought to have known. In an action for damages against B. and the executors of A. :—Held, on demurrer, that the paragraph disclosed a good cause of action. Doyle v. Hort, 4 L. R., Ir. 661.

A party agreed with another as follows :—"Provided you use your influence, and secure me the situation of superintendent, I agree to pay you the amount of my first quarter's salary." To an action on this agreement the defendant pleaded, that he was induced to make the agreement by fraud and covin on the part of the plaintiff, and also that the plaintiff did not use his influence and secure him the situation :—Held, that to constitute fraud and covin, the representations made by the plaintiff must be false to his knowledge at the time he made them ; and it is not enough to show that he stated warmly the power he possessed, but the jury must be quite satisfied, before they affix on a party the stigma of fraud, that he stated what was untrue to his knowledge. Neelly v. Lock, 8 Car. & P. 527.

b. Knowledge of, and Inquiry by, Plaintiff.

Generally—Onus of Proof.]—Equity will not grant relief to a plaintiff in a case where he is cognisant of the fact that the representations made were inaccurate. The onus of proving the representations to be false lies on the plaintiff. Jennings v. Broughton, 17 Beav. 234 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 585 ; 17 Jur. 905 ; 1 W. R. 441. S. C., on appeal, 23 L. J., Ch. 999.

—— Setting Aside.]—Agreements, and solemn conveyances in consequence of them, are not to be set aside on slight grounds, where the contracting parties have not been deceived or misled by any concealment or misrepresentation on the part of the persons with whom they contracted. Butler v. Butler, 1 Bro. P. C. 383.

A deed executed by a married woman, conveying away, without consideration, an annuity to which she was entitled, she having been induced to execute it by misrepresentation, never having read it, and being misformed as to the contents of it, which were prejudicial to her :—Held, not binding upon her. Blake v. Hyland, 2 Dr. & Wal. 397.

—— Relief.]—If a person will enter into a hard bargain with his eyes open, equity will not relieve him, unless he can show fraud in the party contracting with him, or undue means to draw him into the agreement. Willis v. Jernegan, 2 Atk. 251.

What Sufficient Knowledge.]—To obtain the execution of a deed by saying it is a mere form, where the person executing knows it has something to do with the property affected, cannot be such misrepresentation as to avoid the deed. Hunter v. Walters, 41 L. J., Ch. 175 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 75 ; 25 L. T. 765 ; 20 W. R. 218.

Means of Knowledge.]—Although the means of ascertaining the truth of representations may be within the power of the plaintiff, yet he is not, in order to entitle him to rescind his contract, bound to show that he has resorted to all the means of information within his power. Rawlins v. Wickham, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 990. Affirmed, 3 De G. & J. 304; 28 L. J., Ch. 188; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 278; 7 W. R. 145.

The defendant, having produced an impression on the mind of the plaintiff, contrary to the true facts, as to the plaintiff's interests in an estate, obtained a conveyance of a moiety of the estate from the plaintiff. The court set aside the conveyance, and:—Held, that it was not an objection to this relief that the plaintiff had throughout the means, equally with the defendant, of knowing what his rights were and of obtaining competent advice respecting them. Reynell v. Sprye, Sprye v. Reynell, 8 Hare, 222. Affirmed, 21 L. J., Ch. 633.

—— No Answer to Claim.]—Where there has been a fraudulent misrepresentation, or a wilful concealment, of facts, by which a person has been induced to enter into a contract, it is no answer to his claim to be relieved from it that he might have known the truth by proper inquiry. Venezuela Co. v. Kisch, 36 L. J., Ch. 849; L. R. 2 H. L. 99; 16 L. T. 500; 15 W. R. 821.

—— As between Vendor and Purchaser.]—If a purchaser chooses to judge for himself, and does not avail himself of the knowledge or means of knowledge, open to him or his agents, he cannot be heard to say he was deceived by the vendor's representations, the rule being, caveat emptor, and the knowledge of his agents being as binding on him as his own knowledge. Attwood v. Small, 6 Cl. & F. 232.

Careless Inquiry, no Answer to Claim.]—It is no defence to an action for rescission of a contract on the ground of fraud, that the plaintiff inquired to a certain extent whether the representation made to him was true, but did it so carelessly and inefficiently as not to observe the fraud. Redgrave v. Hurd, 51 L. J., Ch. 113; 20 Ch. D. 1; 45 L. T. 485; 30 W. R. 251—C. A.

Plaintiff's Reliance on Representations.]—If a defendant has made a material representation to induce a person to enter into a contract, and the plaintiff has entered into the contract, it is not sufficient, in order to uphold the contract against the plaintiff in an action for rescission, that he does not prove that he entered into it relying on the representation, but the defendant must show that the plaintiff abandoned such reliance, either by having knowledge contrary to the representation, or by his explicit statement that he did not rely on such representation. In the absence of such evidence the inference remains that the plaintiff did rely on the representation. Attwood v. Small (6 Cl. & F. 232) explained. Ib.

In an action for deceit, if it is proved that the plaintiff did not rely upon the false statement complained of, he cannot maintain the action. Smith v. Chadwick, 51 L. J., Ch. 597; 20 Ch. D. 27; 46 L. T. 702; 30 W. R. 661—C. A.

If a statement, although untrue to the knowledge of the defendants, is so trivial that it could not in the opinion of the court have influenced the conduct of the plaintiff, it will not support an action for deceit. Ib.

If a statement, by which the plaintiff says he has been deceived, is ambiguous, the plaintiff is bound to state the meaning which he attached to it, and cannot leave the court to put a meaning upon it. Ib.

Cases have frequently occurred in which, upon entering into contracts, misrepresentations made by one party have not been in any degree relied on by the other party. If the party, to whom the representations were made, himself resorted to the means of verification before he entered into the contract, it may appear that he relied upon the result of his own investigation and inquiry, and not upon the representations made to him by the other party; or if the means of investigation and verification be at hand, and the attention of the party receiving the representations be drawn to them, the circumstances of the case may be such as to make it incumbent on a court of justice to impute to him a knowledge of the result which, upon due inquiry, he ought to have obtained, and thus the notion of reliance on the representations made to him may be excluded. Clapham v. Shillito, 7 Beav. 146.

—— When to be Presumed.]—Again, when the court is endeavouring to ascertain what reliance was placed on the representations, it must consider them with reference to the subject matter and the relative knowledge of the parties. If the subject is capable of being accurately known, and one party is, or is supposed to be, possessed of accurate knowledge and the other is entirely ignorant, and a contract entered into, after representation made by the party who knows or is supposed to know, without any means of verification being resorted to by the other, it may well enough be presumed that the ignorant man relied on the statements made by him who was supposed to be better informed; but if the subject in its nature is uncertain, if all that is known about it is matter of inference from something else, and if the parties making it and receiving representations on the subject, have equal knowledge and means of acquiring knowledge, and equal skill, it is not easy to presume that representations made by one would have much or any influence on the other. Ib.

Where Party is ignorant of Fraud but retains Benefit.]—Where a party retains any benefit from a contract induced by fraud, ignorance of the fraud at the time such benefit accrued will not entitle him to repudiate the contract. Savage v. Canning, Ir. R. 1 C. L. 434; 16 W. R. 133.

4. Concealment.

a. Of Facts.

Generally—Effect.]—Concealment of a material fact sufficient to avoid a release obtained by the person whose duty it was to make the disclosure. Bowles v. Stewart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 209.

Where a lessee wilfully conceals the death of any of the cestuis que vient, and acts under such concealment for his own advantage, the lessor is not obliged to renew, but may take advantage of the forfeiture, and enter upon and hold the estate. Pendred v. Griffith, 1 Bro. P. C. 314.

Where partner, withdrawing money from partnership, by entries in books disguises transaction, or wholly omits or conceals it, it is a fraud, and will entitle the others to sue his separate estate; otherwise if done openly. Smith, Ex parte, 6 Madd. 2; 1 Glyn & J. 74; 22 R. R. 224.

In treaties for an agreement, a wilful and industrious concealment of a material fact, by one of the parties, in order to keep the other in ignorance, and to profit by that ignorance, is a gross fraud, and will, in equity, set aside the contract. Meade v. Webb, 1 Bro. P. C. 308.

What is Improper Concealment.]—By the prior of two wills, the eldest son of an heir-at-law of a testator took an estate tail in remainder. By a subsequent will this remainder was taken from him, and limited to another party. The subsequent will was admitted to probate, but the heir contested it. Ultimately a compromise was effected. It turned out that the party contesting the validity of the subsequent will was not heir, but eldest son of the heir, and that fact was concealed from the devisee. The eldest son had also entered into an agreement with the trustee of the devisee not to dispute the subsequent will, and the existence of that agreement was not mentioned to the devisee by the son of the heir, although the devisee admitted that he suspected its existence:—Held, that this was not such a case of concealment as entitled the devisee to have the compromise set aside. Bainbridge v. Moss, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 58. Affirmed, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 62, n.

A bill in equity for setting aside the agreement alleged that one of the witnesses about to be called by the son of the heir-at-law, at a new trial, had made statements on cross-examination at the first trial which the son of the heir knew to be false, and that this was concealed from him when he compromised the whole matter, just previous to the new trial:—Held, that this was not a matter which the heir's son was bound to disclose. Ib.

Where one party to a compromise suspected the existence of a fact which he considers of importance to his success, and asks his adversary, who refuses all information, but does not ask other parties, whom he has reason to believe are able and willing to give him the information, his ignorance of that fact at the time of a compromise is to be treated as wilful ignorance, and not as an improper concealment by the adversary. Ib.

Duty to Disclose Circumstances.]—Where the grantee of an annuity is induced by false representations, or improper concealment of facts, on the part of the grantor, or his agent, to become the purchaser of an annuity, although he may have relief at law, a court of equity has concurrent jurisdiction. The grantor and his agent in such transactions are not bound to disclose all the circumstances of the grantor's situation; they are, however, bound to give honest answers to questions put to them. Adamson v. Evitt, 2 Russ. & M. 66; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 1.

Imperfect Information.]—Imperfect information equivalent to concealment. Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 73; 19 R. R. 155.

Concealing Debt.]—Creditor by suppressing his debt, inducing another person to enter into a contract, not permitted to set up the debt, even against the person in whose favour and at whose instance he made the suppression. Dalbiac v. Dalbiac, 16 Ves. 125.

A person dealing with another for a composition shall not be bound by a concealment, or representation of the amount of his debt, if the plan under which the concealment or representation takes place is not carried into effect. Oakley, Ex parte, 1 Rose, 138.

Concealment of Bankruptcy Proceedings.]—A trader, after being served with the petition on which he was afterwards adjudicated bankrupt, purchased goods at an auction, and removed them without payment, without disclosing the fact of the bankruptcy proceedings:—Held, that this omission did not of itself amount to a misrepresentation such as to avoid the contract, and entitle the vendor to a return of the goods. Whittaker, Ex parte, Shackleton, In re, 44 L. J., Bk. 91; L. R. 10 Ch. 446; 32 L. T. 443; 23 W. R. 555.

Vendor and Purchaser.]—Specific performance not decreed where there is a concealment on the part of the vendor. Shirley v. Stratton, 1 Bro. C. C. 440.

A contract for the purchase of an estate, rescinded at the suit of the purchaser, on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentation, the contract having been completed with the knowledge, on the part of the defendant or her agent, of the existence of a public right of way over the property, and the plaintiff not knowing or having the means of knowing that fact. Gibson v. D'Este, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 542; 8 Jur. 94. Reversed, 1 H. L. Cas. 605.

—— Suppression of Lien.]—A party who, having a lien or claim on property, suppresses it, and permits another person to purchase the property upon the supposition that no such lien or claim exists, cannot afterwards be allowed to set up such lien or claim against such purchaser. Brown v. Thorpe, 11 L. J., Ch. 73.

Settlement, Concealment of.]—The defendant suppresses a settlement, but, upon proof that it came to his hands, the party entitled shall hold and enjoy the lands according to the settlement. Eyton v. Eyton, 4 Bro. P. C. 149.

Husband and Wife.]—Securities obtained from a married woman having property settled to her separate use, by a creditor of her husband, who, by suppressing the fact, procured himself to be appointed one of the trustees, his co-trustee not being a party to the transaction, set aside. Dalbiac v. Dalbiac, 16 Ves. 116.

Misreading Deed — Relief.]—One, that could read, made an agreement for twenty-one years. The lessor drew the lease for one year, and read it twenty-one. Equity would not relieve the lessee in this case, for it was within the Statute of Frauds. Sed secus, if the lessee had been unlettered. Anon., Skin. 159.

Proof.]—Concealment and misrepresentation alleged as grounds for setting aside a lease must be proved fraudulent, and the contract shown to be based upon it, and the very fraud alleged proved. Donegal (Marquis) v. Greg, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 12.

Costs.]—Corporation being trustees for charity and in possession of charity estate, and suppressing or concealing evidence relating to charity, are liable to costs of suit. Hertford Borough v. Hertford Poor, 2 Bro. P. C. 377.

Concealment of Evidence.]—When a plaintiff at law is nonsuited for want of evidence withheld by the defendant, he shall be relieved in equity, and the defendant shall pay the costs of nonsuit. Wilmot v. Lennard, 3 Swanst. 682.

Proceedings against Parties to.]—Depositions of witnesses examined by fraud suppressed, and parties thereto to be proceeded against by bill. Walford v. Walford, Cary, 56.

Practice—Pleading.]—The mere non-disclosure of a material fact is, except in the case of a policy of insurance, no answer to an action upon a contract. Fletcher v. Krell, 42 L. J., Q. B. 55; 28 L. T. 105.

b. Of Title.

Generally—Effect.]—A party claiming a title in himself, but privy to the fact of another dealing with the property as his own, will not, in equity, be permitted to assert his own title against a title created by that other, although he derives no benefit from the transaction. Nicholson v. Hooper, 4 Myl. & Cr. 179. Reversing 2 Jur. 9.

Where a person, knowing his own title, does not give notice of it to purchaser, though an infant, he shall not afterwards set it up. Savage v. Foster, 9 Mod. 35.

A., being in insolvent circumstances, suffers another person to become the apparent owner of his farm (though under a secret trust for him). A. shall not have against the landlord a specific execution of an agreement made by him with the trustee, the landlord supposing the trustee to have been the rightful owner, and confiding in his solvency. O'Herlihy v. Hedges, 1 Sch. & Lef. 123; 9 R. R. 23.

Injunctions granted to restrain defendant from recovering a demand from one of the plaintiffs, he having represented to the agent of the other plaintiffs, on a treaty of marriage with his daughter, that there was no such demand existing. Neville v. Wilkinson, 1 Bro. C. C. 543.

—— Mortgagee.]—A prior encumbrancer, being a witness to subsequent mortgages, does not disclose his own encumbrance. He shall be postponed. Hunsden v. Cheyney, 2 Vern. 150.

Where mortgagee was present while mortgagor was in treaty for his son's marriage, and fraudulently concealed his mortgage, he was held precluded from his claim. Berrisford v. Milward, 2 Atk. 49; Barnard. 101.

—— Concealment of Statute.]—A counsel, having a statute from A., advises B. to lend A. 1,000*l.* on a mortgage, and draws the mortgage with a covenant against all encumbrances, and conceals his own statute. The statute shall be postponed to the mortgage. Draper v. Borlace, 2 Vern. 370.

—— Absolute Owner.]—The mother, who was the absolute owner of a term, is present at a treaty for her son's marriage, and hears her son declare that the term was to come to him at his mother's death, and is a witness to the deed whereby the reversion of the terms is settled on the issue of his marriage after the mother's death. The mother is compellable in equity to make good this settlement, and to settle the reversion of the term accordingly after her death. Hunsden v. Cheyney, 2 Vern. 150.

—— Concealment by Third Party.]—A., on his marriage with B., settles lands for her jointure, which were subject to an entail. C., brother of A., was privy to the entail, engrossed the jointure deed, had the deed of entail in his custody, and concealed it. A., the husband, devises the inheritance of the premises to S., afterwards dies without issue, and S. marries the widow; C., the brother, sets up the entail, and brings the ejectment; S. and his wife bring a bill to be relieved against this deed of entail. Decreed, the wife to hold her jointure, but bill dismissed as to the husband's claim under the will, being a voluntary conveyance. Raw v. Pote, 2 Vern. 239.

—— Agent.]—Attorney or agent, on sale of an estate, not disclosing to the buyer an encumbrance, and leading him to suppose the title good:—Held, liable to make satisfaction in default of the vendor. Arnot v. Biscoe, 1 Ves. 95.

—— Making Good.]—A tenant in tail under a settlement, encouraging a stranger to purchase an annuity charged on his estate to B. by a will, which was void as against the settlement, decreed to make good the annuity. Hobbs v. Norton, 1 Vern. 136; 2 Ch. Cas. 128.

Account.]—Defendant shall account for the profits from the time the plaintiff's title accrued, and not from the filing the bill only, if the defendant has concealed the deeds and writings making out plaintiff's title. Bennet v. Whitehead, 2 P. Wms. 645.

5. Duress and Undue Influence.

a. Coercion and Oppression.

Coercion, what is.]—From the moment that a person who influences another does so by the threat of taking away from that other something he then possesses, or of preventing him from obtaining an advantage he would otherwise have obtained, the act of the person exercising the influence becomes coercion, and ceases to be persuasion or consideration. Ellis v. Barker, 40 L. J., Ch. 603; 25 L. T. 7; 19 W. R. 963. Affirmed, 41 L. J., Ch. 64; L. R. 7 Ch. 104; 25 L. T. 688; 20 W. R. 160.

Preventing Use of Process of Court—Practice—Relief.]—On a bill to carry a former decree for payment of money into execution, further interest cannot be given. Where the plaintiff, although entitled, had not framed his bill for such further interest, liberty to amend was refused after decree and report, but a case being alleged of duress and oppression, by which the plaintiff had been prevented availing herself of the process of the court to compel payment:—Held, that that was a fact arising within the court itself and its proceedings, and, as such, might be at any stage of a cause brought under its cognisance by petition: on which further interest might be added to the sum decreed, without affecting the decree: interest not being a substantive part of the decree, but an accessory at all times in the discretion of the court, Mayhee v. Mahon, 1 Moll. 147.

Preventing Recovery—Relief.]—Tenant in tail is prevented, by the issue in tail, from suffering a recovery in order to provide for young children, by his promise to do so for them himself: equity will compel him to do it after the father's death. Devenish v. Baines, Pre. Ch. 5.

Relief.]—A., being taken by the husband going to bed to his wife, gives him securities for payment of 500*l*. A bill to be relieved against the securities, alleging that it was a plot, dismissed. Woodman v. Skute, or Goodman v. Scuse, Pre. Ch. 266; Gilb., Eq. Rep. 9; 2 Eq. Abr. 183, pl. 2.

Securities obtained from the plaintiff for his wife as a compromise of doubtful rights, but under the threat and apprehension of arrest, and without adequate consideration or advice, set aside. Scott v. Scott, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 74.

—— Injunction.] — Injunction against an ejectment under a deed of appointment as obtained by a husband from his wife by undue influence, oppression, etc., and an issue directed. Peel v. ——, 16 Ves. 157.

—— Cancelling.] — An agreement executed by a party under threat of prosecuting his son for forgery ordered to be delivered up to be cancelled. Bayley v. Williams, 4 Giff. 638; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 236; 11 L. T. 110; 13 W. R. 533.

A. settled lands upon his nephew B. for life, remainder to the first and every other son of the body of B. in tail, with remainder to the daughter and daughters of B. as tenants in common, with remainder, in default of such issue of B., to the right heirs of himself, A. B. had no issue, and A. in B.'s lifetime made a codicil to his will in favour of another nephew, C., for life, with remainder to the first and every other son of the body of C. in tail. D., the son of C., took possession, but was persuaded by Z., a conveyancer, that some other parties were entitled to the premises under the limitation to the right heirs of A.; and under the pressure of Z. he executed an agreement to assign one-third to these parties, and to pay him, Z., 40*l*. for costs. Upon bill filed to set aside the agreement, it was decreed to be delivered up to be cancelled, because without consideration and executed under pressure, with costs against Z. (the conveyancer). Brent v. Brent, 10 L. J., Ch. 84; 4 Jur. 1027.

—— Setting aside.]—A release from a younger brother to the elder, of certain premises which had been devised to him by his father, executed in consequence of a threat to file a bill, set aside in favour of creditors. Peat v. Powell, Ambl. 387; 1 Eden, 479.

A woman, pending a treaty of marriage with A., settled all her property to her separate use with his approbation: a few days afterwards B., by stratagem, induced her to marry him the day after she first thought of it. B. had no notice of the settlement. Settlement established, and deed of revocation obtained by duress, set aside. Strathmore (Countess) v. Bowes, 1 Ves. J. 22; 1 R. R. 76. See 2 Bro. C. C. 345; 2 Cox, 28. Affirmed 6 Bro. P. C. 427.

A purchase deed set aside, the consideration paid being less than half the value of the land sold, the vendor being a person of reckless and improvident habits, greatly embarrassed, indebted to the purchaser, and to some extent dependent on him, and without professional advice; and there being evidence of management and contrivance on the part of the purchaser in procuring the signature of the vendor to the agreement for the sale, and of his having depreciated the title, and deterred others from purchasing, though himself aware of counsel's opinion favourable to the title, of which he did not inform the vendor. Butler v. Miller, Ir. R. 1 Eq. 195; 15 W. R. 779.

Practice—Injunction against oppressive restraint.]—Injunction to restrain husband from preventing his wife's solicitor and friends from having access to her, she being confined by dangerous illness in his house, to enable her to execute a deed of appointment under a power in her marriage settlement, refused, it not being proved that she had given instructions for such a deed. Quære, whether, under any circumstances, such an injunction would be granted. Middleton v. Middleton, 1 J. & W. 94; 20 R. R. 233.

b. Undue Advantage.

Generally.]—Principle adopted in Baker v. Monk (4 De G. J. & S. 388), following the rule laid down in Evans v. Llewellin (1 Cox, 333), is one to be extended and applied to every conceivable case where one man by fraud or chicanery gets advantage over another not standing in an equal position to negotiate with him. Slator v. Nolan, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 367.

By Person claiming Supernatural Power.]—Gift by a person of weak intellect of her whole fortune to a person who had acquired great influence over her mind, by making her and others believe that he sustained a supernatural character:—Held, invalid. Nottidge v. Prince, 2 Giff. 246; 29 L. J., Ch. 857; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1066; 8 W. R. 742.

A., a widow, aged seventy-five, within nine days after first seeing B., who claimed to be a spiritual medium, was induced, from her belief that she was fulfilling the wishes of her deceased husband, conveyed to her through the medium of B., to adopt him as her son, and transfer 24,000*l*. to him: to make her will in his favour; afterwards to give him a further sum of 6,000*l*.; and also to settle upon him, subject to her life interest, the reversion of 30,000*l*. (these gifts being made without consideration, and without power of revocation):—Held, that the relation proved to have existed between them implied the exercise of dominion and influence by B. over A.'s mind; and, consequently, that as B. had failed to prove that these voluntary gifts were the pure, voluntary, well-understood acts of A.'s mind, they must be set aside. Lyon v. Home, 37 L. J., Ch. 674; L. R. 6 Eq. 655; 18 L. T. 451; 16 W. R. 824.

Setting aside—Stated Account.]—Stated accounts set aside, the items being very gross, and the settlement obtained from a person just come of age under a misrepresentation. Brown v. Pring, 1 Ves. 407.

—— Agreement.]—Agreements, though prepared by an independent solicitor, may be set aside if one of the parties for whom the solicitor is acting is under the undue influence of the other party. Moxon v. Payne, 43 L. J., Ch. 240; L. R. 8 Ch. 881.

—— Delivery up.]—On bill by heir-at-law to set aside a conveyance of the estate to defendant, on suggestion of fraud, imposition, and undue influence:—Held, that he ought to be relieved, and decreed that deed should be delivered, and possession of the estate likewise given to him. Bennett v. Vade, 2 Atk. 324; 9 Mod. 312.

Account.]—The obligor, on payment of 20*l.* to the obligee, procured a bond and notes for money to be delivered up to him, upon pretence that he was poor, and nearly related to the obligee; but, that not being proved, he was ordered to account for the bond and notes. Lucas v. Adams, 9 Mod. 118.

Conveyance by Insane Person.]—A. obtains a conveyance from insane person long before commission of lunacy issues, or is executed:—Held, fraudulent and set aside, though consideration money was near the value of the estate. Evans v. Blood, 3 Bro. P. C. 632.

Lease by Intoxicated Person.]—Lease obtained by fraud and circumvention from person in a state of intoxication is void in equity. Butler v. Mulvihill, 1 Bligh, 137.

Where A., the heir of lessee, having a right to perpetual renewal, had entered into an agreement with B. respecting the independent lease of lands held under renewable lease by ancestor of A., which independent lease B. had obtained from landlord by fraud and circumvention:—Held, that heir of A. and purchasers for valuable consideration claiming under him were entitled in equity to benefit of agreement between B. and A., and that heir of landlord was entitled to benefit of agreement, so far as B. took an interest. Ib.

Taking advantage of Intoxication—Relief.]—A., for 90*l.* lent to B., got his bond for 800*l.* when he was drunk, on which he obtained judgment. A. sought by his bill to subject B.'s trust estate in his wife's lands: equity would not relieve A., even to the extent of the money really lent. Sed secus, if B. had gone into equity to be relieved from the judgment, for then he must have paid the money borrowed. Rich v. Sydenham, 1 Ch. Ca. 202.

c. Distress and Necessitous Circumstances.

Generally.]—Securities taken during poverty and distress set aside as unconscionable and oppressive. Lamplugh v. Coæ, Dick. 411.

Province of Court of Equity.]—It is the peculiar province of a court of equity to give relief in all cases of fraud, or of contracts in which any advantage is unduly taken by either of the parties of the distress or necessity of the other. Kenrick v. Hudson, 4 Bro. P. C. 222.

Sale at Gross Undervalue—Want of Independent Advice—Setting Aside.]—The court, being of opinion that A., a reckless and improvident man, incapable of appreciating his rights, and in destitute circumstances, had been grossly overreached by B., his brother-in-law, in a sale at a gross undervalue to B. of A.'s interest in certain property, and that, to the knowledge of B., no adequate protection or advice were afforded to A., set aside the transaction with costs. Slator v. Nolan, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 367.

Relief—Bond to Stand as Security.]—The plaintiff, a poor man, suing for a considerable estate, gives a bond for a great sum of money to the defendant, a person who assisted him with small sums, and took some pains in the affair; the defendant's wife had also intermeddled, with her husband's knowledge and approbation; and the bond was obtained by pressing the plaintiff for payment of what was expended, and taking advantage of his insolvency. The bond decreed to stand only as a security for what was advanced and interest, and the defendant left at liberty to bring his quantum meruit for pains, &c. Proof v. Hines, Cas. t. Talb. 111.

Conveyance by Labourer to Solicitor—Mortgagee—Validity.]—When a solicitor and mortgagee took a conveyance from the mortgagor, a day labourer, who had no independent legal advice:—Held, that the deed was not valid unless the circumstances were all explained to the mortgagor, and that the onus of showing that this was done lay on the solicitor. Prees v. Coke, L. R. 6 Ch. 645.

Purchase set aside after Purchaser's Death]—Where a purchaser takes advantage of the distress or ignorance of the vendor, or of any particular authority over him, a court of equity may set aside the purchase as fraudulent, even after the purchaser's death. Gould v. Okeden, 4 Bro. P. C. 198.

Setting aside Deed of Confirmation.]—Deed, confirming a grant impeached by suit and compromising the rights, the subject of a suit, obtained from a person apprised of his rights set aside, he being compelled to accede to the terms from distress and poverty occasioned by the party procuring the confirmation. Roche v. O'Brien, 1 Ball & B. 330.

Relief given to Volunteers.]—A grant from a distressed man in prison for debt to his attorney, set aside as fraudulent, in favour of children, though deriving as volunteers, yet having as fair a claim to be relieved against fraud as the heir-at-law. Falkner v. O'Brien, 2 Ball & B. 214.

Advantageous Purchase—Undervalue.]—M., being in embarrassed circumstances, in consideration of loan of 900*l.*, makes lease to D., with covenant for perpetual renewal, of lands of yearly value of 450*l.* at rent of 150*l.*, subject to private parol agreement, that M. might redeem within two years, on payment of 1,300*l.* S., knowing the circumstance, with consent of M. purchases from D. his interest, to whom S. pays the 1,300*l.* S. afterwards purchases the whole interest of this and other land of M., for additional sum of 3,706*l.*, the clear profit rent at which the lands let the year following being 603*l.* a year, and other advantages:—Held, binding on M. Meredith v. Saunders, 2 Dow, 515; 14 R. R. 201.

Exorbitant Price.]—The purchase of a piece of land, at an exorbitant price, will not be allowed to stand when made the condition of a loan of money to a party whose necessities compelled him to borrow. A mortgage of a fund in court, in a suit of Collet v. Maude, by W. G. C., the purchaser of the land, to secure 6,000*l*., the purchase-money, to G. W. F., the vendor, set aside on the ground that the transaction was fraudulent. An assignment of a chose in action must be taken subject to all prior claims. Sub-mortgages of the fund in court, made without noticing G. W. F., were therefore set aside; for his title was either void or subject to the prior equity of W. G. C., notwithstanding he had been induced to create or countenance such sub-mortgages. The acts of W. G. C. in joining to create the sub-mortgages were not a recognition of, or an acquiescence in, the sub-mortgages, as they were done in entire ignorance of his rights, and under the idea that the original transaction with G. W. F. was unimpeachable. Cockell v. Taylor, 15 Beav. 147; 21 L. J., Ch. 545.

A purchase from an illiterate poor and old man, who was ill at the time, set aside, the price being inadequate, the vendor having no professional advice, and the transaction being completed in great haste and on terms unduly disadvantageous to him. Clark v. Malpas, 4 De G. F. & J. 401; 31 Beav. 80; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 734; 10 W. R. 676.

Setting aside Sale at Undervalue.]—Where unfair advantage was taken of the necessities of one who wished only to raise money upon mortgage, but was induced to execute an absolute conveyance at a considerable undervalue by his solicitor, who betrayed his interests to serve the purposes of the purchaser, the court set aside the transaction as an absolute sale. Douglas v. Culverwell, 5 L. T. 484. S. C., 3 Giff. 251; 31 L. J., Ch. 65; 10 W. R. 189. Affirmed, 6 L. T. 272.

Inadequate Consideration.]—Deed set aside as improvidently obtained, being for an inadequate consideration from persons in low circumstances, and unapprised of their right until the time of the transaction, though no misrepresentation nor actual fraud whatever appeared to have been made use of. Evans v. Llewellin, 2 Bro. C. C. 150; 1 R. R. 49; 1 Cox, 335.

Setting aside—Lease and Release, and Fine.]—Conveyance by lease and release, and fine, set aside upon great inadequacy of consideration, combined with misrepresentation and surprise upon parties in extreme distress, ignorant of their interests, and not properly protected, though the transaction took place twelve years before the bill; and a former bill having been dismissed, the plainliff not appearing, that objection not being made either by plea or answer. The decree limited to the time of the bill filed. Pickett v. Loggon, 14 Ves. 215.

—— Lease by Mortgagor to Mortgagee.]—A lease set aside under the circumstances, being made by mortgagor to mortgagee, the latter taking advantage of the distresses of the former, and using his mortgage as an instrument to obtain an undue advantage; and the lessor executing the lease on the faith of an agreement that he was to be allowed a certain maintenance out of the property for himself and family, which lessee did not perform, and which it would not have been in his power to have secured on account of the rights of creditor. But, whether the mere relation of mortgagor and mortgagee be sufficient to avoid a lease fairly made by the former to the latter, quære. Gubbins v. Creed, 2 Sch. & Lef. 214; 9 R. R. 71.

Agreement in Execution of Private Act.]—Notwithstanding two private acts of parliament reducing younger children's portions in proportion to the other interests in the estate, the court would not enforce an agreement entered into by one of the younger children in execution of the private acts, thereby consenting to accept a stated sum in satisfaction; such agreement being inserted by the plaintiff's solicitor in a receipt from her, on paying her a small sum of money, and she being in great distress and embarrassment, at the time. Kerneys v. Hansard, G. Cooper, 125.

Undervalue.]—Deeds of assignment set aside as having been obtained at undervalue from the assignors, who were far advanced in life and in needy circumstances, by a person whose situation enabled him to throw impediments in the way of the proceedings taken by them for the recovery of their demands, and who held out threats to that effect. Bowen v. Kirwan, Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 47.

Transaction between Brothers-in-law.]—A transaction of sale, made upon a false or mistaken consideration between parties in the relation of brothers-in-law, the vendor being an heir succeeding to the estate sold, and the purchaser executor of the will of the vendor's father, and where the party selling is under circumstances of great pecuniary embarrassment and distress, will not be impeached, if fairly made; but, if the consideration for the purchase was the balance of an account, which appears to be erroneous, the whole transaction must be so far investigated as to correct the accounts. M'Neil v. Cahill, 2 Bligh, 228.

Reversionary Interest.]—Sales of reversionary interests were set aside, the vendors being poor, ignorant men, selling at a considerable undervalue, and having no professional adviser other than the solicitor to the purchasers who gave to the latter a great advantage in the transactions. Fry v. Lane, 58 L. J., Ch. 113; 40 Ch. D. 312; 60 L. T. 12; 37 W. R. 135.

d. Extravagant and Unreasonable Contracts.

Generally.]—Equity will not carry unreasonable bargains into execution; and, therefore, where A. agreed to pay B. 240*l*. a year for his board, lodging, etc., the agreement was set aside as being unreasonable; and the master was directed to inquire what accommodation A. had, and what B. reasonably deserved for the same, and to make him allowance accordingly. Stanhope v. Toppe, 1 Bro. P. C. 157.

Hard Bargain.]—If a person will enter into a hard bargain with his eyes open, equity will not relieve him, unless he can show fraud in the party contracting with him, or undue means to draw him into the agreement. Willis v. Jernegan, 2 Atk. 251.

Hardship.]—On a question of executing an agreement, hardship cannot be regarded unless it amounts to a degree of inconvenience and absurdity so great as to afford judicial proof that such could not be the meaning of the parties. Prebble v. Boghurst, 1 Swanst. 329 ; 1 Wils. Ch. 161.

Neither Fraud nor Incapacity.]—If a person on marriage makes an extravagant or unreasonable settlement, yet, if no fraud or incapacity appear, it shall not be avoided by persons claiming under a subsequent settlement. Hobson v. Staneer, 9 Mod. 80.

Neither Fraud nor Mistake.]—The defendant agreed to purchase a property at a valuation to be made by A. The court, though it considered A.'s valuation very high, "and perhaps exorbitant," decreed specific performance, there appearing neither "fraud, mistake, nor miscarriage." Collier v. Mason, 25 Beav. 200.

Price.]—An agreement to give forty years' purchase for fen land, set aside as extravagant. Kien v. Stukeley, 1 Bro. P. C. 191.

e. Inadequacy of Consideration.

Generally.]—Mere inadequacy of value is not a sufficient ground to set aside an annuity. Speed v. Phillips, 3 Anst. 732.

An annuity cannot be set aside upon mere inadequacy of price which can be applied only as evidence of fraud. The notion of a market price ascertained in the usual way upon the principle of calculation at an insurance office is not a just criterion of the value. Therefore, a bill to set aside an annuity, the circumstances not amounting to fraud, was dismissed with costs. Low v. Barchard, 8 Ves. 133 ; 7 R. R. 4.

The court will not interfere to set aside an agreement merely on the ground of inadequacy of consideration, nor on account of the distress of the plaintiff, where no advantage had been taken of his situation. Purdie v. Millett, 1 Tam. 31 ; 31 R. R. 60.

Inadequacy of value is not in itself sufficient to set aside a contract. Griffith v. Spratley, 1 Cox, 383.

There may be cases of inadequacy of price so great as to form a ground for cancelling a contract. Stilwell v. Wilkins, Jacob, 282 ; 23 R. R. 56.

Valuer's Price.]—A. entered into a contract with B. for the sale of property to him at a price to be fixed by two valuers, named in the contract, who afterwards valued the property at an adequate price :—Held, nevertheless, that B. was entitled to a decree for specific performance, there being no proof of fraud or collusion on the part of the valuers. Weekes v. Gallard, 21 L. T. 655.

Presumption of Oppression.]—It is a general rule that inadequacy of consideration is not alone a sufficient ground to set aside a contract ; but, if inadequacy be very great, that will induce a presumption of oppression. Darley v. Singleton, Wight. 29.

There is an equity which may be founded on gross inadequacy of consideration, where it involves the conclusion that the complainant either did not understand what he was about, or was the victim of some imposition. Tennent v. Tennent, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 6.

Relief will be given in equity upon inadequacy of consideration, if so extreme as to satisfy the court that there must have been oppression or imposition. Underhill v. Harwood, 10 Ves. 209. Affirmed 14 Ves. 28.

Without Fraud.]—Mere inadequacy of value is not a ground upon which a court of equity will be willing to set aside purchases if unaccompanied by fraud or misrepresentation. Murray v. Palmer, 2 Sch. & Lef. 488.

Purchase for a valuable consideration, bonâ fide, paid :—Held, a good defence, though the consideration was much less than the real value. Bullock v. Sadler, Amb. 764.

Relief.]—A conveyance by deed and fine, gained without consideration and indirectly, court relieved against it. Wilkinson v. Brayfield, 2 Vern. 307.

Price, what is Fraudulent.]—A sale of land at a halfpenny for every square yard, when the purchaser knew that not to be one-fourth part of the value, is fraudulent and void in equity. Deane v. Rastron, 1 Anst. 64.

Infirmity of Party.]—A conveyance by a weak man for a small consideration, set aside. Clarkson v. Hanway, 2 P. Wms. 203.

Mere inadequacy of price is insufficient in itself to vitiate a sale, but, where there is weakness in the mental capacity of the vendor, the sale cannot be sustained, unless the vendor has been adequately protected in the transaction. Longmate v. Ledger, 2 Giff. 157 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 481 ; 8 W. R. 386.

Where a vendor of feeble intellect sold his property to a creditor for an inadequate price, the court, on a bill filed by his heir impeaching the transaction, set aside the sale, but directed the deed to stand as a security for moneys actually due on the footing of a mortgage. Ib.

Bona fides.]—One, being poor, drawn in to sell an estate at a great undervalue, yet, if no fraud, cannot be relieved. Wood v. Fenwick, Pre. Ch. 206.

Deed set aside as improvidently obtained, being for an inadequate consideration from persons in low circumstances, and unapprised of their right until the time of the transaction, though no misrepresentation nor actual fraud whatever appeared to have been made use of. Evans v. Llewellin, 2 Bro. C. C. 150 ; 1 R. R. 49 ; 1 Cox, 333.

Property in Possession and Reversion.]—Where a purchase is made from a poor and ignorant man at a considerable under-value, the vendor having no independent advice, a court of equity will set aside the transaction. This will be done even in the case of property in possession, and, à fortiori, if the interest be reversionary. Fry v. Lane, 58 L. J., Ch. 113 ; 40 Ch. D. 312 ; 60 L. T. 12 ; 37 W. R. 135.

Mere Inadequacy of Consideration.]—Where, after the death of a vendor, the sale was impeached by his devisees on the ground that at the time of the sale he was an illiterate, bedridden old man of seventy-one years of age, and had acted without professional advice, and had conveyed away the property in question, of the value of 400*l.*, for the consideration of a provision by way of board and lodging during his life, which only endured six weeks after the conveyance:—Held, that, in the absence of any fraud, and the evidence showing that he had declined to employ professional advice for himself, such a transaction was not impeachable on the ground of mere inadequacy of consideration. Harrison v. Guest, 6 De G. M. & G. 424; 25 L. J., Ch. 544; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 911; 4 W. R. 585. Affirmed, 8 H. L. Cas. 481.

Bill of Exchange.]—Relief against a bill of exchange, said to be for value received, but gained by fraud, and for a fictitious consideration. Dyer v. Tymewell, 2 Vern. 122; Free. C. C. 112; 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 126.

Purchase Deed.]—The court will set aside a purchase deed as fraudulent if the price is inadequate, and there have been contrivance and management, and if the parties have not been on equal terms by reason of the one having, the other not having, professional assistance. Butler v. Miller, Ir. R. 1 Eq. 195; 15 W. R. 779.

No Fiduciary Relation.]—A purchase set aside on the ground of undue influence and undervalue, although no fiduciary relation existed between the vendor and purchaser. Clark v. Malpas, 31 L. J., Ch. 696; 6 L. T. 596; 10 W. R. 677.

Where no fiduciary relation exists between two parties dealing for the sale and purchase of an estate, mere inadequacy of consideration, or irregularity in the statement of it in the conveyance, is not sufficient to impeach the contract. Harrison v. Guest, 8 H. L. Cas. 481. Affirming 6 De G. M. & G. 424; 25 L. J., Ch. 544; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 911; 4 W. R. 585.

Lapse of Time.]—After great length of time, the question of undervalue is not entertainable. Wilton v. Browne, 1 Ball & B. 130.

Contract on inadequate consideration, and accompanied with fraudulent concealment, etc., set aside after seven years. Taylor v. Obee, 3 Price, 83: 17 R. R. 548.

Conveyance by lease and release and fine, set aside upon great inadequacy of consideration, combined with misrepresentation and surprise upon parties in extreme distress, ignorant of their interests, and not properly protected; though the transaction took place twelve years before the bill, and a former bill having been dismissed, the plaintiff not appearing, that objection not being made either by plea or answer. The account limited to the time of the bill filed. Pickett v. Loggon, 14 Ves. 215.

Conveyance to Stand as Security.]—Where conveyance is for undervalue, court will not set it aside absolutely, but it shall stand a security for the money advanced. Lane v. Page, Amb. 235.

—— Sailor's Prize Money.]—Assignment of sailor's share of prize money at great undervalue, set aside for fraud, but still to stand as security for what was really advanced. The same equity as to an under-assignment. How v. Weldon, 2 Ves. 516.

—— Lunatic.]—Sales, at a great undervalue, from one that was afterwards a lunatic, set aside; but the conveyances to stand a security for what was really paid. Addison v. Dawson, 2 Vern. 678.

Sale by Tenant for Life.]—Where a tenant in tail general of a remainder, expectant on a previous life estate, sold the reversion to B. at an inadequate price amounting to fraud, which B., ten years after, sold for full value, the former party joining in the conveyance to a purchaser with full knowledge of the previous sale being voidable, the court decreed a reconveyance on repayment of the original price to B. Addis v. Campbell, 4 Beav. 401; 10 L. J., Ch. 284.

—— and Remainderman.]—Tenant for life and remainderman in tail, both in distress, join in selling estate for inadequate consideration:—Held, that it could not be considered a sale of reversion, and subject to rules relating to such sale, but that sale was invalid on account of inadequacy of price, coupled with vendors' distress, and their want of advice. Wood v. Abrey, 3 Madd. 417; 18 R. R. 264.

Between Partners.]—A partner, who superintended, exclusively, the accounts of the concern, agreed to purchase his co-partner's share of the business, for a sum which he knew from accounts in his possession (but which he concealed from his co-partner) was an inadequate consideration; the agreement was set aside. Maddeford v. Austwick, 1 Sim. 89. Affirmed, 2 Myl. & K. 279; 27 R. R. 167.

If a lease for years, worth 200*l.* a year, belong to two co-partners, and one of them, upon a false suggestion, that a fine of 250*l.* was to be paid for the renewal of it, obtain an assignment of the other's moiety for consideration of 20*l.*; equity will set aside this conveyance, and order assignee to account for a moiety of profits. Evans v. Hoskins, 9 Mod. 83.

Other Cases.]—D., in 1858, entered into a building speculation with the defendant, each party to contribute an equal amount of money, the net rents to belong to D. for his life, and after his death the lease and houses to belong to the defendant absolutely. D. was also possessed of four leasehold houses for the residue of a term, and in January, 1859, he, by a deed, to which his wife was party, assigned them to the defendant for 200*l.*, upon trust for the benefit of himself and his wife during their joint lives and the life of the survivor. The 200*l.* was paid by a cheque, which got back into the hands of the defendant. In June, 1859, D. died before the buildings were completed. D.'s widow, as executrix, filed a bill to have the deed of January, 1859, set aside on the ground of mental incapacity on the part of her husband and inadequacy of consideration; or, in the alternative, for a declaration that she was entitled to a lien on the houses for 200*l.* The defendant alleged that the 200*l.* was paid back to him by D. to be advanced in the building speculation. The evidence of mental incapacity and inadequacy of value was held to have failed; but, as there was not sufficient evidence of the existence of the contract, the defendant was ordered to pay to the plaintiff 200*l.*, with interest from the 31st March, 1859, and the costs of the suit. Duckels v. Nothard, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1030; 7 L. T. 59.

A., who was a labouring man, receiving about

9*s.* a week, and totally uneducated, believing himself to have a contingent interest in an estate in fee-simple, offered, in February, 1838, to sell his interest to B. B. applied to his attorneys, who advised that, as A.'s father might cut off the entail, A. had no saleable interest. B. declined the purchase; but shortly afterwards consented to lend money to A., and lent different sums, amounting in the whole to 20*l.* A., on the 5th of May, 1838, executed a money-bond, conditioned in the penalty of 40*l.*, to secure the payment of 20*l.*, with 5 per cent. interest, on the 5th of November then next. A. was not called on for interest, nor did he hear of the matter again till the 22nd of September, 1840, the day of his father's funeral. His father had not interfered with the descent of the property, and A. had at that time become possessed of the estate. On the 24th September A. entered into an agreement to sell the estate to B., and that agreement was carried into execution by a conveyance on the following 10th of October. The bond, agreement, and conveyance were prepared by B.'s attorney, and executed at his office. A. had no attorney. The estate was sold considerably under its value. A. afterwards filed a bill alleging these facts, and praying that the deed of conveyance might be set aside as fraudulent and void:—Held, that the bill, as a bill charging fraud, was properly dismissed: but, whether A. might not have maintained a bill to set aside the conveyance as improvidently made and hastily executed, quære. Curson v. Belworthy, 3 H. L. Cas. 742; 16 Jur. 1147.

6. On Public.

Literary Fraud—Fictitious Author's Name on Title-page.]—In an action for specific performance of an agreement for the composition of a literary work by the defendant, the plaintiffs alleged that the defendant had agreed that his name should not appear on the title-page of a work as the author of it; the defendant alleged that it was part of the agreement that his name should so appear. The plaintiffs proposed to publish the book with a title-page, stating that it was edited by K. (assisted by M., the defendant). K. was known as having published other books of a similar description, and had allowed the plaintiffs to make use of his name, but he had taken no part whatever in the compilation:—Held, that the proposed title-page would be a fraud on the public, and that on this ground the plaintiffs were disentitled to relief. Post v. Marsh, 50 L. J., Ch. 287; 16 Ch. D. 395; 43 L. T. 628; 29 W. R. 198.

Procuring Sale, in Master's Office, to Particular Person.]—An agreement to procure a sale of lands in the master's office to a particular person, at a certain price, is a fraud on the court, on the public, and on the creditor. The court itself, for the sake of the public, is bound to take notice of such an agreement, although the defendant falsely denies the existence of it, and sets up a fictitious case on his answer. Hamilton v. Ball, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 194.

7. On Particular Statutes.

3 Jac. 1, c. 4—1 Will. & Mary, c. 26.]—Plaintiff, whilst a papist, assigned advowson to defendant for ninety-nine years, and, having conformed, brought his bill for reassignment of the term, suggesting he had only assigned it in trust for himself to avoid the penalties of the statutes 3 Jac. 1, c. 4, and 1 Will. & Mary, c. 26. Lord Hardwicke was inclined to think, if the defendant had demurred, such a fraudulent conveyance would, at the hearing, have been absolute against the grantor. Cottington v. Fletcher, 2 Atk. 156.

6 Anne.]—By an Irish statute, 6 Anne, all deeds executed after the 25th March, 1708, and and not registered, are declared void. A lease of lands was neglected to be registered, of which the lessor taking advantage granted a new lease to another person, who brought an ejectment, and recovered:—Held, that the original lessee was relievable in equity; for the statute, being made to prevent frauds, shall never be used as a means to cover it. Forbes (Lord) v. Deniston, 4 Bro. P. C. 189.

38 Geo. 3, c. 78.]—A., the proprietor of a newspaper, prevailed on B. to make and deliver to the stamp office an affidavit that he, B., was the proprietor of the paper. B. afterwards agreed to sell the paper to D. A. having become insolvent, his assignees filed a bill to set aside the sale for fraud:—Held, that as B. had at A.'s instance violated the 38 Geo. 3, c. 78, which requires the true names of the proprietors of newspapers to be inserted in the affidavit, his assignees were not entitled to the relief asked. Harmer v. Westmacott, 6 Sim. 284.

Register Act.]—It is only in cases of fraud the court has broken in upon the Register Act, though one encumbrance was registered before another. Hine v. Dodd, 2 Atk. 275.

Statute against Clandestine Mortgage.]—A person, who will take advantage of the statute against clandestine mortgage, must be an honest mortgagee; and, therefore, if a man has used any fraud or ill practice in obtaining a second mortgage, he shall not have the benefit of the statute. Stafford v. Selby, 2 Vern. 589.

8. By Reason of Personal Relations.

a. General Principles.

Generally.]—As to advantage taken by persons in fiduciary situations in general. Goddard v. Carlisle, 9 Price, 169; 23 R. R. 654.

As to the extent of the doctrine of purchases by persons in fiduciary situations, viz., trustees, assignees, &c. See Lacey, Ex parte, 6 Ves. 625; 6 R. R. 9.

Circumstances under which the court will restrain a person occupying a confidential relationship from profiting by engagements entered into under undue influence. Billage v. Southee, 9 Hare, 534. S. C., nom. Billing v. Southee, 21 L. J., Ch. 472; 16 Jur. 188.

Influence arising from fiduciary relationship is not discountenanced by the court, but it ought to be exercised for the benefit of the person subject to, and not of the person possessing, it. Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278; 21 L. J., Ch. 482; 17 Jur. 99.

No person who stands in a relation of special confidence to another, so as to acquire habitual influence over his mind, can accept any gift or benefit from the person who is under the dominion of that influence, unless a sufficient protection has been interposed against the exercise of such influence. Nottidge v. Prince, 2 Giff. 246; 29 L. J., Ch. 857; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1066; 8 W. R. 742.

The rules which induce a court of equity to look with suspicion into transactions between solicitor and client apply to other cases, when there is a confidential relation between the parties, as employer and agent, surgeon and patient, spiritual instructor, &c. Dent v. Bennett, 7 Sim. 539; 4 Myl. & Cr. 269; 8 L. J., Ch. 125; 5 Id. 58; 3 Jur. 99.

This relief stands upon a general principle, applying to all the variety of relations in which dominion may be exercised by one person over another. Ib.

The court of chancery will grant relief in cases of undue influence, although there does not exist between the parties the particular relation of trustee and cestui que trust, guardian and ward, solicitor and client, if, by reason of the confidence reposed in a person, he uses his information to the prejudice of the person from whom he receives it, and to his own advantage. Hobday v. Peters, 28 Beav. 349; 29 L. J., Ch. 780; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 754; 2 L. T. 590; 8 W. R. 512.

The court will not allow a security to be enforced against the person from whom it was taken, where it had been taken from that person when just of age and living in the house and under the influence of another person who stood in anything like the relation of a guardian or trustee, or in loco parentis to the party from whom the security was taken, unless the security was given freely and without the exercise of any influence either by the party to whom it was given or the party who procured it to be given; and on mere allegations of such undue influence, and that the rate of interest on the security given was not fully stated, an injunction to stay execution was granted until the hearing. Espey v. Lake, 10 Hare, 260; 22 L. J., Ch. 336; 16 Jur. 1106; 1 W. R. 59.

What Constitutes Fraud.]—Among the various acts which, in a court of equity, constitute fraud, the abuse of confidence is one. Mackreth v. Fox, 4 Bro. P. C. 258; 2 Bro. C. C. 400; 2 Cox, 320.

Principles.]—Exposition of the principles upon which the court of chancery acts in cases where deeds executed between parties who stand in a confidential relation to each other are impeached. Ahearne v. Hogan, 1 Dr. 310. And see Blackie v. Clark, 15 Beav. 595; 22 L. J., Ch. 377.

Principles affecting the decision of the court in cases of incapacity of donor, undue influence, and fiduciary relation, discussed. Armstrong v. Armstrong, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 1.

Infants—Principles of Relief.]—The jurisdiction of courts of equity will be employed to protect infants, and is not confined to cases where there has been an abuse of a strictly fiduciary character. The principle on which relief is given applies to all cases where influence is acquired and abused, and confidence reposed and betrayed. In the former influence is presumed, in the latter its existence must be proved. Smith v. Kay, 7 H. L. Cas. 750; 30 L. J., Ch. 45.

Professional Assistance.]—The case of Harrison v. Guest (6 De G. M. & G. 424) does not establish that the fact of an unprofessional person having employed no solicitor is a matter of no importance. Denton v. Donner, 23 Beav. 285.

Solicitor Employed by Trustee for Sale—Annuitant with Power of Sale.]—A solicitor, employed about the sale of property by a trustee for sale, is as much disabled from becoming the purchaser as the trustee himself; and an annuitant, with a power of sale to pay arrears, is a trustee within the above proposition. Bloye's Trust, In re, 1 Mac. & G. 488; 2 Hall & Tw. 140; 19 L. J., Ch. 89; 14 Jur. 49.

Attorney and Client—Trustee and Cestui que trust.]—The distinction between attorney and trustee to sell, as to contracts with client and cestuis que trustent, is that attorney retaining character may contract, subject to onus of making it thoroughly manifest that he has taken no advantage of his confidential situation. But in trustee it is not sufficient to show he has not taken advantage, the general rule being that he must divest himself of that character. Cane v. Allen (Lord), 2 Dow, 299.

Mortgagor and Mortgagee.]—The rule, that a purchaser cannot purchase from his cestui que trust, does not extend to a purchase by a mortgagee from his mortgagor. Knight v. Majoribanks, 2 Macn. & G. 10; 2 Hall & Tw. 308. Affirming 11 Beav. 322; 13 Jur. 136.

—— Application of Principle to.]—The principle upon which the court restrains persons filling a fiduciary character from having any dealings for their own benefit, does not necessarily apply to the case of mortgagor and mortgagee. Dobson v. Land, 8 Hare, 221.

—— Mortgagees and Trustees.]—Distinction between the cases of mortgagees and trustees in the ordinary sense. Id. 220.

Distinction between Cases of Strangers and Families.]—Distinction between the cases where, as between strangers, benefits are obtained by undue influence, and arrangements entered into for the peace of families and the security of family property. Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278; 21 L. J., Ch. 482; 17 Jur. 99.

Without Fraud.]—Contracts contrary to the policy of the law, as a deed of gift by a client to an attorney, by an heir to guardian, the purchase of a reversion from a young heir, a trustee selling to himself, set aside without evidence of fraud. Morse v. Royal, 12 Ves. 371; 8 R. R. 338.

Practice — Terms.] — Where injunction is granted against proceedings at law, on instrument obtained either as a gift or purchase in fraud of the fiduciary situation of the donee or purchaser, the court will not impose the terms of paying money into court, if the relationship be that of attorney and client. Goddard v. Carlisle, 9 Price, 169; 23 R. R. 654.

—— Onus of Proving Fair Dealing.]—General rule that he who bargains, in matter of advantage, with person placing confidence in him, is bound to show that no unreasonable use has been made of that confidence. Gibson v. Jeyes, 6 Ves. 278 ; 5 R. R. 295.

Whenever a person obtains, by voluntary donation, a benefit from another, he is bound, if the transaction be questioned, to prove that the transaction was righteous, and that the donor voluntarily and deliberately did the act, knowing its nature and effect. Cooke v. Lamotte, 15 Beav. 234 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 371.

The above rule is not confined to the cases of attorney and client, parent and child, &c., but is general. Ib.

If a person obtain by voluntary donation a large pecuniary benefit from another, the burthen of proving the transaction righteous falls on the person taking the benefit, and this is proved by showing that the donor fully understood what he was doing : but, where the relation of the parties is such that undue influence might have been exercised, it must also be shown that the disposition of the donor was not produced by undue influence. In many cases the court, from the relations existing between the parties, infers the probability of undue influence, as in the cases of guardian and ward, solicitor and client, spiritual adviser and pupil, medical adviser and patient, and the like. Transactions between such persons are watched with jealousy, not only to see that the party fully understood the act, but also that it was not brought about by the exercise of that influence. The relation of parent and child comes within this class. Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 482 ; 17 Jur. 99.

If the right to a benefit taken by a person in a confidential situation be questioned in equity, and it is sought to be sustained as an exercise of liberality, it must be shown that it was the intention of the party from whom the benefit emanated to be liberal ; but intention imports knowledge, and liberality imports the absence of influence, and the onus of establishing a gift in such circumstances rests with the party who has received it. Billage v. Southee, 9 Hare, 534. S. C., nom. Billing v. Southee, 21 L. J., Ch. 472 ; 16 Jur. 48.

In transactions where one party stood in such relation to the other party as guardian, attorney, trustee, &c., the proof that no advantage was taken of that relation lies upon the former ; but it is not necessary for the validity of the transaction that it should be effected by the interposition of a third person. Where the relation between the parties was only friendship, the one however habitually relying upon the other for advice, employing him in some sort of business, &c., it is for those who impugn the transaction to prove that an undue advantage was taken of the influence arising out of this relation. Hunter v. Atkins, Coop. t. Brough. 64.

It is incumbent upon persons who receive benefits from others, towards whom they stand in a confidential relation, to show that they had competent and independent advice, and this general principle is not affected by the age or capacity of the persons conferring the benefits, or the nature of the benefits conferred. But this principle does not extend to interfere with mere trifling gifts, without proof, not only of influence derived from the confidential relation, but of mala fides, or of undue or unfair exercise of the influence. Rhodes v. Bate, 35 L. J., Ch. 267 ; L. R. 1 Ch. 252 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 178 ; 13 L. T. 778 ; 14 W. R. 292.

Duty of Persons Paying, by Direction of Others of Tender Years.]—Persons paying money to one standing in loco parentis, by the direction of persons of tender years, though of full age, are bound to see that such persons thoroughly understand the transaction, and have had access to independent advice. Dettmar v. Metropolitan and Provincial Bank, 1 H. & M. 641 ; 10 L. T. 63 ; 3 N. R. 364.

Ratification.]—Although a gift made to a person standing in a confidential relation to the donor may be voidable, yet, if, after the confidential relation has ceased to exist, the donor intentionally elects to abide by the gift, and does in fact abide by it, it cannot be impeached after his death, even if it is not proved that the donor was aware that the gift was voidable at his election. Rhodes v. Bate (L. R. 1 Ch. 252) commented on. Mitchell v. Homfray, 45 L. T. 694 ; 29 W. R. 558.

b. Trustee and Beneficiary.

i. Generally.

Purchase by Trustee and Executor—Trustee and Executor, who.]—A person, named as executor and trustee under a will, did not formally renounce probate until after the death of the acting executrix, nor did he ever disclaim by deed the trust of the real estate, but he purchased a part of the real estate, and took the conveyance from the widow, who was tenant for life, and the heir to whom the estate must have descended upon the disclaimer of the trust. During the life of the acting executrix, however, he interfered in the disposition of the testator's property, as her friend or agent :—Held, that he was not, under the circumstances, chargeable as executor or trustee. Stacey v. Elph, 1 Myl. & K. 195 ; 2 L. J., Ch. 50.

Generally.]—Trustee not to derive advantage from a purchase of trust property. Whelpdale v. Cookson, 1 Ves. 9.

An agent employed to purchase cannot buy his own goods for his principal, neither can an agent, employed to sell, purchase for himself his principal's goods. Principals may either repudiate such transactions altogether, or adopt and take the benefit of them. The same rule applies to the case of trustee and cestui que trust, and to other relations, and even though the transaction be perfectly bonâ fide. Bentley v. Craven, 18 Beav. 75.

Matters unconnected with Trust.]—The circumstance that two parties stand to each other in the relation of trustee and cestui que trust does not affect any dealings between them unconnected with the subject of the trust. Knight v. Majoribanks, 2 Mac. & G. 10 ; 2 Hall & Tw. 308. Affirming 11 Beav. 322 ; 13 Jur. 136.

Purchase by Trustee—General rule.]—General rule upon purchase of trust property by trustees on their own account is that, at the option of the cestui que trust, it shall be resold, being put up at the price at which the trustees purchased, who, if there is no advance, shall be held to their purchase. Lister v. Lister, 6 Ves. 631, a.

Purchase by Trustee.]—The court will, as of course, and irrespectively of the adequacy of the purchase money, set aside a purchase by a trustee of the trust property. Dyson v. Lum, 14 L. T. 588; 14 W. R. 788.

The rule in equity which invalidates a sale made by a trustee to himself, admits of qualification; and, where a person acting in a fiduciary character has openly, and with perfect fairness, and with the concurrence of those who have a fiduciary interest in the property, contracted for the purchase, the court will not set it aside. Dover v. Buck, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 580; 12 L. T. 136.

To invalidate a purchase by a trustee, it is quite enough that the act has a tendency to injure the trust, a tendency to interfere with his duty. Hamilton v. Wright, 9 Cl. & F. 111.

Purchase by a trustee from the cestui que trust established, under circumstances, with confirmation and acquiescence. Morse v. Royal, 12 Ves. 355; 8 R. R. 338.

—— Trustee for Sale.]—A trustee for sale can neither directly nor indirectly purchase trust property. Franks v. Bollans, 17 L. T. 309.

There is no general rule that a trustee to sell shall not be himself the purchaser, but he shall not thereby gain profit to himself. Whichcote v. Lawrence, 3 Ves. 740.

There is no rule that a trustee to sell cannot be the purchaser; but however fair the transaction, it must be subject to an option in the cestui que trust, if he comes in a reasonable time to have a resale, unless the trustee, to prevent that, purchases under an application to the court. Campbell v. Walker, 5 Ves. 678; 5 R. R. 135.

—— Trustee for Payment of Debts.]—Purchase under trust to pay debts by trustee as agent for his father, both creditors in partnership, established under circumstances. Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 234; 1 Smith, 233; 7 R. R. 167.

Purchase from his client by a solicitor, who was also trustee for the sale of the estate for payment of debts, confirmed, upon the ground of his having attempted ineffectually to sell, of there being no fraud in the transaction, and of the purchase having been recognised and approved of by the cestui que trust. Clarke v. Swaile, 2 Eden, 134.

—— Trustee, who.]—A., having contracted for the purchase of an estate, agrees, by deed, to convey it to two partners to whom he was indebted, upon trust to sell and, after paying prior charges to retain their own debts; and it was provided that the power of sale might be exercised by the partners before any conveyance should be made to them. No conveyance was ever made or required to be made to the partners, nor did they attempt to exercise the power of sale, and one of them having died, the survivor agrees with an agent of A. to purchase the estate;—Held, that he was not a trustee, but stood in the situation of a creditor, with a security for his debt, and, therefore, was not disqualified from purchasing the estate. Chambers v. Waters, 3 Sim. 42; Coop. t. Brough. 91. Affirmed sub nom. Watere v. Groom, 11 Cl. & F. 684.

—— Setting Aside.]—Conveyance of an estate to D., by way of security for the investment of a specific sum of stock, and for payment of the dividends in the meantime, with a power of sale in case of default. Under this deed, D. is a trustee for the party making the conveyance, and, as such, disabled from purchasing for himself, so long as he continues to be a trustee without the consent of his cestui que trust; therefore, the estate being put up to sale by auction, at which C. as agent for D. was the only bidder, and it was knocked down to him, the sale was decreed not to stand, although no evidence of fraud or undervalue, and not to be supported by evidence of the plaintiffs having known and approved of the sale taking place, and afterwards attempting to damp it, nor of a previous conversation with her attorney, in which the latter exhorted the purchaser to bid a good price for the estate to keep up the sale. Downes v. Grazebrook, 3 Mer. 200; 17 R. R. 62.

Purchase by Trustee through Trustee—Setting Aside.]—Trustee for sale purchased through a trustee, at an undervalue; though without fraud, and by auction; and the cestui que trust, being an infant, incapable of discharging the trustees, the purchase set aside with costs. Sanderson v. Walker, 13 Ves. 601; 9 R. R. 234.

Purchase by Nephew of Trustee—Setting Aside.]—A., a nephew of a former trustee of B.'s property, being commissioned by his uncle to advise B., a young man, aged twenty-three, of intemperate and extravagant habits, in the settlement of his college debts, which amounted to 1,000*l.*, and to advance him 500*l.* for the purpose, offered to give him 7,000*l.* for his undivided moiety of an estate under which there were coal mines, the working of which had been discontinued for fifteen years. Pending the negotiations, A. obtained from C., a mining engineer, an estimate putting the value of the minerals under the entire estate at 20,000*l.* A separate solicitor was employed for B. A. did not communicate the valuation to B., nor did he suggest to him that he should consult a mineral surveyor before concluding the matter. B. accepted A.'s offer of 7,000*l.*, and died shortly after executing the conveyance. On bill by B.'s administrator to set aside the purchase:—Held, that such a fiduciary relation existed, that the suppression from B. of C.'s valuation rendered it impossible for the court to sustain A.'s purchase. Tate v. Williamson, L. R. 1 Eq. 528; 14 L. T. 163; 14 W. R. 449.

Purchase by Agent of Trustee.]—The agent of trustee for sale of estate employed therein cannot purchase same. Whitcomb v. Minchin, 5 Madd. 91.

Purchase by Assignee.]—The rule against purchase of trust property by trustee applies with more force to assignees of bankrupt. Bennett, Ex parte, 10 Ves. 395; 8 R. R. 1.

Liberty to Purchase.]—After an ineffectual attempt to sell by auction an estate devised in trust for sale, liberty was given to one of the trustees to purchase it at the price at which it had been bought in, upon its appearing beneficial to the parties interested. Farmer v. Dean, 32 Beav. 327.

Trustee Bidding at Sale.]—A trustee is not allowed to bid at the sale of the trust estate, although the sale takes place by the order and under the direction of the court, and the trustee is also a mortgagee of the trust estate, and has likewise a beneficial interest in a share of the equity of redemption. Tennant v. Trenchard,

Purchase by Trustee—Right to Beneficial Interest in Purchase.]—A fund was settled on husband and wife successively for life, with remainder to the husband absolutely. The husband became bankrupt, and the trustee purchased his interest in the funds from the assignees, under an agreement between the trustee and the husband to divide the profit. The purchase money was paid out of part of the trust funds :—Held, on the death of the wife, that the trustee could claim no beneficial interest in the purchase, and that the fund belonged exclusively to the representatives of the husband. Vaughton v. Noble, 30 Beav. 34.

Trustee for Sale instigating Purchase.]—Trustees of the marriage settlement of H.'s wife purchased at his instigation real estate of which he was sole trustee for sale. He was employed as solicitor in the purchase, and advanced some of the purchase money. H.'s cestuis que trustent disputed the sale :—Held, that the sale was not impeachable. Hickley v. Hickley, 45 L. J., Ch. 401 ; 2 Ch. D. 190 ; 34 L. T. 441 ; 24 W. R. 604.

Engaging in Adventure.]—Trustee having engaged trust property in an adventure cannot sell either to himself or another. Wilkinson v. Stafford, 1 Ves. J. 42.

Release by Cestui que Trust.]—Degree of weight to be attached to releases executed by cestuis que trust within a few days of their coming of age, when such releases profess to proceed upon the examination of complicated accounts. Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 2 Keen, 722 ; 4 Myl. & Cr. 41 ; 8 L. J., Ch. 177 ; 3 Jur. 596.

Compromise Rescinded.]—A deed of compromise executed by cestui que trust, with the representatives and creditors of a deceased trustee, guilty of a breach of trust, rescinded, and co-trustees declared responsible. Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 2 ; 19 R. R. 155.

Patron and Living.]—Where the bishop, as patron, being trustee, and bound to protect the interest of a rectory, advanced money to the then rector, for the purpose of erecting a new rectory-house, and obtained a grant of an annuity to be charged on the living under a private act ; and the grant being set aside on the ground of the incapacity of the bishop from becoming the purchaser of the annuity, at the suit of the succeeding rector :—Held, that he had a right to set it aside altogether, and the bishop not entitled to an inquiry as to what was a proper annuity to be granted, and have it charged on the succeeding rectors ; and the amount of the debt incurred having been satisfied, the deed ordered to be cancelled. Greenlaw v. King, 3 Beav. 49. Affirmed, 10 L. J., Ch. 129 ; 5 Jur. 18.

Purchase of Debts—Account—Undervalue.]—Trustee buying debts for less than is due shall not be allowed for the whole. Anon., 1 Salk. 155.

Purchase of Charge—Undervalue.]—A trustee, who buys up at an under price a charge on the trust property, may, if for a long lapse of years the cestuis que trustent refuse to adopt the purchase, keep it for himself. Barwell v. Barwell, 34 Beav. 371.

In 1834 A., one of several cestuis que trustent, mortgaged his share for 10,500*l*. In 1842 the trustees bought up the mortgage for 1,200*l*. for the benefit of A.'s widow and family, but they were unable to find the purchase money. Thereupon three other cestuis que trustent became the purchasers, and six years afterwards they became trustees. By an unexpected sale of the trust property in 1863, the mortgage-money was paid. Upon a bill filed in 1864 by the widow :—Held, that she was entitled to no interest in the beneficial purchase. Ib.

Purchase by Trustee for Creditors of Annuity for which Debtor was Surety.]—Where the appellant executed a general trust disposition of all his property for the benefit of his creditors, under which deed, by a clause of devolution, the respondent became a trustee, but, in the interval, the appellant had become surety in a bond for the payment of an annuity, of which bond the respondent obtained an assignment for valuable consideration :—Held, that, as, by the purchase of the annuity, he obtained an interest in direct conflict with that of the creditors, and as to the annuity, which was unfettered by the deed, he was in a great measure enabled to defeat its objects, his representatives could not enforce the annuity deed (reversing the judgment below). Hamilton v. Wright, 9 Cl. & F. 111.

Purchase of Legacy—Setting Aside.]—A bill was filed by a cestui que trust to set aside a purchase by a trustee of a legacy, on the ground that the trustee had improperly alleged that the interest was contingent :—Held, that as the allegation of fraud was not substantiated, and the parties had dealt with one another on equal terms, the sale ought not to be set aside. Luff v. Lord, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 50 ; 11 L. T. 695. Affirming 34 Beav. 220.

The court supported the sale, though the vendor was in distressed circumstances, on the following grounds : The vendor well knew his position, and employed his own solicitor ; the proposal for the sale proceeded from the vendor ; after unavailing attempts to sell elsewhere, the trustee was an unwilling purchaser ; and the sale was only completed upon threats of the cestui que trust to file a bill for the specific performance ; the assets out of which the legacy was to be paid were in litigation and doubt, so as to make the property unmarketable ; and the legacy was subject to the right of the vendor's wife to a settlement and to her right by survivorship. S. C., 34 Beav. 220.

Purchase by Trustee for Sale—Purchase of Reversionary Interest.]—Distinction between a purchase by a trustee for sale and a purchase of a reversionary interest by a trustee from his cestui que trust. The former is absolutely void, and in the second case the burden of proof lies on the trustee, to show that every possible security and advantage were given to the cestui que trust, and that as much as possible was gained for him in the transaction, and as could have been obtained under any other circumstances. Denton v. Donner, 23 Beav. 285.

Purchase of Reversionary Interest of Wife.]—If a trustee of a marriage settlement himself purchases a reversionary interest of the wife, comprised in the settlement, the sale will be set aside, but on the terms that all money actually paid to the wife alone, or by her sole direction, shall be a charge upon that reversionary interest, after all the trusts of the settlement have been satisfied. Spring v. Pride, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 646; 10 L. T. 473; 12 W. R. 892.

—— Retirement.]—A trustee cannot retire from the trust for the purpose of such a purchase. Ib.

Grant in Reversion obtained by Trustee—Assignment to Purchaser with Notice—Setting aside Confirmation.]—Grants in reversion obtained by an agent and trustee from his employers and cestuis que trustent by fraud and misrepresentation, afterwards assigned for valuable consideration to a purchaser having notice of the facts and nature of the title, set aside. A conveyance taken after the grants, the fiduciary relations still existing, and the grantor ignorant of his rights, is a continuation of the fraud, and not a confirmation. Dunbar v. Tredennick, 2 Ball & B. 304.

Trustee becoming Mortgagee under Power.]—The trust deeds of certain Wesleyan-Methodist chapels contained powers of raising money by mortgage for the purposes of the trusts:—Held, that any of the trustees of the chapels might be mortgagees under this power, and that, if they were such mortgagees, they might exercise all the rights of mortgagees, although in opposition to the trusts. Att.-Gen. v. Hardy, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 338; 20 L. J., Ch. 450; 15 Jur. 441.

Contract by Trustee with Himself.]—A mere contract between a trustee for sale and himself to sell on the one hand, and buy on the other, trust property sold by auction, is not a contract which can be enforced at the instance of his heir-at-law, as against the next of kin. Ingle v. Richards, 28 Beav. 361; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1178; 8 W. R. 697.

Contract between Trustee and Beneficiary.]—A., a trustee, verbally promised his cestuis que trustent, that if they would concur in a sale of the trust estate, for its full value to C., he would bequeath to them, by his will, at least as much as they would get under their father's will. A. had an interest in the purchase:—Held, that the contract was binding, though by parol; secondly, that there was a sufficient consideration; thirdly, that it was sufficiently certain; and, fourthly, the court would enforce it. Ridley v. Ridley, 34 Beav. 478.

Setting Aside—Lapse of Time.]—Purchase of trust property by trustees for their own benefit set aside after a considerable lapse of time and several assignments. Att.-Gen. v. Dudley (Lord), Coop. 146; 14 R. R. 226.

Bill to set aside a purchase by a trustee for himself and his children, and after a lapse of eighteen years dismissed upon the length of time only. Gregory v. Gregory, G. Cooper, 201. Affirmed, Jacob, 631; 14 R. R. 244; 23 id. 167.

Purchase by trustee of trust property set aside, considerable length of time before bill filed having no effect, as it did not distinctly appear that the cestui que trust knew the purchase was made on account of the trustee. Randall v. Errington, 10 Ves. 423; 8 R. R. 18.

—— Where Advantage Precluded.]—Semble, where trustee is in such a situation as precludes advantage over cestui que trust, dealing between them will not be set aside. Naylor v. Wynch, 1 Sim. & S. 566; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 132; 7 id. 6; 24 R. R. 227.

Purchase by Trustee—Setting Aside.]—A testator bequeathed a sum of long annuities to trustees, upon trust for his daughter for life, for her separate use, and after her death, upon trust for such persons as she should by will appoint. One of the trustees purchased of the daughter and her husband the absolute interest in the long annuities, and took an assignment to himself of the daughter's life interest in them, accompanied by what purported to be an execution by the same instrument of her testamentary power over the reversion, with a covenant by the daughter and her husband for quiet enjoyment, and for further assurance. It was alleged that the price paid was inadequate:—Held, that, independently of any question of inadequacy of price, the transaction could not stand; and upon the daughter's offer, after her husband's death, to repay the consideration money with interest, the deed was set aside. Scott v. Davis, 4 Myl. & Cr. 87; 2 Jur. 1057.

—— False Representation—Setting Aside.]—The trustee of a fund to which a young lady was entitled in remainder after the death of her mother, at the request of a needy father, advanced sums of money amounting to 460*l.*, to enable the father to educate her. Shortly after she came of age, being engaged to be married, she, by deed prepared by the father's solicitor, reciting a contract for sale at the price of 250*l.*, for which a receipt was indorsed, assigned the fund absolutely to the trustee, and married on the following day. The trustee was present at the wedding, but the husband was informed neither of the existence of the fund nor of the deed. On a bill by husband and wife:—Held, that the deed, falsely representing the transaction to be an actual sale, must be set aside. Lewellin v. Cobbold, 1 Sm. & G. 376; 17 Jur. 448; 1 W. R. 211.

Setting Aside—Lapse of Time.]—A testatrix gave a share in her residuary estate in trust for life, with remainder to the daughter's children, and if none attained twenty-one (which happened) as she should appoint generally. In 1821 the daughter, without any legal advice except that of the acting trustee, who was a solicitor, and was under the will interested in the residuary estate, appointed that certain debts due from her husband to the testatrix should be accepted as part of the daughter's share. Her husband became soon afterwards bankrupt and died in 1853, and she died in 1858, having in settlements of accounts with the trustees from time to time proceeded on the footing of the deed:—Held, that the bill filed by his representatives in 1859 to set aside the deed on the ground of the appointment being a dealing between trustee and cestui que trust, to the advantage of the former and prejudice of the latter, under undue influence and without independent advice, was too late. Shottowe v. Williams, 3 De G. F. & J. 535.

Purchase by Trustee—Lapse of Time—Setting Aside—Allowance for Improvements.]—A., by will, gave real property to trustees to sell; one of the trustees became the purchaser, the consideration being sums due from the testator's estate to him; the estate descended to his son and grandson. Bill filed by a person having a reversionary contingent interest in the produce of the sale under the will, forty years after the transaction, and twenty-seven years after she came of age, to set aside the contract :—Held, that the conveyance was void ; that no laches were committed ; and that the representative of the purchaser should be allowed the additional value of the estate, caused by the money expended in improvements, a reference being directed to the master for the purpose of ascertaining it. Chennell v. Martin, 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 208.

Purchase—Setting Aside—Evidence.]—Where a suit was instituted to set aside a purchase made by a trustee of the trust property :—Held, that it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he had a substantial interest in setting aside the sale ; and as it appeared that, according to the plaintiff's own statement, there would be, after paying the creditors, no surplus, the bill was dismissed, but without costs. Dover v. Buck, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 580 ; 12 L. T. 136.

To set aside a purchase by a trustee of the trust property, it is not necessary to show that he has made an advantage. James, Ex parte, 8 Ves. 346 ; 7 R. R. 56. S. P., Bennett, Ex parte, 10 Ves. 393 ; 8 R. R. 1.

Onus.]—When a trustee purchases of his cestui que trust, the onus of proving the fairness of the transaction is not shifted by the fact that the vendor is a co-trustee. Gray v. Warner, Biel, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 556 ; 28 L. T. 835 ; 21 W. R. 808.

Account.] — One of several trustees to sell having purchased, and afterwards sold at a profit, therefore decreed to account for that profit, with costs. Whichcote v. Lawrence, 3 Ves. 740.

A trustee, purchasing a leasehold farm devised to him for the use of the plaintiff, at an appraisement, afterwards renewing the lease in his own name, and purchasing part of the testator's stock, declared to be trustee, and to be accountable for the same to the plaintiff. Killick v. Flexney, 4 Bro. C. C. 161.

A., reposing an unlimited confidence in B., makes him a trustee of his estates, for the purpose of paying his debts. B., at the same time, negotiates with A. for the absolute sale of those estates to himself, and obtains a conveyance at an under-value ; B. afterwards sells the estates at a very advanced price. This conduct of B. was held to be fraudulent, and he was decreed to account to A. for the advanced price, with interest and costs ; although it appeared that the purchaser at the advanced price was a considerable loser by his bargain. Mackreth v. Fox, 4 Bro. P. C. 258 ; 2 Bro. C. C. 400 ; 2 Cox, 320.

Setting Aside—Costs against Solicitor for Neglect.]—A woman having been induced, by the fraud and undue influence of her agent and trustee, to execute deeds by which, without any consideration, she conveyed all her property to him absolutely, filed a bill against his executor to set them aside. Her former solicitor, who prepared and had the custody of the deeds, was joined as a defendant for purposes of discovery, and costs were prayed against him, as well as the executor, on the ground of neglect of duty. The bill also charged him with fraud, which, however, was not proved. Throughout the litigation he acted as the solicitor of the executor. A decree was made, setting aside the deeds with costs against the trustee's estate, and the solicitor was ordered to pay the whole costs of the suit, in case the estate proved insufficient to pay them. Baker v. Loader, 42 L. J., Ch. 113 ; L. R. 16 Eq. 49 ; 21 W. R. 167.

Practice—Form of Decree.]—Form of decree against a trustee purchasing the trust estate at an alleged undervalue, and making permanent improvements thereon. Williamson v. Seaber, 3 Y. & C. 717.

iii. Executors.

Purchase—Assets.] — An executor shall not be permitted, either immediately or by means of a trustee, to be the purchaser from himself of any part of the assets, but shall be considered a trustee for the persons interested in the estate, and shall account for the utmost extent of advantage made by him of the subject so purchased. Hall v. Hallet, 1 Cox, 134 ; 1 R. R. 3.

—— Testator's Stock-in-Trade.]—Executor is not disqualified from entering into contract with his executor for purchase of testator's stock-in-trade ; it is not in itself a violation of his duty. But the court requires that an executor so dealing shall authenticate the transactions, and have available proof of full value. The onus of doing that he places upon himself. Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 191.

—— Share in Partnership.]—Sale of a testator's share in a partnership trade, and the property belonging to it, by his executors to his partners, for the purpose of being resold to one of his executors, set aside, and his estate held entitled to his aliquot proportion of the subsequent profits, as if the partnership had continued. Interest allowed at 5 per cent. on sums paid out to his estate. Cooke v. Collingridge, Jacob, 607 ; 1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 74 ; 23 R. R. 155, 767.

—— Testator's Debts.]—Executor cannot buy, for his own benefit, debts due from the testator's estate. James, Ex parte, 8 Ves. 346.

—— Legacy.]—The purchase by an executor of his co-executor's legacy in consideration of a life annuity, set aside on the ground of insufficiency of price. Gray v. Warner, Beil, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 556 ; 28 L. T. 835 ; 21 W. R. 808.

An executor purchased up the legacies of several legatees for sums of money less in amount than their respective legacies :—Held, that this transaction could not be sustained. Barton v. Hassard, 3 Dr. & War. 461.

—— Residue.]—Purchase by a trustee and executor from his cestui que trust of a portion of an unascertained residue set aside. Smedley v. Varley, 23 Beav. 358.

—— Infant's Estate.]—Party acting as agent or executor cannot purchase an infant's estate. Mulvany v. Dillon, 1 Ball & B. 418 ; 12 R. R. 43.

—— By Husband of Administratrix.]—The husband of an administratrix is in a fiduciary position, and cannot purchase from a co-administratrix without the consent of all the cestuis que trustent. Pepperell, In re, Pepperell v. Chamberlain, 27 W. R. 410.

Sale by Administrator—To Brother.] — Sale

by an administrator to his brother and co-partner set aside, it appearing to the court from the evidence that the sale was made at an under value so gross that it ought to be deemed fraudulent and void. Rice v. Gordon, 11 Beav. 265.

—— To Son.]—Sale by administratrix of the intestate's property to her own son, under an open contract and for undervalue, set aside. John v. Jones, 34 L. T. 570.

Purchase of Incumbrance by Personal Representative, Heir-at-Law.]—The heir-at-law, who was also the personal representative of a deceased debtor, purchased up an incumbrance on the estate for less than the sum due on foot of it :—Held, under the circumstances, that he was entitled to the full amount of the sum secured by it, as against a subsequent incumbrancer, a solicitor, who advised the purchase as a means of providing for the heir, and did not disclose that the purchase would enure to his own benefit. Bayly v. Wilkins, 3 Jo. & Lat. 630.

Deed unduly obtained.]—Two executors and trustees under will would not prove will, nor suffer cestui que trust to take out letters of administration cum testamento annexo till he had executed a deed by which he was to pay sums of money for each :—Held, deed was unduly obtained, and no allowance to be made to executors for such sums of money. Aylliffe v. Murray, 2 Atk. 58.

Settlement by Legatee, under persuasion of Executor.]—A young lady, entitled to a legacy of stock, was induced by the executors to execute a settlement, under which she and two trustees were to hold the stock, upon trust for herself for life for her separate use, and after her death upon such trusts as she should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, upon trust for the persons who would have been entitled to it as her next of kin if she had died possessed of it intestate and without having been married : with a proviso that the trustees, on her request in writing, should join with her in disposing of all or any part of the fund as she might direct. The young lady executed this settlement without any professional advice, and without having had any communication on the subject, except with the executors. The stock was transferred by the executors directly into the joint names of herself and the two trustees. She married about two months afterwards. Upon her death her husband, as her administrator, filed a bill to set aside the settlement :—Held, that such a settlement made in such circumstances was not binding upon her, and that her administrator was entitled to have it set aside. Prideaux v. Lonsdale, 1 De G. J. & S. 433; 2 N. R. 144; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 507; 8 L. T. 554; 11 W. R. 705.

Gift to Executor by Beneficiary—Pressure—Cancellation.]—Where a document has been obtained by an executor named in a will, before probate, from a beneficiary, for a gift by the latter to the former, the court will regard the transaction with great suspicion, and will not uphold it unless the circumstances show that there was no misrepresentation, pressure, or unfairness on the executor's part; that the beneficiary acted deliberately, and thoroughly knew and appreciated what he was doing; that he signed the document independently of any influence on the executor's part, and without being actuated by any fear of not complying with the wishes of the executor. Wheeler v. Sargeant, 3 R. 663; 69 L. T. 181.

Purchase, by Administrator, from Beneficiary—Setting Aside.]—On the death of an intestate leaving four sons and one daughter, the two eldest sons took out administration to his estate. By deed of family arrangement, the five children, of whom the youngest son was an infant, mortgaged to trustees their respective interests in their father's estate for 1,084*l.*, that being the amount of the two fifth shares therein of the daughter and the infant son, as shown by an account set out in a schedule, and based on a valuation made a year previously, in which the figures had been altered to correspond with the increase or decrease of the various items since the valuation, and which showed a balance giving 542*l.* to each child. Subject to the mortgage, in respect of which certified sums were to be paid by the three eldest brothers, the trustees were to hold the property in trust for the three eldest brothers. The sums to be paid by the latter were to form a sinking fund for the reduction of the principal of the shares. By her subsequent marriage settlement the daughter recited that she was entitled to the 542*l.* under the former deed, and settled that on trust for herself for life, then for her husband for life, then for children as she should appoint by deed or will; in default of appointment, for sons at twenty-one, and daughters at twenty-one or marriage; if no children, and she survived her husband, for herself absolutely; or, if she were not the survivor, then as she should appoint by will, or, in default of such appointment, for her next of kin. In an action, commenced more than nine years after the deed of arrangement, by the daughter, her husband and infant children, against her brothers and the trustees of the deed of settlement, to have the deed of family arrangement set aside, except so far as it was a security for 542*l.* on account of her share, on the ground of infancy, undue influence, pressure, and want of legal advice, and to have the settlement rectified :—Held, that the special allegations of impropriety failed on the evidence, but that, inasmuch as the deed of arrangement constituted a purchase by the administrators of the intestate's estate, who were in the position of trustees, from two of their cestuis que trustent, and in such cases the parties must be dealing completely at arm's length, with full disclosure, and with entire absence of influence, the plaintiffs were entitled, immediately after the execution of the deed, to have it set aside, on the ground of the unsatisfactory nature of the valuation and the purchasers not being at arm's length, and that the mere lapse of time was no fatal bar. Worssam, In re, Hemery v. Worssam, 51 L. J., Ch. 669; 46 L. T. 584.

—— Bar to Setting Aside.]—Held, also, that the subsequent marriage settlement constituted a fatal bar to the deed being set aside, since it was not established that the effect of setting aside the deed would be to benefit the parties interested under the settlement, and the settlement could therefore not be allowed to be varied, and, that being so, the plaintiffs were not in a position, supposing the result of setting aside the deed were to show that they had received too much under it, to make good to the defendants the amount so due to them. Ib.

—— Practice—Inquiry.]—Held, further, that an inquiry could not be granted in the present action whether it would or would not be for the benefit of the parties entitled under the settlement for the deed to be set aside and the settlement varied, since the brothers, who were parties to the action, had no interest in the determination of what was for the interest of the parties entitled under the settlement. Ib.

Lapse of Time.]—Where there is fraud in the transaction, a purchase by executor will be set aside after twenty years, but otherwise if done openly and bonâ fide. Watson v. Toone, 6 Madd. 153. Semble, S. C. nom. Whatton v. Toone, 5 Madd. 54.

c. Family Relations.

i. Parent and Child.

a. Gifts and Conveyances.

Generally.]—Where one person possesses undoubted influence over another, he must not, even if the influence springs from ties of the most sacred and legitimate character,—as, for instance, that of a father over his own daughter,—exert his influence for his own advantage. Brown v. Kennedy, 33 L. J., Ch. 71; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1163; 9 L. T. 302; 12 W. R. 224.

Deeds from child to parent are not void in se; fraud, &c., must be shown to set them aside. Manners v. Banning, 2 Eq. Abr. 282.

The relation of father and daughter does not of itself render the validity of an arrangement between persons thus related, respecting a reversionary interest of the daughter, so doubtful as to justify a trustee in refusing to transfer a fund, in pursuance of the arrangement, without the indemnity of the court. A trustee so refusing, and who did not show that he had endeavoured to ascertain the real nature of the transaction, was decreed to pay costs. Firmin v. Pulham, 2 De G. & Sm. 99; 12 Jur. 410.

A gift by a child to her parent immediately after attaining twenty-one cannot, under ordinary circumstances, be supported. Bury v. Oppenheim, 26 Beav. 594.

Soon after attaining twenty-one, a daughter sold her reversionary interest, and the amount was received by her father. He said she had determined that the most advantageous course for her to adopt would be to give the money to him to be applied by him in improving and extending his business, in order to increase his estate, and to enable him better to provide for his family after his decease, and she accordingly gave him the money:—Held, that the father was a trustee of the money for the daughter, and bound to repay it. Ib.

—— Relief—Right of Third Party.]—Equity will relieve against a contract entered into by a child with a parent for an appointment from him; and a purchaser from the parent, with notice of the fraud, will be affected with it. Palmer v. Wheeler, 2 Ball & B. 30; 12 R. R. 60.

Son's Right to Impeach Exercise of Parental Authority.]—Where a son, who had joined his father in granting an annuity, which was assigned to the defendant, allowed and encouraged the latter to insure the life for which it was granted:—Held, he could not afterwards impeach the annuity as obtained under an undue exercise of parental authority. Rogers v. Bruce, Beat. 486.

Father and Son dealing with Third Persons.]—When a father and son are dealing with a third person, there is no rule which requires that the father and son should act by separate solicitors. Cooke v. Burtchaell, 2 Dr. & War. 165.

Release of Orphanage Share.]—On a child's releasing to his father his orphanage part, if the release be gained by threats or unduly, the same will be set aside in equity. Blundell v. Barker, 1 P. Wms. 639; 10 Mod. 451.

A freeman of London taking advantage of his son's necessities, in consideration of a bond for securing the son an annuity of 50*l.*, prevailed on him to release his share of orphanage. The father also prevailed on another of his sons to give him a release of his share of orphanage in consideration of an annuity of the same nature, but there were not the same proofs of his being forced into the release, and the father had at times advanced him 300*l.* or 400*l.*:—Held, the plaintiff being turned out of doors, left destitute and void of maintenance, a release extorted could not be supported. The other son was equally entitled to be relieved. Heron v. Heron, 2 Atk. 160.

By the custom of London, the orphanage part must go in equal shares, and, if the father turn the money in any other shape which he thinks may take it out of the custom, yet the court has relieved the children. Ib.

If a father, merely for the sake of maintenance, and not for advancement in marriage or trade, oblige his son to release his right to the orphanage share, such release is absolutely void. Ib.

Mortgage by Father and Son.]—Where father and son join in mortgage of father's estate, and father receives the money, and son conveys in consideration of 10*s.*, and there is no covenant in mortgage for payment of money, neither the real nor personal assets of son are bound. Lloyd v. Thursby, 9 Mod. 463.

—— On Agreement—Specific Performance.]—An agreement between father and son, being tenants for life and in tail, having joined in a mortgage of the property for a debt of the son, who was to suffer a recovery and resettle the estate, to the use inter alia of the father in fee in case of the son failing to pay interest on the debt and the father paying and releasing the son therefrom; neither the father nor son paid off the mortgage, but the former paid the interest until his death, and his devisees afterwards paid off the mortgage, the court refused to enforce a specific performance of the agreement, neither party having apparently acted upon it, and it being an agreement for the sale of the son's reversionary interest at an undervalue. Playford v. Playford, 4 Hare, 546.

—— For Benefit of Father—Validity.]—J. had a life estate in land in Devonshire, with remainder to his sons in tail male; R. was his eldest son; S. was J.'s solicitor, to whom J. was indebted in a sum above 9,000*l.* On this sum J. was paying 5 per cent. interest, and the debt was (within 950*l.*) secured by eleven policies of assurance on J.'s life, the premiums of which, as well as the principal money, were charged on his life estate. In March, 1835, it was arranged between J. and S., an arrangement to which R. (who had then only just come of age, and who was living in his father's house) assented, that a disentailing deed should be executed, and that J. and R. should then execute a mortgage to S. for 10,000*l.*, with a power of sale, the difference in the amounts being made up by a further advance, the interest being reduced to 4 per cent., and the policies of assurance assigned to R. for his use; all this was done. In this transaction R. had no other professional advice than that of S., who was his father's solicitor, and was also the mortgagee:—Held, that as to R., this mortgage was invalid. Savery v. King, 5 H. L. Cas. 627; 25 L. J., Ch. 482; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 503; 4 W. R. 571.

—— Sale—Validity.]—J. afterwards borrowed more money from S., repayment of which was secured by charges on the Devonshire estate, executed by both J. and R., and with some of this money property was bought in Hampshire, which was conveyed to R. The incumbrances on the Devonshire estate being thus largely increased, it was afterwards put up to sale (in order to discharge all incumbrances), but was bought in, and was ultimately purchased by S. for a sum of 23,800*l.*, of which 3,000*l.* were paid to R. for his use, and a small balance paid to J. In these various transactions R. had no professional advice but that of S.:—Held, that this sale was invalid, so far as R. was concerned, and accounts were directed. Ib.

—— Delay.]—The bill to set aside these transactions was not filed till 1847:—Held, that, under the circumstances of this case, the delay was no answer to R.'s title to relief. Ib.

Power to Appoint Portions—Father, having Appointed, takes Release of Portion.]—Father under marriage settlement, with power to appoint shares in which his younger children were to take a sum to be raised for their portions, having exercised that power by will, afterwards advances one daughter, took release from her of her portion, and by codicil, revoked his appointment by will as to her:—Held, her portion was to go to the other children. Noel v. Walsingham (Lord), 2 Sim. & S. 99; 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 12; 25 R. R. 164.

Father takes Transfer of Appointed Shares.]—Under a marriage settlement power was given to a father to appoint the trust estates among all or any of his children. The estates were converted into money, and the father obtained a large portion of the trust funds without giving any security for their repayment to the trustees. The father, having one son and four daughters, executed the power in favour of the daughters to the exclusion of the son, and a few days afterwards the daughters transferred their appointed shares in the trust property to their father, who conveyed some real estates, of which he was seised, to them in exchange. The son, after the death of his father, filed a bill to set aside the appointment, and also the deeds effecting the exchange, on the ground of fraud, based upon a collusive agreement between the father and his daughters, by which the father, who was not able to replace the trust moneys, obtained a discharge from the claims of the trustees:—Held, that no benefit had accrued to the father, and that the appointment was good. Askham v. Barker, 22 L. J., Ch. 769; 1 W. R. 279.

Appointment, under Power, by Father, Tenant for Life, to Son in Tail—Lease by Father and Son for Benefit of Father—Conveyance of Son's Interest to Father.]—By a marriage settlement of the year 1780, certain lands were settled upon the husband for life, with remainder to the use of all and every, or such one or more of the children of the marriage, for such estate, not exceeding an estate in tail male, as the husband should appoint; and, in default of appointment, to the first and other sons of the marriage in tail male. By a deed poll of the 14th of January, 1804, the father appointed the lands to his eldest son in tail male; and by an indenture of lease, executed on the 18th of the same month, the father and son, in consideration of the sum of 1,600*l.* therein stated to be applied in payment of debts affecting the estate of the father, and renewal fines then due, demised part of these lands for lives renewable for ever. By deed of the 11th of December, 1807, the son, in consideration of several debts paid for him by the father, and in discharge of the trust and confidence reposed in him, conveyed the lands included in the settlement, and all his interest therein, to the father, his heirs, and assigns. At the time of the execution of the appointment and lease of 1804, there were judgments appearing upon record against the father to the amount of 2,400*l.*; all these judgments were satisfied upon the same day, being a day after the execution of the said lease, but there was no evidence how the consideration money of the lease had been applied, save so far as the statements in the deeds of 1804 and 1807, relative thereto, and the facts in relation to the judgments, might be deemed evidence thereof:—Held, that the deeds in 1804 and 1807 were fraudulent and void, as constituting a dealing by a father for the benefit of himself, and not of his sons, and ought to be set aside. Jackson v. Jackson, Dr. 91.

Supposing the appointment by the deed of 1804 to have failed, quære, what was the operation of the conveyance of 1807. How far was the power affected by the union of the two estates in the father, quære. Ib.

Conveyance to Father, for Advances to Son during and after Minority.]—A son attained twenty-one in 1855, and in 1847 he conveyed to his father his reversionary estate and interest, in consideration of moneys advanced for his commission, outfit, and debts during his minority, and a further sum of 500*l.* then advanced:—Held, that the deed could not stand except as a security for the 500*l.* Potts v. Surr, 34 Beav. 543; 13 W. R. 909.

—— Equality.]—A deed which might otherwise be set aside as having been obtained under undue influence will be upheld if it is not one-sided. Ib.

Conveyance by Son to Father for Son's Benefit—Evidence of Trust—Statute of Frauds.]—A son conveys an estate to his father nominally, as purchaser, but really as a trustee, and in order that the father, who was in better credit than the son, might raise money upon it by way of mortgage, for the use of the son; the father died shortly afterwards, and before any money was raised, having, by a will subsequent to the conveyance, made a general devise of all his real estates; the case is within the Statute of Frauds, and parol evidence is not admissible to prove the trust, but the son has a lien on the estate as vendor, for the apparent consideration, no part of which was paid. Leman v. Whitley, 4 Russ. 422; 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 152.

Agreement by Son to a Provision for Father's Second Wife.]—A man makes his son by first wife agree to a provision for a second wife, and the issue of that marriage. This provision being in the son's own wrong, and he being at this time ignorant of his right, the agreement is a fraud upon him, and he shall not be held to a performance of it. Scrope v. Offley, 1 Bro. P. C. 276.

Promise to pay Father's Legacies.]—Where a son promised to pay his father's legacies if he would forbear to alter his will, such promise shall be enforced. Chamberlaine v. Chamberlaine, 2 Free. C. C. 34.

Semble, it is the constant course of the court to make decrees upon promises of this nature. Ib.

Daughter paying Father's Debt.]—About six months after a lady came of age, a creditor of her father obtained from her securities for his debt. The court was of opinion that the creditor had not used any undue or fraudulent means, or availed himself of the fraud of any other party to procure payment, and held that the mere fact of a daughter voluntarily paying the debt of her father, who was in difficulties, was not, of itself, ground for imputing undue influence to the father, or, even if such influence had been exercised, for imputing knowledge of it to the creditor who received payment in that way. Thornber v. Sheard, 12 Beav. 588.

Bond by Daughter to Step-father for Sum due to Mother for Maintenance.]—A bond given by a daughter who had not received her fortune, to a step-father, for the immediate payment of a sum alleged to be due to her mother for maintenance, ought to be set aside as improvidently executed; the utmost that the mother could claim being a lien on the interest of the daughter's fortune when recovered: an act of the daughter binding the interest of her fortune to that extent would have been valid. Beasley v. Magrath, 2 Sch. & Lef. 31.

Bond, by one just of Age, as Surety for Step-father—Confirmation.]—A young lady who was living with her mother and step-father in 1859, shortly after she came of age, at the solicitation of her step-father, executed a bond as surety to secure the repayment of a sum of money advanced by the defendant payable at the end of six years. In 1866 the defendant brought an action and recovered judgment against the step-father on the bond, and, to avoid an execution, the lady, who was then twenty-nine years of age, but who still resided principally with her step-father, was induced by him to execute a second bond as surety to secure the amount of the judgment and costs. Both bonds were prepared by the step-father's solicitor, and she had no independent advice. In 1872 the defendant brought an action against her on the bonds, and she then filed her bill to set them aside:—Held, that the second bond must be taken as connected with the first, and that, as there was no proof that she was aware of the invalidity of the first bond, the execution of the second bond was not a confirmation of the first, and both bonds were set aside against her. Kempson v. Ashbee, 44 L. J., Ch. 195; L. R. 10 Ch. 15; 31 L. T. 525; 23 W. R. 38.

—— Delay.]—Held, also, that she was not barred by laches, notwithstanding the time which had elapsed before she asserted her right to relief. Ib.

Son, Tenant in Tail, making Family Settlement, from which Father benefits.]—Son, tenant in tail of an estate, upon the death of the mother (who was tenant for life) makes a settlement of it for the benefit of the family, in consequence of an agreement so to do in the mother's life: although the father derives some benefit under the settlement, it shall not be set aside as entered into under undue influence. Kinchant v. Kinchant, 1 Bro. C. C. 369.

Tenant in Tail raising Money with, and for Use of, Father, Tenant for Life.]—Father, tenant for life, procured his son, who was tenant in tail, to join in raising money which the father received and applied to his own use:—Decreed to exonerate the estate, the son being only in the nature of a surety for it as the debt of his father. Peirs v. Peirs, 1 Ves. 521.

Child, Tenant in Remainder, agreeing, with Father's Creditor, to give up Interests.]—A child entitled as tenant in remainder after life of father agreeing with creditor of father, in conjunction with and on behalf of father, to give up certain interests, being deprived by conduct of father of benefit of agreement:—Held, not bound by it. Rhodes v. Cook, 2 Sim. & S. 488; 4 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 147.

Appointment by Parents to Children—Father procuring Release — Setting Aside.]—By a marriage settlement of 1832, real and personal estate of H., the intended wife, was conveyed to trustees in trust for R., the intended husband, for life, and after the death of the survivor of R. and H., in trust for the children of the marriage, as R. and H. or the survivor should appoint, and in default of appointment for the children equally. The trustees allowed R. to obtain possession of the trust fund, which he mixed with moneys of his own, and in 1861 one of the trustees commenced a suit to compel him to replace the fund. By arrangement of the trustees with R., he and H., by deed of the 25th September, 1861, irrevocably appointed the fund equally among the children, four of whom were of age, and one (the plaintiff) a minor. On the following day the four adult children, and two years afterwards the plaintiff, when of age, executed a deed releasing the trustees from the trusts of the settlement. The children executed the release by the direction of their father, without any professional advice or assistance, and in ignorance of its contents or effect, and of their rights under the settlement. R. from time to time paid sums of money for the plaintiff; he purchased for the plaintiff a commission in the army, paid for his outfit, &c., made him an adequate yearly allowance, and paid a large sum for his promotion. No one of the sums so advanced was equal in amount to the plaintiff's share of the trust fund nor was there any evidence that it was stated at the time of the advances, or understood between the plaintiff and R., that they were made out of the trust fund in R.'s hands:—Held, 1st, that the release should be set aside; 2nd, that R.'s position was that of a debtor to his five children for their respective shares of the trust fund; 3rd, that the sums advanced, being respectively less in amount than the plaintiff's share, were not a satisfaction of it, pro tanto, and that R. was not entitled to credit for them. Reade v. Reade, 9 L. R., Ir. 409—C. A.

Charge, by Son just of Age, of Inheritance in Remainder, for benefit of Parents.] — A son entitled in remainder to real estate, expectant on the lives of his mother and father by whom he was maintained, a few days after he attained twenty-one, in order to relieve his parents, who had mortgaged their life interest as a security for moneys borrowed and partly expended in improving the property, from keeping on foot certain life policies, executed a deed charging the inheritance with the mortgage debt, but subsequently filed a bill claiming to have the deeds cancelled on the ground of fraud, which was disproved, and of undue influence. Bill dismissed with costs. Baker v. Bradley, 2 Sm. & G. 531; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 489; 3 W. R. 361.

The reported decision in Field v. Evans, (15 Sim. 375), ascertained to be erroneous. Ib.

An estate stood limited under a will on trust for A. B., the wife of C. B., for life, for her separate use, with remainder to her husband for life, then to such children or issue of A. B. as she should appoint, and in default, to her children, as tenants in common in tail. The receipt clause applicable to A. B.'s life interest contained expressions which the court held to restrain her from anticipation. During the minority of W. B. B. (the only child of A. B.), C. B. and A. B. mortgaged their interests in the estate of J. B. Five days after W. B. B. came of age, he signed, at the office of the solicitor of his father and the mortgagee, a memorandum acknowledging that the money borrowed had been mainly expended in his maintenance and in the improvement of the property, and agreeing to extend the security over his interest in the estate. Three months afterwards A. B. appointed the estate in fee to W. B. B., who thereupon executed a deed reciting the memorandum, and securing the mortgage debt on the fee. W. B. B. had no independent adviser, the solicitor of the father and the mortgagee being the only professional person employed. No advice was given to W. B. B. as to there being a question whether A. B. was restrained from anticipation, and it was alleged that the solicitor was not aware of the existence of the clause raising the question. He had, however, a copy of the will in his possession:—Held, first, that the transaction was not to be judged according to the principles applicable to family arrangements, but, as its only effect was to make the son's estate liable for the father's debts without any consideration moving from the father, it was to be looked upon in the same light as a gift from the son to the father. S. C., 7 De G. M. & G. 597; 25 L. J., Ch. 7; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 98; 4 W. R. 78.

—— Rights of Third Parties having Constructive Notice.]—Held, secondly, that, as the son had no independent adviser, and executed the memorandum immediately on coming of age, and the other instrument shortly afterwards, under the influence of his father and his solicitor, and was never advised that there was a question whether the mortgage of his mother's life interest was valid, the mortgagee, who had constructive notice of these circumstances, could not sustain his mortgage as against the son. Ib.

—— Confirmation.]—Held, thirdly, that the execution by the son of a subsequent mortgage, expressed to be subject to the mortgage in question, did not operate as a confirmation of it. Ib.

—— Abandonment of Security on Faith of Impeachable Mortgage — Effect of.] — The mortgagee, on the faith of the impeached security, abandoned another security before the son had received any advice as to the nature of his mother's interest:—Held, that such abandonment did not affect the son's title to relief. Ib.

—— Acquiescence.] — The son, after being informed that counsel had advised that his mother was restrained from anticipation, acquiesced in the mortgagee's giving up a security from C. B. on the faith of the validity of the mortgage in question:—Held, that under the circumstances, this was not a confirmation, but that the son could only be relieved on the terms of making good to the mortgagee the loss occasioned by giving up C. B.'s security. Ib.

Parents, Tenants for Life, inducing Children, Reversioners, to join in Conveying Reversionary Interests.]—See Hannah v. Hodson, 30 Beav. 19; 5 L. T. 42; 9 W. R. 729, post, col. 272.

Sale by Administratrix to her Son.]—Sale by administratrix of the intestate's property, to her own son under an open contract and for undervalue, set aside. The mere fact of this agreement being made with the son of the administratrix would have been sufficient to vitiate the sale, irrespective of the improvidence of the contract, which imposed no conditions on the intending purchaser, and of the undervalue. John v. Jones, 34 L. T. 570.

Relief—Fraud.]—Where a father obtained an absolute conveyance from a daughter in order to answer one particular purpose, and afterwards makes use of it for another, the court will relieve under the head of fraud. Young v. Peachy, 2 Atk. 254.

In the case of Glissen v. Ogden, the house of lords laid great weight on the circumstance, that the conveyance was obtained by a father from his daughter in distress, and reversed the decree of Lord King, which had refused to give relief. Ib.

Bonds by Son to Father—Security only for Running Balance.]—Bonds and mortgages given by a son to his father for specified sums:—Held, under the circumstances, there having been no payment of interest on the securities, and the son having been maintained by the father up to the death of the latter, to be a security only for a running balance of which the amount, there being no other evidence, was taken from the son's admission. Melland v. Gray, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 199.

Evidence.]—Where a gift is impeached on the ground of undue influence, in order to sustain the gift, the court requires the clearest and most unequivocal evidence that the transaction was fully understood by, and was the voluntary and deliberate act of, the donor. Davies v. Davies, 4 Giff. 417 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1002 ; 9 L. T. 161 ; 11 W. R. 1040.

Where a son, recently after attaining his majority, makes over property to his father without consideration, or for an inadequate consideration, equity will require the father to be able to show that the son was really a free agent, and had adequate and independent advice. Savery v. King, 5 H. L. Cas. 627 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 482 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 503 ; 4 W. R. 571.

In order to maintain a voluntary deed of gift from a son for the benefit of a father, it must be shown both that the son understood the contents of the deed and that he was not under undue parental influence. Turner v. Collins, 41 L. J., Ch. 558 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 329 ; 25 L. T. 779 ; 20 W. R. 305.

Onus.]—When a deed conferring a benefit on a father is executed by a child who is not emancipated from the father's control, if the deed is subsequently impeached by the child, the onus is on the father to show that the child had independent advice, and that he executed the deed with full knowledge of its contents, and with a free intention of giving the father the benefit conferred by it. If this onus be not discharged, the deed will be set aside. This onus extends to a volunteer claiming through the father, and to any person taking with notice of the circumstances which raise the equity, but not further. Bainbrigge v. Browne, 50 L. J., Ch. 522 ; 18 Ch. D. 188 ; 44 L. T. 705 ; 29 W. R. 782.

If a solicitor purports to act in the transaction on behalf of the child, a purchaser for value is entitled to assume that he has given the child proper advice even though he be also acting as the father's solicitor. There is no absolute rule that in such a transaction the father and the child must be advised by different solicitors. Ib.

Presumption of Parental Influence—Onus.]—Where a gift is made by a child to a parent before the parental authority and dominion have terminated, it is to be presumed to be made under parental influence, and therefore invalid ; and the burthen of proof lies on the parent to rebut this presumption, by showing that the child had independent advice, or was otherwise placed in a position to exercise an independent judgment as to the gift. Wright v. Vanderplank, 2 K. & J. 1 ; 8 De G. M. & G. 133 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 753 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 599 ; 4 W. R. 410.

—— Confirmation.]—Such a gift, however, though originally invalid, may be confirmed without any express act of confirmation, all that is requisite being proof of a fixed, deliberate, and unbiassed determination on the part of the child that the gift shall not be impeached, which determination may be shown by the lapse of time during which the transaction is allowed to stand, or by other circumstances. Ib.

Setting Aside Securities for Father's Debt—Onus.]—Securities obtained from sons for their father's debt set aside, the creditors failing to prove (as they were bound to do) that the sons knew the true nature of the transaction, and that no undue influence had been exercised by the father. Berdoe v. Dawson, 34 Beav. 603 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 254 ; 12 L. T. 103 ; 13 W. R. 420.

Setting Aside.]—A father having advanced a child in his infancy, upon his coming of age takes a bond from him to a greater amount than the sums advanced :—Held, the bond obtained by parental influence, and decreed not to stand as a security for the sums advanced, but to set aside altogether. Carpenter v. Heriot, 1 Eden, 338.

—— Fraud on Marital Rights.]—A mother, who was in embarrassed circumstances, induced her daughter, who had just attained twenty-one, to execute a deed, assigning all her interest under the marriage settlement of the mother to the mother absolutely. The daughter was at the time engaged to be married, and the execution of the deed was not disclosed to her intended husband. Upon bill by the daughter and her husband, the deed was set aside, both upon the ground of undue influence, and of fraud upon the marital rights of the husband. Chambers v. Crabbe, 34 Beav. 457 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 277 ; 12 L. T. 46.

—— Lapse of Time.]—Under a marriage settlement, the son of the marriage was entitled to the reversion expectant on the life estate of the father in two sums of money, one of which had come from the father's side, the other from the mother's side. The son had also a large income under the will of his grandfather, and would have a much larger income on attaining the age of twenty-five years. The son had lately attained the age of twenty-one, and was residing with his father. The son, without employing a separate solicitor, executed a deed giving to his father's second wife and her daughter the reversion in both the sums which were included in the marriage settlement, and giving to the father power to appoint the sum which came from the mother's side to any third wife and her children. The son left the father's house five years after the execution of the deed, and employed a separate solicitor two years afterwards, when the subject of setting aside the deed was mentioned. Seven years afterwards the son filed a bill to set aside so much of the deed as related to the sum which had come from the mother's side :—Held, that, though the son understood all the contents of the deed except the power to appoint to a third wife and her children, he was not sufficiently protected from parental influence, and that if the bill had been filed at an earlier time the deed must have been set aside to the extent prayed. Turner v. Collins, 41 L. J., Ch. 558 ; L. R. 7 Ch. 329 ; 25 L. T. 779 ; 20 W. R. 305.

Held, also, that, as the filing of the bill had been so long deferred, the deed must be rectified only by striking out the power. Ib.

Practice—Amending Answer.]—Defendant, by answer, consenting that an award made by her father should be confirmed, prayed she might amend her answer, having made an affidavit that she never read the award, and that her answer was prepared by her father, who had wronged her in the award. Motion refused. Harcourt v. Sherrard, 2 Vern. 434.

b. Resettlement of Entailed Estates.

General Principles.] — Parental influence is inseparable from arrangements between father and son for the resettlement of family estates; but its existence and operation are not sufficient to invalidate the transaction, if it be not exerted for the benefit of the person possessing it. Hartopp v. Hartopp, 21 Beav. 259; 25 L. J., Ch. 471; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 794.

Transactions between parent and child are to be regarded with jealousy; but in arrangements between father and son for the resettlement of family estates, if the resettlement be not obtained by misrepresentation or suppression of the truth, if the father acquires no personal benefit, and if the settlement is a reasonable one, the court will support it, even though the father did exert parental authority and influence over the son to procure the execution of it. Ib.

In regarding claims to upset resettlements of family estates the court gives weight to considerations which in other cases would not be allowed in the scale. For the validity of such a resettlement, the son being tenant in tail in remainder, it is not essential that the son should have independent advice and the court will not inquire whether the influence of the father was exerted with more or less force. Hoblyn v. Hoblyn, 41 Ch. D. 200; 60 L. T. 499; 38 W. R. 12.

An agreement between a child and a father to alter the limitations under a settlement will not be set aside on pretence of being drawn in by the father's power and authority. Tendril v. Smith, 2 Atk. 85.

Son, tenant in tail of an estate, upon the death of the mother (who was tenant for life), makes a settlement of it for the benefit of the family, in consequence of an agreement so to do in the mother's life; although the father derives some benefit under the settlement, it shall not be set aside as entered into under undue influence. Kinchant v. Kinchant, 1 Bro. C. C. 369.

Circumstances to be taken into consideration in judging of an arrangement between a father tenant for life, and son tenant in tail, for barring the entail, where the main consideration moving from the son was an undertaking to pay the father's debts, important items left in blank:—Held, insufficient to set the transaction aside as against the father, though the son was only just come of age. Bellamy v. Sabine, 2 Ph. 425; 17 L. J., Ch. 105.

The court will support contracts entered into to preserve the peace of families; and, therefore, where a son, upon his marriage, joined with his father in resettling the estate, and, by a memorandum executed at the same time, agreed to secure 500*l.* to each of his sisters:—Held, that there was sufficient consideration for the court to decree a specific performance of this agreement, an attempt to show that it had been obtained by an undue exercise of parental influence having failed. Wycherley v. Wycherley, 2 Eden, 175.

Particular Cases.]—A father, tenant for life, remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail male; the eldest son, soon after he attained twenty-one, joined his father in suffering a recovery; an annuity was secured to him during his father's life, and parts of the estates were limited to the father in fee, the residue of them were resettled, the son taking back an estate for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail general, remainder to his daughters in tail general. The transaction to be considered as a mixed case of bargain and sale, and of family arrangement; and, the eldest son having died without issue, a bill filed by his brother (the next remainderman in tail), who had done confirmatory acts, and accepted interests under the will of his father, to set aside the settlement as obtained by undue influence, was dismissed. Tweddell v. Tweddell, Turn. & R. 1; 23 R. R. 168.

Transactions of this nature between father and child to be viewed with a reasonable degree of jealousy, not in the light of reversionary bargains. Ib.

Where a resettlement of family estates was made, in which the son, as tenant in tail, joined and resettled the estates to such uses as the father and son should jointly appoint, with remainder to the father for life, with remainder to the son for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of the son successively in tail male, with remainder to such uses as the father surviving should appoint, with remainder to the second and other sons of the father for life, with remainder to the first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to any other son of the father in tail male, with remainder to the daughters of the father successively for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of each daughter successively in tail male; with remainder to the father in fee; and power was reserved to the father to appoint, by deed or will, a jointure of 2,600*l.* per annum for any future wife, to be reduced to 1,500*l.* per annum in case he appointed 500*l.* per annum in favour of any stranger,—it was set aside. But various arrangements for the relief of the family from existing burdens, though the father obtained some advantages, were supported, on the ground that the effect of the transactions was known to the son, and even acquiesced in by him. Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278; 21 L. J., Ch. 482; 17 Jur. 99.

The plaintiff was tenant in tail, and the defendant, his father, tenant for life, of family estates. The plaintiff, eleven months after attaining twenty-one, being in pecuniary difficulties, joined his father in a settlement of the estates. The court, though satisfied that parental authority and influence had been exerted to obtain the execution of the settlement, but not for the father's individual advantage, who obtained no direct personal benefit from it, supported the settlement, holding that a jointure thereby provided for the son's mother did not come within the definition of benefit to the father, and that the postponement of the son's daughters to his younger brother was not unreasonable, considering that thereby the estates were made to accompany the family title. Hartopp v. Hartopp, 21 Beav. 259; 25 L. J., Ch. 471; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 794.

A son, tenant in tail in remainder, shortly after attaining twenty-one, joined with his father, the tenant for life, in resettling the family estates. The son was influenced to make the resettlement by the representation of his father that a portions charge of 5,000*l.* was not (as in fact it was) a subsisting charge on the estates, but was a charge to take effect only in case the father should so direct, and a release of the supposed power to charge contained in the resettlement was the principal consideration for its execution:—Held, that, although this misrepresentation was innocently made, the resettlement must be set aside as founded on mistake. Fane v. Fane, L. R. 20 Eq. 698.

Father being tenant for life, remainder in tail to his son, agreed, whilst his son was still an infant, to execute a lease of part of the settled lands, in consideration of 400*l.* as an annual rent upon the son's coming of age; a recovery was suffered to the uses to be appointed by father and son jointly, or in default thereof to the uses of the settlement. The lease was executed according to agreement by both father and son, having been first approved of by their family solicitor. It was proved that a fair value had been given therefor:—Held, on a bill filed by the son, after the father's death, to set aside this lease, there being no allegation of the consideration money not having been applied to the use of the son, and no proof of undue influence by the father, that this lease was unimpeachable. Cooke v. Burtchaell, 2 Dr. & War. 165.

A father being tenant for life, with power to appoint to children, joined his eldest son in a fine and recovery, and conveyed to a purchaser, receiving all the purchase money:—Held, that the son's interest in the land, at the date of the conveyances, but not that afterwards acquired, was bound by his assent to the conveyance. Thompson v. Simpson, 2 Jo. & Lat. 110; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 55. And see S. C., 1 Dr. & War. 459.

A., on his marriage, entered into articles, whereby he covenanted to settle his whole estate upon himself for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail. No settlement was made pursuant to these articles; but A., when his eldest son attained twenty-one, prevailed on him by threats, promises, etc., and under total ignorance of articles, to join in settlement, whereby estate was limited to different uses, and power given to father for making jointure. This settlement was set aside for fraud as against eldest son, and articles were established; and the father having, on his marriage with second wife, given bond, conditioned for making jointure, this bond was also set aside as against heir, and wife was put to seek satisfaction for penalty of bond out of her husband's personal assets. Jevers v. Jevers, 1 Bro. P. C. 272.

Evidence.]—If a father, tenant for life, takes advantage of his son's (the tenant in tail) necessities, to draw him in to join in any conveyance which would destroy his remainder, this court, upon very slender evidence of such a practice in the father, would relieve the son. Wallace v. Wallace, 2 Dr. & War. 452; 1 Con. & L. 491.

Where a father, tenant for life, draws in a son, tenant in tail, to join in a conveyance which would destroy his remainder, the court, on slender evidence, will relieve the son. Heron v. Heron, 2 Atk. 160.

This court will not support the resettlement of family estates between a father and son, when the father obtains extensive advantages to the prejudice of the son and his family, in the absence of unequivocal proof that the whole of the facts were known to the son, and that the purposes of the deed were fully explained to him, and operation of the respective provisions known to him. Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278; 21 L. J., Ch. 482; 17 Jur. 99.

See also COMPROMISE (FAMILY ARRANGEMENTS).

ii. Guardian and Ward.

a. Conveyances, Leases, and other Transactions.

Generally.]—Guardian cannot take anything from his ward for his own benefit, pending the guardianship, nor at its close, nor until the relation and influence have ceased. Wood v. Downs, 18 Ves. 127; 11 R. R. 160.

Semble, it is not contrary to the policy of the law that a guardian should benefit by the will of his ward. Moss v. Leatham, 2 Moore, P. C. 73.

Purchase by guardian of ward's estate may be good. Oldin v. Samborn, 2 Atk. 15.

Relief Against.]—Under a decree for a sale of a competent part of certain leasehold interests, the property of a minor (partly held for lives and partly chattel), the person who acted as receiver to the estate, and appeared in the cause as guardian to the minor, purchased a lease for lives. The sale (though for full value) decreed fraudulent and void under the circumstances. Cary v. Cary, 2 Sch. & Lef. 173.

Setting Aside—Bond.]—A bond passed by a nephew to his uncle, a solicitor, who had brought him up, though admitted to be without pecuniary consideration, not set aside on bill by the nephew alleging fraud, though the transaction was suspicious. Ross v. Steele, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 171.

—— Gift.]—A gift by a ward to her guardian shortly after her attaining her majority, will be set aside by a court of equity. Faulkner v. Salmon, 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 155.

Gift of money to guardian or trustee soon after coming of age set aside, upon general principles of public utility: and here also on particular circumstances of imposition. A person, however, may bind himself soon after coming of age, under proper circumstances, as if, being actually in possession and quite sui juris, he makes such a grant by way of reward. Hylton v. Hylton, 2 Ves. 547.

Leases obtained by an uncle from his nephew but just come of age, and to whom he had been guardian and agent, set aside, being made at undervalue, and other considerations than the reserved rent being held out, for which no security was given. Dawson v. Massey, 1 Ball & B. 219.

A lease at an inadequate rent obtained by the son of the guardian from the ward, recently after he came of age, set aside thirty years after execution, and length of time no bar; the ward being of weak understanding, and continuing during life under the original pupilage and influence of the guardian and his family. Aylward v. Kearney, 2 Ball & B. 463.

—— After Lapse of Time.]—Conveyance by ward to guardian, under circumstances, set aside on grounds of public policy, after a great lapse of time. Hatch v. Hatch, 9 Ves. 292; 1 Smith, 226; 7 R. R. 195.

—— After Accounts Settled.]—Transaction appearing to have arisen out of the influence from the relation of guardian and ward set aside, though all accounts had been settled and the relation had ceased. Wright v. Proud, 13 Ves. 138.

—— After Release.]—Assignments by a minor to his tutor, though voidable, impeached after a lapse of years, sustained the evidence establishing that subsequent dealings had taken place between the minor and tutor, after the former was of age, which amounted to a release of all claims on the part of the minor. Motz v. Moreau, 13 Moore, P. C. 376; 8 W. R. 395.

The fact that such assignments and dealings had not been impugned by the minor, when of age, until after the death of the tutor, speaks strongly against the claim of the minor for an account and inventory, and to set aside the assignments. Ib.

Keeper of House for Lunatics.]—Deed set aside as obtained by fraud and undue influence, by a keeper of a house for lunatics, from a person under his care, as within the general principle arising from the relation of guardian and ward, attorney and client, &c. Wright v. Proud, 13 Ves. 136.

b. Accounts.

Generally.]—If a guardian buys up the incumbrances upon an infant's lands for less than due, he shall not charge him with more than was paid. Henley v. ——, 2 Ch. Ca. 245. S. P., Anon., 1 Salk. 155.

Setting Aside.]—Guardian settling accounts as soon as infants came of age, and retaining a gratuity, set aside. Oldham v. Hand, 2 Ves. 259.

Opening.]—An account settled between a guardian and an infant soon after he comes of age shall not, under certain circumstances, be conclusive or binding upon the infant. Under what circumstances an account settled between a guardian and his ward shall be binding upon the ward. See Wych v. Packington, 3 Bro. P. C. 46.

Solicitor who had advanced money to infant for subsistence of him and his family, and acted as his confidential adviser, is in nature of guardian to him, and an account settled between them within a month after infant became of age, and without latter having any assistance, was opened, notwithstanding vouchers had been delivered up. Revett v. Harvey, 1 Sim. & S. 502; 2 L. J. (O.S.), Ch. 39; 24 R. R. 219.

iii. Master and Servant.

Influence of Servant over Master.]—Bill, to have deeds assigning stock delivered up, as obtained by undue influence by a servant over her master, and an account; the evidence of direct influence considerably subsequent to the deeds; the defendant a married woman, her only separate property, stock; and not liable, therefore, without a lien. An issue being declined, bill was dismissed. Nantes v. Corrock, 9 Ves. 182; 7 R. R. 156.

Articles before marriage to secure annuity out of wife's estate to her servant, who had influence over her, and bond for 1,000*l.*, the bond was delivered up, and a new grant of the annuity after marriage. The consideration of the bond and annuity directed to be tried. Cole v. Gibson, 1 Ves. 503.

Gift to Confidential Agent.]—Gift by deed, subject to a power of appointment by the donor, from a person upwards of ninety years of age, to a confidential agent who had for many years been in habits of friendship with the donor, without the intervention of a disinterested third person, the solicitor who drew the deed being the solicitor of the person who took the benefit under it, declared void at the Rolls, but supported under all the circumstances upon appeal. Hunter v. Atkins, 3 Myl. & K. 113.

A. executed an instrument purporting to convey to B. all the household furniture, &c., which at A.'s death should be in two specified rooms in his house, except, &c. A. lived almost exclusively in the said two rooms, and B. was his bailiff and confidential agent. Two years afterwards, A. by will bequeathed his household furniture, &c., on trust for C. and his issue. In an administration suit, B. claimed the benefit of the instrument, but without probate of it, or showing for what consideration, &c., it was executed:—Held, that if testamentary the court could not act on it without probate, and if to be considered as a deed inter vivos effect could not be given to it without further evidence; and, there being no likelihood of further evidence being obtained, an inquiry was refused. Consett v. Bell, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 569; 11 L. J., Ch. 401; 6 Jur. 869.

Undue Influence of Confidential Clerk over Master.]—Assignment of a policy by a master to a confidential clerk, as to two-thirds of the premium of which the master had paid, the clerk paying the residue; the court, under circumstances, as well as the finding of a jury upon an issue, being satisfied that it was executed under undue influence, declared the assignment as to such two-thirds of the amount of the policy fraudulent and void. Collins v. Hare, 1 Dow & Cl. 139; 2 Bligh (N.S.) 106.

Fraud by Confidential Agent—Rights against his Representatives.]—Where a person standing in the relation of confidential agent to another, has, by his participation in a fraud, induced the latter to part with his property at an undervalue, his representatives may be proceeded against in equity to make good the loss occasioned by fraud, even though the agent himself derived no pecuniary benefit. Walsham v. Stainton, 33 L. J., Ch. 68; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1261; 9 L. T. 357; 12 W. R. 63; 3 N. R. 56.

Transfer of Stock by Aged Lady to Companion.]—When a party in the situation of a companion to a testatrix upwards of eighty-three years of age obtained a transfer of stock from the testatrix, without consideration, and the testatrix by her will gave her property to other parties, the court held it a primâ facie case for inquiry, and ordered the stock to be brought into court, without prejudice; the dividends to be paid to the transferee until the hearing of the cause, which was instituted for the purpose of impeaching the transaction. Bute v. Bank of England, 9 Jur. 545.

Rights of Steward and Land Agent.]—A steward and land agent may contract to execute works for his employer, provided there be such an interposition as will show that no advantage has been taken of the confidence reposed in him. Waters v. Shaftesbury (Earl), 14 L. T. 184.

Next Presentation obtained by Tutor.]—Demurrer allowed to a bill to have a presentation to a living upon the next avoidance delivered up, charging the defendant with gross misconduct in obtaining it, and in other respects, while a private tutor in the family. M'Namara v. ——, 5 Ves. 824.

Bond given to Servant by Heir Apparent.]—A father entrusts his heir apparent (then an infant) to the care of a servant. The heir comes of age, the servant takes a bond from the heir, which bond is secreted from the father, and heir has not wherewithal to pay the bond, equity will set aside the bond as obtained by fraud and breach of trust. Osmond v. Fitzroy, 3 P. Wms. 129.

Confidential Agent of Company—Conspiracy to Purchase Shares at Undervalue.]—See Walsham v. Stainton, 1 De G. J. & S. 678, post, col. 266.

iv. Other Cases.

Husband and Wife.]—Where a feme covert having separate property joins in a security for money advanced to her husband, the court acts upon it, not as an agreement to charge her separate property, but as an equitable appointment under the settlement, to be satisfied from the rents and profits of that property and not by sale or mortgage. If the feme covert insists upon the exercise of undue influence by the husband, she must prove it, and it is not for the plaintiff to prove a negative. Field v. Sowle, 4 Russ. 112.

Security given for Brother's Debt.]—Securities, given by a person six months after he attained twenty-one to the defendants for a debt due to them from his elder brother, were set aside with costs. Sercombe v. Saunders, 34 Beav. 382.

Voluntary Deed by Sister in Favour of Brother.]—A voluntary deed by an unmarried lady in favour of her brother, with whom she was residing at the time, and executed by her without professional assistance, was set aside at the instance of the lady and her husband. Sharp v. Leach, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1026; 7 L. T. 146; 10 W. R. 878.

Voluntary Settlement by Younger in Favour of Elder Sister.]—Voluntary settlement by a younger sister of the whole of her present and future property principally in favour of her eldest sister set aside, the eldest sister having obtained great ascendency and influence over the younger, the circumstances of the transaction being open to suspicion, the settlement being very improvident, and the settlor not having had the benefit of independent professional advice. Harvey v. Mount, 8 Beav. 439; 14 L. J., Ch. 233; 9 Jur. 741.

Bond by Sister for Debt of Deceased Brother.]—B., while in distressed circumstances, upon the advice and suggestion of A., and upon a supposed right in him to demand it, executes a bond to him for a sum due by a deceased brother, to whom she was next of kin, but who left no personal chattels. The bond set aside under the circumstances, but, if it had been executed by her from a feeling of propriety, after getting possession of an estate to which she became entitled on the death of her brother, she having immediate means of payment and acting with proper advice, it could not have been defeated. Beasley v. Magrath, 2 Sch. & Lef. 31.

Sale of Reversion by Sister—Lapse of Time.]—The sale of a reversionary interest by a sister to her brother was set aside upon the ground of undervalue, after a lapse of ten years, the sister having continued under the influence of her brother up to a period of within two years of the bill being filed. Sharp v. Leach, 31 Beav. 491; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1026; 7 L. T. 146; 10 W. R. 878.

Grant to Grandson and Son-in-Law just before Death.]—Where a person by a deed eight days before his death grants a benefit to his grandson and son-in-law, there is no such confidential relation as to induce this court to presume fraud. Beanland v. Bradley, 2 Sm. & G. 339.

Sale between Brothers-in-Law — Consideration.]—A transaction of sale made upon a false or mistaken consideration between parties in the relation of brothers-in-law; the vendor being an heir succeeding to the estate sold, and the purchaser executor of the will of the vendor's father; and where the party selling is under circumstances of great pecuniary embarrassment and distress, will not be impeached if fairly made; but, if the consideration for the purchase was the balance of an account, which appears to be erroneous, the whole transaction must be so far investigated as to correct the accounts. M'Neill v. Cahill, 2 Bligh, 228.

Lease, by one just of Age, to Brother-in-Law and Uncle, on Advice of Father's Executor—Onus.]—A young lady, two years after she came of age, granted a mining lease, as to part of the property in possession and as to the rest in reversion, to her brother-in-law and uncle, at the suggestion and advice of her father's executor, and with no independent advice. Three months afterwards the executor was taken into partnership with the lessees. Applications of other persons to become lessees had been discountenanced, and concealed from the knowledge of the lady:—Held, that, to support the lease in equity, the lessees were bound to show that no better terms could have been obtained; that the grantor had the fullest information on the subject; that she had separate, independent, and disinterested advice, and that she deliberately and intentionally made the grant; and, the lessees having failed in proving this, the lease was cancelled. Grosvenor v. Sherratt, 28 Beav. 659; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1228; 8 W. R. 682.

—— Reversions—Lease and Sale, Difference as to.]—A reversionary sale and a grant of a reversionary lease stand on the same principles. Ib.

Lease obtained by Uncle—Undervalue.]—Leases obtained by an uncle from his nephew but just come of age, and to whom he had been guardian and agent, set aside, being made at undervalue, and other considerations than the reserved rent being held out, for which no security was given. Dawson v. Massey, 1 Ball & B. 219.

Promissory Note, by one just of Age, to Uncle in Loco parentis—Setting aside.]—Where the plaintiff, whilst an infant, having separate property, out of which an allowance for maintenance was made to her uncle, with whom she resided for seven years until attaining twenty-one, and just after was induced to sign a promissory note in his favour, as a voluntary security; the court, considering him in loco parentis, set it aside, as made under undue influence; in such cases the court will see that the infant, in an act of bounty, just on the eve of emancipation, is placed in a situation of free and unfettered judgment, and independent of any control. Archer v. Hudson, 7 Beav. 551; 8 Jur. 761. Affirmed, 15 L. J., Ch. 211.

Purchase of Reversion from Nephew.]—Where a tenant for life purchased the reversion of his nephew, on the ground of inadequacy of consideration in the family estate:—Held, that the transaction fell within the ordinary rule as to reversionary interest, and was not to be regarded as a family arrangement. Talbot v. Stainforth, 1 J. & H. 484; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 961; 5 L. T. 471; 9 W. R. 827.

—— Onus.]—The fact that a reversion is dependent on contingencies which do not admit of estimation by actuaries does not relieve the purchaser from the onus of showing that fair value was given. Ib.

Bargain to Sell to Aunt.]—A bargain entered into by a person in the absence of his legal adviser, to sell to an aunt at a price less than would have been obtained by a public sale, which was in contemplation, set aside. Martin v. Mitchell, 2 J. & W. 413; 22 R. R. 184.

Purchase from Uncle—Undervalue.]—Purchase of reversion by nephew, from uncle very old, for price grossly inadequate, the deed of conveyance in the operative part, but not in the recitals, expressing that the grant was made partly in consideration of natural love, &c., not impeached on ground of fraud under the circumstances. Whalley v. Whalley, 3 Bligh, 1; 1 Mer. 436. See also Hudson v. Beauchamp, 3 Bligh, 18, n.

Purchase from Aunt—Undervalue.]—J. purchases an estate from his aunt for 10,000*l.* which was proved to be worth 20,000*l.* and upwards; but in the conveyance adds the consideration of natural love and affection:—Held, that this was a gross fraud upon the aunt, and the conveyance was accordingly set aside. Filmer v. Gott, 4 Bro. P. C. 230.

Sale to Great Uncle's Nephew, by one in Embarrassed Circumstances—Undervalue.]—T., a young man, aged twenty-three, entitled to a moiety of a freehold estate, the entirety of which brought in about 440*l.* a year, being pressed for payment of his college debts, amounting to about 1,000*l.*, and being estranged from his father, wrote to his great-uncle for advice and assistance as to payment of the debts. The uncle deputed the defendant, his nephew, to see T. on the subject. The defendant met T. by appointment, and at this interview T. refused to allow any attempt to compromise the debt, and said he would sell his moiety of the estate, upon which the defendant offered him 7,000*l.* for it, payable by instalments. T. next day accepted the offer. Before an agreement had been signed, the defendant obtained a valuation by a surveyor, estimating the value of the mines under the entirety at 20,000*l.* The sale was completed without this valuation having ever been communicated to T. T.'s heir filed a bill to impeach the sale:—Held, that the defendant stood in a fiduciary relation to T., which made it his duty to communicate to T. all material information which he acquired affecting the value of the property, and that, as he had not communicated the valuation to T., the transaction must be set aside. Tate v. Williamson, L. R. 2 Ch. 55; 15 L. T. 549; 15 W. R. 321.

Nephew obtaining Post Obit Bond.]—A nephew, who was provided for by his aunt's will, obtained a post obit bond from her. It was set aside, he not having proved that she knew that the effect of the bond was to make her will irrevocable. Cooke v. Lamotte, 15 Beav. 234; 21 L. J., Ch. 371.

Niece induced to attend to Uncle on Promise of Benefit by Will—Revocation.]—Where a niece was induced to reside with and continue valuable services to her uncle, a testator, who was in advanced years and ill health, on the faith of his representation that by so doing she would become entitled to the benefit of property at his death, trusts of which in her favour had been created by a codicil to his will, and were read over, and explained to her:—Held, that the testator was not at liberty to revoke such trusts. Loffus v. Maw, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 607; 6 L. T. 346; 10 W. R. 513.

Bond obtained, to Stand as Security.]—Bond obtained from the infant's grandmother for the amount of bill of fees and disbursements directed to stand as a security for moneys justly due on account, and the bill ordered to be taxed. Brown v. Pring, 1 Ves. 407.

Bond obtained by Relation.]—Plaintiff, being a weak man, was prevailed on by two of his relations to give bond to one of them, to settle his estate to the use of himself in tail male, remainder to his two brothers successively, in tail male. Plaintiff marries, and makes a settlement on his marriage, and brings a bill for delivery up of the bond: and it would have been decreed, had not the plaintiff, by bill, offered to settle part. Portington v. Eglington (Countess), 2 Vern. 189.

Gift by Infant, just before Death, to Relative.]—In the absence of proof of the exercise of control or influence on the part of the donee, or of the existence of the relation of guardian and ward between the donee and the donor, a gift of her property within a month before her death by an infant aged twenty, of business habits, firm will and fully capable of managing her own affairs, to a relative with whom she had been residing from her father's death, for a period of five months, until her own death, is not invalid. Taylor v. Johnston, 51 L. J., Ch. 879; 19 Ch. D. 603; 46 L. T. 219; 30 W. R. 508.

Imprudent Settlement by Orphan.]—A voluntary settlement was agreed to be made by a young lady, an orphan, some weeks before she attained twenty-one, upon the recommendation of the family solicitor, and was executed by her eight weeks after she attained twenty-one without any independent advice. Thereby she assigned to her stepfather and an uncle as trustees the whole of her fortune upon trusts for herself for life, with remainder to her children or testamentary appointees, and, in case there were no children, then, in default of appointment, to her next of kin. A power of raising 700*l.*, and paying it to the settlor, was reserved, but the settlement contained no power of revocation or of appointment by deed, and gave her no voice in the investments or in the appointment of new trustees:—Held, that, although the solicitors and trustees acted really with the intention of benefiting the lady, the settlement must be set aside on the ground of imprudence. Everitt v. Everitt, 39 L. J., Ch. 777; L. R. 10 Eq. 405; 23 L. T. 136; 18 W. R. 1020.

Practice—Pleadings.]—The bill stated that the defendants, relations of a testator, had acquired influence over his mind, and had induced him to make by his will an improper and unequal distribution of his property among his relations to the plaintiff's prejudice. It then stated that after the execution of the will the testator became of unsound mind, and while in that state made underleases and transfers of stock in favour of the same defendants, and by their procurement, and the bill prayed that these underleases and transfers might be set aside. The defendants, by their answers, admitted that by their attention to the testator they might possibly have acquired some influence over his mind, but they denied that they had ever used it to the prejudice of the plaintiffs:—Held, that upon these pleadings the plaintiffs could not impeach the underleases and transfers on the ground of their having been obtained by undue influence, no such issue being raised by the bill, and the allegation or the answer not having the effect of enlarging the issues for this purpose. Hayward v. Purssey, 3 De G. & Sm. 399.

d. Legal Adviser and Client.

Generally.]—Personal estate not disposed of by a will drawn by the confidential counsel (the sole executor) without informing the testator of the legal effect of the will:—Held, to be a trust for the next of kin. Segrave v. Kirwan, Beat. 157.

An elderly lady married a barrister who had for some years been her confidential friend and adviser. Before the marriage a lengthened correspondence took place between them, in which she insisted that her personal estate should be settled so as to be "her's as if unmarried," and her's "to give, to use, and to will." He assented to this, and undertook to prepare the settlement. By the marriage he acquired, under her father's will, a life interest expectant on her decease, in a considerable sum of stock:—Held, that, having undertaken to prepare the settlement, he was bound to prepare such an one as under the circumstances a conveyancer would have drawn, or the court would have sanctioned—that such a settlement would have given him no interest in her absolute property in default of appointment by her, and that, she having died without making any disposition in his favour, he was a trustee of her personal estate for her next of kin. Corley v. Stafford (Lord), 1 De G. & J. 238; 26 L. J., Ch. 865; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1225; 5 W. R. 646.

Knowledge acquired by.]—Where the appellant had for a long period acted as the counsel and legal adviser of a party, and in such employment acquired an intimate knowlege of his property and liabilities, and acted for him in the compromise of securities:—Held, that a purchase by him of these securities, after the relation of counsel and client had ceased, without notice to the principal, and at a price less than their nominal amount, and whilst the compromise was pending and feasible, was a trust for his former client, and that he was only entitled to the sum actually paid by him, with the usual interest. Carter v. Palmer, 8 Cl. & F. 657; 1 Dr. & Wal. 722; 1 Ir. Eq. R. 289.

—— As Trustee.]—It is extremely wrong for a counsel or agent to take a conveyance from the right heir for his own benefit, which he discovered by being a trustee. Norris v. Le Neve, 3 Atk. 38.

Remuneration.]—A., entitled to an estate, gave a bond to his counsellor B., to give him half of it if he recovered. The bond is void, and B. shall only recover his reasonable charges. Skapholme v. Hart, Ca. t. Finch, 477.

In 2 Inst. 564, apprentices or attorneys cannot contract to have any part of the thing in demand after the recovery, and Penros' case is there cited. A writ of champerty was brought against Penros for that he had a part of the land recovered at another man's suit; he said he was of counsel for the party who recovered, and had that land for his wages. The taking of the estate for his wages after the recovery could be no champerty, unless there had been a covenant or promise, hanging the plea, on the defendant's part to make the same after the recovery, which was not alleged, but only the taking of the estate; neither doth it appear what became of Penros' plea, and (said the court) we are of opinion it shall remain for ever a blemish upon his reputation as often as it is cited, for Quamvis aliquid ex se non sit malum, tamen si sit mali exempli, non est faciendum. Kenney v. Brown, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 502.

Counsel is not suffered, if he happen to be a mortgagee, to insist on more than legal interest under pretence of a gratuity for business formerly done in the way of counsel. Thornhill v. Evans, 2 Atk. 332; 9 Mod. 331.

Making Good.]—Where R. had become surety for her brother-in-law, C., for the payment of sums of money due from him to B., a certificated conveyancer, and B. had, as the professional adviser of R., and through the undue influence of C. and himself, obtained the transfer of a mortgage security from R., to other parties, whereby he had been paid the sums due from C. to himself:—Held, that B. and C. must make good to R. all the moneys which B. had acquired from her, and pay the costs of the suit. Rhodes v. Bate, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 803; 12 L. T. 443; 13 W. R. 710.

Setting Aside.]—Bill impeaching transactions between plaintiff and defendant on the ground of fraud, plaintiff got a decree, on the principle that being transactions between counsel and client they could not stand; but did not prove the fraud charged. No costs. Moore v. Moore, 2 Moll. 445.

A., being standing counsel and manager for B., obtained leases for long terms on different parts of his estate, and a release of the equity of redemption of other part. On a bill brought to set aside these transactions for fraud, it was proved that A. had as great a power over B. as a parent has over child, and could persuade him to do whatever he pleased; but, it being proved on the other side that the purchase-money was nearly equal to the value of the land, and that A. had, in many respects, been exceedingly serviceable to B., the bill was dismissed. Kingsland (Lord) v. Barnewall, 4 Bro. P. C. 154.

M., an Irish barrister, becomes casually acquainted with H., a widow lady, possessed of some property of her own, and having large expectations from an aunt, acquires her confidence, and engages in the management of her affairs, and persuades her to give him a deed of gift of a third of the aunt's property. When that property comes into possession, he persuades her to transfer to him one half of it for himself, and also the other half to be managed by him on her account. He makes misrepresentations to her about her son, and as to other matters, and prevails upon her to execute a release to him. H. at length calls for an account, which he refuses to render. She offers him a full discharge, if he would pay her the two-thirds of her property, calculated by her at 21,000*l*. He refuses. She files her bill in equity, and the deed of gift and release are set aside as having been obtained by fraud, and undue influence, and misrepresentation, and decreed to refund 36,500*l*. to H. This decree affirmed on appeal. Maccabe v. Hussey, 2 Dow & Cl. 440; 5 Bligh (N.S.) 715.

When a client, two months after protracted and complicated litigation, with reference to the ownership of an estate of considerable value, had been brought to a successful issue under the guidance of a barrister, executed in favour of the latter a grant of the reversion in the estate expectant on the client's own death, charged with the client's debts and legacies to a specified amount:—Held, that the deed must be set aside, whether as a deed of gift or as a contract, undue influence over, and want of independent advice on the part of, the client being established by the evidence. Brown v. Kennedy, 4 De G. J. & S. 217; 33 L. J., Ch. 342; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 141; 9 L. T. 736; 12 W. R. 360. Affirming, 33 Beav. 133.

ii. Solicitors.

a. In General.

Generally.]—General inability of a solicitor to deal with his client. Rudd v. Sewell, 4 Jur. 882.

An attorney being an officer assisting in the administration of justice, every dealing between him and his client is always a subject of jealousy in a court of equity. Kenney v. Brown, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 462, 504, 522.

All dealings between attorney and client are anxiously scrutinised in equity, in order to protect the client from his own acts done under the influence or ascendency which an attorney acquires over him. Bellew v. Russel, 1 Ball & B. 107.

—— Gifts and Sales—Analogy between.]—Observations upon the analogy between the rules as to gifts and sales from clients to their attorneys. Holman v. Loynes, 4 De G. M. & G. 270; 23 L. J., Ch. 529; 18 Jur. 839; 2 W. R. 205.

—— Undue influence, what.]—Signification of the term "undue influence" as applied to transactions between solicitor and client. Casborne v. Barsham, 2 Beav. 76.

—— Relationship of Solicitor and Client.]—If an attorney is not acting as an attorney for his client on a particular occasion, he may throw off that character, and exercise his independent rights. Austin v. Chambers, 6 Cl. & F. I.

The relation of solicitor and client carries with it all its consequences, whether it arises from an already existing relation or is only created for the purpose of a particular transaction; but if it does not exist previously, and first arises in the particular transaction, it must be definitely established, and is not necessarily to be inferred. Williamson v. Moriarty, 19 W. R. 818.

—— Evidence—Duty of Solicitor.]—Where there is the relation of solicitor and client, the solicitor, if he deal with the client in reference to his property, must, whether that client was more or less a man of business, prove that the client had due professional advice and assistance in and for the purpose of explaining the matters to him, otherwise the transaction will be set aside. Barnard v. Hunter, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1213.

—— Duty of Solicitor.]—Wherever a professional man is called on to give his services to a client, whether to prepare a deed or will, the law imputes to him a knowledge of all the legal consequences to result, and requires that he should distinctly and clearly point out to his client all those consequences from whence a benefit may arise to himself from the instrument so prepared; and, if he fail to do, equity will deprive him of it. Segrave v. Kirwan, Beat. 166.

—— Making Gain.]—It is an established rule that a solicitor shall not in any way whatever, in respect of any transactions in the relation between him and his client, make gain to himself, at the expense of his client, beyond the amount of his just and fair professional remuneration. Tyrrell v. Bank of London, 10 H. L. Cas. 26; 31 L. J., Ch. 369; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 849; 6 L. T. 1; 10 W. R. 359.

—— Contract—Duty to make entire disclosure.]—In the case of contracts between solicitor and client, there is a duty to make entire disclosure. Davies v. London and Provincial Marine Insurance Co., 47 L. J., Ch. 511; 8 Ch. D. 469; 38 L. T. 478; 26 W. R. 794.

—— Settlement of Account.]—Settlement of accounts between attorney and client is not conclusive, the nature of their connection taking their accounts out of the general rule of equity. Lewes v. Morgan, 5 Price, 42; 4 R. R. 860.

Beneficial Contracts, decreed a Security—Confirmation.]—Beneficial contracts and conveyances, obtained by an attorney from his client during their relation, as such, and connected with the subject of the suit, being also liable to the charge of champerty, decreed to stand as a security only for what was actually due; and purchases by the attorney declared a trust. A subsequent deed, not relating to separate, independent, voluntary transaction, but under the same pressure, and called for under the covenant for further assurance, no confirmation. Wood v. Downes, 18 Ves. 120; 11 R. R. 160.

Onus—Solicitor a Creditor.]—The principle which throws on a solicitor who has dealt with his clients the burden of showing the fairness of the transaction applies to causes of voluntary agreement, but not to a case where the solicitor is in the hostile attitude of an urgent creditor. Johnson v. Fesemeyer, 3 De G. & J. 13.

Practice—Terms of Relief—Payment into Court.]—Where injunction is granted against proceedings at law, on instrument obtained either as a gift or purchase, in fraud of the fiduciary situation of the donee or purchaser, the court will not impose the terms of paying money into court, if the relationship be that of attorney and client. Goddard v. Carlisle, 9 Price, 169; 23 R. R. 654.

Within what Time proceedings against Solicitor to be instituted.]—The court will allow a client to institute proceedings against a solicitor within a reasonable number of years after the connection of solicitor and client has ceased. Champion v. Rigby, 1 Russ. & M. 539; Tam. 421; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 211; 31 R. R. 107.

Account—Statute of Limitations.]—The ordinary relation of a solicitor to his client in questions of account is not of such a fiduciary character as to bar the Statute of Limitations, 21 Jac. 1, c. 16. Watson v. Woodman, 45 L. J., Ch. 57; L. R. 20 Eq. 721; 24 W. R. 47.

b. Gifts inter vivos.

Generally.]—Though a court of equity holds that it is highly improper for a solicitor to derive a personal advantage in the shape of gifts from his clients, or in the shape of the liquidation of his bills untaxed and undelivered, still the court cannot approve of clients entering into transactions with their solicitors, whereby they obtain from them present relief, and at the same time indulge the expectation that the court will afterwards, at their instance, annul the whole transaction on the ground of the relation subsisting between them. Gardener v. Ennor, 35 Beav. 549.

—— Undue influence, Inference of.]—There are transactions in which there is so great an inequality between the transacting parties, so much of habitual exercise of power on the one side, and habitual submission on the other, that, without proof of the exercise of power beyond that which may be inferred from the nature of the transaction itself, this court will impute an exercise of undue influence. Casborne v. Barsham, 2 Beav. 76.

—— Jurisdiction of Court.]—When undue influence is to be inferred from the nature of the transaction, or when the transaction is contrary to the policy of law, it is the province of the court to determine the point; and the question ought not to be sent to a jury. Ib.

—— New Trial.]—Where a jury had found that a deed had been obtained from the client, not by fraud, but by undue influence, the court held that the question, whether undue influence is to be inferred from the nature of the transaction, or is against the policy of the law, being one for the court and not for the jury, and being of opinion that the circumstances, although suspicious, did not show that the deed was obtained by the influence of the party in the character of a solicitor, granted a new trial. Ib.

—— Duty of Solicitor.]—Where a client executes a deed in favour of a solicitor, reserving a life interest and a power of revocation, it is the duty of the solicitor to leave a counterpart of the deed in the hands of the client. Balch v. Symes, Turn. & R. 92; 23 R. R. 195.

—— Gift on the face a Purchase.]—A., who was proved to have entertained feelings of peculiar personal regard for B., his solicitor, conveyed to him certain real estate by a deed, on the face of it a purchase deed; the consideration was 100*l.*, the real value upwards of 1,200*l.* B. produced evidence to show that no money passed; that the transaction was never intended to be a purchase, but a gift for his services; and, from affection, B. had himself prepared the deed, and A. had no other advice:—Held, that the rule is absolute that a solicitor cannot sustain a gift from his client, made pending the relation of solicitor and client, and the deed was set aside. Tomson v. Judge, 3 Drew. 306; 24 L. J., Ch. 785; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 583; 3 W. R. 561.

While Relationship of Solicitor and Client Exists.]—An attorney shall not take a gift or reward from his client while the connection subsists; it must as in the instance of guardian and ward be previously dissolved. Montesquieu v. Sandys, 18 Ves. 313; 11 R. R. 197.

Attorney cannot take anything from his client for his own use pending the suit but his demand, nor at its close, nor until the relation and influence have ceased. Wood v. Downes, 18 Ves. 127; 11 R. R. 160.

A gift made by a client to his solicitor during the subsistence of the professional relation between them is invalid. O'Brien v. Lewis, 4 Giff. 221; 32 L. J., Ch. 569; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 528; 8 L. T. 179; 11 W. R. 318.

Gift by a client to a solicitor while that relation subsisted between them declared invalid at the instance of the residuary legatees of the donor. Walker v. Smith, 29 Beav. 394.

It is an established rule in courts of equity that no gift or gratuity to an attorney, beyond his fair professional demands, made during the time that he continues to conduct or manage the affairs of the donor, shall be permitted to stand; and more especially, if such gift or gratuity arises immediately out of the subject then under the attorney's conduct or management, and if the donor is at the time ignorant of the nature and value of the property so given. Middleton v. Welles, 4 Bro. P. C. 245.

—— Without Fraud.]—And then without any proof of actual fraud. S. C., 1 Cox, 112.

Independently of fraud, an attorney shall not take a gift from his client while the relation subsists. Wright v. Proud, 13 Ves. 138.

—— Relationship of Solicitor and Client hav- ing Ceased.]—Gift to an attorney after the cause was over, without proof of anything improper, not set aside; it would have been otherwise if before the cause, as in contemplation of it, or during its progress. Oldham v. Hand, 2 Ves. 259.

While Relationship Exists—Gift to Solicitor's Wife—Rebuttal of Presumption.]—The rule of equity, that where the relation of solicitor and client existed at the time when a voluntary gift was made to the solicitor the gift will be set aside unless the donor had competent and independent advice, is absolute, and it applies to the case where a gift is made not to the solicitor but to the solicitor's wife. The presumption that there was undue influence cannot be rebutted by evidence to the contrary. Liles v. Terry, 65 L. J., Q. B. 34; [1895] 2 Q. B. 679; 73 L. T. 428; 44 W. R. 116—C. A.

Relationship of Client and Solicitor, between Mother and Son.]—A son acted as his mother's solicitor, and with her consent lent 2,500*l.* belonging to her, with other money, upon bond, conditioned for payment to himself absolutely of the amount thereby secured, without any declaration of trust, except a memorandum, whereby the son acknowledged that he held 2,500*l.*, and undertook to pay the interest thereof to the mother during life. The son died in his mother's lifetime, and his executors claimed the principal sum, subject to a life-interest in the mother, as a gift from her to the son:—Held, that the relation of solicitor and client subsisting between the son and mother excluded the ordinary presumption in favour of the transaction being a gift, and threw the burden of proof upon the executors; and, the evidence being insufficient to establish their case, the court declared the son's executors to be merely trustees for the mother. Garrett v. Wilkinson, 2 De G. & Sm. 244.

Present from, and Settlement with, Client—Validity and Re-opening Accounts.]—Securities taken by an attorney from his client during the time of their connection as such, for a present, the balance of accounts settled for money lent and laid out, costs and business done, and the price of a horse sold, void as to the present, and, the plaintiff submitting to pay what should be actually due, the accounts were opened as to the whole; the horse being sold soon after, he was purchased from the attorney for a price much less than was then stipulated, inquiry into his value directed. Newman v. Payne, 2 Ves. J. 199; 4 Bro. C. C. 350.

Validity.]—A testator, in a cause in 1856, employing A. as his amanuensis, wrote to his solicitor B., requesting the solicitor to prepare the necessary deeds for transferring certain mortgages to A., for his own use and benefit absolutely. The testator added, "Also I wish to assign to yourself the bond of Mr. M., which I have forwarded you." The testator signed the letter, and forwarded the same with the bond to the solicitor by A., who was his confidential adviser. The solicitor accordingly prepared a deed, whereby the bond was purported to be assigned to himself, "his executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely for ever." A power of attorney was included in the deed, enabling B. to sue in the name of the testator for his own use and benefit. At the time of execution the testator expressed his wish that B. would enforce the bond against the obligor, who was a relative of the testator, with whom he was offended. Some discrepancy appeared as to whether it was the testator, or C. on his behalf, who told B. at this interview that the bond was an absolute and unconditional gift to him. The money was recovered by B. from the obligor, and afterwards borrowed from him again by the testator. The testator died, and B. claimed the sum against his estate. Contemporaneous entries in the books of the firm of which B. was a member were inconsistent with a view that the assignment was intended as a gift:—Held, that, independently of the infirmity arising from the relation of solicitor and client, the evidence failed to show that the assignment was a clear, well-understood act of bounty on the part of the testator. Holmes, In re, Woodward v. Humpage, 3 Giff. 337; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 252; 5 L. T. 378.

Setting Aside.]—Deed between husband and wife improperly obtained from the husband through the wife's solicitor, who took a benefit under it, set aside, with costs to be paid by such solicitor. Proctor v. Robinson, 25 Beav. 329.

A delay of some years in seeking to set aside a deed accounted for. Ib.

Transactions between a solicitor and his client, by which the former obtained gifts, and an undue advantage, set aside, and the securities ordered to stand good only to the extent of what might be found justly due to the solicitor. Gardener v. Ennor, 35 Beav. 549.

Confirmation by Will.]—The plaintiff claimed as heir-at-law of A., who, as the bill alleged, when in very embarrassed circumstances, had executed a voidable conveyance to his solicitor. The bill, after stating a pretence, on the part of the defendants who claimed under the solicitor, that A. had confirmed the conveyance by his will, charged that he had died intestate as to the premises in question, and prayed that the conveyance and any testamentary disposition by him in confirmation thereof might be declared null and void. Plea, that A. by will, after reciting the probability of the conveyance being disputed, had ratified and confirmed it, allowed. Stump v. Gaby, 2 De G. M. & G. 623; 22 L. J., Ch. 352; 17 Jur. 5; 1 W. R. 85.

Assuming that the conveyance was voidable, the interest which remained in A. after its execution was not a right of entry under the old law, but an equitable estate which was clearly devisable. Ib.

Grant of Leasehold Interest—Setting aside — Acquiescence.] — A grant of a leasehold interest from a client to his attorney, a near relation, for whom, being on bad terms with all his other relations, he expressed great friendship, in consideration of 1,000*l.* secured by bond, afterwards released, and in consideration of being indemnified from all costs, suits, and expenses, if the title should be impeached, the attorney redemising the lands, at a nominal rent, for the lives of the client and his wife:—Held, not such a dealing between attorney and client as is impeachable on a bill by the next-of-kin of the client, who acquiesced in it for several years till his death, and who, in his answer to a bill, recognised it as fair, and a mere preference of one relation to others who had disobliged him. Bellew v. Russel, 1 Ball & B. 96.

Conveyance to Agent—False Recital—Setting aside—Lapse of Time—Confirmation.]—See De Montmorency v. Devereux, 7 Cl. & F. 188; West, 64; 2 Dr. & Wal. 410; 4 Jur. 403. Post, col. 428.

Voluntary Gift—Election to abide by—Confirmation—Action by Personal Representative.]—A solicitor had in the year 1880 acted as the solicitor of G. in an action against B. The action was compromised by the payment by B. of 5,000*l*. The solicitor's costs were paid, and in consideration of his exertions G. on the 7th June, 1880, made him a special gift of 1,000*l*. out of the money recovered. The gift was made without independent advice. The relationship of solicitor and client closed shortly after the gift. There was subsequently another business transaction between G. and the solicitor, and the relationship of solicitor and client was severed in March, 1882. In April, 1883, G. called upon the solicitor. There was some evidence that on that occasion he told G. she was entitled to demand back her gift, but that she stated in effect that she intended to adhere to it. G. died in June, 1883:—Held, that the evidence did not show that, after the relationship of solicitor and client had come to an end, G. had, with full knowledge of her rights, confirmed the gift, and her personal representative was therefore entitled to repayment of the 1,000*l*., with interest at 4 per cent. per annum from the date of the gift. Tyars v. Alsop, 61 L. T. 8; 37 W. R. 339; 53 J. P. 212—C. A.

Evidence.]—Influence arising from the professional relations between solicitor and client will vitiate a gift from the latter to the former, but the effect of that influence may be removed by evidence. Holmes, In re, Woodward v. Humpage, 3 Giff. 337; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 252; 5 L. T. 378.

To prevent the operation of the rule that a solicitor shall not take a gift from his client while the relation subsists, there must not only be a total absence of fraud, misrepresentation, or even suspicion, but there must be a severance of the confidential relation. Morgan v. Minett, 6 Ch. D. 638; 36 L. T. 948; 25 W. R. 744.

In order to bring a case within the rule that a solicitor can receive no gift or reward from his client, there must be clear and unequivocal evidence of the relationship between the parties, that advantage was taken of that relationship, and that what was given was a reward to the solicitor for his services. Richards v. French, 22 L. T. 327; 18 W. R. 636.

c. Testamentary Gifts.

Generally.]—The circumstance of a solicitor preparing for a client a will containing dispositions in his own favour does not of itself take away the right of the solicitor to be for his own benefit a devisee or legatee. Hindson v. Weatherill, 5 De G. M. & G. 301; 23 L. J., Ch. 820; 18 Jur. 499; 2 W. R. 507.

The considerations applicable to a gift inter vivos from a client to his solicitor are not universally applicable to a testamentary disposition. Ib.

Where a testator makes a disposition by his will in favour of the solicitor, employed by him to make the will, in such language and under such circumstances as that upon the trial at law of an issue devisavit vel non, brought by the heir-at-law of the testator, or upon the hearing by the ecclesiastical court of a suit touching the validity of the will, the disposition in question would be upheld, this court will not, on the mere ground that the relation of solicitor and client existed between the solicitor and the testator, interfere, at the instance of the heir-at-law or next-of-kin, to fix a trust for the benefit of either of them upon the property devised or bequeathed to the solicitor. Ib.

Legacies by a client to a solicitor, his wife and children, supported. Walker v. Smith, 29 Beav. 394.

Duty of Solicitor in drafting Will—Legacy to Solicitor's Wife.]—B., a solicitor, drew the will of R., his father-in-law, which bequeathed a share of residue, amounting to 45,000*l*., to B.'s wife, and appointed B. sole executor. The will contained no direction that this sum should be for the separate use of B.'s wife. There was no evidence as to what had passed between B. and R. at the time of the execution of the will:—Held, that, in the absence of evidence, the court could not assume such a dereliction of duty on B.'s part in not informing R. of the effect of the will, as to make B. a trustee for his wife. Birchall, In re, Wilson v. Birchall, 44 L. T. 243; 29 W. R. 461.

Evidence.]—Where an attorney who draws the will of the testator takes a benefit under it, the case is to be considered with peculiar jealousy, and the jury who try the validity of the will must be satisfied that the testator knew its contents; but their consideration need not be confined to direct evidence, and they may find for the will upon circumstantial evidence only. Barworth v. Marriott, 1 Myl. & K. 643.

The circumstance that one residuary devisee was the attorney who drew the will, not decisive evidence of fraud. Paine v. Hall, 18 Ves. 475.

d. Purchases.

Generally.]—How far attorney may contract to purchase from his client. Cane v. Allen (Lord), 2 Dow, 289.

The solicitor who conducts the sale of property cannot become the purchaser without full explanation to the vendor, and informing him that he (the solicitor) is to become the purchaser. Bloye's Trust, In re, 1 Macn. & G. 488; 2 Hall & Tw. 140; 19 L. J., Ch. 89; 14 Jur. 49.

—— Duty of Solicitor.]—An attorney may deal with a client as a stranger where the circumstances are not such as to put him under the duty of advising the client. Holman v. Loynes, 4 De G. M. & G. 270; 23 L. J., Ch. 529; 18 Jur. 839; 2 W. R. 205.

Semble, that an attorney purchasing from his client ought to insist on the intervention of another professional adviser. Pisani v. Att.-Gen. for Gibraltar, L. R. 5 P. C. 516; 30 L. T. 729; 22 W. R. 900.

—— Onus to Show Diligence.]—An attorney cannot sustain his purchase from a client unless he can prove that his diligence to do the best for the vendor has been as great as if he was only an attorney dealing for that vendor with a stranger. Holman v. Loynes, 4 De G. M. & G. 270; 23 L. J., Ch. 529; 18 Jur. 839; 2 W. R. 205.

—— Consideration Untruly Stated.]—The court will not support a deed where an attorney is the purchaser, his client the vendor, and the consideration is untruly stated. Uppington v. Bullen, 2 Dr. & War. 184; 1 Con. & L. 291.

—— Purchase to stand as Mortgage.]—A beneficial purchase by a solicitor from his client pending that relation cannot be supported, but the solicitor may insist on and obtain a mortgage from his client for whatever is justly due to him. Pearson v. Benson, 28 Beav. 598.

—— Power of Sale.]—Where an absolute purchase is held, in consequence of the relation between the parties, to be available as a security only, the court will not import into the transaction a power of sale. Ib.

—— Setting aside—Delay.]—Delay of seven months in taking proceedings to set aside a sale, during which the purchaser was improving the property:—Held, no bar to the plaintiff's right to relief. Ib.

—— By Solicitor in name of Another.]—If an attorney or agent can show he is entitled to purchase property, notwithstanding his character of attorney or agent, yet, if, instead of openly purchasing it, he purchases it in the name of a third person, as his trustee or agent, without disclosing the fact, such purchase is void. Lewis v. Hillman, 3 H. L. Cas. 607. S. P., McPherson v. Watt, 3 App. Cas. 254.

—— By Solicitor of Mortgagee.]—A purchase of mortgaged property by the solicitor of a mortgagee, without any instructions from him, or of any apparent benefit to him, at a time of temporary depreciation of the property, is not a valid transaction. Gibbs v. Daniel, 4 Giff. 1; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 636; 7 L. T. 27; 10 W. R. 638.

Mortgage Debt — Purchase by Solicitor's Clerk.]—A solicitor's clerk consulted confidentially by a mortgagor cannot purchase the mortgage debt at less than was due upon it, and retain the same for his own benefit. Hobday v. Peters, 28 Beav. 349; 29 L. J., Ch. 780; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 754; 2 L. T. 590; 8 W. R. 512.

—— By Solicitor-Trustee for Sale.]—Purchase from his client by a solicitor, who was also trustee for the sale of the estate for payment of debts, confirmed, upon the ground of his having attempted ineffectually to sell, of there being no fraud in the transaction, and of the purchase having been recognised and approved of by the cestui que trust. Clarke v. Swaile, 2 Eden, 134.

Solicitor being also Judgment Creditor.]—Although an agent or solicitor, acting at the time as such for the vendor, cannot purchase for his own benefit, yet, where it was denied that he was employed in the sale by his client, and it was urged that being himself a judgment creditor, he had a right to be present and become a purchaser at the sale:—Held, that he might throw off his former character of solicitor at that particular time, and exercise the right belonging to him in another character. Austin v. Chambers, 6 Cl. & F. 1.

By Solicitor of Trustees under Creditor's Deed.]—Where a solicitor to trustees under a deed, whereby a debtor assigned all his property for the benefit of his creditors, with a resulting trust to himself, on a sale of the property by public auction became the purchaser of the property, and claimed to hold it as purchaser; but, on a bill being filed by the debtor, by his answer disclaimed to hold the property as purchaser, and declared himself ready and willing to be dealt with as a mortgagee in possession; he was allowed all the costs of the suit subsequently to the filing of his answer, and also of another suit subsequently filed by himself in the same matter, such costs having been mainly occasioned by the production of evidence to establish that which had been admitted by the solicitor himself. Yetts v. Hilton, 9 L. T. 502.

From Client's Trustee in Bankruptcy.]—The question was, whether the rule of law, which prevents a solicitor from purchasing the property of his client without giving full and complete disclosure, applied to a purchase by a solicitor from the trustee in bankruptcy of his client:—Held, that the trustee in bankruptcy so stood in the place of the bankrupt that the bankrupt's solicitor could not be allowed, as against the trustee, an advantage obtained by him on a purchase from the trustee by means of the knowledge he had gained while acting as solicitor for the bankrupt; and, therefore, that the transaction could not be supported in equity, and that the defendants must be declared to be trustees of all the advantage of the purchase for L.'s trustee in bankruptcy. Luddy's Trustee v. Peard, 55 L. J., Ch. 884; 33 Ch. D. 500; 55 L. T. 137; 35 W. R. 44.

By Solicitor for Creditors of Bankrupt (in Scotland).]—A common agent or solicitor in court employed on behalf of the creditors of the estate of the bankrupt in Scotland may be considered in the nature of a trustee, a purchase, therefore, by him of any part of the bankrupt's estate may be set aside; and at all events will be so if it appear there are any circumstances of improper or negligent conduct in such agent. York Buildings Governor v. Mackenzie, 8 Bro. P. C. 42.

In Litigation.]—Upon the principles of policy, no attorney shall be permitted to purchase anything in litigation, of which litigation he has the management. Hall v. Hallet, 1 Cox, 135; 1 R. R. 3.

—— By Solicitor not on the Record.]—A purchase of the subject-matter of a suit by an attorney is void as against the policy of the law, and it makes no difference that the purchaser is not the attorney on the record. Simpson v. Lamb, 7 El. & Bl. 84; 26 L. J., Q. B. 121; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 412; 5 W. R. 227.

Where suit Ended.]—Secus, where litigation is at an end. Smith v. Selwyn, 5 W. R. 682.

Assignment of Fruits of Verdict before Existence of Relationship.]—An assignment of the fruits of a verdict to a solicitor, which would be void as being against the policy of the law if the relation of solicitor and client existed at the time of its execution, does not become void by reason of that relationship being subsequently created. Simpson v. Lamb (7 El. & Bl. 84) approved. Davis v. Freethy, 59 L. J., Q. B. 318; 24 Q. B. D. 519—C. A.

Of Charge.]—Semble, that the solicitor or counsel of the owner of an estate, if he purchase a charge upon the estate, will be entitled only to the amount he actually paid. Carter v. Palmer, 11 Bligh (N.S.) 397; 8 Cl. & F. 657.

Of Annuity at Undervalue.] — B. E. L., being solicitor and land agent of W. M., and engaged in redeeming annuities charged upon the estate of W. M., took an assignment of one of the annuities, for his own benefit, for a less sum than that which had been agreed upon by the deed of annuity for its repurchase :—Held, that B. E. L. was a trustee for W. M. for the repurchase of the annuity. Lawless v. Mansfield, 1 Dr. & War. 557; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 113.

Of Annuity — Payment of Costs out of Purchase-Money.]—Where a solicitor purchased an annuity from a person not previously his client, but was himself the only solicitor employed in the transaction, and charged the vendor the costs of the deed, which were paid out of the purchase-money immediately after the completion of the purchase :—Held, first, that this was not a dealing within the rule against purchases by solicitors from their clients. Edwards v. Williams, 32 L. J., Ch. 763; 8 L. T. 477; 11 W. R. 561.

Held, secondly, that there was no such retainer or return of any portion of the purchase-money as avoided the annuity under s. 6, 53 Geo. 3, c. 141. Ib.

Of Equity of Redemption—Setting Aside.]—D. and C., solicitors, who had acted for the mortgagees and the plaintiffs, contracted, under a forced sale, and under a pressure created by themselves, to purchase from the plaintiffs the equity of redemption; but twenty-one days prior thereto, at the time when they offered to purchase the property, D. and C. ceased to act as solicitors for the plaintiffs, and another solicitor acted on their behalf, and sanctioned the agreement, who, it did not appear, had sufficient information as to the state of the plaintiffs' affairs, or of the circumstances, or of the value of the property :—Held, that the deeds must be set aside, with costs. Gibbs v. Daniel, 4 Giff. 1; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 636; 7 L. T. 27; 10 W. R. 688.

Lease, under power, to Solicitor.] — G., tenant for life in settlement, is thereby empowered to make lease for lives of lands in Ireland, at the best rent, and without fine, and with consent of trustees to raise any sum of money. The trustees, in pursuance of power, consent that G. should by mortgaging all or any part of lands, or in any other manner he should think fit, raise any sum of money, not exceeding 5,000*l.* G., being in distress and involved in litigation, in consideration of 300*l.* and rents, grants to B., his solicitor, part of the lands in settlement upon lease for lives. The grant and receipt, expressing that 300*l.* was raised under power and consent, as part of 5,000*l.*, were duly registered. The rent and premium calculated at 6*l.* per cent. were considerably short of the annual value. On appeal :—Held, a good execution of power, but void as fraudulently obtained by B. Ward v. Hartpole, 3 Bligh, 470; 22 R. R. 61.

Obtaining Lease—Setting aside—Defence.]—Where an attorney obtains from his client a fee farm lease of part of the lands which were the subject of a suit, equity will set it aside, and a fraudulent dereliction of a suit, by a solicitor, cannot be pleaded by him in defence of an imposition on his client. Kenney v. Browne, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 462, 504, 522.

Under Decree.]—The solicitor to a mortgagee of an estate sold under a decree, consenting to the sale, but not a party to the suit, having become the purchaser, not allowed to retract, although before the hammer fell, and the motion refused with costs. Freer v. Rimmer, 14 Sim. 391.

A party to a suit, who was also a solicitor, and had the conduct of a sale decreed by the court, purchased at the sale under a feigned name. The court, after the purchase had been confirmed, ordered the estate to be again offered for sale at the price at which the party had purchased it, and, if there should be no higher bidder, the party to be held to his purchase. Sidney v. Ranger, 12 Sim. 118.

It is a settled rule of the court that the plaintiff or his solicitor cannot bid at a sale under a decree, without the leave of the court; non-compliance with that rule will vitiate the sale. Popham v. Exham, 10 Ir. Ch. Rep. 440.

—— In Name of Another.]—If a solicitor or trustee secretly purchase, in the name of another at a sale under the court, the sale is void. Ib.

—— Laches.]—Where there has been concealment, a violation of a rule of the court, or the sale was void, laches, or lapse of time, will not purchase relief. Ib.

Sale under Decree.]—Semble, a solicitor having the conduct of a sale under a decree is under an absolute incapacity to purchase at it. Atkins v. Delmege, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 1.

—— Rule as to Purchase by Solicitor.]—The rule that, at a sale in a suit by an order of the court, parties to the suit and their solicitors cannot become purchasers, will not be extended so as to embrace the case of a purchase by a person who, being the solicitor in another suit for persons interested in the proceeds of such sale, has obtained an order to attend the proceedings in the first suit on their behalf, and whose name, without his consent or knowledge, has been placed in the particulars of sale, as that of a person from whom copies and information could be obtained. Guest v. Smythe, 39 L. J., Ch. 536; L. R. 5 Ch. 551; 22 L. T. 563; 18 W. R. 742.

But if the purchaser's position had been brought within any of the well-established rules of equity, the court would not have been precluded from opening the sale by reason of the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 48, s. 7. Ib.

Leave to bid at a sale by the court, granted to a solicitor on the record, relieves him from his fiduciary character, and places him in the same position as an ordinary purchaser. Coaks v. Boswell, 55 L. J., Ch. 761; 11 App. Cas. 232; 55 L. T. 32—H. L. (E.) Reversing 33 W. R. 376—C. A.

—— Relief—Lapse of Time.]—Relief in such cases is given after a great lapse of time; and where there is a deception on the court. Semble, there is no fixed period of limitation to bar relief. Atkins v. Delmage, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 1.

A., a solicitor, having a charge on real estate, caused a bill to be filed, in his partner's name, to raise the charge; a sale having been decreed, A., without obtaining the leave of the court, purchased the lands in the name of B., to whom the conveyance was made. The fact that A. was the real purchaser was never disclosed to the master, or to the parties in the cause; and several orders were made, on applications in the name of B., calculated to lead the court to believe that he was the real purchaser, though the purchase money was paid by A. The court, after nineteen years, and after the death of A., and his partner, set aside the sale, although it was not proved to have been fraudulent or at an undervalue. Popham v. Exham, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 440.

Confirmation of Purchase.]—In the case of a contract by a solicitor to purchase his client's property, a confirmation to give a title to the solicitor to have the contract specifically performed, must be strong and plain, and with knowledge of the infirmity of the contract. Cutts v. Salmon, 4 De G. & Sm. 125. Affirmed, 21 L. J., Ch. 750; 16 Jur. 623.

—— By Will.]—A solicitor purchased a property from his client, who, by a codicil, confirmed the sale and devised the property to the solicitor. The court having, on the evidence, held the sale invalid, also decided that the codicil was inoperative in equity. Waters v. Thorn, 22 Beav. 547.

Rights of Purchasing Solicitor's Mortgagee.]—A sale by auction of a policy of insurance by a client to his solicitor, in whose possession the policy was, set aside; but the claim of a mortgagee without notice, with whom the policy had been deposited by that solicitor to secure the payment of the money, was established. Lawrence v. Galsworthy, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1049.

A sale between solicitor and client having been set aside and the property sold, and the purchase money brought into court in another suit, a mortgage created by the solicitor who had purchased was refused priority on the fund in court, although the mortgagee alleged that he was a purchaser for value without notice. Barnard v. Hunter, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1213; 5 W. R. 92.

Rights of Sub-purchaser.]—A. purchased an estate from his client, and afterwards sold it to B. B. employed no other solicitor than A.:—Held, that B. was affected with the knowledge possessed by A. of the objectionable nature of the transaction between himself and his client. Spencer v. Topham, 22 Beav. 573; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 865.

Setting aside Right of Third Party.]—If a solicitor make a purchase of an annuity from his client, and institute a suit against third parties to recover payment of such annuity, such third parties cannot sustain an objection to the purchase on the ground that it was made by a solicitor from his client; the client alone can sustain the objection. Knight v. Bowyer, 27 L. J., Ch. 520; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 569. Affirming 23 Beav. 609.

Of Annuity — Setting aside at Instance of Heir.]—Annuity obtained at an inadequate price by a confidential attorney from his client, cognisant of all the facts, under no legal disability, and acquiescing thirty years, set aside at the suit of the heir of the client, succeeding to the estate under a family settlement; no evidence having been lost, or facts thrown into obscurity by lapse of time, and the client being ignorant of his power to resist. Sufficient privity existed between the client and his heir so succeeding to the estate, to entitle the heir to the assistance of the court to disencumber the estate. From the delay, and also that the client, though under no legal disability, had voluntarily paid the annuity, whereby the attorney's family must have acted under the persuasion that they were well entitled to use the money so paid as their own, no retrospective account directed to make the attorney's representative refund. Molony v. L'Estrange, Beat. 406.

Setting aside.]—Agreements entered into between an attorney and his client for the purchase by the attorney, at an under price, of estates to which the client had good title, but of which he was not in possession, set aside for fraud and maintenance. Jones v. Thomas, 2 Y. & Coll. 498.

Purchase of a reversionary interest by an attorney from his client, though in the event advantageous, without fraud or any misrepresentation, the proposal coming from the client, and no confidence upon the subject, both ignorant of the value; the bill charging fraud and misrepresentation; confidence and knowledge on one side, with ignorance on the other, and bringing forward the only incorrect circumstance, the receipt taken as for money paid, though the consideration was by deduction from a bill of costs not then of that amount, dismissed with costs. Montesquieu v. Sandys, 18 Ves. 302; 11 R. R. 197.

——Existence of Relationship of Solicitor and Client—Evidence.]—An attorney was engaged in the sale of his client's property by auction, on which occasion a small portion only of the property was sold. He was subsequently employed in making out abstracts of title of the portion unsold, and sixteen months after the completion of the abstracts, during which term there had been no employment of the attorney professionally by the client, the attorney bought a portion of the unsold property, and debited the client in his books for drawing the agreement for sale. The consideration which was on the face of the purchase deed stated to have been paid was in fact composed partly of a previous debt for costs, and partly of such an annuity as the balance of the purchase money would, according to the government tables, obtain for a healthy life. The client died three years and a half after the sale. It was in evidence that the client was of intemperate habits for many years previously and up to the transaction in question. It did not appear that the attorney had made any special inquiries as to the state of health of the client, or endeavoured in any other quarter to obtain a higher annuity, which from the intemperate habits of the client might in all probability have been procured :—Held, on a bill filed by the heir-at-law of the client, to set aside the transaction, that the relation of attorney and client subsisted at the time of the sale, and that the attorney had failed to show that no industry he was bound to exert would have got a better bargain for his client, and the sale was accordingly set aside. Holman v. Loynes, 4 De G. M. & G. 270 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 529 ; 18 Jur. 839 ; 2 W. R. 205.

—— Notwithstanding Order in Administration Suit.]—A suit was instituted to set aside for fraud a sale by client to solicitor. The solicitor had died, and his estate had been administered in a suit under the decree in which the present plaintiffs had come in, and in their presence an order had been made in the administration suit declaring the sale good. The fraud for which it was sought to set aside the sale was discovered subsequently to the order in the administration suit :—Held, that the sale could be set aside notwithstanding the order in the administration suit, and without a bill of review. Turner v. Tepper, 46 L. J., Ch. 703 ; 25 W. R. 726.

—— Undervalue.]—Purchase by a solicitor from his client for 1,820*l.* upheld, though he had given about 100*l.* less than the value, and had two years afterwards sold part of the property at a fancy price, making a profit of 970*l.* Spencer v. Topham, 22 Beav. 573 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 865.

In February, 1837, A. sold and conveyed real estate to his solicitor, B. In October, 1837, A. died, having by his will, dated in May, 1837, given all his real estate to his wife for life, and after her death to C. for life, with remainder to C.'s first and other sons successively in tail male. C. died in 1847, but his eldest son, D., did not attain twenty-one until January, 1852. B. died in 1853, having by his will, dated in 1851, given all his real estate to E. and F. In 1855 D. filed a bill against E. and F. to set aside the conveyance from A. to B. In that suit A.'s widow was a defendant. B. had been A.'s solicitor for several years prior to the date of the conveyance ; he acted in relation thereto as the solicitor for A., as well as on his own behalf ; he continued to be A.'s solicitor until A.'s death ; and the conveyance was made at an under-value :—Held, that such conveyance by A. to B. was void ; and it was accordingly set aside as against A. and D., but without prejudice to any question between A.'s widow and E. and F. in respect of her life interest. Gresley v. Mousley, 4 De G. & J. 78 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 620 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 583 ; 7 W. R. 427.

—— Absolute Conveyance reduced to Mortgage.]—An absolute conveyance of a reversionary interest to a solicitor reduced by decree to a mortgage, the solicitor standing in a quasi though not absolute relationship of trustee and solicitor, and failing to prove that the transaction was clearly understood, and that full value was given. Denton v. Donner, 23 Beav. 285.

—— Loss of right to Relief by Delay and Conduct.]—At a meeting between A., plaintiff in a suit revived by her as executrix of her deceased husband, and B., her solicitor, and C., solicitor for the defendant, terms of compromise were considered, but not finally agreed upon. On the following day, viz. the 17th October, 1844, B. and C. entered into a written agreement for the compromise of the suit on behalf of their respective clients, of which A. was immediately informed. A part of the agreement was that A. should have 3,000*l.* allowed to her as executrix and it was arranged between B. and C. that that sum should be assigned to B. in full satisfaction of his claims against A.'s late husband, and A. as his legal personal representative ; that C. should be substituted as solicitor for A. in the suit ; and that all papers in B.'s possession relating thereto should be handed over to C. The claims of B. were founded on advances of money and on bills of costs against A.'s deceased husband, which bills had not been delivered, and on which bills and advances B. had charged compound interest, on the principle of annual rests, in pursuance of a mutual agreement to that effect. On the 19th October, 1844, A., without having any independent professional advice, and without having any account rendered to her by B., was induced by him to execute an assignment to him of the 3,000*l.* in satisfaction of the aforesaid claims ; and soon afterwards C. was substituted as solicitor for A. in the suit, and the papers in B.'s hands were handed over to him. In 1844 A., in consideration of 600*l.*, assigned to B. a further interest under the compromise ; but this interest was subsequently, in 1851, reassigned to A. on repayment of the 600*l.* Before 1845 the relation between A. and B. of solicitor and client, had ceased ; and before 1846 A. had independent professional advice, and became aware of her rights in relation to the assignment made by her to B. in October, 1844. In 1852 A. filed a bill against B. to set aside the assignment of the 19th October, 1844, and to procure the taxation of B.'s bills of costs :—Held, that, although A. had originally, and during some years after 1844, a case for setting aside the assignment of the 19th October, 1844, yet she had, by her own delay and conduct, subsequent to the relation of solicitor and client between B. and herself having ceased, and subsequent also to her having had independent professional advice and information in respect of her rights, lost her title to relief. Lyddon v. Moss, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 637 ; 7 W. R. 433.

—— Lapse of Time.]—An owner in fee of an estate, in 1807, agreed to sell it to his solicitor while the relation of solicitor and client was continuing between them. The agreement, for particular reasons, was not finally carried out till 1823. In 1826 the relation of solicitor and client ceased. The purchaser died in 1828, and the vendor died in 1829, without having taken any steps to impeach the transaction. In 1859 the trustee and cestuis que trustent under the will of the vendor filed a bill to set aside the sale, on the ground that the estate was sold at an under-value, while the relation of solicitor and client subsisted between the parties :—Held, that lapse of time was alone a bar to the suit, and, as it appeared that full value was given for the property, the bill was dismissed, with costs. Clanricarde (Marquis) v. Henning, 30 Beav. 175; 30 L. J., Ch. 865; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1113; 5 L. T. 168; 9 W. R. 912.

The solicitor for X., who was plaintiff in a suit to raise a charge on certain lands, purchased in the name of a trustee the lands at a sale under the decree, which was conducted by him in a manner that showed either great negligence or a design to depreciate the property, and the proceeds of which were insufficient to discharge his demand for costs, without paying anything to X. The sale was declared void on a bill filed by X. sixteen years afterwards, without any proof of its being at an under value. Atkins v. Delmege, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 1.

—— Settlement by Purchaser—Notice.]—The solicitor settled the estate on the marriage of his son; he himself prepared the settlement for all parties, which recited the documents connected with the purchase:—Held, that, although where a solicitor, being vendor, acts for the purchaser from him, his knowledge may not always be constructive notice, yet such a doctrine did not apply to this case; and that the son, his wife, and children, were bound, as purchasers, with notice. Ib.

—— Lapse of Time—Costs.]—Three farmers, being entitled to land, employed as their solicitor in the sale of it by auction the owner of adjacent land, whose bailiff was one of the vendors. The solicitor prepared and settled the conditions of sale, and attended as a bidder at the sale, and, after a competition, was declared the purchaser of one of the lots. The plaintiff, who was one of the vendors, was not then of age, being in his twenty-first year only. After attaining his majority, he and his brothers received from the solicitor sums on account of the purchase money, and let the solicitor into possession. Nearly three years afterwards the plaintiff filed a bill to rescind the sale:—Held, that, there having been no conveyance, and there being no obstacle to the plaintiff recovering the land in ejectment, and there having been acts of acquiescence on the plaintiff's part, the bill was filed too late, and it was dismissed; but, having regard to the relation between the plaintiff and defendant, and the duty imposed upon a solicitor, without costs. Cutts v. Salmon, 4 De G. & Sm. 125. Affirmed, 21 L. J., Ch. 750; 16 Jur. 623.

Agreement for Reversionary Lease obtained by Attorney from Client's Son—Specific Performance.]—An agreement for a reversionary lease having been obtained by an attorney from the son of his employer, who was remainderman in a settlement, under which his father, who had granted the existing lease, was tenant for life: on a bill for specific performance the court refused under the circumstances to enforce the agreement. Blakeney v. Bagot, 3 Bligh (N.S.) 237; 1 Dow, 405.

Bill by Solicitor for Specific Performance—Evidence.]—Where the defendants (vendors) signed a contract of sale, without professional assistance, and the plaintiff (purchaser) is a solicitor, circumstances of evidence, generally leading to the notion of surprise or mistake, and objections, otherwise not decisive per se, will be sufficient to induce the court to withhold a decree for specific performance. Deardon v. Bamford, 10 L. J., Ex. Eq. 54.

—— Onus.]—A solicitor, having agreed to purchase of his client a certain property, filed a bill for specific performance:—Held, under the circumstances of the case, that the burden of supporting the contract lay on the plaintiff; and that, whatever the rule might be in other cases, this was one in which demonstration of the full value having been given was part of the burden thrown on him who supported the contract; and that, he not having proved that full value was given, the contract could not be enforced. Thomas v. Phillipps, 11 Jur. 80.

—— Costs.]—The answer having alleged circumstances of gross fraud and circumvention, which the defendant failed to prove, the court refused to give him his costs. Ib.

Title—Objection to, by Solicitor.]—A solicitor who has been employed to advise on a title cannot, on purchasing the property himself, set up an objection which he did not think important when advising his principal. Beevor v. Simpson, Tam. 69; 31 R. R. 67.

Title Depending on Purchase from Client.]—A title depending on the validity of a purchase by a solicitor from his client forced on an unwilling purchaser, on proof of the validity of the transaction, though given in the absence of the client. Spencer v. Topham, 22 Beav. 573; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 865.

Evidence.]—Where a purchase by a solicitor from a client is defended on the ground of the intervention of other professional assistance, it must be shown that the new adviser had a proper opportunity of discharging his duty. But the intervention of a solicitor who is known by the purchaser to neglect his duty is no protection; or if it appears that a solicitor, purchasing from his late client, is aware of neglect of duty in the new adviser, and, especially if the purchaser withholds or suppresses from him any information of importance, the transaction is vitiated. Gibbs v. Daniel, 4 Giff. 1; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 636; 7 L. T. 27; 10 W. R. 688.

—— Duty of Solicitor.]—A solicitor who purchases from his client is bound to establish that the sale was as advantageous to the client as it could have been if the solicitor had used his utmost endeavours to sell the property to a stranger. Spencer v. Topham, 22 Beav. 573; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 865.

When a solicitor purchases or obtains a benefit from a client, he must show that he has taken no advantage of his professional position, but has done as much to protect the client's interest as he would have done in the case of the client dealing with a stranger. Savery v. King, 5 H. L. Cas. 627; 25 L. J., Ch. 482; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 503; 4 W. R. 571.

—— Costs.]—A solicitor is not incapacitated from purchasing from his client, but he will be bound to show that he paid that price for the property which, in the exercise of his professional duty, he would have advised his client to accept from a third person; and, though a bill to set aside such a sale is dismissed, the court will frequently refuse the solicitor his costs of the suit.

Champion v. Rigby, Tam. 421; 1 Russ. & M. 539; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 211.

Practice.]—On a bill filed to set aside the sale of an estate, on the ground of fraud practised by the defendant on the plaintiff, the plaintiff is not at liberty to give evidence of the defendant's having stood in the relation of his attorney at the time of the sale, with the view of raising an inference, that he had acted fraudulently by taking advantage of that character, the fact of his having been such an attorney not being stated, or put in issue by the bill. Williams v. Llewellyn, 2 Y. & J. 68.

—— Evidence of Payment of Purchase-money.]—A purchase by a solicitor from a client having been set aside on the ground that the sufficiency of the consideration was not established, an inquiry was directed with a view to ascertain whether the purchase-money was paid. No evidence was adduced on the inquiry to prove the payment, except the acknowledgment in the body of the deed and the usual indorsed receipt. It appeared that no further evidence could be had, and that there was no reason to suppose that any evidence had been destroyed:—Held, that the acknowledgment and receipt were not sufficient evidence as against parties claiming under the client, and that the purchase-money must be considered not to have been paid. Gresley v. Mousley, 3 De G. F. & J. 433; 31 L. J., Ch. 537; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 320; 6 L. T. 86; 10 W. R. 222.

—— Evidence—Onus.]—The court does not hold that an attorney is incapable of purchasing from his client, but watches such a transaction with jealousy, and throws on the attorney the onus of showing that the bargain is, speaking generally, as good as any that could have been obtained by due diligence from any other purchaser. The circumstances of the employment may be considered, and the amount of influence estimated. Pisani v. Att.-Gen. for Gibraltar, L. R. 5 P. C. 516; 30 L. J. 729; 22 W. R. 900.

—— Lapse of Time.]—The burden of sustaining a purchase by a solicitor from his client, at least within twenty years from its date, is on the solicitor. Gresley v. Mousley, 4 De G. & J. 78; 28 L. J., Ch. 620; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 583; 7 W. R. 427.

During the continuance of the relation of solicitor and client the same weight ought not to be given to lapse of time as when no such relation exists. Ib.

—— Evidence—Onus—Taxation after Long Time.]—On a question of the propriety of a purchase by a solicitor from his client, it is the general rule that the onus of showing the transaction to have been fair lies upon the solicitor, but the nature and degree of the evidence required for that purpose will vary according to the mode of employment of the solicitor, and to the influence which his position may appear to have given him either as to costs or otherwise. In such a case, where the price was shown to have been fair with reference to the surface value of the land (which alone was usually looked to in purchases in that part of the country), but, shortly after the purchase, the coal, which was known to both parties to be under the soil, acquired great additional value from the formation of a railway, the transaction, which had taken place seventeen years before the bill was filed, was sustained, although a large part of the consideration was a bill of costs due to the solicitor, for which a previous mortgage had been given; but the court referred the bill to the master, to inquire whether there were any and what items improper and such as would not have been allowed upon taxation, the court reserving further directions. Edwards v. Meyrick, 2 Hare, 60; 12 L. J., Ch. 49; 6 Jur. 924.

—— Relationship of Solicitor and Client.]—Although the relationship of attorney and client may exist, yet, if it has no existence in hâc re, the rule with regard to the onus of proof may no longer be applicable. Ib.

—— Setting Aside—Production of Deeds.]—A suit was instituted by a cestui que trust, to set aside a sale by trustees to their solicitor. The solicitor submitted to give up the purchase on repayment. He admitted the possession of the title-deeds, but resisted their production, unless the plaintiff consented to repay the purchase money, saying that the title was bad, and that the plaintiff would have the power, as he had the inclination, to expose the title, in case he abandoned the suit:—Held, that the solicitor was bound to produce the deeds. Shallcross v. Weaver, 12 Beav. 272. Affirmed, 2 Hall & Tw. 231; 19 L. J., Ch. 450.

—— Setting Aside—Costs.]—A primary decree having set aside as an absolute conveyance an assignment of lands by a client to his solicitor, which, however, was ordered to stand as a security for the amount to be found due to the latter at its date for cash advances and costs:—Held, that the solicitor should pay the costs of the suit up to and including the first hearing, but that each party should bear his own subsequent costs, it appearing doubtful, on the taking of the account, whether there was not still a small balance due to the solicitor at the date of the final decree. Shannon v. Casey, Ir. R. 8 Eq. 307.

—— Discharging Solicitor.]—The court refused to discharge the solicitor in the cause from a purchase before the master, with a view to prevent a sale at under value. Nelthorpe v. Pennyman, 14 Ves. 517.

—— Absolute Covenant for Title—Restraining Action on Covenant.]—When a solicitor, acting on behalf of both parties, prepares a conveyance to himself containing an absolute covenant for title on the part of the vendor, when he knows or must be taken to have known that his title was defective, he will be restrained by perpetual injunction from proceeding with an action on the covenant. Williamson v. Moriarty, 19 W. R. 818.

—— Parties.]—To a bill seeking a declaration that a purchase by a solicitor of an annuity charged on his client's estate was made with the client's money, or that the client was entitled to the benefit of the purchase, and for consequential relief, registered judgment creditors of the client are not necessary parties. Ford v. Tennant, 3 De G. F. & J. 697; 29 Beav. 452; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 615; 9 W. R. 674.

—— Form of Decree.]—A purchase was set aside on the ground that the purchaser was at the time solicitor for the vendor, and the judgment directed the usual accounts of his receipts during his possession :—Held, upon the balance of authority, that the decree must order him to account for such sums as, but for his wilful default, he might have received, though the bill did not charge wilful default, nor pray relief in respect thereof. Adams v. Sworder, 10 L. T. 49; 12 W. R. 615.

e. Mortgages.

Generally—For Debt due or Services rendered.]—A security which has been given to an attorney by his client for a debt really due, or as a reward for services already rendered, will not be set aside in equity. Cheslyn v. Dalby, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 170.

—— On Settled Account.]—Where the solicitor and client settled an account, and a mortgage security was given with covenant to pay ; and the solicitor having sued on the covenant, the defendant filed a bill, impeaching the transaction on the ground of undue influence, error, fraud, and suspicion, which was denied by the answer ; an injunction refused, with costs. Jones v. Roberts, 9 Beav. 419.

—— For Balance of Account.] — Where a solicitor has lent money to his client and taken a mortgage for the balance appearing to be due to him by certain accounts in which the items of his demand are specified, the court will not, merely because the parties stood in the relation of solicitor and client, deprive the mortgagee of any part of the benefit of his security. Hampson v. Nicoll, 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 22.

—— Mortgage—Settlement—Account.]—Bill for general account lies against a solicitor and agent taking security without a settlement of accounts. Detillin v. Gale, 7 Ves. 584.

—— Security for Debt due from third Person.]—A solicitor is not at liberty to deal with his client for a security for a debt due to him by a third person, without giving to his client all the information he possesses connected with his demand and the nature of his security. Higgins v. Joyce, 2 Jo. & Lat. 282.

—— Special Provisions in.]—When a solicitor takes a security from his client, the court will not give effect to any stipulation, if unusual and disadvantageous to the client, such as postponing the right to redeem or to pay off the debt for twenty years. Cowdry v. Day, 1 Giff. 316 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 39 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1199 ; 1 L. T. 88 ; 8 W. R. 55.

Stipulations for commission on receipt of rents and conversion of arrears of interest into principal, inserted by a solicitor mortgagee in a mortgage deed prepared by himself, and insisted upon by him as the condition of any further advance to his client, will not be allowed in taking the account between the solicitor, as mortgagee in possession, and his client in a foreclosure suit. Eyre v. Hughes, 45 L. J., Ch. 395 ; 2 Ch. D. 148 ; 34 L. T. 211 ; 24 W. R. 597.

—— Unusual Provisions in.]—The owner of leasehold property, part of which was subject to six mortgages, was threatened with an immediate sale by the third mortgagee of the greater part of it, who had bought in the second mortgage, and was in treaty for the purchase of the first. The defendant, a solicitor, advanced the money needful to pay off the mortgagee and prevent a sale, stipulating that the whole of the mortgages should be paid off, and that he should have a mortgage for the total sum paid by him, including costs of the different mortgagees, to bear interest at the rate of 6*l.* per cent., the first and second mortgages having previously been at 5*l.* per cent. He also stipulated that the mortgage should include a separate property which was in mortgage at 5*l.* per cent., and that he should be entitled to costs as if a client had been mortgagee. All these stipulations were distinctly explained to the mortgagor, and were carried into effect by the mortgage deed. In an action for redemption brought by the mortgagor :—Held, that as the unusual provisions had been fully explained to the mortgagor, they were binding upon him, except that, as to the additional property, which had been included solely for the mortgagee's own protection, the additional rate of interest must be disallowed. Jones v. Linton, 44 L. T. 601.

—— Omission of Usual Provisions.]—A solicitor advanced money to his client on a second mortgage, in which was inserted a power of sale exercisable at any time without the usual proviso requiring that notice should be given, or some interest should be three months in arrear ; and it was not shown that he explained to the client that the power was not in the usual form. The solicitor afterwards took possession, and for several years received the rents, which, together with some payments made by the mortgagor, exceeded the interests on both mortgages. He then sold the property without notice :—Held, in an action by the mortgagor against the solicitor, that the omission from the power of sale of the usual qualifying clause was a breach of duty, and that the mortgagee was liable in damages as for an improper sale, unless it could be shown that some interest was three months in arrear ; and whether the absence of explanation did not make it improper even if there was interest in arrear, quære. Cockburn v. Edwards, 51 L. J., Ch. 46 ; 18 Ch. D. 449 ; 45 L. T. 500—C. A. Affirming 29 W. R. 136.

—— Costs by way of Damages.]—Held (reversing the court below), that the difference between party and party costs and solicitor and client costs of the present action could not be given to the plaintiff by way of damages. Ib.

Champerty — Mortgage taken by Solicitor through a Nominee.]—T., being rightful heir to lands, employed L. as his attorney to prosecute his claims, on the terms that he should have, in lieu of all claim for costs, one-third of the estate which might be recovered. The proceedings being successful, L. entered, as agent of T., into possession of the rents and profits of the estate. L. afterwards pressing for a settlement of his claims, T. required an advance by way of mortgage, and applied to L. for it. L. refused to advance any money himself, but procured G. to advance the necessary amount for payment of his own claim and a further advance to T. A mortgage was executed by T. to G., with a power of sale. Immediately after the mortgage L. procured from T. an authority to pay 120*l.* for the purpose of obtaining the title-deeds, which remained in the possession of a solicitor to the wrongful heir, who claimed a lien thereon for 120*l.* for costs. Shortly after this, notice was given by G. calling in the mortgage money; and, default being made, the power of sale was exercised, and the lands advertised for sale. It turned out that G. was merely a nominee for L., and had advanced no moneys of his own, and that L. had concealed this fact, and the fact that the original retainer was void for champerty:—Held, therefore, that the agreement and retainer were void; and that the mortgage must be cut down, and stand as a security for so much only as was justly due from T. to L. Thomas v. Lloyd, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 288.

A great part of the amount consisted of bills of costs; but interest at 4*l.* per cent. was directed. Ib.

Notwithstanding very suspicious circumstances, the 120*l.* was allowed to be added by L. to the other sums due to him. Ib.

Solicitor acting as Agent and Advancing Money.]—Attorney acting as agent for mortgagor and mortgagee in mortgage, and as agent and quasi banker for mortgagor, will not be allowed to charge the mortgaged premises with a greater sum (although actually advanced by him on account of his principal and client, and within the amount of the sum to be borrowed on mortgage) than shall be proved to have been really paid to him in money by mortgagees on account of, and as agent for, the mortgagor; nor will the most minute fraction advanced by him to make up the integral sum of money be allowed to stand as a charge on the estate. Lewis v. Morgan, 5 Price, 42; 4 R. R. 860.

Bond for Money Lent—Repayment out of Money received for Debtor.]—M., the solicitor and agent of L., having been paid all his costs, &c., as such, lent L. the sum of 500*l.* (for which L. gave his bond), which he was to repay himself out of a sum of 600*l.*, a fine for abuse which he was to receive for L. M. received the 600*l.*, and retained thereout 500*l.*, and, L. dying soon after, he entered judgment on the bond, and assigned it for the full amount which the assignee claimed out of L.'s estate. The trustee of L.'s will produced a letter of M. setting forth the agreement as to the loan, and praying that M. should be ordered to pay over the 500*l.* so retained by him. M. denied the letter to be genuine, and an issue was directed; and, the jury finding that it was in his handwriting, the court ordered M. to pay over the amount of the bond, and all costs of the issue, petitions, &c. Bucke v. Murphy, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 373.

Composition Deed with Creditors, of whom Solicitor is One—Failure of Debtor to Comply with Terms.]—A person, being embarrassed in his circumstances, enters into a composition with his creditors, one of whom is his solicitor. The solicitor prepares and (with the other creditors) executes the deed of composition, by the terms of which the debtor is to pay 1,500*l.* to his creditors by instalments, and to insure his life for that amount, and, on failure of such payment and insurance, the deed is to be void. There is no evidence that the solicitor ever explained to his client the nature of the legal and equitable obligations imposed on him by the deed, or ever instructed him that the covenants in it were to be strictly performed, or that he, the solicitor, was bound by it; but there is evidence of a private understanding between the solicitor and the client, that the solicitor, notwithstanding the deed, shall be paid in full. The debtor fails to insure his life for the whole 1,500*l.* His solicitor cannot, as between himself and his client, insist upon this failure as ground for avoiding the deed. Watts v. Hyde, 2 Coll. 368; 10 Jur. 127.

Incumbrance Bought Up at Undervalue—Solicitor taking Second Incumbrance—Priority.]—The heir-at-law, who was also the personal representative of a deceased debtor, purchased up an incumbrance on the estate for less than the sum due on foot of it:—Held, under the circumstances, that he was entitled to the full amount of the sum secured by it, as against a subsequent incumbrancer, a solicitor, who advised the purchase as a means of providing for the heir, and did not disclose that the purchase would enure to his own benefit. Bayly v. Wilkins, 3 Jo. & Lat. 630.

Solicitor taking Assignment of Legatees' Interest—Rate of Interest.]—F., who acted as solicitor to trustees and executors, and also to some of the legatees, under a will, took assignments, absolute in terms, from the legatees of their reversionary interests, the consideration being smaller than the actual value of the interests assigned. F. died insolvent, and in the administration of his estate a question was raised as to the rate of interest to which the estate was entitled in respect of these advances to the legatees, as it was admitted that the assignments could not be treated as absolute, but only as securities for the moneys advanced:—Held, that interest at the rate of 5 per cent. must be allowed, though no general rule could be laid down as to the rate of interest to be allowed in cases of the kind. Unsworth, In re, 12 L. T. 49.

Solicitor taking Mortgage from Client on Different Terms from those on which he Procures one for Client.]—When a solicitor had procured a loan of money on mortgage for his client, and the mortgage deed contained mutual stipulations that there should be no redemption and no foreclosure, provided the interest was regularly paid for five years, and the solicitor afterwards took from his client a mortgage which did not contain this provision:—Held, that he was not entitled to proceed upon this mortgage within the five years. Lawless v. Mansfield, 1 Dr. & War. 557; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 113.

For Debt Due and Professional Services.]—A client executed a mortgage to his solicitor to secure the payment of 2,500*l.* The deed recited that the former was indebted to the latter both for professional services and for money advanced on account, the amount of which was not at that time precisely ascertained, or immediately ascertainable, but which was computed, and was agreed to be taken, at the above sum, as the parties thereby admitted. In consideration of the sums mentioned in the deed, and also of 2,500*l.* expressed to be justly due and owing from the client to the solicitor, estates of the former were conveyed to the latter, but subject to a proviso for redemption. In the transactions the sole professional adviser of the client, who was a sufferer from disease, and lived in close retirement, was the solicitor, and it was not shown that any third person was called in upon the occasion. The executors, after the client's death, filed a bill, praying for a declaration that the deed ought to stand as a security for such amount as could be shown and proved to be justly due, and that the solicitor might be ordered to make out and deliver proper bills of costs. By his answer the solicitor set forth accounts of receipts and payments made by him, but showed no balance due to him on the cash account; and he submitted, that from lapse of time he could not set forth full and accurate bills of costs, and that, by the terms of the deed, he was not lawfully bound to set forth any:—Held, that as the relation of solicitor and client was subsisting between the parties, that relation constituted an imperfection in the ability of the client to consent to the transaction. Morgan v. Higgins, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 236; 7 W. R. 273.

Held, also, that as there were no circumstances occurring in the case to remove the pressure arising from the existence of that relation, the executors were entitled to the relief prayed. Ib.

Mortgage of Settled Charge to Solicitor having Notice—Setting Aside.]—Where by a post-nuptial deed, a sum of money which had been charged on land, and was the property of the wife, was settled in trust for the husband for life, remainder to the wife and their issue; and the husband, after the death of his wife, joined by the issue, mortgaged the entire charge to A. and B., who at the time were solicitors for him and his issue, and who had notice of the settlement; the mortgage deed was set aside as far as it affected the issue, it being fraudulent as against them. Ashe v. Lowe, Hay. & J. 287.

Other Cases—Mortgage procured by Solicitor from Client by Misrepresentation, assigned to Innocent Transferee.]—A solicitor having by misrepresentation procured his client to sign a deed of mortgage of estates, which the latter had purchased by auction, afterwards assigned the mortgage so obtained to another client to secure a sum of money advanced, the assignee taking the assignment without notice of the fraud, but without the concurrence or communication with the mortgagor. The solicitor subsequently absconded, and was declared bankrupt. The court, on a bill filed by the mortgagor, and supported by his own personal evidence only of the particulars of the fraud by which his signature to the deed had been obtained, directed the deed to be delivered up to be cancelled, the defendant, the assignee of the mortgage, having declined to cross-examine the plaintiff, and the collateral facts bearing on the case tending to corroborate rather than impeach the plaintiff's evidence. Vorley v. Cooke, 27 L. J., Ch. 185; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 3.

—— Bill of Sale improperly Obtained, one Solicitor advising both Parties.]—C., a solicitor, not at that time acting in his professional character, advanced to Miss R. money on the security of bills of exchange, believing her, on her own representation, to be a person of wealth and family. On the 20th February, for the first time, he discovered that she was in insolvent circumstances and without expectations. She had been taken in custody on a capias on the 17th February, and discharged on the 18th on a special bail-bond. On the 20th she was in custody of the police under a magistrate's warrant. She was also on the same day arrested under a capias to hold her to bail at the suit of a creditor, the plaintiff. She remained at her own house, in charge of a policeman, being confined to her bed by illness. On the 21st B., an auctioneer, a client of C., agreed on C.'s proposal to advance Miss R. 863*l.*, on the security of a bill of sale of the furniture in the house. B. himself valued the furniture on the 21st and 22nd; and on the latter day the bill of sale was executed by R., who was still in custody. The evidence showed that the 863*l.* was never in the hands of Miss R. as a free agent. B. stated that C. informed him to the effect that Miss R.'s connections were in the highest degree respectable, and that he believed that her embarrassments, and the proceedings in respect of which the policeman was there, were such as she would be relieved from by an advance on her furniture. C. was the only professional adviser of both parties in the transaction:—Held, that the bill of sale was unduly and improperly obtained, and must be set aside, but without costs, as the bill contained unsubstantiated charges of fraud against B. Sykes v. Bond, 4 L. T. 859.

—— Agreement by Husband to charge Property of Wife, for Debt due to Solicitor—Assignment, to Solicitor, of prior Charge.]—Hereditaments belonging to the plaintiff were, upon her marriage with W. in 1831, vested in trustees, to the separate use of the plaintiff for life, with remainder to the use of such person as she should appoint; and in default, in trust to pay the rents to or permit her to receive the same for life; and after her death, to the use of her husband for life, with remainder to the children. At the date of the marriage the hereditaments were subject to a term of 1,000 years, created to secure 300*l.* and interest, but such sum had long been paid off, although no assignment of the term was made. In March, 1833, the hereditaments were, by the plaintiff and her husband, appointed to secure 250*l.* and interest, and the term was assigned to a trustee to secure the payment, and subject thereto, in trust for the person entitled to the equity of redemption. The husband died in October, 1836, and the plaintiff shortly after his death paid off the 250*l.* In March, 1837, the plaintiff charged the hereditaments with the payment to T. of 400*l.* and interest, and the term was again assigned to a trustee for him, and subject thereto, in trust for the person entitled to the equity of redemption. In February, 1838, the plaintiff married U., but no settlement was then made; and in October, 1838, the 400*l.* due to T. was paid off, and the deed of March, 1837, and the title-deeds of the hereditaments, were given up to U., but no reconveyance of the hereditaments, or reassignment of the term was made. U. delivered the deeds to his solicitor B., to whom, as alleged, he was indebted to a large amount; and in February, 1841, U., by deed, agreed with B. to charge the debt upon the hereditaments. The plaintiff did not execute the deed of February, 1841. The greater part of the debt due to B. was for costs incurred in defending a suit, first, on behalf of the plaintiff, and subsequently of herself and her husband. In 1843 B. entered into possession of the hereditaments, and had since continued in such possession. Although all principal and interest due to T. had been paid, yet it was alleged that he, as mortgagee, had paid 175*l.* for costs, which he was entitled to recover under the mortgage security; and in September, 1854, he, in consideration of 40*l.*, assigned this debt to B., and conveyed the hereditaments to him to secure the amount due to him. U. died in December, 1855, and shortly afterwards the plaintiff filed a bill to have the deed of February, 1841, declared void, that B. was not entitled to any larger sum than 40*l.*, and that in taking the accounts he would not be entitled to be paid the sum alleged to be due, and secured by the deed of 1841:—Held, that B. was entitled to the principal and interest secured by the deed of 1841, and also to the 40*l.* and interest from September, 1854; to his costs of the suit and in defending his mortgage title; and that the deed of March, 1837, and the amount due thereon to T., were to stand as security for the payment of the amount found due to B.: and the court ordered an account against B. as mortgagee in possession. Nelson v. Booth, 3 Jur. (N.S.) 951; 5 W. R. 722.

—— Solicitor acting in Partnership negotiation not disclosing Mortgage.]—The plaintiff, in 1865, entered into partnership with L., the terms being that L. should bring in as capital the business premises, to be taken at a valuation, and so much money as might be required to make up 6,000*l.*, and that the plaintiff should bring in 6,000*l.* and pay a premium to L. C. acted as solicitor for L. in this transaction, and furnished the valuer with the particulars of his interest in the business premises. Four years afterwards L. became bankrupt, having drawn all his capital out of the partnership, and being in debt to it at the time; and C. then informed the plaintiff that he and his brother held a mortgage on L.'s interest in the business premises for 850*l.*, the sum advanced being trust money. This mortgage had been created before the partnership was agreed upon, and neither C. nor L. had ever mentioned it to the plaintiff, nor was it noticed in the particulars furnished to the valuer, and the interest had been paid upon it by L. in cash, or by cheques on his private account:—Held, that C. was bound to make good to the plaintiff the amount of the mortgage and any interest which he might have to pay on it, and that he must pay the costs of the suit. Sterry v. Combs, 40 L. J., Ch. 595; 25 L. T. 10; 19 W. R. 964.

Enforcing Security.]—Where a solicitor took from his client a security on a sum of money charged upon the estate of the principal debtor, for the recovery of which the client was then prosecuting a suit in equity, and did not disclose to him the circumstances connected with that estate, and particularly that he, the solicitor, had other demands affecting it, a bill to enforce that security was dismissed with costs. Higgins v. Joyce, 2 Jo. & Lat. 282.

Practice — Terms of Relief — Payment into Court.]—The ordinary rule that the court will not grant an interlocutory injunction restraining a mortgagee from exercising his power of sale except on the terms of the mortgagor paying into court the sum sworn by the mortgagee to be due for principal, interest, and costs, does not apply to a case where the mortgagee at the time of taking the mortgage was the solicitor of the mortgagor. In such a case the court will look to all the circumstances of the case, and will make such order as will save the mortgagor from oppression without injuring the security of the mortgagee. Macleod v. Jones, 53 L. J., Ch. 145; 24 Ch. D. 289; 49 L. T. 321; 32 W. R. 43.

—— Production of Mortgage Deed ordered.]—In a suit to set aside a mortgage deed, as having been obtained by the mortgagee under circumstances of pressure and surprise, which alleged circumstances were, however, denied by the answer of the mortgagee, the court, upon motion, ordered the production of the mortgage deed, it appearing that the mortgagee was a solicitor, and that he had been the mortgagee's only professional adviser in the transaction. Davis v. Parry, 1 Giff. 174; 27 L. J., Ch. 294; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 758; 6 W. R. 171.

—— Account.]—The defendant, a solicitor-mortgagee, took from the mortgagor an authority to receive the rents of the property accruing due at the date of the mortgage, and in fact received the rents from that date. He sold some of the properties included in the mortgage, under his power of sale, and contracted for the sale of another at a price which appeared on the evidence to be below its value; the last-mentioned sale was not completed, owing to the pendency of the action:—Held, that the mortgagor was entitled to an account in the usual form as against a mortgagee who has entered into possession before there was any interest in arrear, and that the sale not yet completed must be set aside. An account of costs in respect of several abortive sales, and of the sales finally carried out, which had been signed by the defendant without any independent advice, was ordered to be reopened and taxed. Jones v. Linton, 44 L. T. 601.

—— Mortgage to stand as Security for Amount found due.]—A mortgage, to secure moneys alleged to be advanced and also certain costs, ordered to stand as security only for what, on taking a general account, should be found due, it appearing that the defendant on taking the security produced to his client no stated account of the amount due, and had kept no record of the transactions; and the solicitor, having in his answer made misstatements as to some of the items, was ordered to pay the costs of the suit to the hearing. Davis v. Parry, 1 Giff. 174; 27 L. J., Ch. 294; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 758; 6 W. R. 171.

—— Taxation, Relief on.]—A. was an illiterate person, and B. formerly acted as his solicitor. After some years A. called upon B. to furnish a bill of costs, it being his practice, by consent, to charge his clients with a gross sum, instead of delivering a bill of costs. An order to deliver a bill of costs was obtained, and B. furnished a cash account of receipts and payments, consisting of several items, one of which was his bill of costs, and showing a balance of 83*l.* due to him from A. One of the items for which he had taken credit was a sum of 300*l.* and interest. The taxation was being proceeded with, and the master having allowed most of the items on the bill of costs, A. began to dispute the items in the cash account, but did not at first impugn the 300*l.* Some months afterwards he disputed the item of 300*l.* and interest, which was shown by B. to have been secured by a mortgage of A. to B. This mortgage was afterwards transferred, and the debt discharged. The master denied the right of A. to dispute this item, whereupon he denied that he had ever executed such a deed. A. afterwards filed a bill, alleging that he had never received the consideration money for the mortgage deed (which was alleged by B. to have been made up of various payments made on A.'s behalf by B., and a sum of costs), and prayed for an account of the receipts and payments of B. on behalf of A., and that, if necessary, the mortgage deed might be declared not binding on A.:—Held, that as A. had already had the investigation to which he was entitled in equity, and the result of that investigation had been not to disturb a single item in the account, no further relief could be given to him. Judd v. Ollard, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 755.

—— Evidence.]—B. had taken an acceptance and two I O U's of A., as acknowledgments of sums due to him, which were afterwards included in the mortgage debt:—Held, in the absence of anything to throw discredit on the holder, that these acknowledgments must be taken as primâ facie evidence of the advances. Ib.

f. Sale to Client.

Setting Aside.]—Sale of annuity by attorney to client set aside under circumstances. Gibson v. Jeyes, 6 Ves. 266; 5 R. R. 295.

A solicitor, who was employed to procure an investment for a sum of money, sold to his client ground rents at eighteen years' purchase, for which he had paid but fifteen years' purchase. There being no evidence that the solicitor had communicated to his client the price which he had given, nor even the fact that he was vendor:—Held, the sale must be set aside. Driscoll v. Bromley, 1 Jur. 238.

A. B., being desirous of raising money to enable him to prosecute his claim to a fund in court, applied to a solicitor for that purpose. An agreement was executed, by which the solicitor agreed to lend 1,000*l.*, and A. B. agreed to purchase from him some land for 6,000*l.* (ten times its value). The land was conveyed, and the funds in court mortgaged by A. B. for the 6,000*l.*; but the 1,000*l.* was not advanced at the time. The court, on the ground of the gross inadequacy of value, coupled with the other circumstances of the case, set aside the whole transaction with costs. Cockell v. Taylor, Collett v. Preston, Preston v. Collett, 15 Beav. 103; 21 L. J., Ch. 545.

—— Sufficiency of Value.]—Inadequacy of value, though it is not by itself a sufficient ground for avoiding a sale, is yet of great weight when coupled with circumstances of oppression. Ib.

The court looks with suspicion at the evidence of value derived from the mere opinion given by surveyors, unsupported by any other circumstances. Ib.

Retaining Purchase.] — Purchaser from his solicitor, who impeaches the sale, cannot retain his purchase at a valuation. Driscoll v. Bromley, 1 Jur. 238.

Sale to Company.]—A firm of solicitors purchased leasehold property, and soon afterwards they formed a company (of which they were appointed the solicitors) to take over the property, which they sold to the company at a price greatly in excess of that which they had paid for it:—Held, that no fiduciary relation having existed between the parties at the time when the solicitors purchased the property, and there having been no fraud, concealment, or misrepresentation on the part of the solicitors, and all the then members of the company having been fully aware of the facts, the sale could not be opened, and the solicitors were not accountable for the profit made on the transaction. Masons' Hall Tavern Co. v. Nokes, 22 L. T. 503.

T., a solicitor, acting for the promoters of an intended company, with an understanding that he should be its solicitor when formed, entered into arrangement with R., who had purchased property suitable for the company as a speculation, that such purchase should be on their joint account, and that all negotiations relating to the property should be in the name of R. alone, and that the name of T. should not appear. The company, whilst T.'s interest in the property was concealed from it, and under the advice of the firm in which he was a partner, purchased from R. a portion of the property at a sum larger than the price paid by R. and T. for the whole, and the profit was divided between them. The company afterwards discovered the circumstances under which the sale had been made to it:—Held, that the company was entitled as against T. to the benefit of his contract with R., so far as related to the premises sold to them; and that T. was entitled to receive from the company only the difference between the sum paid by him for his share of the property and the value of the portion of the property retained by him, and that the surplus which had been paid by the company to him must be repaid with interest at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. Tyrrell v. Bank of London, 10 H. L. Cas. 26; 31 L. J., Ch. 369; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 849; 6 L. T. 1; 10 W. R. 359.

e. Medical Adviser.

Relief.]—Relief, on the principle of correcting abuses of confidence, given against the liability of the maker of a promissory note taken from a poor patient on the occasion of a change in his position in life by his medical attendant without any account having been rendered, and for an amount beyond what was due for his attendance on the most extravagant scale of charges. Billage v. Southee, 9 Hare, 534. S. C., nom. Billing v. Southee, 21 L. J., Ch. 472; 16 Jur. 48, 188.

The plaintiff was held entitled to a declaration that the note should stand as a security only for the amount due for medical attendance on the plaintiff. Ib.

Setting Aside.]—Upon a suit for the delivery up of a bill of exchange for 262*l.* 10*s.*, accepted by an aged captain in the navy in favour of a dentist, the latter, by his answer, stated the consideration for the bill to have been a verbal agreement, that the dentist would, during the captain's life, attend to his teeth, and supply him with new ones as occasion might require:—Held, that the captain's executors were entitled to have the bill delivered up. Allen v. Davis, 4 De G. & Sm. 133; 20 L. J., Ch. 44.

A patient executed instruments, whereby he secured to the defendant, his surgeon, an annuity of 100*l.* during the life of the defendant, in consideration that the defendant would live with him and give him the benefit of his professional assistance during his life. Four days before the execution of these instruments, the defendant called in an eminent physician to visit the patient, who stated to the defendant his opinion that the patient could not recover nor live long: and about the same time the defendant expressed to a witness in the cause that the patient could not live more than a month or six weeks. These instruments cannot be maintained, even if the patient were of sound mind and capable of business. Popham v. Brooke, 5 Russ. 8; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 184.

Agreement obtained by a surgeon from a deceased patient, set aside upon the ground that the court was satisfied that the patient never did agree to or intend to direct what in the alleged agreement he was represented as agreeing to and directing, and that his signature, if genuine, must have been obtained by fraud, or under such circumstances as rendered it the duty of a court of equity to protect the patient and his estate from being prejudiced by it. Dent v. Bennett, 4 Myl. & Cr. 269; 8 L. J., Ch. 125; 3 Jur. 99.

A deed purporting to be a conveyance by way of sale of real estate from an aged and infirm person to his intimate friend and medical attendant, set aside for fraud, the money apparently paid at the execution of the deed having been provided by the grantor for the purpose, and the transaction having been kept secret from the household and family of the grantor. Gibson v. Russell, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 104; 7 Jur. 875.

The court refused to set aside a voluntary deed executed by an old and infirm man in favour of a person who had attended him as a surgeon, and received the dividends of some stock for him, it appearing that the nature and effect of the deed were fully explained to the grantor, by his solicitor, before he executed it, and that no undue influence had been exercised over him. Pratt v. Barker, 1 Sim. 1; 4 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 149; 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 186; 27 R. R. 136.

A medical man obtained an agreement for the sale of land from his patient, an aged and infirm man; the testimony as to the value of the property was very conflicting. The court, being of opinion that the patient was aware of the nature of the contract into which he was entering, decreed specific performance with costs. Holmes v. Howes, 20 W. R. 310.

Ratification.]—Although a gift made to a person standing in a confidential relation to the donor, as by a patient to a physician, may be voidable, yet, if, after the confidential relation has ceased to exist, the donor intentionally elects to abide by the gift, and does in fact abide by it, it cannot be impeached after his death, even if it is not proved that the donor was aware that the gift was voidable at his election. Rhodes v. Bate (L. R. 1 Ch. 252) commented on. Mitchell v. Homfray, 50 L. J., Q. B. 460; 8 Q. B. D. 587; 45 L. T. 694; 29 W. R. 558—C. A.

f. Spiritual Adviser.

Generally.]—A strong case must be made out to set aside a will on the ground of undue influence, but where a person acting as the spiritual adviser of a testator takes advantage of that situation to become the agent and manager of the testator's temporal affairs, and, while holding those opposite characters, becomes a donee of very large gifts under the testator's will, there is strong ground made out for inquiry as to undue influence. Middleton v. Sherburne, 4 Y. & C. 358.

Assignment for Benefit of Convent.]—Where A., being about eighteen years of age, and possessed of considerable real and personal property, entered a convent, whether as postulant or pupil was controverted, but upon an agreement on the part of the nuns that she should not be professed under age, or without their apprising her friends previously; and it appeared that she was professed under age, and in the absence of all her friends; and there was no evidence of any notice having been given to any of them, save an allegation in the answer of the defendants that they did communicate the fact to her sister; and afterwards, when she arrived at full age, she assigned nearly all her property to the nuns, for the benefit of the convent; and it appeared that previous to this she had been excluded from the society of her friends, and that the deed for this purpose was prepared by the professional agent of the convent, and that she had no friend of her own present; and, having, in some time after, quitted the convent, she filed a bill to set those proceedings aside, for a reconveyance of her real estate, and for an account:—Held, that the transactions in this case fell within the principle of the cases of guardian and ward, which decide that dealings between them ought not to stand. Whyte v. Meade, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 420.

Convent—Rules of Poverty and Obedience—Voluntary Gift—Laches—Acquiescence.]—In 1868 A. was introduced by N., her spiritual director and confessor, to S., the lady superior of a sisterhood, and became an associate of the sisterhood. N. was one of the founders, and also the spiritual director and confessor of the sisterhood, which was an association of ladies who devoted themselves to charitable works. In 1871, A., having passed through the grades of postulant and novice, became a professed member of the sisterhood, and bound herself to observe (inter alia) the rules of poverty, chastity, and obedience, by which the sisterhood was regulated, and which were made known to her when she became an associate. These rules were drawn up by N. The rule of poverty required the member to give up all her property, either to her relatives, or to the poor, or to the sisterhood itself, but the forms in the schedule to the rules were in favour of the sisterhood, and provided that property made over to the lady superior should be held by her in trust for the general purposes of the sisterhood. The rule of obedience required the member to regard the voice of her superior as the voice of God. The rules also enjoined that no sister should seek advice of any extern without the superior's leave. A., within a few days after becoming a member, made a will bequeathing all her property to S.; and in 1872 and 1874, having become possessed of considerable property, handed over and transferred several large sums of money and railway stock to S. In May, 1879, A. left the sisterhood and immediately revoked her will, but made no demand for the return of her property until 1885, when she commenced an action against S., claiming the return of her property on the ground that it was made over by her while acting under the paramount and undue influence of S., and without any independent and separate advice : — Held, that although A. had voluntarily and while she had independent advice entered the sisterhood with the intention of devoting her fortune to it, yet as at the time when she made the gifts she was subject to the influence of S. and N., and to the rules of the sisterhood, she would have been entitled on leaving the sisterhood to claim the restitution of such part of her property as was still in the hands of S., but not of such part as had been expended on the purposes of the sisterhood while she remained in it: — But held (dissentiente Cotton, L.J.), that under the circumstances the plaintiff's claim was barred by her laches and acquiescence since she left the sisterhood. Allcard v. Skinner, 56 L. J., Ch. 1052 ; 36 Ch. D. 145 ; 57 L. T. 61 ; 36 W. R. 251— C. A.

Assignment for Benefit of Roman Catholic Institution—Right of Assignor to carry out.]— A professed nun, who had taken the vows of poverty and obedience, and had executed a deed assigning all her property to trustees for the benefit of a Roman Catholic ecclesiastical institution, presented a petition, asking for the transfer to the trustees of that deed of a fund in court to which she was entitled : — Held, that her being a professed nun did not affect her capacity to take or dispose of property, and that, whether the deed was or was not liable to be impeached on the ground of her being, when she executed it, so circumstanced as to be unable to exercise her own free will, the court could not refuse to order a transfer of the fund to the trustees upon her application. Metcalfe's Will, In re, 2 De G. J. & S. 122 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 308 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 287 ; 10 L. T. 78 ; 12 W. R. 538 ; 3 N. R. 657.

Setting aside Grant of Annuity.]—Grant of an annuity fraudulently obtained by a person having a spiritual ascendency over a woman, who was under a state of religious delusion, set aside upon principles of public policy. Norton v. Relly, 2 Eden, 286.

Setting aside Voluntary Settlement.]—Voluntary settlement by a widow upon a clergyman and his family set aside, as obtained by undue influence ; and abused confidence in the defendant as an agent undertaking the management of her affairs, upon the principles of public policy and utility applicable to the relation of guardian and ward, etc. Huguenin v. Baseley, 14 Ves. 273 ; 9 R. R. 148, 276.

g. Principal and Agent.

i. Agent to Sell, Purchase by.

Generally.]—Agent employed to sell cannot purchase for himself his principal's goods. Principal may either repudiate such a transaction altogether, or adopt and take the benefit of it. Bentley v. Craven, 18 Beav. 75.

Agent of Trustee for Sale.]—The agent of trustee for sale of estate, employed therein, cannot purchase the same. Whitcomb v. Minchin, 5 Madd. 91.

Stock-broker.]—Defendant, a broker, had 5,000*l.* stock of plaintiff's to sell at a stipulated price ; he made a pretended sale, and made entries in his books which appeared to be done after the stock had risen considerably : the court deemed this transaction fraudulent, and said that defendant should have taken earnest, without which it was nudum pactum, and within the Statute of Frauds. Crull v. Dodson, Sel. Ch. Ca. 41. See also Rothschild v. Brookman, 5 Bligh (N.S.) 165 ; 2 Dow & Cl. 188. Affirming 3 Sim. 153 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 163 ; 30 R. R. 147.

Purchase in Name of a Trustee.]—An agent, employed to sell an estate, secretly buys it himself in the name of a trustee, whom he represents to his employer to be the real purchaser ; he cannot call for an execution of the trust until the transaction is confirmed by the vendor. Woodhouse v. Meredith, 1 J. & W. 204.

Purchase of Reversion—Confirmation.]—An agent employed by a young man to sell a reversionary legacy shall not be permitted to be purchaser thereof himself at an undervalue, and nothing shall amount to a confirmation of such a transaction, until the vendor be fully apprised that he might be relieved against the original transaction, if he chose to impeach it. Crowe v. Ballard, 2 Cox. 253 ; 1 Ves. J. 215 ; 3 Bro. C. C. 117 ; 1 R. R. 122.

Contract by Agent for Re-sale — Onus.]— Where an agent for the sale of lands purchased of his principal, having previously entered into a contract for the resale of them at a higher price ; he was declared a trustee for his principal to the extent of such profit : and in the suit :—Held, that the burden of disproving parts of the plaintiff's case, resting not on direct proof, but on circumstantial evidence only, lay on the defendant. Barker v. Harrison, 2 Coll. C. C. 546.

Onus.]—Where an agent employed to sell property purchases it himself, he is bound to show that there was no concealment or unfair representation, and that in purchasing himself, the same advantages were afforded to his principal as if the property had been sold to a stranger. Trevelyan v. Charter, 4 L. J., Ch. 209. Affirmed sub nom. Charter v. Trevelyan, 11 Cl. & F. 714 ; 8 Jur. 1015.

Setting aside—After Arbitration and Lapse of Time.]—A steward and agent, being employed to sell an estate, purchased part of it himself at an undervalue, and secretly, in the name of another person. All actions and matters of difference between the parties were afterwards submitted to arbitration ; an award was made, and mutual releases executed. The court, forty-seven years after the purchase, and twenty-eight years after the award, set aside the purchase,— holding, first, that the principal having been kept ignorant of the fraud, was not bound by lapse of time ; and, secondly, that he was not bound to award and release, on the ground, that the deception had been continued, and that the purchase and the fraudulent circumstances relating to it, had not been brought under the consideration of the arbitrator. Trevelyan v. Charter, 4 L. J., Ch. 209. Affirmed sub nom. Charter v. Trevelyan, 11 Cl. & F. 714 ; 8 Jur. 1015.

Practice — Jurisdiction — Issue directed.]— Jurisdiction by bill in equity for the delivery of a specific chattel, a valuable picture, deposited by an executor with a dealer in pictures, and claimed to be retained by him as purchased at a very low price. Issue directed to ascertain whether there was a sale, or the possession was as agent or trustee for sale, who therefore could not purchase without full communication. An objection that the transaction not being in the usual course of administering assets, could not protect a purchaser from the executor, was therefore not determined. Lowther v. Lowther, 13 Ves. 95.

—— Inquiry directed.]—Agent employed to sell estates took them for himself under colour of a fictitious purchase, and sold part; after his death an inquiry was directed to ascertain the real value according to which his estate was to be charged, the principal having an option to take what remained unsold, and, the agent having fraudulently prevailed on his principal to execute a lease at a rent under the real value, the agent's estate was charged with loss arising from that. Hardwicke (Lord) v. Vernon, 4 Ves. 411; 4 R. R. 244.

ii. Agent to Purchase.

a. Sale by.

Generally.]—Agent employed to purchase cannot buy his own goods for his principal. Principal may either repudiate such transaction altogether, or adopt and take the benefit of it. Bentley v. Craven, 18 Beav. 75.

Stockbroker.]—A broker or agent being employed by a customer to sell foreign stock, on a day specified by him in a letter of instructions, purchased the stock in the name of his partners, a firm in Paris, at the market price of the day. Being also employed to purchase foreign stock and bonds for his customer, according to his, the agent's, recommendation, he transmitted accounts of the transactions to his employer, with broker's notes, &c., as if he had purchased the stock of third persons. In fact, no stock or bonds were purchased; no transfers were made; no broker's notes passed, but the sales were nominal of stock and bonds remaining in the hands of the agent and his partners, and not set apart or appropriated to the customer. In order to effect these purchases, loans of money were made by the agent to the customer, upon agreement that the stock and bonds should remain as a deposit in the hands of the agent, to secure the repayment of money advanced. The stock and bonds were afterwards sold at a loss under the advice of the agent. In 1819 an account of these transactions was rendered, and settled between the customer and the agent, and great loss having been incurred upon the transactions, a large balance was paid by the customer to the agent. Upon a bill filed in 1824, all the transactions were set aside, and an account decreed against the agent. Rothschild v. Brookman, 5 Bligh (N.S.) 165; 2 Dow & Cl. 188. Affirming 3 Sim. 153; 7 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 163; 30 R. R. 147.

Setting aside—Lapse of Time—Stockbroker.]—A. employed B., a stockbroker, to purchase some canal shares. B. apparently bought them from C., the ostensible owner, but who afterwards turned out to be a mere trustee for B. The court, after a lapse of several years, and without entering into the fairness of the price:—Held, that the transaction was void on grounds of public policy, and set it aside with costs. Gillett v. Peppercorne, 3 Beav. 78.

Director of Company.]—H. being a director of a joint stock company, established for the building, purchasing, hiring, and employing of steam-vessels, purchases a vessel for 1,340*l*., and afterwards sells it to the company as from a stranger for 1,500*l*., charging the company with commission at 1*l*. per cent., the broker's earnest money, and the expenses of the bill of sale to himself, there being but one bill of sale. Such a transaction cannot stand in a court of equity. Benson v. Heathorn, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 326.

Transfer between Directors.]—The plaintiff and defendant were directors of a railway company. The plaintiff was desirous of obtaining 1,000*l*. "unallotted" shares, in order to promote its success. The defendant clandestinely caused 1,000*l*. of his own "allotted" shares to be transferred to the plaintiff. The transaction took place in July, 1853, but was discovered in June, 1854, and the bill was filed in November following. The court held that the transaction was void, and set it aside, and that there had been no laches. Blake v. Mowatt, 21 Beav. 603.

Shares in Company.]—B. having bought shares in a company at 2*l*. per share, and knowing that K. was desirous to buy such shares, represented that he knew of some shares which were to be had for 3*l*. or less, and requested K. to give him authority to buy at that price. K. gave him authority, but told B. to do his best for him and to get them for less if possible. B. transferred his shares to K. at 3*l*. per share, pretending that another person was the vendor:—Held, that on the facts B. was an agent for K., and must account to him for the difference between the price at which he bought and the price at which he sold the shares to K. Kimber v. Barber, L. R. 8 Ch. 56; 27 L. T. 526; 21 W. R. 65.

Setting aside—Shares in Mines.]—A. purchased mining shares advertised by B., believing them to be a third person's, while in reality B.'s, and the transaction was held voidable. A. also gave B., the broker, an order to purchase other shares for him. B. sold shares of his own to A.:—Held, that such a transaction might be set aside. Maturin v. Tredinnick, 9 L. T. 82.

—— Calls on Shares—Forfeiture—Inquiry.]—On some of these shares so purchased calls had subsequently been made. A. had not paid up these calls, and the shares had therefore become forfeited, and were sold. It was admitted that A. had not informed him of these calls, although it was alleged that B. was chairman of the committee of management of the mining company, and must have known of the cause of forfeiture:—Held, that A. was entitled to an inquiry as to all the circumstances attending the forfeiture and sale of these shares. Ib.

b. Purchase by.

Generally.]—If an agent employed to purchase an estate becomes the purchaser for himself, he is to be considered as a trustee for his principal. Lees v. Nuttall, 1 Russ. & M. 53;

Tam. 282. Affirmed on appeal, 2 Myl. & K. 819; 31 R. R. 99.

Fraud of Principal — Account.]—A. usually employed B. as his agent to buy hops of the several planters in and about Canterbury, but having, in a particular season, omitted to give them any orders at the usual time, B. enters into a partnership with three others, for purchasing hops of that year for their mutual benefit. The hops are accordingly purchased; but A., having intelligence of this transaction before they were delivered, prevails upon B. to declare to the planters that he bought them as A.'s agent, and by that means A. got the hops delivered to him: —Held, that this was a fraud upon the partners of B., and that A. should account for the value of the hops, according to the highest price for which he sold them. Hunter v. Sheppard, 4 Bro. P. C. 210.

iii. Transactions between Principal and Agent.

Generally.]—It is doubtful whether equity ought to allow a dealing between an agent and his principal, under any circumstances, there being such a conflict between interest and duty. Dunbar v. Tredennick, 2 Ball & B. 319.

Purchase from Principal.]—An agent may purchase from his principal, provided he deals with him at arm's length, and after a full disclosure of all that he knows with respect to the property. Murphy v. O'Shea, 2 Jo. & Lat. 422; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 329.

Existence of Relationship.]—The rule that an agent, dealing with his principal, must impart knowledge acquired in his office, does not apply where the relation has ceased, and there is another agent with equal means of knowledge to guard the interest of the principal in that transaction. Scott v. Dunbar, 1 Moll. 442.

—— Lapse of Time—Acquiescence.]—Reversionary leases at undervalue obtained by agent from principal, the relation of creditor and debtor also subsisting, after an acquiescence of twenty-seven years, not set aside; the fiduciary character having, during that period, ceased to exist, and the transactions being recognised on oath by the principal as fair. Medlicott v. O'Donel, 1 Ball & B. 156.

Purchase of Share in Colliery, in Trust for Manager.]—Purchase of a share in a colliery, in trust for the agent and manager, confirmed under particular circumstances, but with reluctance. Wren v. Kirton, 8 Ves. 502.

Obtaining Leases.]—A., being standing counsel and manager for B., obtained leases for long terms of different parts of his estate, and a release of the equity of redemption of other part; on a bill brought to set aside these transactions for fraud, it was proved that A. had as great a power over B. as a parent has over a child, and could persuade him to do whatever he pleased; but it being proved on the other side, that the purchase money was nearly equal to the value of the land, and that A. had in many respects been exceedingly serviceable to B., the bill was dismissed. Decree of the court of chancery in Ireland affirmed. Kingsland (Lord) v. Barnewall, 4 Bro. P. C. 154.

Lease—By Employer to Steward.]—There is no policy which prevents a steward from being lessee of his employer, nor from receiving a beneficial lease; but, where transaction is upon contract, steward must prove he gives full consideration; and, where transaction was mixed with motives of bounty, he must show that employer was aware of every circumstance relating to transaction. Selsey (Lord) v. Rhoades, 2 Sim. & S. 49; 25 R. R. 150.

—— Obtained by Agent from Principal — Generally.]—An agent may take a lease from his principal, but he must be always prepared to prove that full information had been imparted to the principal, and that the contract had been entered into with perfect good faith. Molony v. Kernan, 2 Dr. & War. 31.

—— By Principal and Agent — Position of Assignee of Lessee.]—A party who takes an assignment of lease from the agent of a lessor, with notice of the assignor's character as agent, has the same liability of sustaining the lease cast upon him that the agent has, and if the lease cannot be upheld by the agent, neither can it be supported by the purchaser from the agent. Molony v. Kernan, 2 Dr. & War. 31.

—— Obtained by Agent—Setting Aside.]—Leases for lives obtained by agents of a deceased person of weak intellect upon inadequate considerations set aside as fraudulent. Gartside v. Isherwood, 1 Bro. C. C. 558.

Valuable leases and agreements for leases, obtained by an agent from his principal, the principal reposing confidence in the agent, and the agent availing himself of the inexperience, negligence, and extravagance of the principal, set aside, or held securities only for money advanced. Watt v. Grove, 2 Sch. & Lef. 492.

—— Obtained by Agent and Attorney from Principal—Setting Aside.]—Bill to set aside leases obtained by an agent and attorney from his principal, dismissed as to voluntary leases, being pure gift, and no fraud, misrepresentation, &c., with costs as to some, intended as a provision upon, and inducement to the marriage of the defendant; without costs as to others, the relation of the parties, and the circumstances upon general principles of public policy and utility justifying inquiry. Another lease decreed to be delivered up, the verdict in an issue establishing that a full consideration was not paid. Harris v. Tremenheere, 15 Ves. 34; 10 R. R. 5.

Setting Aside—Lease under False Power of Attorney.]—A., who was agent over a property held by four sisters as tenants in common, and had a power of attorney from three of them to make leases, having, when about to leave the country under suspicious circumstances, executed, as by a power of attorney from the four sisters, a lease of the property to B., his under-agent, the lease was, at the suit of the four sisters, decreed to be set aside. Rossiter v. Walsh, 2 Con. & L. 562; 4 Dr. & War. 485.

Agreement to sell to Agent—Specific Performance—Abandonment.]—A principal agreed to sell part of his estate to his agent, including the only turf bog on the estate, of which he was ignorant, there being no concealment or knowledge on the part of the agent. The agent was named a trustee for sale in his will, and assisted his co-trustees, and did not insist on the agreement for nearly a year after the death of principal and advertisement for sale:—Held, that the first circumstance would be a ground to refuse specific performance, and the latter was a virtual abandonment of the agreement. Chambers v. Betty, Beat. 488.

Voluntary Conveyance, by one just of Age, to Agent.]—Voluntary conveyance, by one lately come of age to an agent, of a reversion of no great value, for a nominal consideration of 180*l*., and containing covenants, as in the case of a purchase, not absolutely rescinded, as not being a case of fraud, but the transaction modified by decree that the agent should release the covenants at his own expense, and recite the impropriety of them as referable to a gift. Cray v. Mansfield, 1 Ves. 379.

Sale to Agent's Daughter—Misrepresentation—Setting Aside.]—Where a single woman was informed by her brother's agent that on his death she had succeeded to a small estate, of which she knew nothing, and on the agent's representations of its value, which were inaccurate, and, without legal advice, she conveyed the estate for an inadequate sum to the agent's daughter, the court set the deed aside with costs. Haygarth v. Wearing, 40 L. J., Ch. 577; L. R. 12 Eq. 320; 24 L. T. 825; 20 W. R. 11.

Held, also, that there was no such relation between the parties as to incapacitate the agent from purchasing. Ib.

Held, also, that the agent's claim for advances to the brother, as to which he pledged his oath, but of which there was no corroborative evidence of any kind, must be disallowed. Ib.

Sale to Agent—Setting Aside—Inadequate Consideration—Vendor in Precarious Health.]—Sale by a retired solicitor to his agent of property at a distance, which had been proposed and pressed by the vendor, and completed without any compulsion or fraud, set aside, it appearing to the court that the consideration (a life annuity) was inadequate, that the vendor, who had not seen the property for twenty years, was ignorant of its value, and that the vendor was known to be in a precarious state of health. Dally v. Wonham, 33 Beav. 154; 32 L. J., Ch. 790; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 980; 9 L. T. 75; 11 W. R. 1090.

Purchase by Agent—Setting Aside—Notice—Lapse of Time.]—A bill to set aside a purchase of property by an agent dismissed with costs, it being proved that the plaintiff had distinct notice, at the time, that the agent was one of the beneficial purchasers, and the vendor not having instituted a suit for six years. Wentworth v. Lloyd, 32 Beav. 467. Affirmed, 10 H. L. Cas. 589; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 961; 10 L. T. 767.

Sale to Agent—Rights of Creditors of Vendor—Bankruptcy.]—A trader was entitled to leaseholds, subject to an annuity for lives granted to an insurance company, which, at the instance of the trader, and on his representation that he was in failing circumstances, agreed to release it for less than its estimated value. The trader's solicitor afterwards wrote to the company, stating that difficulties had been met with in attempting to sell the leaseholds, by reason of a mortgage, and proposing that the annuity should be sold at the reduced price to an auctioneer who had acted for the trader in attempting to sell the property (at a loss to himself), and who would be "still able to serve the trader in some degree." The company assented, provided the trader signed a written consent. This was done, and the annuity was assigned absolutely to the auctioneer. The trader immediately afterwards became bankrupt:—Held, that the creditors were entitled to the benefit of the purchase on repayment to the auctioneer of the purchase-money, and interest; and the latter was ordered to pay the costs of the assignees in a suit instituted by them, in which he insisted that he was entitled to retain the purchase for his own benefit. Baskett v. Cafe, 4 De G. & Sm. 388.

Practice.]—In a suit for administration of assets of obligors in a common money bond, the master under an order of reference made by consent, enabling him to inquire into the consideration and all the circumstances relative to the bond, reported that it was a voluntary bond, given as a bounty to the obligee. The representatives of the obligors, and the obligee, took exceptions to the report; the former alleging that it was a bond of indemnity, the obligee claiming it partly for money advanced, and partly for services performed. The court below refused leave to withdraw the obligee's exceptions, and directed issues to try whether the bond was given for money and services, or as a gift, or for indemnity. This house on appeal reversed that order, and remitted the case to the court below to decide these questions on the evidence before it. The court below decided accordingly upon a new hearing, and declared the bond to be partly for counter-security, partly as gifts for services. This house, upon appeal, reversed that decision also, and ordered the master's report to be confirmed. The court below subsequently, upon hearing of counter-petitions (one presented by the representative of the obligor, praying payment of the bond and interest, the other by the representative of the obligors, praying for leave to institute a new suit to impeach the bond), on the ground that a gift from a principal to an agent was invalid in equity, decreed for such suit, and granted an injunction against any proceedings on the bond in the meantime. This house, upon appeal, reversed that decree, holding that, as the respondent omitted to take advantage of any of the opportunities of raising that objection to the bond in the preceding inquiries, it was not now competent for him to harass the other party by a new suit in which no new evidence could be produced. Nicol v. Vaughan, 1 Cl. & F. 495; 5 Bligh (N.S.) 505—H. L. (E.) Reversing Winchilsea (Earl) v. Garretty, 1 Myl. & K. 253; 2 L. J., Ch. 115.

On this subject see the important case, Rhodes v. Beauvoir, 5 Bli. (N.S.) 195.

—— Ascertainment of Proper Consideration for Payment — Setting Aside — Cancellation of Deeds.]—D., being entitled to an estate in fee-simple, subject to his wife's life interest, but believing that he was entitled to the fee-simple in possession, sold it to W., his agent, who acted under the same belief, in consideration of an annuity during the lives of D. and his wife, and the survivor. D. shortly afterwards died, leaving his wife his residuary devisee. The wife filed a bill to set aside the sale, on the ground of inadequate value and undue advantage. The consideration was inadequate for the purchase of the fee-simple in possession, and W. took an undue advantage of the vendor:—Held, that the court could not ascertain the proper proportion of the annuity which ought to be paid for the purchase of the reversion; and, D. declining to take the reversion upon payment of the whole annuity, the transaction was directed to be set aside, and the deed delivered up to be cancelled. Dally v. Wonham, 33 Beav. 154; 32 L. J., Ch. 790; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 980; 9 L. T. 75; 11 W. R. 1090.

—— Setting Aside — Rights of Sub-Purchasers.]—A decree was made against A. B., setting aside, as fraudulent, a purchase by an agent from his principal, and a reconveyance and the usual accounts of rent and purchase-money were directed, in which an allowance was to be made for substantial repairs and lasting improvements. A. B. sold and conveyed part of the property pendente lite, and died before the accounts were completed. A supplemental bill was filed against purchasers and the heir and personal representatives of A. B. The bill charged that the purchasers, in case of eviction, claimed compensation out of the estate of A. B. The conveyances pendente lite being set aside:—Held, that the purchasers were entitled in this suit as against their co-defendants, the personal representatives of A. B., to an order for the repayment of their purchase-money, and were entitled as against the plaintiff to an allowance for substantial repairs and lasting improvements, but that no greater relief could be given them in this suit. Trevelyan v. White, 1 Beav. 588.

—— Setting Aside—Evidence.]—If in a transaction between principal and agent it appears that there has been any underhand dealing by the agent—e.g. that he has purchased the estate of the principal in the name of another person instead of his own, however fair the transaction may be in other respects, it has no validity in a court of equity. To set aside a sale from a principal to his agent, it is not necessary to show that it was made at an undervalue. Murphy v. O'Shea, 2 Jo. & Lat. 422; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 329.

—— Setting Aside — Conveyance and Accounts.]—A secret purchase by an agent from his principal was set aside. By the decree possession was directed to be given and a conveyance to be executed. Accounts were also directed to be taken of the rents and purchase-money, and the balance was directed to be paid, but no lien was given:—Held, that the conveyance must at once be made, without waiting for the result of the accounts. Trevelyan v. Charter, 9 Beav. 140; 1 H. L. Cas. 714.

Secret Profits by Agents.]—See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

h. Other Persons.

Arbitrator.]—A purchase by an arbitrator of claims under reference cannot be supported. Blennerhassett v. Day, 2 Ball & B. 116.

Confidential Agents of Company—Conspiracy to Purchase Shares at Undervalue.]—A. and B., who were confidential agents of a company, conspired together to depress the selling price of the shares by a system of false accounts and concealment, in order that they might purchase them at an undervalue. By reason of this scheme, fifty-five shares belonging to C. were sold much below their real value, fifteen to A., and forty to B. The executor of C., upon discovering the frauds which had been practised, filed a bill against A.'s executor and the executors of B. for relief in respect of all the shares. The representative of A. demurred for want of equity and multifariousness:—Held, that, although A. derived no benefit from the sale of the forty shares at an undervalue, yet, as he stood in a fiduciary position towards the shareholders, and was a party to the fraud, he, as well as B., was liable to C. for the real value of the shares, and that his executor was a proper party to a suit in respect of them. Walsham v. Stainton, 1 De G. J. & S. 678; 33 L. J., Ch. 68; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1261; 9 L. T. 357; 12 W. R. 63; 3 N. R. 56.

Held, also, that as both sales were effected by the same fraud, it was not multifarious to combine the cases as to the fifteen and the forty shares in the same bill. Ib.

Execution Creditor.]—A creditor taking out execution is not precluded from becoming the purchaser of the property seized under it. No jurisdiction in equity to set aside a sale under an execution. Semble. Stratford v. Twynam, Jacob, 418; 23 R. R. 107.

The court having jurisdiction in personam, upon equity arising out of transaction concerning lands abroad, particularly if in the British dominions, a purchase of an estate in the West Indies, by a creditor under his own execution, was, upon the circumstances, held only a security for the debt, the expenses of the proceeding and incumbrances paid by him with interest; and subject thereto, a reconveyance was decreed. Cranstown (Lord) v. Johnston, 3 Ves. 170; 3 R. R. 80.

Person having Limited Interest—Power.]—A power of sale given without restriction to a party having a limited interest only may well be held to import a negative upon the power by the same party to buy, for the power to sell is in the nature of a trust; but as the rule does not extend to prevent in all cases a party having a power to sell from becoming the purchaser, so neither where there is a restriction upon the power of sale is the party having the power to sell in all cases at liberty to become the purchaser. It must in each case depend upon the circumstances under which, and the purposes for which, the power was given, and upon the nature and extent of the restrictions which are put upon the exercise of the power. Beadon v. King, 9 Hare, 519; 22 L. J., Ch. 111.

In the proportion in which the power is restricted, the danger incident to allowing the donee to purchase is diminished. Ib.

Private Tutor.]—Demurrer allowed to a bill, to have a presentation to a living upon the next avoidance delivered up, charging the defendant with gross misconduct in obtaining it, and in other respects, while a private tutor in the family. M'Namara v. ——, 5 Ves. 824.

Purchase, by Mortgagor's Agent, from Trustee for Sale.]—A person who has managed the affairs of and acted as agent for a mortgagor, cannot purchase from the trustee for sale, who is acquainted with the fact of his having acted as agent. Edgecumbe v. Stranger, 1 Jur. 400.

Tenant for Life.]—As a tenant for life, though his consent may be requisite to the exercise of a power of sale, stands in no fiduciary position towards the remainderman, and is as free as anyone else to buy from the trustees, a sale to him cannot be impeached on the ground of the purposes for which he buys, his motives being immaterial to the trustees, provided they sell on terms advantageous to the estate. Dicconson v. Talbot, L. R. 6 Ch. 32 ; 24 L. T. 49.

The doctrine that a tenant for life, with a power to sell or lease, may sell or lease to a trustee for himself is an established exception to the rule as to dealings by persons filling fiduciary positions. Bevan v. Habgood, 1 J. & H. 222 ; 8 W. R. 703.

—— Mortgagor.]—Under a mortgage, power was reserved to the mortgagor until entry by the mortgagee to grant building leases :—Held, that the case fell within the principle of the above exception, and that a lease to a trustee for the mortgagor was good. Ib.

—— Lease by and Purchase from.] — A., tenant for life of part of an estate, devised upon trusts for the benefit of persons in remainder, in conjunction with C., and B. his son-in-law, the latter being manager of a railway company, granted a lease to B., the son-in-law, of a portion of the estate adjoining the terminus of the railway, for three lives. The railway company was empowered to purchase twenty acres of land anywhere along their line of railway, for the purposes of erecting wharves and warehouses, or for such purposes connected with the railway as the management might think requisite and necessary. B. and C., by contrivance, agreed to purchase of the tenant for life portions of the settled estates for the purpose of conveyance to the company, upon which they might, as authorised by their acts of parliament, erect wharves, staiths, &c., and by arrangement part of these lands were reconveyed by the company to the defendants by separate conveyances, by which they individually obtained benefits to themselves in derogation of the rights of the parties entitled in remainder :—Held, that such lease and conveyances could not stand ; and the same were declared to be illegal and void, and set aside, with directions for reconveyance by the defendants. Stepney v. Biddulph, 12 L. T. 176.

Residuary Legatee, Tenant for Life, Reversioner.]—Residuary legatee, tenant for life, or reversioner, may become the purchaser of an estate sold in the master's office. Williams v. Attenborough, Turn. & R. 76 ; 1 L. J. (O.S.), Ch. 138 ; 23 R. R. 186.

Residuary Legatee.]—A residuary legatee has not such an interest as to prevent his becoming himself a purchaser of premises sold under a decree in the cause. Hooper v. Goodwin, Coop. 95.

There is no rule of equity which prevents one of several residuary legatees buying the share of another, or purchasing for less than the amount or charge on the share of another. Barwell v. Barwell, 34 Beav. 371.

Releasee to Uses.]—An estate was settled on husband and wife for life, with a limitation to their issue, and in default a power of appointment was given to the wife. There was one child only of the marriage, who died an infant. The wife survived her husband, and appointed the estate to G. D. F., who was the releasee to uses, and had possession of the settlement. G. D. F., shortly after his wife's death, made a feoffment, and levied a fine with proclamations. After the expiration of the five years, the heirs of the child claimed the estate, insisting that, under the terms of settlement, the child took the estate in fee, and that the power of appointment had never arisen. He filed a bill against G. D. F., to avoid the fine, alleging that it had been levied with full knowledge of the plaintiff's rights, and with a fraudulent view to bar them :—Held, that the act of G. D. F. did not constitute a fraud ; that G. D. F. stood in no fiduciary relation towards the plaintiff, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Langley v. Fisher, 9 Beav. 90 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 73.

Sale by Elderly Spinster to Social Superior—Onus on Purchaser to show Sufficiency of Price.] —A small freehold property was agreed to be sold by an elderly spinster in humble life to a person far above her in station. The agreement was come to between the parties alone. In respect of the consideration, the vendor sought and obtained a slight advance on that offered by the purchaser. The purchaser's solicitor drew the conveyance, and it was presented to the vendor ready for execution, and executed by her without any advice. The Master of the Rolls having set aside the conveyance :—Held, that his decree was right, because the parties to the contract were in such relative positions, that (a case of undervalue being on the evidence affirmatively deposed to) it lay on the purchaser (contrary to the usual rule) to show affirmatively that the price he had given was the value, and on the evidence he had failed in doing so. Baker v. Monk, 4 De G. J. & S. 388 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 691 ; 10 L. T. 86, 630 ; 12 W. R. 779. Affirming 33 Beav. 419.

Practice — Restraining Action at Law.] — Injunction granted to restrain action at law to recover arrears of annuity granted to wife of person, who, from fiduciary connection with grantor, was held to have abused his confidence by undue exercise of influence, ordered at hearing to be continued. Goddard v. Carlisle, 9 Price, 169 ; 23 R. R. 654.

9. By Reason of Infirmity.

a. Expectant Heirs and Reversioners.

i. In General.

Generally.]—Expectant heirs are not to be more highly favoured than other persons in ordinary money transactions. Tynte v. Hodge, Tynte v. Baum, 11 L. T. 490 ; 13 W. R. 172.

Liability of person dealing with an heir apparent for his expectancy. Davis v. Marlborough (Duke), 2 Swanst. 139.

The privilege of an expectant heir dealing substantially for his expectancy not affected by the addition of a present possession or security. Ib.

—— Age.]—In the privilege of an expectant heir age is material. Ib.

Heirs, even when of age, are under the care of a court of equity, and then want it most, the law taking care of them till that time. Osmond v. FitzRoy, 3 P. Wms. 131.

—— Usury Laws Repeal, Effect of.]—The repeal of the usury laws has not altered the rules of the court as to dealings with expectant heirs. Croft v. Graham, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1032. Affirmed, 2 De G. J. & S. 155; 9 L. T. 589.

Nor has it affected the court of chancery to give adequate protection, in cases of sales of reversions at inadequate prices, to expectant heirs or persons under pressure. O'Rorke v. Bolinbroke, 2 App. Cas. 814; 26 W. R. 239.

—— Reversionary Interest—Tenant for Life and Remainderman joining.]—The rules of equity regulating the purchase of reversionary interests from expectant heirs are not applicable to a case where the tenant for life and remainderman join, for then the whole estate is represented. Cooke v. Burtchaell, 2 Dr. & War. 165. See Wood v. Abrey, infra.

—— Full Age.]—A sale of a reversionary interest by a young man of full age for a substantial purpose stands on the same footing as other contracts. Judd v. Green, 45 L. J., Ch. 108; 33 L. T. 597.

—— 31 & 32 Vict. c. 4.]—An exorbitant rate of interest agreed to be paid by a young and needy man, on the security of property in reversion held by an indefeasible title, is unfair dealing within 31 & 32 Vict. c. 4. Tyler v. Yates, 40 L. J., Ch. 768; L. R. 6 Ch. 665; 25 L. T. 284; 19 W. R. 909.

—— Judgment to stand as Security.]—A judgment of 6,000*l.* being taken at the time of a purchase (from a remainderman in tail, being distressed, of two manors of yearly value of 300*l.* for 300*l.*), as a security for the performance, Lord Hardwicke directed it should stand only as a security for principal, interest, and costs, and no further. There are all the material ingredients in this case to set aside this agreement as a catching bargain against a necessitous heir. What guides the court in all these cases is the taking advantage of an heir's being distressed, and this is the principal ground of these decrees. The courts have always extended their relief in such cases for the sake of the public, to prevent people's gaming to the prejudice of improvident persons and the ruin of families. The defendant was decreed to pay plaintiff's costs in original cause, and the cross bill was dismissed with costs. Bernardiston v. Lingood, 2 Atk. 133.

—— Sale by Tenant for Life and Remainderman.]—Tenant for life and remainderman in tail, both in distress, join in selling estate for inadequate consideration:—Held, that it could not be considered as the rule of reversionary interest, subject to rules relating to such sales; but that sale was invalid on account of inadequacy of price, coupled with distress of vendors, and their want of advice. Wood v. Abrey, 3 Madd. 417; 18 R. R. 264. See Hamilton v. Grant, 3 Dow, 33; 1 Bligh (N.S.) 584; 15 R. R. 5.

—— Mortgage of Reversion, to secure a Rent Charge, by Reversioner entitled to a Rent Charge for Life.]—A. was entitled, for the joint lives of himself and his father, to a rent charge of 500*l.* charged on an estate of which his father was tenant for life, with remainder to A. in fee; A. having agreed to sell to B. a perpetual rent charge of 500*l.* issuing out of the estate, assigned to B. the rent charge to which he was entitled, and conveyed his reversion in fee to trustees, in trust to secure to B. a rent charge of 500*l.* a year, to commence on the termination of the prior rent charge:—Held, that the transaction was not to be considered as a sale of an interest in reversion, as A., when he made the agreement, had it in his power to secure to B. a perpetual rent charge of 500*l.* in possession. Wardle v. Carter, 7 Sim. 490.

—— Mortgage by Person entitled to Income of Property.]—W. was entitled to the income of property, subject to the payment of a life annuity to C., and of the interest on mortgages, whereby the present income was reduced to a small amount. In consideration of advance of 1,000*l.*, W., assigned the income by way of security for the payment of 3,300*l.* on the death of C., redeemable on payment of 1,500*l.* at the end of the first year. By a memorandum, W. further agreed to repay 400*l.* and interest at 5 per cent. per month, which security was to be tacked to the former security:—Held, that W.'s interest in the income was not a reversion, and that the transaction therefore could not be set aside as a sale at an undervalue. Webster v. Cook, L. R. 2 Ch. 342; 18 W. R. 1001.

Held, also, that the security for 400*l.* was valid. Ib.

—— Onus.—Courts of equity protect expectant heirs in their contracts, as they do those who act from distress or ignorance, and the burden of proving the transaction fair is thrown on those dealing with them. Bernal v. Donegal (Marquis). 3 Dow, 133; 1 Bligh (N.S.) 594.

The general rule is this: Where a person deals with an expectant heir for his reversion, the burden of proof lies upon such person to prove the fairness of the transaction. Bromley v. Smith, 26 Beav. 644; 29 L. J., Ch. 18; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 833; 7 W. R. 557.

The application of the rule is not prevented by the fact that the transaction was a charge, and not a sale, nor that the expectant heir was a person of mature age, nor that he perfectly understood the nature and extent of the transaction, nor is it necessary for the heir to show that he was in pecuniary distress at the time. Ib.

—— Costs.]—Decree made to set aside the transaction without costs, except as to such parts of the bill as charged fraud and collusion and which were not proved, as to which the bill was dismissed with costs. Ib.

—— Onus—Fair Price.]—A person seeking the benefit of a dealing with an heir for his expectancies must show that he gave him an adequate consideration, which is the fair market price at the time of dealing, and not the value according to the calculations of actuaries on the tables. Aldborough (Earl) v. Trye, West, 221 ; 7 Cl. & F. 436.

The rule that a fair price is to be given is a sufficient protection to heirs or reversioners, but the rule of fair value would not be any protection, as in that case they could not deal with their expectancies or sell their interest at all. Ib.

—— Public Auction.]—A sale by public auction is within the proper rule, on the plain principle that the sum which the thing will fetch is the sum which it is worth. Ib.

Relief.]—Relief against an unconscionable bargain with expectant heir. Barney v. Tyson, 2 Vent. 359.

Setting Aside.]—An unconscionable bargain got from an heir in the life of his father set aside. Berny v. Pitt, 2 Vern. 14. S. P., Nott v. Johnson, id. 27 ; Lamplugh v. Smith, id. 77.

Post-obit—Setting Aside.]—Bill to set aside an agreement for an annuity (which had been paid) during the uncle's life, in consideration for a sum payable at his death sans issue, dismissed. Henly v. Axe, 2 Bro. C. C. 18.

Conditions of Relief.]—The court will not relieve expectant heirs so as not to oblige them to refund what was actually advanced. Bernal v. Donegal (Marquis), 3 Dow, 156 ; 1 Bligh (N.S.) 594.

Relief against an oppressive deed, though obtained from an heir apparent, is given only on payment of the consideration with interest. Davis v. Marlborough (Duke), 2 Swanst. 166.

In rescinding contracts of expectant heirs, whether the payment of purchase money may, according to circumstances, be decreed with compound. and not merely simple interest, quære. Scott v. Dunbar, 1 Moll. 442.

Improvident heirs relieved from fraudulent bargains on repayment of bonâ fide advances. Walter v. Dalt, Dick. 8.

—— Modification of Transaction.]—Voluntary conveyances by one lately coming of age to an agent of a reversion of no great value for a nominal consideration of 180*l*., and containing covenants as in the case of a purchase, not absolutely rescinded, as not being a case of fraud ; but the transaction modified by decree that the agent should release the covenants at his own expense. and recite the impropriety of them as referable to a gift. Cray v. Mansfield, 1 Ves. 379.

—— Costs.]—A dealing with an expectant heir being set aside :—Held, that he must bear the costs paid for the securities. Bromley v. Smith, 26 Beav. 644 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 18 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 833 ; 7 W. R. 557.

Servant taking Bond from Infant Heir.]—See Osmond v. Fitzroy, 3 P. Wms. 129, ante, col. 219.

Parents Tenants for Life, inducing Children Reversioners to join in Conveyance.]—Where tenants for life, being the father and mother of children, induced them to join in a conveyance of their reversionary interests in property, but the children received none of the purchase money, and the trustee of the property refused to concur in the conveyance, a bill to complete the transaction by the purchaser against the trustee and the children after the death of the surviving parent, was dismissed, but without costs, except as to the trustee. Hannah v. Hodson, 30 Beav. 19 ; 5 L. T. 42 ; 9 W. R. 729.

Husband and Wife.]—The absolute interest in some freeholds belonging to a wife for life, with remainder to her husband in fee, was sold by the husband. The wife dissenting :—Held, that the contract could not stand as a sale of the reversion at an apportioned price. Daly v. Wonham, 33 Beav. 154.

Dealings with Tradesmen.]—Dealings between tradesmen and their customers may be subject of account in equity, especially in cases of securities obtained from extravagant young men on misrepresentation, &c. Courteney (Lord) v. Godschall, 9 Ves. 473.

Injunction to restrain a tradesman from suing on securities for the price of goods sold to an expectant heir, with the knowledge that the purchaser intended to sell them for the purpose of raising money, refused and bill dismissed. King v. Hamlet, 3 Cl. & F. 218 ; 9 Bligh (N.S.) 575. Affirming, 2 Myl. & K. 456 ; Coop. t. Brough. 281, which reversed 4 Sim. 223 ; 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 243, on different evidence. And see Portmore v. Taylor, 4 Sim. 182.

Before Repeal of Usury Laws.]—See USURY.

ii. What Interests Affected.

Expectancy.]—Expectancy of an heir either presumptive or apparent, not an interest or possibility capable of being made the subject of contract. Carleton v. Leighton, 3 Mer. 667.

Tenant's Term.]—Grant of an extension of a tenant's term out of the reversion has no analogy to the contracts of expectant heirs. Scott v. Dunbar, 1 Moll. 442.

Lease.]—A contract for a lease, to take effect upon the expiration of an existing lease, is not a dealing for a reversion in the view of a court of equity. Leslie v. Crommelin, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 134.

Post-nuptial Settlement.]—The principle on which the court acts in discouraging mortgages, sales, and dealings by expectant heirs, has no application to the case of an expectant heir who has made a post-nuptial settlement upon his wife and children. Shafto v. Adams, 4 Giff. 492 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 287 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 121 ; 9 L. T. 676.

Expectations under Will.]—An agreement, of which the subject is an expectancy contingent upon the will of a living person, is not illegal, but will be enforced in equity. Lyde v. Mynn, 1 Myl. & K. 683 ; Coop. t. Brough. 123.

An agreement between two persons having expectations from a third, to divide equally whatever he might leave them, is valid. Harwood v. Tooke, 2 Sim. 192 ; 29 R. R. 81.

An agreement between two sons to divide equally whatever property they may receive from their father in his lifetime, or become entitled to under his will, or by descent or otherwise from him, is not contrary to public policy, but will be enforced in equity. Wethered v. Wethered, 2 Sim. 183 ; 29 R. R. 77.

An agreement on marriage articles to convey to the husband a third part of what shall come to the father of the wife on the death of his father, enforced. Hobson v. Trevor, 2 P. Wms. 191 ; 10 Mod. 307.

Two persons article that whatever J. shall leave to either of them shall be equally divided between both ; such agreement good, and shall be carried into execution by this court ; also, if after this one of them contrives that J. shall leave part of his estate to a third person, in trust for him, this is within the articles. Beckley v. Newland, 2 P. Wms. 182.

iii. Purchases.

a. Inadequacy of Consideration.

Generally.]—Mere inadequacy of price will entitle an expectant heir to apply to a court of equity to set aside the sale of a reversion ; and the onus, of proving the transaction fair and the price sufficient, is on the purchaser. O'Rorke v. Bolingbroke, 2 App. Cas. 814 ; 26 W. R. 239.

Protection, in equity, to an expectant heir dealing for his expectancy, approaching nearly to an incapacity to contract. Relief against a very advantageous purchase from such a person without fraud ; though mere inadequacy (unless from its grossness of itself evidence of fraud), as between persons standing precisely equal, of no account. The relief on payment of principal, interest, and costs, the purchaser being considered as a mortgagee. His bill to establish the purchase dismissed with costs, except of depositions used by the other party. Peacock v. Evans, 16 Ves. 512 ; 10 R. R. 218.

—— Acquiescence — Valuation — Interest.]—The sale of a reversionary interest, in this court considered as the case of an expectant heir, forms an exception to the general rule, that, for mere inadequacy of value, a contract is not to be set aside. During the continuance of the same situation, acquiescence has no effect ; and the value is to be estimated at the time of the transaction, not according to the event. Interest at 5 per cent. upon the money advanced : compound interest refused. Gowland v. De Faria, 17 Ves. 20 ; 11 R. R. 9.

Setting Aside.]—The purchase of a reversion at an undervalue was set aside, and under the special circumstances was set aside with costs. Bawtree v. Watson, 3 Myl. & K. 339.

A purchase of a reversion from an heir, in the lifetime of his father, at an undervalue, set aside, though, if the heir had died before his father the purchaser would have lost all his money. Nott v. Hill, 1 Vern. 167.

Sale of a reversionary interest in real and personal property, set aside on the ground of inadequacy of price. Edwards v. Browne, 2 C. C. C. 100 ; 9 Jur. 421.

A son, who after his father's death is a remainderman in tail, sells this remainder at an under-rate ; court sets aside the coveyance. Twisleton v. Griffith, 1 P. Wms. 310.

The purchase of a reversion cannot stand in equity, unless the purchaser shows that he paid the full value for it. Salter v. Bradshaw, 26 Beav. 161 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 426 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 831.

Dealing with Expectant Heir, what.]—A., being entitled, in case of B.'s dying without issue, to the interest of 2,000*l.* for his life, sold his reversionary interest for 250*l.* The court gave effect to the contract, notwithstanding the allegations of inadequacy of price, it not being a dealing with an expectant heir. Woodroffe v. Allen, Hay. & J. 73.

Fiduciary Relation.]—A reversionary lease, voluntarily granted partly for past services, which had also been otherwise remunerated, and partly for an inadequate rent and a small fine, set aside, no confidential relation between the parties being proved. Wyse v. Lambert, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 378.

Property in Possession and Reversion.]—A sale at an undervalue is impeachable, although it comprises interests in possession as well as reversionary interests. Nesbitt v. Berridge, 32 Beav. 282 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1044 ; 8 L. T. 76 ; 11 W. R. 446.

Without Fraud.]—Purchase of reversion not set aside merely for undervalue, there being no fraud. Nicholls v. Gould, 2 Ves. 422.

Purchase of a reversionary estate tail of a person without issue, set aside merely for inadequacy of consideration, there being no fraud or pressure, and with costs, the purchaser having resisted the relief ; but he was ordered to pay those occasioned by his unfounded allegations of fraud. St. Albyn v. Harding, 27 Beav. 11.

Ignorance of both Parties.]—A fund was held on trust for one for life, with remainder between B. and C. equally, if living with benefit of survivorship between them. B. sold his reversionary interest. At the time of the sale C. was dead, but the fact was neither known to the vendor nor to the purchaser :—Held, that the sale could not stand. Colyer v. Clay, 7 Beav. 188.

Particular Cases.]—The sale of a reversionary interest for 200*l.* which was proved to be worth 238*l.*, set aside, upon the ground of undervalue. Jones v. Ricketts, 31 Beav. 130 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 753 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1198 ; 10 W. R. 576.

A reversionary interest was purchased bonâ fide for 370*l.*, it being worth 400*l.* The sale was set aside, after it had fallen into possession, on the simple ground of being a sale of a reversion at an undervalue. Foster v. Roberts, 29 Beav. 467 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 666 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 400 ; 4 L. T. 760 ; 9 W. R. 605.

Taking an annuity worth nine years' purchase, at five years, is an unconscionable bargain, and the court will give the taker no assistance in a bargain for a repurchase. Vaughan v. Thomas, 1 Bro. C. C. 556.

A., a son, aged 47, entitled to contingent interests in large estates on the death of his father, aged 69, subject to other incumbrances, granted an annuity of 3,545*l.* in consideration of an advance of 28,000*l.* ; he also, by another deed dated the following day, granted an annuity of 675*l.*, in consideration of an advance of 4,500*l.* on the same estates. There were the usual clauses of insurance of his life, payment of premiums and interest on the advances from time to time, and a clause for redemption. The negotiations had been entered upon with the knowledge, in one of the instances by the immediate agency, of the family solicitor. The borrower had, at the time of granting the annuities, no certain income :—Held, that these prices were not inadequate, and the transaction in both cases was upheld. Tynte v. Hodge, 11 L. T. 490 ; 13 W. R. 172.

Purchase of a contingent reversionary interest set aside chiefly on the ground of inadequacy of value, the consideration being an annuity for the life of the vendor, whose life was a bad life, and was better known to the purchaser than to the vendor to be such. Davies v. Cooper, 5 Myl. & Cr. 270.

A. sold to B. a life interest in possession, subject to a mortgage for 800*l*., and a reversionary interest in two sums of money. The price paid for the whole was 75*l*., and within a month B. sold it for 125*l*. to C., who within three months afterwards sold it to D. for 550*l*. The value of the property in possession (free from the mortgage) was 1,331*l*., and of the property in reversion 312*l*. The purchase was set aside as against D. (who was held to have notice), on the ground of its being a purchase of a reversion at an undervalue. Nesbitt v. Berridge, 32 Beav. 282 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1044 ; 8 L. T. 76 ; 11 W. R. 446.

B., for the purposes of a society of which he was the solicitor, borrowed 600*l*. on the security of a joint bond entered into by himself and C. The bond was conditioned to be void if the obligors, their heirs, executors, or administrators, should within one month after the death of such one as should first depart this life of three persons, named in the bond, pay to the obligee 2,000*l*. The bond also charged the interests to which the obligors might become entitled in any personal estate under the wills of the three persons, with payment of the 2,000*l*. On the death of the last survivor of the three persons the obligors sought to be relieved of their obligation under the bond, on the ground that it had been entered into under circumstances which were inequitable, and that the whole transaction amounted, in fact, to a sale of a reversionary interest for an insufficient consideration :—Held, that the bond was good. Gardiner v. Cowper, 18 L. T. 627.

A reversion was sold for 20*l*. On a reference the master found that it was worth 350*l*. The sale was set aside, but the purchaser had his costs of suit, except those of the inquiry before the master to ascertain the value. Boothby v. Boothby, 1 Mac. & G. 604 ; 2 Hall & Tw. 214 ; 15 Beav. 212.

Account on Re-sale.]—If A. buys from B., a minor, under circumstances of distress, the reversion of a house worth 40*l*. a year for 100*l*., and sells it again in a few days for 200*l*., equity will compel A. to account to B. for the difference. Spencer v. Chase, 9 Mod. 29.

Public Auction.]—Sale of reversion by public auction, held good and not within the general rule of sales of reversion, that purchaser is bound to show he gave full value. Shelly v. Nash, 3 Madd. 232 ; 18 R. R. 223.

Private Contract.]—A sale, by private contract, of a reversionary interest in a sum of stock set aside on account of inadequacy of price, and the unjust and oppressive conduct of the purchaser. Newton v. Hunt, 5 Sim. 511.

Specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of a reversionary interest refused, where the sale was by private contract, and the price inadequate. Kendall v. Beckett, 9 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 24.

Private Sale.]—A private sale of a reversionary interest will not be set aside for mere inadequacy of price, as compared with arithmetical value determined by calculation of an actuary, exclusive of every other circumstance, the latter value not being possible to be obtained in fact. Headen v. Rosher, 1 M'Cle. & Y. 89.

Estimate.]—If, previously to the sale of a reversionary interest, the vendor and purchaser concur in ascertaining, from persons of competent skill and having knowledge of the property and of all the circumstances likely to influence its value, a well-considered estimate of what the property would be likely to fetch at a sale, and act upon that opinion ; semble, that such a transaction would not be afterwards disturbed merely because other surveyors afterwards came to a different conclusion from that on which the parties acted. Edwards v. Burt, 2 De G. M. & G. 55.

It is not necessary, to give validity to such a sale, that it should be made by public auction. Ib.

But where, upon the sale by private contract of such an interest in leaseholds, nothing was done, except obtaining the opinion of an actuary unacquainted with the local circumstances likely to influence the value, and in a suit to impeach the sale the purchaser was unable to show that he had given the full value, the sale was set aside. Ib.

Bill to compel the transfer of certain stock, the reversionary interest in which had been formerly purchased by the plaintiff, and had now become vested in possession. The transfer was resisted by the vendor, and the trustees of the settlement under which he claimed, on two grounds ; first, fraud, or undue advantage ; and, secondly, inadequacy of the consideration. The first ground wholly failed in evidence. On the second point, the effect of the evidence was, that the price given was sufficient, according to the opinion of auctioneers, and persons of that description, but was about two-thirds of the value, calculated by actuaries from the tables :—Held, that the inadequacy of the consideration was not sufficiently proved. Potts v. Curtis, 1 Younge, 543.

The rule laid down in the case of Gowland v. De Faria (17 Ves. 20), as explained in Headen v. Rosher (1 M'Clel. & Y. 89), and Potts v. Curtis (1 Younge, 543), imposing upon the purchaser of an expectancy the burden of proving that he gave the proper value, does not import that the value is to be calculated according to the tables, but that it must be the fair market value, with reference to the circumstances of the case. Accordingly a reference to the master to inquire whether 6,000*l*. and 10,000*l*. were respectively, under all the circumstances, the fair market value for two sums of 12,000*l*. and 20,000*l*. respectively, to be paid in the event of the heir surviving his father, under which reference it was found that this was the fair market value, was held right on appeal. Ald- borough (Earl) v. Trye, West, 221; 7 Cl. & F. 436.

In determining whether a fair price has been paid for a reversionary interest, the market value, and not an actuary's estimate, ought to be regarded. Wardle v. Carter, 7 Sim. 490.

The purchase of a reversionary interest supported, though the consideration given was less than the average of the estimated valuation of the witnesses, on the ground that the interest was subject to a chancery suit, which materially affected its value. Perfect v. Lane, 2 De G. F. & J. 369; 30 Beav. 197; 31 L. J., Ch. 489; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 547; 6 L. T. 8; 10 W. R. 197.

The purchasers bought, taking bank stock at 200*l.* per cent. The then market price was 215*l.*, and the average market price, for the last eleven years, 217*l.* These facts were held not to be conclusive evidence of a purchase at an undervalue, there being strong evidence to show that, in the opinion of actuaries, it was reasonable, in the purchase of a reversion, to treat bank stock as only worth 200*l.* Ib.

Costs of selling real estate are to be regarded in valuing a reversionary interest in the sale moneys. Ib.

A married woman sold her contingent reversionary interest in personalty for 76*l.*, with an agreement that the expenses of the assignment should be paid out of the purchase money. The interest was valued by an actuary employed by the assignors (but erroneously, without reference to the contingency of the wife surviving her husband before the interest was reduced into possession) as an absolute reversion, at 131*l.* 5*s.* The court refused to set aside the sale. Sewell v. Walker, 12 Jur. 1041.

A reversion depending upon the contingency of the tenant for life, who was sixty-three years of age, and a bachelor, dying without issue, is not the subject of estimate or calculation. But, the purchaser of this reversion having in his treaty with the vendor proposed to deduct one-half of the reversion in respect of such contingency, and the treaty having been concluded upon that basis, the court, as between the vendor and purchaser, will value the contingency accordingly. Baker v. Bent, 1 Russ. & M. 224; Tam. 368.

A reversion depending upon the contingency of a tenant for life dying without issue, he being fifty-six years of age and married, and his wife being in her fifty-fourth year, and the only issue of the marriage having been a still-born child eleven years previously, is the subject of estimate or calculation. Boothby v. Boothby, 1 Mac. & G. 604; 2 H. & Tw. 214; 15 Beav. 212.

—— Test of Value.]—In a suit to set aside a sale by private contract:—Held, that the highest price bid for it upon a previous attempt to sell it by auction was a fair test of its market value. Lord v. Jeffkins, 35 Beav. 7.

Onus of Proof—Estimate of Value.]—Purchasers of reversionary interests are bound to prove that they have given the fair value; which, in cases of estimated value, would in general be the market value of the interest purchased; the only question being whether the fair value was in fact given. Perfect v. Lane, 2 De G. F. & J. 369; 30 Beav. 197; 31 L. J., Ch. 489; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 547; 6 L. T. 8; 10 W. R. 197.

In ascertaining the market value of a reversion, the fact of its being the subject of a chancery suit, even though it does not affect the right to it, must be taken into consideration. Lord v. Jeffkins, 35 Beav. 7.

Estoppel.]—Where a vendor of a reversionary interest represented its value in the proposals for the sale of it, and the purchaser adopted that representation, the vendor was afterwards precluded from saying that it was sold at an undervalue. Perfect v. Lane, supra.

b. Burden of Proof.

Generally.]—The rule that the purchaser of a reversion must prove that he gave a full price, had been so long considered as settled that it can be altered only by the court of appeal. Hinckswan v. Smith, 3 Russ. 433.

Fairness.]—It is incumbent on a purchaser of reversionary interest from a person in the situation of an expectant heir, seeking specific performance of contract, to make out a case of adequacy of consideration. Ryle v. Swindells, M'Cle. 519; 13 Price, 758.

The burden of showing that a fair price has been given for the interest of an expectant heir lies upon the purchaser, and that burden is not displaced by showing that substantial value has been given. Talbot v. Staniforth, 31 L. J., Ch. 197; 10 W. R. 829.

It is the imperative duty of a purchaser of a reversion from an expectant heir to preserve evidence of the bonâ fides of the transaction, and that the sale was for full consideration. Salter v. Bradshaw, 26 Beav. 161; 28 L. J., Ch. 426; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 831.

The repeal of the usury laws, and the alteration of the law as to reversionary interests (effected by 31 Vict., c. 4) have not altered the onus imposed upon all who deal with expectant heirs and reversioners of proving that their dealings have been fair and reasonable, and of thus rebutting the presumption of fraud which may arise from the nature of a bargain, and the circumstances and conditions of the contracting parties. Aylesford (Earl) v. Morris, 42 L. J., Ch. 546; L. R. 8 Ch. 484; 28 L. T. 541; 21 W. R. 424. And see O'Rorke v. Bolingbroke, 2 App. Cas. 814; 26 W. R. 239; Tyler v. Yates, 40 L. J., Ch. 768; L. R. 6 Ch. 665; 25 L. T. 284; 19 W. R. 909.

Public Auction.]—Sale of reversion by public auction, held good and not within the general rules of sales of reversions, that purchaser must prove he gave full value. Shelly v. Nash, 3 Madd. 232; 18 R. R. 223.

c. Delay and Confirmation.

Generally.]—Long delay in filing a bill to set aside the sale of a reversion is not to be disregarded. Lord v. Jeffkins, 35 Beav. 7.

Particular Cases.]—The sale of a reversion set aside after forty years, the vendor having instituted proceedings for that purpose a year after it fell into possession, A., the purchaser, having failed to prove that he had paid full value for it. Salter v. Bradshaw, 26 Beav. 161; 28 L. J., Ch. 426; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 831.

Reversionary grant from a person in the situation of expectant heir, made thirty-four years, and confirmed by a subsequent deed, set aside, being obtained by fraud and imposition, the party confirming being ignorant of his rights, and the length of time satisfactorily accounted for. Roche v. O'Brien, 1 Ball & B. 330.

An estate stood limited under a settlement to A. B. for life, with remainder to C. D., his son, in fee. Father and son made three successive mortgages of the property to E. F., G. H., and I. K. In 1822 C. D. sold his reversion to I. K. In 1823, in consideration of a release of the mortgage debts due to I. K., and the payment by I. K. of the mortgage debts due to E. F. and G. H., and of a sum of money to A. B., A. B., C. D., E. F., and G. H. joined in conveying the estate to I. K. in fee simple. At the time of the sale of the reversion in 1822, C. D. was in distressed circumstances. In 1825, I. K., the purchaser, died, having devised the estate to L. M. In 1830, A. B., the tenant for life, died. In 1846 C. D., the remainderman, filed his bill against L. M. to set aside the sale, praying a reconveyance on payment of the consideration given in 1822, and interest, and for an account of the rents since 1830, when the tenant for life died. No evidence was given by the plaintiff to explain or account for the delay, nor of the state of his circumstances in the interval between 1823 and 1846, when the bill was filed:—Held, that the plaintiff was, under the circumstances, barred by the lapse of time; and the bill was dismissed, with costs. Sibbering v. Balcarras (Earl), 3 De G. & Sm. 735; 19 L. J., Ch. 252; 14 Jur. 753.

But quære, whether the transaction of 1823 did not prevent the plaintiff from having the benefit of the rule of equity concerning the sale of reversions at an undervalue. Ib.

—— Undervalue.]—Bill to set aside the sale of a reversion, dismissed with costs, the only ground on the evidence being inadequacy of price, and no fraud, &c., and the bill filed twelve years after the sale. Moth v. Atwood, 5 Ves. 845.

—— Purchase by Brother from Sister.]—A purchase of a reversionary interest by a brother from a sister at an undervalue, set aside twenty years after the purchase, and ten years and a half after the reversionary interest fell into possession, the influence of the brother continuing until a year before bill filed. Sharp v. Leach, 31 Beav. 491.

d. Mode and Conditions of Relief.

Payment.]—Protection in equity to an expectant heir, dealing for his expectancy, approaching nearly to an incapacity to contract. Relief against a very advantageous purchase from such a person, without fraud; though mere inadequacy, unless, from its grossness of itself evidence of fraud, is, between persons standing precisely equal, of no account. The relief on payment of principal, interest, and costs, the purchaser being considered as a mortgagee; his bill to establish the purchase dismissed with costs, except of depositions used by the other party. Peacock v. Evans, 16 Ves. 512; 10 R. R. 218.

When sales of reversionary interests are set aside for mere inadequacy of consideration, it is upon the repayment of the consideration with interest at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. St. Albyn v. Harding, 27 Beav. 11.

Instrument to stand as Security.]—Grant of a reversionary rent charge, after the death of plaintiff's father (who was old and infirm) upon unreasonable terms, set aside; but to remain as a security for the money really advanced, and costs to be paid as in redeeming a mortgage. Gwynne v. Heaton, 1 Bro. C. C. 1.

On setting aside the purchase of a reversion for inadequacy, the deed stands as a security for the money actually due, and, if not paid, the bill stands dismissed, which is equivalent to a foreclosure. Benyon v. Fitch, 35 Beav. 570.

Sub-purchase to Stand as Security for Original Purchase-Money.]—A sold a reversion to B., at a gross undervalue, though it appeared he was not ignorant at the time of the real value, but the circumstances were such on the whole as to make the transaction void. C., ten years afterwards, being at the same time aware of the circumstances of the original sale, purchases the property from B. at a full value, A. joining in and confirming the sale. But, it appearing that C. had not taken any care to see that A.'s concurrence was obtained by a proper means, but left it to be obtained, as it was in fact obtained, without proper consideration, through B., the author of the original fraud, the decree was, that C.'s representative should hold the property only as a security for the money paid by B. on the original transaction. Addis v. Campbell, 4 Beav. 401; 10 L. J., Ch. 284.

Allowance.]—On setting aside the sale of a reversion for inadequacy after four years, the purchaser is not entitled to any allowance for the risk he has run in the meantime. Benyon v. Fitch, 35 Beav. 570

Limit of Time.]—Upon sale of a reversion, part of the terms was that purchase-money be paid by a certain time; not being so by default of the vendee, vendor discharged from his contract. Newman v. Rogers, 4 Bro. C. C. 391.

Repayment of Premiums, and Right to Policy-Moneys.]—Policies on the life of A., which were of no value, were, upon the sale by A. of a reversionary interest, assigned to the purchaser who kept them up at his own risk and expense. The sale was set aside after A.'s death:—Held, that, as the vendor's representatives would not have been bound to repay the premiums on setting aside the transaction, if they had exceeded the value of the policies, so, on the other hand, they were not entitled to the moneys received by the purchaser on such policies on the death of A. Foster v. Roberts, 29 Beav. 467; 30 L. J., Ch. 666; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 400; 4 L. T. 760; 9 W. R. 605.

Right to Policy.]—In 1856 A., being in embarrassed circumstances, but entitled to the equity of redemption of consols, and of two policies on his life, and to a life interest in reversion in other funds, agreed to sell the property to B. at an undervalue. Before the agreement was completed, B. assigned his interest in the contract to C. for a larger sum than he had agreed to pay for it, and A. and B. afterwards assigned it to C. accordingly. C. afterwards assigned it to D. for a still larger sum than he had paid to A. and B. D. had notice of the sums previously agreed to be paid, and paid for the property:—Held, that the transaction, as a sale, was invalid as respected D., but an account was directed as to what was really due to her, and she was, under all the circumstances, allowed to retain a policy which she had redeemed, and on which she had paid the premiums. Nesbitt v. Berridge, 32 Beav. 282; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1044; 8 L. T. 76; 11 W. R. 446.

Decreeing Specific Performance by Heir.]—If an heir sells a reversion in the life of his father at an undervalue, a court of equity will not, in favour of such a purchase, decree the heir specifically to perform a covenant for further assurance. Johnson v. Nott, 1 Vern. 271.

Purchaser evicted, Recovering Purchase-Money.]—A man buys at an underrate, and has a covenant and collateral security for quiet enjoyment, and is evicted, he shall recover back only the consideration money, and not the full value of the estate. Zouch v. Swaine, 1 Vern. 320.

e. Costs.

Rule.]—Rule as to costs on setting aside the sale of a reversion. Foster v. Roberts, 29 Beav. 467; 30 L. J., Ch. 666; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 400; 4 L. T. 760; 9 W. R. 605.

Where Offer Refused.]—Before instituting a suit to set aside the sale of a reversion, the plaintiff offered very nearly the same terms that were afterwards imposed by the decree:—Held, that the defendants, who had refused these terms, must pay the costs properly incurred up to the hearing. Nesbitt v. Berridge, 1 N. R. 345.

iv. Mortgages.

Generally.]—The same principles apply to mortgages, as to sales, by expectant heirs. Tottenham v. Emmet, 12 L. T. 838; 14 W. R. 3. Affirming 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1090.

Inadequacy of Consideration.]—A mortgage of a reversionary interest, depending on a gentleman dying without issue male, set aside for inadequacy of consideration, although the risk was such as not to be susceptible of accurate valuation. Benyon v. Fitch, 35 Beav. 570.

Onus.]—A mortgage of a reversionary interest stands in the same position as a sale, and therefore to support the transaction the mortgagee must show that he gave full value. Benyon v. Fitch, 35 Beav. 570.

—— Fair Price.]—In dealing with expectant heirs, persons advancing money must be able to show that they gave an adequate consideration for their reversionary interests. What was a fair market price must depend upon the relative circumstances attending the transaction at the time. Tynte v. Hodge, 11 L. T. 490; 13 W. R. 172.

Setting Aside—Revival of Prior Mortgage.]—An expectant heir charged his reversion in 1853, and afterwards in 1855, to the same parties. The second transaction cancelled the first. The second being set aside by the court:—Held, that the first was not revived. Bromley v. Smith, 26 Beav. 644; 29 L. J., Ch. 18; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 833; 7 W. R. 557.

Solicitor taking Mortgage from Young and Poor Client—Conditions of Relief.]—J., a young man in very poor circumstances, was defendant in a probate action in which he claimed a share of certain real estate as co-heir of the deceased. To enable him to conduct his defence he borrowed money from K., a solicitor, to whom he executed a mortgage whereby he, J., covenanted to employ a particular person as his solicitor in the action, and, if he should be successful in the action, to pay K. 225*l.* "by way of bonus"; and it was provided that K. should make such further advances to J. as and when K. should think fit to meet any further necessities of J., or to be applied in or towards the costs of the action. The deed then charged J.'s interest in the real estate in question with present and future advances and interest at 5 per cent., and the 225*l.* bonus. J. received a further advance from K., making a total of 100*l.* for advances and was ultimately successful in establishing his claim in the probate action:—Held, in an action by J. to redeem, that the transaction was voidable as an undue advantage obtained from J., when under the pressure of distress and in a position analogous to that of an expectant heir; and, accordingly, redemption was decreed on payment only of the sums actually advanced to J., with interest. James v. Kerr, 58 L. J., Ch. 355; 40 Ch. D. 449; 60 L. T. 212; 37 W. R. 279; 53 J. P. 628.

Conditions of Relief—Mortgage to Stand as Security—Base Fee.]—A plaintiff was entitled to a base fee in real estates in Ireland, subject to the life interest of, and the exercise of a power of appointment by, his father, who was upwards of seventy and a lunatic. He applied to the defendant for a loan of 500*l.*, and agreed to include in the security certain costs, to cover which he was not properly liable, and amounting, with the 500*l.*, to 1,064*l.* The defendant consented to advance the money on these terms; accordingly the plaintiff, who had an independent solicitor, mortgaged his reversion to the defendant, to secure 2,000*l.* in case the plaintiff's father should die within three years after the date of the mortgage, and 4,000*l.* if he should outlive that period, with interest on the respective sums. The father died four years afterwards, and the plaintiff filed a bill to set aside the mortgage:—Held, that the mortgage must stand for a security only for the sum actually advanced, and the costs which the plaintiff was liable to pay with interest. Tottenham v. Emmet, 12 L. T. 838; 14 W. R. 3. Affirming 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1090.

—— Six Years' Interest.]—A married woman and her brothers, persons in a humble position, being entitled in reversion expectant on the death of a tenant for life, to a sum of 1,500*l.* charged on land, purported to mortgage this interest to B. as security for 500*l.*, though 250*l.* only was actually advanced. B. subsequently advanced 150*l.* more, for which a further charge for 300*l.* on the same reversionary interest was taken as security. This deed of further charge contained recitals and clauses to the effect that the nature of the transaction was perfectly understood by the borrowers, and that the difference between the sums actually advanced and the sums expressed to be secured, was considered reasonable remuneration for the delay that must occur before repayment, on account of the age of the tenant for life. The securities were prepared by B.'s solicitor, acting for all parties, and the borrowers had no independent advice. Only one year's interest was ever paid. On the death of the tenant for life the 1,500*l.* was paid into court, and upon a petition by the reversioners to set aside these securities on the ground of fraud, and for payment out of the fund :—Held, that the mortgage and further charge could stand as security only for the sums actually advanced, with six years' arrears of interest only. Slater's Trusts, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 473 ; 11 Ch. D. 227 ; 40 L. T. 184 ; 27 W. R. 448.

—— Practice—Petition.]—Semble, the court will, upon petition for payment out of court, hear and decide questions of this nature without directing the issue of a writ. Ib.

—— Premiums on Policy.]—A young nobleman, on attaining twenty-one, for a small consideration, conveyed his reversion in real estates, and assigned policies which had been effected on his life in his name, for securing 20,000*l.*, with a proviso for redemption and reconveyance of the estates and policies, on payment. After a delay of fourteen years the transaction was set aside, and in the meantime the policies had been sold under a power of sale :—Held, that the mortgage must stand as a security for the moneys actually advanced, but not for the premiums which the mortgagee had paid for keeping up the policies. Pennell v. Millar, 23 Beav. 172 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 699 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 850 ; 5 W. R. 215.

—— Rectification of Decree.]—The bill especially asked for the reassignment of the policies, and the payment of the produce of those sold under the powers of sale. The same relief was asked at the hearing, and was given by the decree. After the decree had been passed, the plaintiffs, finding the account in respect of receipts and payments of the policies would be onerous to them, obtained a hearing, and then asked that this part of the decree might be omitted. The court held them entitled, and rectified the decree accordingly, and without costs. Ib.

—— Repayment of Premiums.]—An expectant heir mortgaged his reversionary estate, and as a further security, he covenanted to keep up policies on his life, which on his default, the mortgagees were empowered to do, and he covenanted to pay the amount, and charged it on his reversion. On setting aside the transaction for inadequacy of consideration, the mortgagees were not allowed the premiums paid by them under the security. Bromley v. Smith, 26 Beav. 644 ; 29 L. J., Ch. 18 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 833 ; 7 W. R. 557.

Practice—Jurisdiction.]—A sum of 500*l.* was advanced, by way of loan, upon the security of the reversion of real estates (the subject matter of the suit), expectant upon the death of a tenant for life, aged sixty-one at the date of the advance, upon the terms that, if the tenant for life died in five years, the lender should receive back 500*l.* and as much more—viz. 1,000*l.* ; but if the tenant for life died after the expiration of five years, the lender was to receive back 500*l.*, and twice as much more—viz. 1,500*l.* The owner of an incumbrance on the estate prior in point of date to that of the lender of the 500*l.*, and holding also an incumbrance posterior to it in date, filed his bill of foreclosure against such lender and several other parties holding subsequent incumbrances, alleging simply that they claimed some interest in the estates, but without further particularising such interest. By his answer, the lender of the 500*l.* set out his mortgage deed, and insisted upon it. The answer was replied to, and a decree was made in the cause, directing an inquiry what charges or incumbrances there were upon the estate, and directing the master to state the priorities thereof. The lender of the 500*l.* claimed before the master, under this reference, to establish his mortgage, but the master reported against it on the ground of usury, an objection to that effect having been taken before him by a subsequent incumbrancer, not the plaintiff :—Held, upon appeal from the decision of the vice-chancellor, allowing an exception to the master's report, first, that it was competent to the master and to the court, in a suit so framed, to enter into the question of usury. Secondly, that the master was right in reporting against the security on that ground. Mansfield (Earl) v. Ogle, 7 De G. M. & G. 181 ; 24 L. J., Ch. 450 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 603 ; 3 W. R. 557.

v. Post Obits.

Public Policy.]—Post obit security, though not on reasonable terms, may be valid, but on grounds of public policy strictly examined. Curling v. Townshend, 19 Ves. 628.

Usury.]—Post obit bonds, though upon terms of gross inequality, established ; such securities not being liable to impeachment on the ground of usury. Wharton v. May, 5 Ves. 27.

Rights of Assignee of.]—The assignee of a post obit security takes it with notice of all its legal incidents, including the right of the reversioner to open settled accounts between himself and the original mortgagor. Tottenham v. Green, 32 L. J., Ch. 201 ; 1 N. R. 466.

Recitals in a mortgage deed of an account settled are not binding on the reversioner, even as against sub-mortgagees. Ib.

Sale of Bonds.]—Post obit bonds by a young man put up to sale by him without reserve, relieved against. Fox v. Wright, 6 Madd. 111 ; 22 R. R. 324.

Relief.]—One lent an heir 1,000*l.* to pay 2,500*l.* if he survived his father, else nothing ; equity relieved. Twistleton v. Griffith, 1 P. Wms. 310.

One entitled to an estate after the death of two old lives, takes 350*l.* to pay 700*l.* when the lives fall, and mortgages the estate as a security. No relief against this bargain, though both the lives died within two years. Batty v. Lloyd, 1 Vern. 141.

Post obit security bond by A. in 1720, for payment in six months after his father's death, if he survived ; otherwise to be void. The father, then seventy, dies in 1731 ; A. in 1734. No relief against the penalty, there being no proof of imposition, although suspicious circumstances in it. Hill v. Caillovel, 1 Ves. 122.

A., aged thirty, borrows 5,000*l.* on bond, to pay 10,000*l.* if he survives B., aged seventy-eight. A. survives a year and eight months, having, on death of B., confirmed the bargain by a new bond, &c., freely and paying part. No relief given in this case, except as to the penalty. Chesterfield (Earl) v. Janssen, 2 Ves. 125; 1 Atk. 352.

—— Payment.]—A., tenant for life, remainder to first, &c., son in tail, remainder to his nephew B. B. enters into several statutes to C. for payment of ten to one upon the death of A. in case he died without issue male in the life of B. C. in the life of A. brings a bill to compel B. either to pay principal and interest, or to be foreclosed of any relief against the bargain. B., by answer, declares the bargain fairly made, and intends to abide by it, and that he would seek no relief against it. A. dies. B. brings a bill against the executor of C., and, notwithstanding B.'s former answer, he is relieved against the bargain on payment of principal and interest without costs. Wiseman v. Beake, 2 Vern. 121; Free. C. C. 111.

Conditions of Relief—Bond to Stand for Sum Advanced.]—Under circumstances post obit bonds from an expectant heir set aside, and allowed only to stand for sum actually advanced, with interest. Bernal v. Donegal (Marquis), 3 Dow, 133; 1 Bligh (N.S.) 524.

—— Price of Goods Sold—Joint Mortgagors.]—Agreement obtained from young heirs, and securities taken for the payment of great sums of money on the death of their ancestors for goods sold at extravagant prices, set aside on payment of the true value which each person respectively received; and, though the security was joint, yet one not to answer for what the other received. Bill v. Price, 1 Vern. 467.

Practice—Payment into Court.]—In a suit to set aside post obit securities, an injunction being granted, the principal and interest will be ordered into court, and will not be paid to the defendant. Marsack v. Farlow, Jacob, 572.

—— Account Settled—Re-opening.]—An account settled and signed by an expectant heir for the purpose of a post obit security is not conclusive as between him and the person dealing with him; but the right of such heir to reopen the accounts does not extend to transactions not of a post obit character forming items in the account. Tottenham v. Green, 32 L. J., Ch. 201; 1 N. R. 466.

—— Injunction—Motion to Set Aside—Costs.]—An action on a post obit, as contrary to the principles of this court, was restrained, and subsequent motion to set aside the injunction was refused with costs, such case being against general rule, that costs of motion for injunction, or to dissolve injunction, refused, are costs in the cause. Marsack v. Reeves, 6 Madd. 108.

vi. Unconscionable Bargains.

Jurisdiction.]—Although by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 60, the usury laws are repealed, and by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 4, dealings with reversionary interests can no longer be set aside for inadequacy of consideration, a court has still jurisdiction to protect the unwary from unconscionable bargains. Tyler v. Yates, 40 L. J., Ch. 768; L. R. 6 Ch. 665; 25 L. T. 284; 19 W. R. 909. S. P., Aylesford (Earl) v. Morris, 42 L. J., Ch. 546; L. R. 8 Ch. 484; 28 L. T. 541; 21 W. R. 424. S. P., Miller v. Cook, 40 L. J., Ch. 11; L. R. 10 Eq. 641; 22 L. T. 740; 18 W. R. 1061.

Principles of Relief.]—The principle on which a court of equity has granted relief from an unconscionable bargain entered into with an expectant heir or reversioner for the loan of money, applies also to the case of money being lent, on unconscionable terms (not fully understood by the borrower and known not to be fully understood by him by the lender), to a young man, being a minor at the time of the first transaction, the son of a father possessing large property; who has no property of his own and no expectation of any, except such general expectations as are founded on his father's position in life; the money being lent without any thought of repayment by the borrower, but on the credit of such general expectations and in the hope of extorting payment from the father to avoid the exposure attendant on his son's being made a bankrupt. Nevill v. Snelling, 49 L. J., Ch. 777; 15 Ch. D. 679; 43 L. T. 244; 29 W. R. 375. S. P. Bennett v. Bennett, 43 L. T. 246, n.

Absence of Fraud.]—The mere absence of fraud does not necessarily decide upon the validity of an unconscionable bargain. Bowes v. Heaps, 3 V. & B. 117; 13 R. R. 162.

Covenant.]—A. lends money to B. on a mortgage, and takes a covenant from B. by another deed that, if A. should think fit, B. should convey to A. so much of the mortgaged estate as should be of the value of the money lent at two years' purchase. Covenant decreed to be set aside as unconscionable. Jennings v. Ward, 2 Vern. 520.

Grant of Annuity, with Stipulation.]—Grant of annuity by reversioner which would repay the principal in six years, with a stipulation to employ a dependant of the grantee as receiver, and other circumstances:—Held, not to be impeachable as unconscionable. Whalley v. Foude, 1 Jur. 257.

Setting Aside.]—An unconscionable bargain got from an heir in the life of his father set aside. Berny v. Pitt, 2 Vern. 14. S. P., Nott v. Johnson, id. 27. Lamplugh v. Smith, id. 77.

Conditions of Relief.]—Loans were made to a young man on his bills at exorbitant interest, and when they were about to become due he mortgaged his reversionary interest to secure the amount and a further advance. The mortgage being set aside for inadequacy, the mortgagee is entitled to the full amount of the bills, and not simply to the money actually advanced on them. Benyon v. Fitch, 35 Beav. 570.

A. borrows 200*l.* of B., and gives B. a mortgage defeasanced to be void on B.'s paying A. 40*l.* per annum for eight years by quarterly payments. Court relieved on payment of the 200*l.* and simple interest. James v. Oades, 2 Vern. 402.

Where a young man, entitled in reversion to an estate, and very much pressed for money shortly after attaining his majority, had given a money-lender securities and promissory notes, bearing an exorbitant rate of interest; they were ordered to be delivered up on repayment of the sums actually advanced, with interest thereon at 5 per cent. per annum. Wyatt v. Cook, 18 L. T. 12; 16 W. R. 502.

A young nobleman in his twenty-second year, entitled to large property in the event of his surviving his father, was largely indebted. The creditor pressed for payment, and recommended the young nobleman to apply to a certain money-lender. The money-lender advanced enough money to in part pay off the creditor, and made a further advance to the young nobleman, taking by way of security his acceptances at three months for the sum advanced, with interest and discount together exceeding the rate of 60 per cent. The acceptances became due and the process was repeated, the young nobleman receiving a small advance. The young nobleman had no professional assistance in these matters, and no application was made to his father or to the solicitors of the father. The father died before the second set of bills became due, and the money-lender commenced actions upon them:—Held, that the actions would be restrained, and a decree made for delivery up of the bills on payment of the sums actually advanced, and interest at 5 per cent. Aylesford (Earl) v. Morris, 42 L. J., Ch. 546; 8 L. R. Ch. 484; 28 L. T. 541; 21 W. R. 424.

—— Redemption on Payment of Sum Advanced.]—A younger son, twenty-six years of age, and in great pecuniary distress, in July, 1861, borrowed 85*l.* of a money-lender, on his promissory note for 100*l.* at six months, and as a collateral security mortgaged a bond for 600*l.* payable on the death of his father, then aged fifty-four, which he had taken from his eldest brother as consideration for his releasing his portion of 600*l.* charged on the family estate. The interest reserved by the mortgage, in the event (which happened) of the note not being paid when due, was 5 per cent. per month. He died in October, 1872. The bond became payable in October, 1873, by the death of his father, and in February, 1874, his legal personal representative filed a bill to redeem:—Held, that he was an expectant heir, and that the bargain was unconscionable, and redemption was decreed on payment to the money-lender of the amount actually advanced, with interest at 5 per cent. per annum. Beynnon v. Cook, 23 W. R. 413. Affirmed, L. R. 10 Ch. 389; 32 L. T. 353; 23 W. R. 531.

—— Deed to Stand as Security for Sum Advanced.]—In 1819 W. O. borrowed of E. C. 1,500*l.*, and of H. W. 500*l.*, on condition that the same sums and as much more should be paid to them on the death of his father A. B., provided he died within five years; but, if he should survive that period, then the same sums and twice as much more were to be paid to E. C. and H. W. The manor of C., and other estates to which W. O. was then absolutely entitled in remainder expectant on the death of A. B., were granted to D. to secure the payment of these sums and interest. In August, 1844, A. B. died, and in November D. gave notice to the tenants in possession, that, as trustee, he required them to pay the rent to him until the sums of 4,500*l.* and 1,500*l.*, with interest, had been paid. On bill filed against F. C. and others, praying that they might be ordered to redeem or be foreclosed, a reference was, on the hearing, made to the master to ascertain what incumbrances there were affecting the estates. F. C., as the representative of E. C., claimed that he was, under the indenture of 1819, entitled to receive the sum of 1,500*l.*, and interest from the 14th August, 1844. The master disallowed the claim, on the ground that the indenture was void for usury:—Held, allowing the exception, that, as the nullity of the deed had not been established, it must stand as a security for the money actually advanced, and interest at 5 per cent. Baker v. Bradley, 1 Jur. (N.S.) 489; 3 W. R. 361.

—— Securities to Stand for Money Advanced.]—Unconscionable bargain, to pay four times the money advanced, subject to the contingency of the borrower, young and in good health, surviving a young but very bad life, and a very improbable chance of issue. The securities to stand only for the principal advanced, interest, and costs, under the circumstances; no fraud; terms proposed by the borrower to several others being merely acceded to. Bowes v. Heaps, 3 V. & B. 117; 13 R. R. 162.

—— 31 & 32 Vict. c. 4, s. 1.]—The plaintiff was entitled to a reversionary interest in a sum of 2,100*l.* invested on mortgages subject to a life estate of a lady, aged sixty-three. The plaintiff was married in 1888, and, except the reversion, was without means. Her husband, who had been in the army, had no means, and was without employment. In 1889 the plaintiff had mortgaged her reversion to M. for 400*l.*, at 7 per cent., and had borrowed two other sums of 50*l.* and 52*l.* 10*s.*, for which she had given equitable charges on the fund. In January, 1890, the plaintiff and her husband were living in an hotel in Dublin. She was in delicate health, and was expecting her confinement in a few weeks. They had been trying to sell the reversion through M., a solicitor in Dublin. They had no money and would be obliged to pay a week's hotel bill on the 16th January. On that day she executed a mortgage of the reversionary interest to the defendant, a Dublin money-lender, to secure 100*l.* of an advance, repayable in six months, at 60 per cent. There was a sum of 7*l.* charged for costs, which also bore interest at 60 per cent. This mortgage was the result of several interviews between the plaintiff and her husband and the defendant. The deed was approved of by M. on behalf of the plaintiff, and acknowledged before a commissioner:—Held, that the mortgage was under the circumstances, a hard and unconscionable bargain, and should stand security for all sums advanced only with interest at 5 per cent. Rae v. Joyce, 29 L. R., Ir. 500—C. A.

—— Costs.]—A money-lender advanced to a young man, aged twenty-two, in distress for money and in fear of arrest, 123*l.*; taking from him a promissory note for 150*l.*, and two mortgages of his reversionary interest in a legacy of 500*l.*, and in a share of residuary estate worth about 500*l.* more. One of such mortgages secured the repayment of 50*l.*, with interest at the rate of 20 per cent. for the first month and 5 per cent. per month afterwards, and the other secured 150*l.*, with interest at 20 per cent. per annum, reducible to 10 per cent. on punctual quarterly payments, and both these mortgages contained an absolute power of sale without notice. Upon a bill by the borrower against the money-lender to set aside the securities:—Held, that the bargain was an unconscionable one, and amounted to unfair dealing within 31 & 32 Vict. c. 4; and it was declared that the deeds should stand as a security only for the sums actually advanced, with interest at 5*l.* per cent., but the court directed that the defendant should have his costs of suit added to the amount to be found due on his securities. Miller v. Cook, 40 L. J., Ch. 11; L. R. 10 Eq. 641; 22 L. T. 740; 18 W. R. 1061.

S., a man of intemperate habits, aged thirty, in order to pay tradesmen's bills and other debts, for 5,000*l.* in hand, bound himself in the penalty of 20,000*l.* to pay 10,000*l.* upon the death of M., a lady aged seventy-eight, if he survived her. M. died aged eighty-four, and S. survived her two years. At M.'s death a new bond was entered into, with the same penalty for the payment of 10,000*l.* and interest, and S. executed a warrant of attorney to empower judgment to be recorded against him in King's Bench, which was done accordingly. 2,000*l.* were paid by S. in about five months from the death of M. Before his death S. devised the residue of his personal estate after paying debts, &c. to his son, a minor. The plaintiffs, the son's guardians and executors in trust, brought a bill to be relieved against defendant's demand as an unconscionable bargain and usurious contract. The court relieved plaintiffs against the penalty and judgment, by directing defendant to deliver up the second bond to be cancelled, and to acknowledge satisfaction on the judgment upon being paid by plaintiffs what should be due at law, but would not give him costs, as there was probabilis causa litigandi, and defendant's case far from favourable. Chesterfield (Earl) v. Janssen, 1 Atk. 301.

Practice—Demurrer.]—A very young man in necessitous circumstances received advances from money-lenders on unconscionable terms, and charged them on his reversionary interest in certain real estate. A foreclosure suit was subsequently instituted by one of the incumbrancers, the young man was then made a bankrupt, and an assignee fraudulently appointed, who, in concert with the incumbrancers, procured part of the property to be sold in the suit, and the greater part of the proceeds to be paid to some of the incumbrancers. To a bill by the bankrupt, containing these statements, and also stating that the defendants, who were the incumbrancers, and the assignee had fraudulently colluded together to deprive him of his property, and also averring generally, that there would be a large surplus after satisfying all claims against him, and that the assignee had refused to sue or to lend his name for that purpose, and praying that the securities might stand as a security only for the moneys actually advanced to him, and for an account of such moneys, and for repayment to him by the incumbrancers of the moneys overpaid to them out of the proceeds of sale, a demurrer was allowed without costs, and with liberty to amend. Payne v. Dicker, 19 W. R. 695.

Other Cases—Relief.]—One just come of age entitled to an estate of 300*l.* per annum, being drawn into a statute for 1,000*l.*, upon which he received only 330*l.*, is relieved upon the circumstances of fraud. Smith v. Burroughs, 2 Vern. 346; Pre. Ch. 80.

A bill discounter obtained from a young man at college bills of exchange, I O U's, &c., for moneys advanced at high rates of interest; and subsequently a document, purporting to be an account of the advances, but being only a list of such bills of exchange, &c., was sent to the young man. A letter, signed by him, acknowledging that the account between himself and the money-lender had been settled:—Held, not to be binding on the young man; and the court ordered an account to be taken of the moneys actually advanced, with interest at 5*l.* per cent. and that, when the amount found to be due should be paid, the securities should be delivered up and cancelled. Croft v. Graham, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1032. Affirmed, 2 De G. J. & S. 155; 9 L. T. 589.

Money-lenders discounted accommodation bills drawn by an infant upon, and accepted by, his elder brother, and took security from time to time for the sums so advanced, and for interest and commission, by way of charge upon the reversionary interest of the elder brother. The charges amounted to 4,650*l.*, of which the brother whose interest was charged had only received 210*l.*, the balance consisting of sums advanced to the infant (with the consent of the elder brother) and of exorbitant charges for interest and commission:—Held, that the charges were only good for such sums as had been actually advanced (as well to the infant as to the elder brother), together with interest at 5 per cent., and that the fact of the debt having been incurred before the creation of the security was immaterial. Tyler v. Yates, 40 L. J., Ch. 768; L. R. 6 Ch. 665; 25 L. T. 284; 19 W. R. 909.

b. Persons Ignorant of Rights.

Generally.]—Equity relieves against bargains made under a misconception of rights. Bingham v. Bingham, 1 Ves. 126.

A mere voluntary deed of gift, the nature of which is not fully understood by the donor, may be set aside after the donor's death, either by the heir-at-law of the donor, or by persons claiming under a will of the donor. Anderson v. Elsworth, 3 Giff. 154; 30 L. J., Ch. 922; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1047; 4 L. T. 822; 9 W. R. 888.

Conveyance obtained from a woman in ignorance of her rights, and upon misrepresentation of the circumstances of the property, set aside, although she was of full age, and acquiesced in the sale, and received the interest of the purchase money for twelve years, and although she consulted her friends, and had their assent, they being in equal ignorance with herself. Murray v. Palmer, 2 Sch. & Lef. 474.

Where a person agrees to give up his claim to property in favour of another, such agreement is void, if he was ignorant of his rights, and of the value of the property, especially if the party with whom he dealt possessed better information on the subject. M'Carthy v. Decaix, 2 Russ. & M. 614.

If party, ignorant of plain and settled principle of law, is induced to yield portion of his indisputable right, equity will relieve; but where title is disputable, and he enters into a compromise, no relief is given, nor will consideration be inquired into, if taken upon due deliberation. Naylor v. Wynch, 1 Sim. & S. 564; 2 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 132; 7 id. 6; 24 R. R. 227.

Voluntary gift of property, immediate and irrevocable, sought to be set aside, on the ground of want of independent advice and ignorance of the donor of the full effect of his act; but upheld. Long v. Donegan, 21 W. R. 830.

—— Presumption.]—Dislike and fear of one relation raises a strong presumption that the donor had a real intention to make such a gift in favour of another relation. Ib.

Both parties in Ignorance.]—A plaintiff may be entitled to relief from a contract or conveyance on the ground of ignorance and mistake, although the defendant, with whom he dealt and against whom relief is sought, was also in ignorance and under mistake, the contract or conveyance not being made upon the principle of compromising doubtful rights. Reynell v. Sprye, 8 Hare, 222. Affirmed, 21 L. J., Ch. 633.

Misrepresentation — Specific Performance.]—Where a person having a clear title of 12*l.* for rent, and claiming the property of the land, is induced by the representations of two professional persons that he had no right to either rent or land, to agree to accept 10*l.* in full for rent and land, the court will not entertain a bill for the specific performance of the agreement. Stanley v. Robinson, 1 Russ. & M. 527.

Husband and Wife.]—A man already married performed the ceremony of marriage with G. N., and joined with her in executing an assignment of her life interest in a trust fund to a purchaser. The fraud practised upon G. N. by the person acting in the character of her husband did not affect the validity of the assignment, nor was it necessary to make the supposed husband a party to a suit instituted by the purchaser to obtain the benefit of the assignment. Sturge v. Starr, 2 Myl. & K. 195.

A wife who had been deserted by her husband became entitled to a share of an intestate's property amounting to 3,609*l.* The husband, whilst he was ignorant of the amount of the share, assigned it in trust for his wife and children, subject to the payment of 10*s.* a week to himself for his life. Although the deed recited that the intestate's estate was very considerable, yet, as the administrators, who were the wife's brothers and parties to the transaction, did not disclose to the husband the amount of the share, the deed was set aside. Groves v. Perkins, 6 Sim. 576.

Apportionment of Rent.]—A deed apportioning rent between A. and B., executed without any consideration or intention of bounty, by A.'s agent, without authority, and in ignorance that the rent had been conclusively apportioned by a former deed, not enforced against A. But A., when afterwards apprised of his rights, obtaining from B. a settlement according to the apportionment, and for several years after, during the life of B., paying the whole rent, without demanding contribution, not entitled after the death of B., to an account against his assets: as, from A. being in active litigation with B. during his whole life, it was not to be presumed that the forbearance arose from kindness, but that A. knew, if he stirred his demand during B.'s life, he might have started some countervailing demand, which B.'s representative has no means of setting up. A., entitled to contribution according to the former apportionment, against C., the remainderman, from the death of B., when he went into possession: also from a purchaser of parts of the lands from the time of the purchase. Stratford v. Aldborough (Lord), Beat. 228.

Setting aside Conveyance obtained for Inadequate Consideration from Markswoman.]—A markswoman was heiress-at-law to a person who died seised of or entitled to real estate. One of the defendants set up a will of the deceased, which will was, as regarded the personalty of the deceased, pronounced a forgery, but which, as regarded the realty, was never impeached at law. She was afterwards persuaded to execute deeds conveying away all her interest in the deceased's realty for an inadequate consideration. She subsequently filed a bill, praying that the deeds might be set aside on the grounds that they were obtained by fraud, that they were never explained or read over to her, and that she was, at the time she executed them, in ignorance of her title to any portion of the estate:—Held, that the court could order the deeds to be set aside, this case not being at all analogous to the cases of heirs coming to the court under circumstances of this kind, and asking that mere terms of years, or dry legal estates, should be set aside in order to allow the heirs to proceed at law. Cartledge v. Radbourn, 14 L. T. 187; 14 W. R. 603.

Conveyance for Charitable Purposes—Untrue Recitals.]—A. conveyed certain property to trustees in 1842, upon trust for charitable purposes, with the intention, and in the belief, from the representations made to her, that the charity would not take effect till after her death, and that during her lifetime the enjoyment of the property would be preserved to her. The deed was enrolled within six months, and retained in the possession of A., who continued to receive the rents of the property till 1850. In that year, believing herself to be dying, she was persuaded to add certain other property to what was already comprised in the deed of 1842. Deeds were executed declaring the trusts, and reciting that A. had received the rents from 1842 as the agent of the trustees, and that she was desirous of providing for the payment to them of all sums owing in respect thereof. The plaintiff stated that these recitals were untrue, and introduced without her knowledge. Before executing these deeds, in August, 1850, she stipulated with the trustees for the receipt of the rent up to the Christmas following:—Held, that A. was entitled to have the deeds set aside, on the ground of the misrepresentation made as to the effect, and her want of knowledge with reference to the deed of 1842, and from the untrue recital and tacit reservation of benefit upon the deeds of 1850. Howard v. Fingall (Earl), 1 W. R. 515.

Purchase Clandestinely Obtained.]—Where A. has refused to sell to B. except for ready money, and C. clandestinely attempts to purchase for B., and money is not ready, court will not enforce agreement. Popham v. Eyre, Lofft, 786.

Release of Orphanage part.] — Where a daughter of a freeman of London accepts of a legacy of 10,000*l.* left her by her father, who recommended it to her to release her right to her orphanage part, which she does release accordingly, if the orphanage part be much more than her legacy, though she were told she might elect which she pleased, yet, if she did not know she had first a right to inquire into the value of the personal estate, and the quantum of her orphanage part, before she made her election, this is so material that it may avoid her release. Pusey v. Desbouvrie, 3 P. Wms. 316.

Conveyance by Heir to Devisee, under misapprehension.]—If a man devises land in fee to B., who dies in the lifetime of the testator, and the testator's heir, taking it that the heir of B. is entitled, for a trifling consideration, conveys and confirms the estate to him, equity will relieve. Ib.

Lapse of Time.]—Deeds set aside, as absolute securities and conveyances, and ordered to stand as security only for what should appear due upon a general account after a considerable lapse of time, seventeen years, upon the nature of the deeds themselves, the circumstances under which, and the confidential relation of the person by whom they were obtained, and no confirmation: the other parties being throughout under the same influence, control, and ignorance of their rights. Purcell v. M'Namara, 14 Ves. 91.

See also COMPROMISE.

c. Aged and Infirm Persons.

Presumption of Imposition.]—Old age alone not sufficient ground to presume imposition. Lewis v. Pead, 1 Ves. J. 19.

Suspicious Circumstances.]—An agreement for a purchase obtained from a woman of ninety years of age, and several suspicious circumstances; the court would neither decree it to be carried into execution against the heir-at-law, nor to be delivered up. Green v. Wood, 2 Vern. 632.

Relief.]—A sale by an old woman of eighty-eight of an estate in possession, for one-fourth of its value, was set aside, she being in distress and without legal assistance, and being also under the impression that she could not make out a good title, while the purchaser, knowing that she could, concealed the fact from her. Summers v. Griffiths, 35 Beav. 27.

Deed of gift ordered to be delivered up as obtained by undue influence over the donor, who was eighty-four years old, and nearly blind, and placed confidence in donee. Griffiths v. Robins, 3 Madd. 191.

—— Consideration.]—A conveyance by a weak man, for a small consideration, set aside. Clarkson v. Hanway, 2 P. Wms. 203.

Compos Mentis.]—A weak man gives a bond; if it be attended with no fraud or breach of trust, equity will not set aside the bond only for the weakness of the obligor, if he be compos mentis; equity will not measure people's understandings or capacities. No such thing as an equitable non compos if compos at law. Osmond v. Fitzroy, 3 P. Wms. 130.

Inadequate Consideration — Relief—Deed to Stand as Security.]—Where an aged, illiterate, and a weak-minded man, not absolutely incapable of managing his own affairs, but in such a state of mental incapacity as to make it necessary that he should have protection and advice, executed a deed of conveyance of his property for a grossly inadequate consideration, the court, on a bill filed by the heiress and her husband, declared that the deed must be set aside as an absolute conveyance, and stand as a security only for money advanced by the purchaser, and properly expended by him on the property. Longmate v. Ledger, 2 Giff. 157; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 481; 8 W. R. 386.

Improvident Bargain obtained from Illiterate Persons by Unfair Advantage—Ratification.]—A. died intestate having considerable real estate, and leaving B. and C. his co-heiresses-at-law, both of whom were advanced in years, illiterate, and of a very humble rank in life. D., having ascertained the heirship of B. and C., induced them to sign an agreement whereby, in consideration of his revealing to them the existence of the property and their title to it (of both which circumstances they were wholly unaware), they agreed to give him one half of the net amount of the property. At the same time D. verbally arranged to recover the property for them, and induced them to employ his solicitor to act for them in the matter. The property was in the hands of the public trustee in New Zealand, and the title of B. and C. was clear, and no litigation was contemplated. A portion of the proceeds of the property was received and divided on the terms of the agreement. On the death of B. and C. their executors brought an action against D. to have the documents set aside and cancelled:—Held, that the agreement must be set aside as an improvident bargain which D. had obtained by taking an unfair advantage of his position:—Held, also, that there had been no ratification of the contract by B. and C., as they never knew of their right to rescind it. Rees v. De Bernardy, 65 L. J., Ch. 656; [1896] 2 Ch. 437; 74 L. T. 585.

Father induced to sell Advowson—No fraud.]—Where father is possessed of advowson, which he apparently intended for his son, and is prevailed on, when in an infirm state, to enter into articles for sale of it. Specific performance was refused, though no fraud was imputed to purchaser. Bell v. Howard, 9 Mod. 302.

Voluntary Deed by aged Aunt under a Misconception of Effect.]—Where a voluntary deed, containing no power of revocation, was executed by a lady of upwards of seventy years of age, who had been in a very infirm state of body and mind, but from which she had recovered at the date of the deed, depriving herself of all her property in favour of a niece with whom she was living when she executed the deed, and to whom the donor had a clear intention of leaving all her property, to the exclusion of her other relations, but such deed was not either explained to the donor, or understood by her, and it appeared that she understood that under the deed she would be left in the enjoyment of an estate for her life in the property, the subject of the deed, such deed was set aside after the death of the donor at the suit of persons claiming under a will prior in date to the deed. Anderson v. Elsworth, 3 Giff. 154; 30 L. J., Ch. 922; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1047; 4 L. T. 822; 9 W. R. 888.

Purchase by Nephew from Aged Uncle for inadequate Price.]—Purchase of reversion by nephew from uncle very old for price grossly inadequate, the deed of conveyance in the operative part, but not in the recitals, expressing that the grant was made partly in consideration of natural love, &c., not impeached on ground of fraud under the circumstances. Whalley v. Whalley, 3 Bligh, 1. See also Hudson v. Beauchamp, id., 18, n.

Deed of Gift to Medical Adviser—Untrue Consideration stated.]—A deed of gift of real estate from an aged and infirm person to his intimate friend and medical attendant, set aside for fraud, one of the circumstances in proof of fraud being, that the deed stated, contrary to the truth, a money consideration. Gibson v. Russell, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 104; 7 Jur. 875.

II. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

A. AS AGAINST CREDITORS (13 Eliz. c. 5).

1. Property Within the Statute.

Generally—Copyholds.] — An assignment of personal property for a consideration clearly inadequate is fraudulent as against creditors under 13 Eliz., but copyholds not being naturally subject to the debts, a conveyance of them cannot be fraudulent against creditors. Hobbs v. Hull, 1 Cox, 445.

Money—Realty.]—A., being much indebted, gave 600*l.* to his children only six hours before his decease. This is good against creditors, but it would have been otherwise in the case of a real estate, or chattel real. Duffin v. Furness, Sel. Ch. Ca. 77.

Bonds.]—A bond is not goods or chattels, within 13 Eliz. c. 5, as to fraudulent alienations. Sims v. Thomas, 4 P. & D. 233; 12 A. & E. 536; 9 L. J., Q. B. 399.

Policy of Assurance.]—Policies of assurance are, since 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 12, within the 13 Eliz. c. 5. Stokoe v. Cowan, 29 Beav. 637; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 901; 4 L. T. 695; 9 W. R. 801.

Investments.]—Since 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, an investment of money in the purchase of stock, in the names of trustees, upon trust for the children of the settlor, he not having at the time sufficient property, besides the money so invested, to pay the debts which he then owes, is void under 13 Eliz. c. 5, because, by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 12, money or stock may be taken in execution; and therefore the effect of such a settlement would be to delay, hinder, or defraud the creditors of the settlor. Barrack v. M'Culloch, 3 K. & J. 110; 26 L. J., Ch. 105; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 180; 5 W. R. 38.

Purchase of Property.]—For the same reason, any purchase of property by a settlor so indebted, in the name of a child or other person, would be void under 13 Eliz. c. 5. Ib.

Purchased Estate — Furniture.] — A debtor, having contracted to purchase an estate, caused the conveyance to be made to trustees, and trusts to be declared by deeds dated in March, 1850, which recited the agreement of the debtor for the purchase, and that the conveyance to the trustees was by his direction, and declared the trusts to be for the sale of the property and retaining the proceeds for the benefit of the wife and children of the debtor. By one of the deeds of March, 1850, the debtor also assigned to the same trustees all the furniture in certain houses (one of which was on the purchased estate), upon the same trusts, for his wife and children. The debtor was, at the date of these deeds, indebted to an extent which would render a voluntary disposition of his estate fraudulent under the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5, as against creditors. The trustees were not informed of the assignment of the furniture to them, and it continued in the possession of the debtor until the subsequent assignment next mentioned. By a mortgage deed, dated in November, 1851, the debtor conveyed and assigned all his real and personal estate to a creditor to whom he had, after the date of the voluntary deeds of March, 1850, become largely indebted, to secure, so far as it would go, the debt owing to such creditor; and the creditor thereupon took possession of the furniture:—Held, that although the purchased estate was never vested at law in the debtor, yet, as he had by the contract acquired an equitable interest in it, which interest was conveyed to the trustees under the voluntary deeds of March, 1850, such conveyance was fraudulent as against creditors under the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5; that the assignment of the furniture by the voluntary deed of March, 1850, was also fraudulent as against creditors. Barton or Stone v. Van Heythuysen, 11 Hare, 126; 18 Jur. 344; 1 W. R. 429.

Power of Appointment.]—A general power of appointment given over an estate in lieu of a present interest in it, having been executed voluntarily, though for a daughter, was held to be assets in favour of creditors. Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. 1.

Trader—Purchase of Property.]—Purchase in joint names of husband and wife, by trader, afterwards a bankrupt, is void against creditors. Glaister v. Hewer, 9 Ves. 12; 11 id. 377.

So if purchase was made with wife's money, if previously received and disposable by him as his own, not bound by any agreement with a trustee, and the receipt not connected with the purchase. S. C., 8 Ves. 195.

2. Creditors Within the Statute.

Who are—Wife Covenantee.]—Under a covenant on marriage by husband with trustees, in case wife should survive him, to pay her a sum of money, she is a creditor within the statute against fraudulent conveyances, 13 Eliz. c. 5. Rider v. Kidder, 10 Ves. 360.

—— Creditors having Equal Rights.]—Court will not favour creditors where others have equal rights to them. Brown v. Jones, 1 Atk. 188.

—— Creditor under voluntary Post-obit Bond.]—A creditor under a voluntary post-obit bond is as much entitled to the benefit of the 13 Eliz. c. 5, as any other creditor. Adames v. Hallet, L. R. 6 Eq. 468; 18 L. T. 789.

—— Creditor without Lien or Charging Order.] — In order to entitle a creditor of a living debtor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance under 13 Eliz. c. 5, it is not necessary that the creditor should have any lien or charging order on the property comprised in the conveyance; but in the absence of such lien the court will not apply the property in satisfaction of the creditor's claim. Reese River Silver Mining Co.

v. Atwell, L. R. 7 Eq. 347; 20 L. T. 163; 17 W. R. 601.

—— Creditor by Elegit.]—Bill lies for creditor by elegit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, whether he could recover at law or not. Bennet v. Musgrove, 2 Ves. 51.

—— Subsequent Bond Creditors.]—The father makes a settlement on trustees in trust to pay debts therein mentioned, reserving 50*l.* a year to himself for life, remainder to his son, &c. Father continues in possession, and twelve years after contracts debts by bond: whether the settlement is fraudulent as to the bond creditors, quære. Hungerford v. Earle, 2 Vern. 261.

A suit to set aside a settlement as fraudulent against creditors, entertained where the plaintiff subsequently became a creditor by breach of a covenant previously entered into by the settlor. Where a deed is set aside as fraudulent against creditors, the property becomes assets, and subsequent creditors are let in. Richardson v. Smallwood, Jacob, 552.

The 13 Eliz. c. 5, extends as well to future as to existing debts, and a deed having for its object to defraud future creditors is therefore void. Barling v. Bishopp, 29 Beav. 417; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 812; 8 W. R. 631.

Voluntary Bond set aside in favour of Portioners.]—One executes a voluntary bond of 5,000*l.* to one of his daughters, without any consideration, and payable immediately, but always kept it by him, and it was proved to be made to screen himself from taxes, and so esteemed by that daughter; and he by will gives portions to all his daughters, and dies: this bond decreed to be set aside. Ward v. Lant, Pre. Ch. 182.

Voluntary Trust set aside as against Order for Permanent Alimony.]—Pending a suit which was instituted by a wife against her husband for a divorce, the husband conveyed his freehold and personal estates to trustees, upon trust, to pay out of the income certain mortgages affecting the real estates, and certain scheduled bond-creditors, and an annuity to himself, another annuity to his sons, and an annuity of 100*l.* to his wife, if she withdrew the proceedings which were then pending against him, and should not institute any others. The wife prosecuted the suit, and succeeded both in the courts below, and ultimately before the judicial committee on appeal. A sentence of divorce was pronounced and a permanent alimony ordered for her support. Writs of sequestration were issued to enforce payment not only of that, but of arrears of interim alimony which had been allowed the wife, and of her costs of suit. The sequestrators being unable, by reason of the deed of conveyance, to seize the property of the husband, the wife filed her bill to set aside the deed as fraudulent and void as against her. The court declared the deed of conveyance fraudulent and void, and affirmed the order of the court below so far as it gave the plaintiff relief for arrears of alimony and the costs of the several proceedings, but reserved the question as to whether the decree was right in giving the plaintiff a charge on the estates for further alimony. Blenkinsopp v. Blenkinsopp, 1 De G. M. & G. 495; 21 L. J., Ch. 401; 16 Jur. 787.

Voluntary Assignment set aside in favour of Creditor on Running Account.] — A. made a voluntary assignment of a sum of money, being, at the time, indebted to B. on balance of running account. A. afterwards made payments to B., exceeding in amount the balance due at the date of the assignment; but the balance continually increased. The assignment was set aside at the suit of B. Whittington v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 493; 3 L. J., Ch. 157.

Voluntary Assignment, Effect of, as against Creditor Privy thereto.]—A father executed a voluntary deed, assigning a considerable portion of his property to his sons, with the concurrence and by the advice of his brother, to whom he was largely indebted. He also made his will appointing his sons and his brother executors and trustees. The brother acted under the will until his death, which took place seven years after that of the testator. He never took any step to impeach the voluntary deed, but was a party with the donees under it to instruments and transactions proceeding on the assumption of its validity:—Held, that after his decease his representatives could not impeach the deed, as being void against creditors under the 13 Eliz. c. 5. Ollivet v. King, 8 De G. M. & G. 110; 25 L. J., Ch. 427; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 312; 4 W. R. 382.

Quære, whether, supposing him to have had a right to impeach the deed, his executors could have impeached it after he had lived seven years without doing so. Ib.

Settlement reserving Power to Mortgage.]—A. makes a voluntary settlement reserving to himself a power to mortgage what part he pleased. This amounts in effect to a power of revocation, and therefore fraudulent as against creditors by judgment. Tarback v. Marbury, 2 Vern. 510.

Voluntary Bond—Subsequent Assignment.]—A., before the marriage of his niece, verbally promised her and her intended husband that he would make a suitable provision for her. He also wrote a letter to his niece, which was not communicated to the intended husband, in which, referring to the assignment of a policy of assurance which he had effected on his life, he said: "J. urged me to make over the insurance, and get it done by an attorney, which would soon be published, but I will not, though I will do it in another way without publishing it, which is the only way it could be done safely, and I say that in confidence. Do not mention it to any one." The husband swore that the marriage was had on the faith of the promise. After the marriage a bond was given by A. to the husband, in pursuance of the promise, conditioned to pay a sum of money at the death of A., who afterwards assigned the policy by a voluntary deed, being at the time of the assignment and at the time of his death in solvent circumstances, save as to the bond:—Held, that, as neither the verbal promise nor the letter could have been enforced against A., the bond was voluntary, and gave no equity to set aside the assignment of the policy. M'Askie v. M'Cay, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 447; 16 W. R. 1187.

Purchaser for Value of Interest under Settlement, without Notice of Fraud.]—Section 5 of 13 Eliz. c. 5, protects a purchaser for value of any interest, legal or equitable, derived under a settlement which is fraudulent and void under the statute as against creditors, provided such purchaser had no notice of its fraudulent nature. Halifax Banking Co. v. Gledhill, 60 L. J., Ch. 181; [1891] 1 Ch. 31; 63 L. T. 623; 39 W. R. 104.

Practice.]—Upon bill by son, committee of his father, a lunatic, to set aside a voluntary settlement by him, motion for the defendant to let the house, sell the furniture, &c., and bring the whole into court, refused; plaintiff not consenting. Colman v. Croker, 1 Ves. 160.

—— Obtaining judgment at law.]—Quære, whether, after the bankruptcy or insolvency of a debtor, any creditor (other than the assignees) can in ordinary cases sustain a suit to set aside a conveyance made by the debtor prior to the bankruptcy or insolvency on the grounds that such conveyance is fraudulent within the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, or whether it is necessary that any creditor seeking to set aside such fraudulent conveyance must previously recover judgment at law for his debt. Lister v. Turner, 5 Hare, 281; 15 L. J., Ch. 336; 10 Jur. 751.

To impeach a settlement for fraud, there must be a creditor to complain of it, and he must be enabled to sue, by having obtained judgment at law for his debt, and must state that he is defrauded by it. Colman v. Croker, 1 Ves. 161.

—— Onus of Proof.]—In 1842 A. executed a voluntary bond, payable after his death, and, in 850, he made a voluntary settlement in favour of other parties. His assets proved insufficient to pay the bond:—Held, that there was not sufficient ground for holding that the deed was fraudulent as against the bond creditors, and that the onus of proving the deed to be fraudulent attached to the obligees of the bond. Dening v. Ware, 22 Beav. 184.

—— Inquiry.]—A creditor has a right to impeach a fraudulent conveyance of the estate of his debtor, and, though it be alleged that sufficient remains to pay his debt, he shall not be delayed by an inquiry to that effect. Chamley v. Dunsany (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 714.

—— Interpleader—Withdrawal from Suit.]—A. seized B.'s furniture under a fi. fa., and disputed the validity of a voluntary settlement of the furniture, notice of which was served on the sheriff by the trustees. The sheriff accordingly filed a bill of interpleader. A. and B. were partners in business; and the partnership having been dissolved, A. elected to take B.'s share at a valuation, and continued in possession of B.'s share from the date of the dissolution, which was subsequent to the seizure but prior to the institution of the interpleader's suit. The value of B.'s share was afterwards found to exceed, by a very large amount, the sum in respect of which the fi. fa. had been issued:—Held, that under these circumstances A. ought to have withdrawn from the suit, and could not be allowed to show that the settlement was invalid. White v. Witt, 24 W. R. 727.

—— Bill to set aside Voluntary Settlement—Staying Suit — Costs.]—After a bill filed on behalf of creditors to set aside as fraudulent and void a voluntary settlement by their debtor, and a composition signed by the creditors in ignorance of such prior voluntary settlement, the debtor was adjudicated bankrupt, and an order was made by the court of bankruptcy, setting aside the voluntary settlement. The plaintiffs, whose claim to prove under the bankruptcy had been admitted notwithstanding the opposition of the trustees of the settlement, wrote to them proposing to dismiss the bill without costs as against them, and that plaintiff's costs should come out of the estate. The trustees declined this proposal, but offered to consent to an order staying all proceedings in the suit without costs, or dismissing the bill without costs:—Held, that upon the bankruptcy of the debtor the trustee in bankruptcy should have applied to the court to have stopped the suit, which, though rightly instituted in the first instance, could no longer be prosecuted with benefit to the creditors, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the costs of suit up to the date of their letter to the trustees of the settlement, out of the estate realised in bankruptcy, and the trustee in bankrupty to the costs only of realising the estate. Tanqueray v. Bowles, L. R. 14 Eq. 151.

Held, also, that the trustees of the settlement, by their refusal of plaintiffs' offer having compelled them to bring the suit to a hearing, must pay all plaintiffs' costs incurred since the date of that offer. Ib.

3. Consideration.

a. General Principles.

Generally.]—Construction of deed and impeachment of, as voluntary as against creditors. Myers v. Leinster (Duke), 7 Ir. Eq. R. 146.

Discussion of the doctrine of fraudulent deeds as against creditors under the 13 Eliz. c. 5. Jenkyn v. Vaughan, 3 Drew. 419; 25 L. J., Ch. 338; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 109; 4 W. R. 214.

If a settlement be made by a person who, if he had not made the settlement, would have had property upon which his creditors might immediately fasten and pay themselves, but which by the settlement is withdrawn, that is, primâ facie, "delaying his creditors" within the meaning of the 13 Eliz. c. 5. French v. French, 6 De G. M. & G. 95; 25 L. J., Ch. 612; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 169; 4 W. R. 139.

If the creditors are delayed by a voluntary settlement, the case is within the 13 Eliz. c. 5, even though the settlor may have debts owing to him, or other contingent or reversionary interests, which, if realised or fallen in, would be sufficient to meet all claims upon him. Ib.

Conveyance without Delivery.]—Conveyance fraudulent, if without delivery of possession, though part was a real consideration. Bennet v. Musgrove, 2 Ves. 51.

Retaining Possession.]—Making gift of goods, and retaining possession of them, evidence of fraud upon creditors, and they may pursue them into hands of executor. Anon., Cary, 18.

A. having received moneys belonging to B., privately, and without any communication with B., prepared and executed a mortgage to him for the amount. A. retained the deed in his custody for twelve years, and then died insolvent. After his death the deed was discovered in a chest containing his title deeds:—Held, that the deed was good against A.'s creditors. Exton v. Scott, 6 Sim. 31.

A. executes to B. a bill of sale, dated the 11th of May, 1822, by which, in consideration of 350*l.*, he grants all his goods, chattels, and effects to B.; and in it there are a clause stating that symbolical possession had been delivered, and a proviso, that the instrument shall be void, if A. pays the 350*l.* to B. on or before the 29th of September following: A. remains in the visible possession of the property till his death on the 30th of September:—Held, that the bill of sale was void as against the creditors of A. —— v. Cramphorne, 3 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 223. Affirmed, 6 id. 91.

Subsequent Creditors.]—A voluntary settlement, by which a settlor gives to the trustees of his property an absolute discretion to apply it in the maintenance and support of himself, his wife, and children, or any of them, in such manner as they shall think fit, is not fraudulent against subsequent creditors. A fortiori, such a settlement is valid if for valuable consideration. Holmes v. Penney, 3 K. & J. 90; 26 L. J., Ch. 179; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 80; 5 W. R. 132.

Intention to Defraud.]—A settlement, for valuable consideration, made with the intention of defrauding creditors, is void under the 13 Eliz. c. 5. Holmes v. Penney, 3 K. & J. 90; 26 L. J., Ch. 179; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 80; 5 W. R. 132.

The mere fact of a settlement being voluntary is not sufficient to render it void against creditors. Ib.

To make void a voluntary conveyance it must clearly appear to have been executed for the purpose of defrauding creditors. Wrixon v. Cotter, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 305.

To render a deed void as against creditors, it is not sufficient that it is merely voluntary, but it must be proved that the party making it intended to delay, hinder, or defraud his creditors. Thompson v. Webster, 28 L. J., Ch. 700; 7 W. R. 648—L.JJ. Affirming 5 Jur. (N.S.) 668.

In order to make void a deed as fraudulent against creditors, it is not necessary to prove that the party was insolvent at the time, if it appear that the intention was to delay creditors. Richardson v. Smallwood, Jacob, 552.

—— Notice, Effect of.]—The grantee of a deed made to defeat creditors is not liable to penalties under the statute 10 Car. 1 sess. 2, c. 3 (I) (13 Eliz. c. 5, Eng.), although he have notice of the grantor's intention to defeat creditors, if the conveyance is taken bonâ fide, for a good consideration, and is intended absolutely to pass the estate. Lynch v. Copinger (14 W. R. 863), Wood v. Dixie (7 Q. B. 892), commented on. Moroney, In re, 21 L. R. Ir. 27—C. A.

Intention to defeat Particular Creditor.]—It is a fraud, within 10 Chas. 1 (Ir.) sess. 2, c. 3, s. 10, for a debtor without consideration, and with intent to defraud or delay a particular creditor, to part with any portion of his property. Wood v. Dixie (7 Q. B. 892) explained and distinguished. [10 Chas. 1 (Ir.) sess. 2, c. 3, s. 10, is equivalent to 13 Eliz. c. 5.] Ib.

Evidence of Consideration.]—To support a deed, voluntary on the face of it, against creditors, the proof of a valuable consideration must be clear and free from suspicion. Graham v. O'Keefe, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 1.

Surrounding Circumstances.]—On the question of a voluntary deed being void under the 13 Eliz. c. 5, all the surrounding circumstances must be looked at, and each particular case must depend upon those circumstances. Thompson v. Webster, 28½ L. J., Ch. 700; 7 W. R. 648—L.JJ. Affirming 5 Jur. (N.S.) 668.

Evidence of surrounding circumstances on which the court held a settlement, that standing alone would have been fraudulent against creditors, to be connected with and part of the same transaction with several purchase deeds of even date, to which some only of the same persons were parties. Harman v. Richards, 10 Hare, 81; 22 L. J., Ch. 1066.

b. Prior Voluntary Deed.

Generally.]—A person gave a bond for 5,000*l.* to his sister, but failing to pay the interest due on that bond, gave her another bond to secure the arrears of interest. He afterwards deposited with his sister the title deeds of his real estates "as a collateral security for the bond debts." Subsequently, in contemplation of the marriage of the sister, the two bonds were, with the consent and privity of the obligor, settled upon trusts for the benefit of the intended husband and wife, no reference, however, being made in the settlement to the deposit of title deeds. The marriage took effect, and about four years after the obligor became bankrupt:—Held, that, assuming the consideration for the first bond to have been voluntary, yet there being no fraud suggested against any party, or insolvency proved against the obligor, the settlement was a valuable security, and that by virtue of the bonds, the instrument of deposit, and the settlement, the trustee of the settlement was equitable mortgagee of the real estate for the moneys due on the bonds. Meggison v. Foster, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 336; 12 L. J., Ch. 415; 7 Jur. 546.

Surrender of.]—Voluntary deed, though void against creditors, being valid as between the parties, its surrender is a consideration that will sustain a substituted bond against creditors, unless with a fraudulent design, as by an insolvent to substitute a valid for an invalid security against creditors. Berry, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 218.

c. Good Consideration.

Generally.]—Agreement for a mortgagee, a specific lien against creditors. Burn v. Burn, 3 Ves. 582.

A purchase of an estate of tenant for life, who was outlawed and absconded, set aside in favour of creditors, the purchase being made at an under-value, and pending the prosecution at law against him, and with notice thereof. Herne v. Meeres, 1 Vern. 465.

Deed and will executed on the same day; the deed held a testamentary act; and, as voluntary, void against the creditors under the 13 Eliz., though services were alleged as a consideration. Peacock v. Monk, 1 Ves. 127.

A devisee of certain estates in trust to sell for payment of debts assigned to B., who wasted the property; B. was devisee in fee of other estates, under the same will, and conveyed part of them to A., to secure a debt due by him from the devisor; the specialty creditors shall take not subject to A.'s incumbrance, as the whole is a fraud on the creditors. Hardwick v. Mynd, 1 Anst. 113; 3 R. R. 562.

Purchase for valuable consideration (the adequacy of price being disputed), by nephew from uncle, who (unknown to nephew) was insolvent, and died soon after the purchase:—Held, not impeachable by uncle's creditors. Copis v. Middleton, 2 Madd. 410; 17 R. R. 226.

A deed of settlement, in form voluntary, but appearing from intrinsic evidence to have been made for valuable consideration, supported against creditors. Pott v. Todhunter, 2 Coll. 76; 9 Jur. 589.

Where a bond shall be deemed voluntary and fraudulent against creditors. Loeffes v. Lewen, Pre. Ch. 370; Gilb. Eq. R. 32.

—— What is Sufficient.]—If one aliens land for good consideration, though at the time merely on an agreement to pay money, this is a good conveyance against creditors and purchasers. Parslowe v. Weedon, 1 Eq. Abr. 149.

Semble, advances made by a parent to a child, which formed a debt, but had ceased by lapse of time to be a legal obligation, are yet a sufficient consideration to support a deed by way of family arrangement, but not against creditor. Penhall v. Elwin, 1 Sm. & G. 258.

A son, taking beneficially under his father's will, promises to pay his sisters' portions; this is a good consideration for a bond. Blount v. Doughty, 3 Atk. 484.

So a promise under age may be a consideration for a promise when of age. Ib.

—— Who are Within the Consideration.]—The wife joins the husband in letting in an incumbrance on her jointure lands, and barring the estate tail, and then limits the uses to the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to their daughters: the daughters are not purchasers, so as to shut out a judgment creditor of the husband's antecedent to the barring of the estate tail; but the limitations to them are voluntary unless the consideration of the wife's parting with her jointure extended also to the limitations to the daughter. Ball v. Burnford, Pre. Ch. 113.

—— Nature of Consideration.]—Where the court sees a consideration is made up with a view to defraud creditors, they will reduce it to what is equitable; but they will not determine bonds to be voluntary, if fairly entered into, merely because they do not exactly tally with the sum given for them. Blount v. Blount, 3 Atk. 481.

—— Extent.]—Consideration for a settlement being found to exist, it was held to extend to the whole, and not to a part only of the property which was the subject of it. Harman v. Richards, 10 Hare, 81; 22 L. J., Ch. 1066.

—— Effect and Intention to Defeat Creditors.]—A deed may be void as against creditors, though full consideration is given for it, if it be in such a form as to defeat the creditors, and be executed with that intention. Bott v. Smith, 21 Beav. 511.

A deed, though made for valuable consideration, may be affected by mala fides. Harman v. Richards, 10 Hare, 81; 22 L. J., Ch. 1066.

—— Money Entrusted for Investment.]—E. placed in the hands of her solicitor a sum of money for investment. He died insolvent without investing the money, and after his death there was found in the safe at his office a memorandum dated a fortnight before his death, the contents of which had not been communicated to E. By this memorandum, the solicitor declared himself trustee of certain leaseholds then in mortgage to himself, and of a bill of exchange, which he had indorsed to E., to secure the repayment of the sum placed in his hands. In a creditor's suit for the administration of the solicitor's estate:—Held, that, even if the solicitor executed the memorandum with the knowledge of his insolvency, still E. was entitled to the benefit of the security as against the other creditors; for, as the solicitor retained no benefit for himself, the gift was bonâ fide within 13 Eliz. c. 5. Middleton v. Pollock, 45 L. J., Ch. 293; 2 Ch. D. 104.

—— Family Arrangement.] — Complicated family arrangements between a father, who afterwards became insolvent, and his son, were refused to be set aside in favour of the father's creditors, so far as they secured an annuity to the father's wife in case she survived him; it not being shown that any available property of the father was thereby dedicated to the purchase of the annuity, and it appearing that by certain benefits which had accrued to the father at the expense of the son, the latter had acquired a right to stipulate as creditor for all the provisions of the deeds of arrangement. Wakefield v. Gibbon, 26 L. J., Ch. 505; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 363; 5 W. R. 479.

A., having purchased a freehold estate and paid part of the purchase-money, died intestate, leaving two daughters, his co-heiresses, and next of kin. After his decease, on payment of the remainder of the purchase-money by the two daughters and their husbands, the estate was conveyed to the two daughters as tenants in common. By an arrangement between the two daughters and their husbands, the freehold estate and certain personal property were agreed to be taken by B., the husband of one of the daughters (by whom the remainder of the purchase-money for the estate was recited to have been paid), as his share of the property, and a fine was covenanted to be levied to the use of B. in fee. The fine was neglected to be levied, but B. remained in possession till his death, acting as absolute owner of the estate. Shortly before his death, and seventeen years after the covenant to levy the fine, a deed was executed and fine levied, by which the estate was settled to the use of B. and his wife for their lives successively, with remainder to their children. A bill by the creditors of B. to set aside this settlement as voluntary and fraudulent within the statute of 13 Eliz. c. 5, was dismissed. Houghton v. Tate, 3 Y. & J. 486.

Where a father, by deed, assigned to his son, in consideration of natural love and affection, his dwelling-house and all his personal estate:—Held, in an action by the son against the sheriff, for levying on goods, part of such estate, under a fi. fa. against the father, that it was competent to the son to prove, that, by a bond, bearing even date with the deed of assignment, he bound himself to maintain his father's wife and children; and that, the jury having found that it was a part of the same transaction, and that the assignment was bonâ fide, it was not void against creditors under 13 Eliz. c. 5. Gale v. Williamson, 8 M. & W. 405 ; 10 L. J., Ex. 446.

Where a person, owing 102*l.* on a bond, wrote to the obligee that he and his wife were bound down by pecuniary embarrassments, and that the obligee's proceeding to extremities would render the debtor's wife after his death perfectly destitute, and a month afterwards, for a nominal sum of 10*s.*, and in consideration of natural love and affection, assigned a lease (of the value of 206*l.*) to A. in trust for his own benefit for life, and after his death for that of one of his daughters-in-law ; and he soon afterwards died, having by will made the assignee of his lease his executor ; by which assignment of the lease the residue of his property became insufficient to discharge the bond debt :—Held, that the assignment was within 13 Eliz. c. 5, and utterly void against creditors, and that the lease was assets in the hands of the executor. Shears v. Rogers, 3 B. & Ad. 363 ; 1 L. J., K. B. 89.

By a deed of gift, J. granted farming property n trust for her daughters, in consideration of which they covenanted to pay the debts "incurred by J. up to the date of the deed in connection with the working arrangements of the farm," and to maintain J. J. had no other property than that comprised in the deed, and the plaintiff's debt not having been incurred by J. in connection with the farm, was defeated by the deed. The court found that the deed was an honestly intended family arrangement, and was not executed with the object of defeating creditors :—Held, that the deed was valid under stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5. Golden v. Gillam, Johnson, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 503—C. A. Affirming 51 L. J., Ch. 154 ; 20 Ch. D. 389 ; 46 L. T. 222.

—— Setting Aside—General Principles.]—The question for the court is whether it can or ought to infer an intent to defraud creditors in the parties to the deed. The word parties is used, because it is plain that, whatever fraudulent intent there may have been in the mind of party A., it would not avoid the deed unless it was known to have been concurred in by party B. Ib.

—— Bond.]—A claim for arrears accrued under a voluntary bond :—Held, a valuable consideration against creditors. Gilham v. Locke, 9 Ves. 612.

Where a father having provided amply for his son, requested him to give his sisters 1,000*l.* each on marriage, and the son gave them his bonds accordingly. The son died indebted. Per curiam, it would be dangerous to determine such bonds voluntary, or that the consideration should be commensurate to the value of the estate ; where there is no fraud, they should be held as made for a valuable consideration. Blount v. Blount, 3 Atk. 481.

The owner of an embarrassed estate executed a bond and warrant of attorney to confess judgment thereon to his sister, with the intention of having judgment for a large sum entered in her name, and proceedings taken so as to secure to himself a portion of the rents of his estate, and protect them from creditors, who were proceeding to get into possession. A judgment was afterwards entered by the attorney of the obligor, the latter retaining the bond in his possession. No further proceedings were taken on the judgment, as the creditors succeeded in extending the portion of the property sought to be protected from their demands. The judgment was assigned, and the assignee proceeded at law against the conusor. A bill having been filed by the obligor, and an injunction for want of answer having been obtained ; on a motion after answer to continue it :—Held, that, although the attempt was ineffectual, the transaction was such a fraudulent contrivance to delay creditors as to prevent the court from interfering, and any further injunction was refused. Entering judgment on a bond puts the security wholly out of the control of the obligor. Bateman v. Ramsay, Sau. & Sc. 459.

Bond entered into with East India Company—Subsequent trust of Portion.]—A. agrees with the E. I. Company to go as president to Bengal, and enters into a bond of 2,000*l.* penalty for performance of articles ; but, before he set out, he made a settlement of his estate, and among other things he declared the trust of a term of 1,000 years to be for the raising of 5,000*l.* as a portion for his daughter, who afterwards married J., a gentleman of 700*l.* per annum, who before the marriage was advised by counsel that the portion was sufficiently secured, and who, afterwards, on her death, had, on her request, expended 400*l.* on her funeral, but never made any settlement on her : after A. embezzles the goods and stock of the company to a considerable value ; yet they cannot break through the provision, so as to make it voluntary and fraudulent as to them. East India Co. v. Clavell, Pre. Ch. 377.

Husband and Wife.]—Deed of separation conveying estate to wife, in consideration of indemnity against wife's debts, held good against creditors. Worrall v. Jacob, 3 Mer. 256. S. P., Stephens v. Olive, 2 Bro. C. C. 90.

A husband having lived in a state of adultery, a separation took place between him and his wife, and upon that occasion the husband settled real estates, to the amount of 300*l.* per annum, on the wife, for her separate maintenance, and on the children of the marriage ; under these circumstances the settlement is not fraudulent as against creditors, under the stat. of 13 Eliz. Hobbs v. Hull, 1 Cox, 445.

A. and his wife, joint tenants in fee, conveyed an estate by fine to a mortgagee, with a proviso for redemption, and reconveyance to A. and his wife, or unto such person or persons as they, or the survivor of them, should appoint. The mortgage having been paid off, A. and his wife appointed, and the mortgagee conveyed the estate, by way of settlement, to B., from whom no consideration passed. After the death of his wife A. sold the estate. On a bill filed by the purchaser to set aside the conveyance to B. as voluntary :—Held, that the conveyance was not voluntary ; that there was a manifest intention to create the power contained in the proviso ; and that, the wife having exercised it and thereby parted with her interest for the settlement, that was quite sufficient to prevent the deed from being voluntary within the meaning of the 13 Eliz. c. 5. Atkinson v. Smith, 28 L. J., Ch. 2 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1160 ; 7 W. R. 42—L.JJ.

—— Wife giving up Equity to a Settlement.]—H. was married to his wife in 1864, and she subsequently became entitled to certain moneys under the wills of her father and grandfather. These moneys she lent to her husband for the purposes of his business, upon the terms that he would execute a settlement of the moneys upon her, which was done. Upon the bankruptcy of H. a proof was tendered upon the settlement and rejected on the ground that this deed was voluntary within the terms of the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5. :—Held, that the settlement was not covinous or fraudulent within the 13 Eliz. c. 5, and that there had been a good consideration by reason of the fact that the wife had waived her equity to a settlement. Semble, that the transaction was upheld on the ground of bona fides, and that, if the court had found that the intention of the parties had been that the settlement should make the husband absolute owner, and at the same time secure the moneys to the wife, it would have declared the settlement void as a fraud on the bankruptcy law. Home, In re, Home, Ex parte, 54 L. T. 301.

—— Wife joining to Mortgage her Freeholds and Leaseholds.]—A settlement made on the wife by the husband, in consideration of her joining in a mortgage of her freehold and leasehold property, the money so raised being applied in payment of the husband's debts, and the settlement being made with the intervention of third parties on behalf of the wife—not considered fraudulent. Carter v. Hind, 2 W. R. 27.

Purchase by Father of Son's Reversionary Interest for full Consideration.]—By an indenture dated the 14th May, 1880, after reciting that A. had contracted with B., his son, for the absolute sale to him of B.'s reversionary interests in certain property, amounting to about 18,000*l.*, for the sum of 2,500*l.* cash, and an annuity of 300*l.*, and also reciting that, in consideration of natural love and affection, A. had agreed to settle the reversions in manner thereinafter expressed, it was witnessed that, in pursuance of the agreement, an annuity of 300*l.* was settled by A. upon B., until he should become bankrupt or attempt to alienate the same, with trusts in either of such events in favour of B.'s wife and children, if any. For these considerations B., by the same deed, assigned to trustees all his said reversionary interest, which was resettled by A. upon B. and his wife and children, in a similar manner to the annuity of 300*l.* The consideration money of 2,500*l.* for the payment of B.'s debts proved insufficient for that purpose, and upon the application of a creditor, whose debt was unprovided for, B. was adjudicated a bankrupt. The trustee in bankruptcy having applied to the county court, the deed was declared void under the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5 :—Held, that, the transaction being a purchase by the father of his son's reversionary interest for full consideration, it was reasonable and lawful that the father should prescribe the terms when consenting to resettle it upon the son, and that the deed having been entered into on good faith, and for valuable consideration, was not impeachable under the statute of Elizabeth or the Bankruptcy Act. Eyre, Ex parte and In re, 44 L. T. 922.

Call on Testator's Shares—Assignment in consideration of Covenant to Indemnify.]—The administratrix, with the will annexed, who was also residuary legatee of a testator, whose estate comprised shares not fully paid up in a company, after receiving notice of a call assigned all the estate except the shares to a friend in consideration of covenants to indemnify and provide for her :—Held, that the assignment was void as against the company, and that they were entitled to payment of the call out of the estate. Troughton, In re, Rent and General Collecting and Estate Management Society v. Troughton, 13 R. 140 ; 71 L. T. 427.

Bill of Sale for Past Debt and Future Advances.]—A bill of sale of all the grantor's then existing and after-acquired property, by way of mortgage to secure an existing debt and future advances, is not necessarily void under 13 Eliz. c. 5. It will only be void if not made bonâ fide, i.e. if it is a mere cloak for retaining a benefit to the grantor. Games, Ex parte, Bamford, In re, 12 Ch. D. 314 ; 40 L. T. 789 ; 27 W. R. 744.

Conveyance for Creditors.]—Debtors in insolvent circumstances conveyed by deed all their estate to trustees on trust to sell in such manner as they might think proper, and to divide the residue of the proceeds after paying expenses ratably among the creditors parties to the deed, and, if the trustees thought fit, creditors who refused or neglected to execute, and, if the trustees thought proper but not otherwise, to pay the dividends on debts due to non-assenting creditors to the debtors. The deed provided for the payment of maintenance to the debtors if the trustees thought fit, and the executing creditors respectively indemnified the debtors and the trustees in respect of the bills of exchange and promissory notes made or indorsed to them respectively by the debtors in respect of the scheduled debts :—Held, that the deed was not void under 13 Eliz. c. 5. Spencer v. Slater (4 Q. B. D. 13) distinguished. Boldero v. London and Westminster Discount Co., 5 Ex. D. 47 ; 42 L. T. 56 ; 28 W. R. 154.

A debtor in insolvent circumstances executed a deed by which he conveyed all his estate to trustees on trust to carry on his business, or get in and realise his estate in the manner they might deem expedient, and to apportion the residue of the proceeds after payment of expenses, &c., according to an equal pound rate among his creditors. It was provided by the deed that a dividend should only be payable to a creditor on his executing or assenting to the deed ; and that, if within a certain time any creditor did not execute or assent, his dividend should be paid by the trustees to the debtor. The deed also provided that the executing and assenting creditors should indemnify the trustees against any personal loss or risk they might sustain, otherwise than by their own wilful negligence or default, by reason of their proceedings under the deed :—Held, that the deed was fraudulent and void under 13 Eliz. c. 5, as tending to defeat or delay creditors. Spencer v. Slater, 48 L. J., Q. B. 204 ; 4 Q. B. D. 13 ; 39 L. T. 424 ; 27 W. R. 134.

Assignment for Creditors.]—A trader insured his stock-in-trade and other effects. These were destroyed by fire. He assigned the policies to trustees on trust, to pay and divide the moneys raised thereunder among all his creditors rateably, and to pay the balance (if any) to himself :—Held, that the assignment was not void under 13 Eliz. c. 5, at the suit of a creditor whose debt was under 50*l.* Green v. Brand, 1 Cab. & E. 410.

The appellant by deed agreed to purchase G.'s business, and further agreed on having assigned to him all the other assets of G. to pay to such of G.'s creditors as would accept it a composition of 10*s.* in the pound on their debts. No further assignment was executed, and G. subsequently became bankrupt:—Held, that the deed was not void, as being given with the intention of defrauding, hindering, or delaying creditors within 13 Eliz. c. 5. Dollar, Ex parte, Gillo, In re, 8 Morrell, 157.

Where A. assigned all his effects at W. to trustees, for the benefit of certain creditors for four years; and the trustees were empowered to sell at the expiration of two years, or sooner, if A. should direct, and apply the proceeds of the sale in discharge of the debts of such creditors; who covenanted that A. might continue at home or abroad, and that they would not molest him for two years from the date of the deed:—Held, that such assignment was valid, and not within 13 Eliz. c. 5; and that the property was protected against a judgment creditor, who sued out execution against A. after the deed was executed. Goss v. Neale, 5 Moore, 19.

Conveyance in Trust to pay Debts, with Remainder for Wife and Children.]—Where a debtor conveyed all his real estate upon trust to sell and pay off his debts, and as to any ultimate surplus to pay the same to trustees to be held by them in trust for the separate use of his wife for life, and after her decease in trust for their children in equal shares as tenants in common:—Held, in a suit by a subsequent purchaser for value (at a sale in execution) of the grantor's interest in some lands comprised in the conveyance, that the deed of conveyance was not void as intended to delay or defeat creditors; and that, not being fraudulent in fact, it was not fraudulent in law and void against creditors under 13 Eliz. c. 5, no intention to delay or defeat creditors being shown. Godfrey v. Poole, 57 L. J., P. C. 78; 13 App. Cas. 497; 58 L. T. 685; 37 W. R. 357.

Assignment for Creditors—Creation of Relation of Trustee and Cestui que trust.]—A. executed bonâ fide a deed of assignment of all his property to B., in trust for such of A.'s creditors as should come in and execute the deed. B. (who was not a creditor of A.) took possession. C., a creditor of A., applied to B. for an explanation, and having received one said he was satisfied, and took no step to obtain payment:—Held, that enough had taken place to create the relation of trustee and cestui que trust between B. and C., and consequently that the deed was not void against an execution creditor as being voluntary. Harland v. Binks, 15 Q. B. 713; 20 L. J., Q. B. 126; 14 Jur. 979.

—— Allowing Employment of Insolvent by Trustee.]—An assignment by a debtor of all his estate and effects to a trustee, upon trust for sale for the benefit of creditors, contained a proviso enabling the trustee to employ the debtor, or any other person, in winding up the affairs of the debtor, and in collecting and getting in his estate and effects, and in carrying on his trade, if thought expedient by the trustee, and to allow the person so employed, out of the trust estate, such sum as the trustee should deem proper:—Held, that the carrying on the trade being only ancillary to winding up the affairs of the debtor, the deed was not void. Janes v. Whitbread, 11 C. B. 406; 20 L. J., C. P. 217; 15 Jur. 612.

But it must appear from the instrument that the main object of the parties to it was to wind up the debtor's business for the benefit of the creditors, and not to carry on the business with a view to future profits. Coate v. Williams, 7 Ex. 205; 21 L. J., Ex. 116.

Mortgage in Favour of Creditors in Anticipation of Writ.]—A person being indebted to five persons, as well as many others, and being aware that a writ of execution was about to be executed by one of the other creditors, executed a mortgage, substantially comprising the whole of his property, in favour of the five creditors. Under the mortgage deed the debtor was to remain in possession until default should be made in payment of the five debts at the expiration of six months, or until execution should be issued against his property:—Held, that the deed was not void within 13 Eliz. c. 5. Alton v. Harrison, 38 L. J., Ch. 669; L. R. 4 Ch. 622; 21 L. T. 282; 17 W. R. 1034.

It makes no difference as regards the 13 Eliz. c. 5, whether or not a deed executed in circumstances such as the above comprises all the property of the debtor. Ib.

Assignment for benefit of Creditors in Anticipation of Fieri Facias—Question for Jury.]—If a person, expecting a fieri facias will be sued out against him, makes an assignment of his goods to trustees for the benefit of his creditors, and the goods are afterwards taken under the writ, and trover for them is brought against the sheriff by the assignees, it will be a question for the jury under all the circumstances, whether the deed was fraudulent or not, that is, whether it was bonâ fide meant to convey the goods to the trustees for the benefit of the creditors generally, or whether it was a pretext only, and the goods were, notwithstanding the deed, really to belong to the assignor; and this is a question of fact, and not a question of law. Riches v. Evans, 9 Car. & P. 640.

Confessing Judgment to one, after Judgment and Execution sued by another, Creditor.]—If A. being indebted to B. and C., after being sued to judgment and execution by B., goes to C., and voluntarily gives him a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, on which judgment was immediately entered and execution levied the same day on which B. would have been entitled to execution, and had threatened to sue it out, the preference so given by A. to C. is not unlawful nor fraudulent within 13 Eliz. c. 5. Holbird v. Anderson, 5 Term Rep. 235.

Confessing Judgment to one, after Distress by another, Creditor.]—After a creditor had distrained for rent the goods of his debtor, who was also under engagement with the creditor's agent for the sale of his goods, for the purpose of discharging the rent, and also certain book-debts due to such creditor and his agent, the debtor confessed judgment to the defendant, another creditor, for a large nominal sum, with a defeasance that execution should only issue for such an amount as would cover the debt of the defendant and all the other creditors, amongst whom a ratable distribution was to be made:—Held, that such judgment confessed, being in fact made bonâ fide, and upon good consideration, was not covinous or fraudulent within 13 Eliz. c. 5, although its effect might be to delay or hinder such first-mentioned creditor from recovering the whole amount of his demands. Meux v. Howell, 4 East, 1.

Infirmity of Debtor—Knowledge of Assignee.]—A distribution by a debtor, when in a weak state of mind and of body, of the whole of his property among his children, partly in consideration of annuities for his life, partly by voluntary settlement, and partly by pecuniary gifts, is void as against creditors under 13 Eliz. c. 5, the children being aware at the time that the creditors' claims would be defeated, though the debtor had no such intention. Cornish v. Clark, 42 L. J., Ch. 14; L. R. 14 Eq. 184; 26 L. T. 494; 20 W. R. 897.

Assignment by Judgment Debtor of Stock-in-Trade.]—An assignment by a judgment debtor to his father-in-law of his stock-in-trade, as security for the purchase-money of the business, and for money advanced to pay debts, supported. Sladden v. Sergeant, 1 F. & F. 322.

Transfer by Judgment Debtor of Farm Stock—Rent.]—A transfer by a judgment debtor of the stock on his farm, the price being paid to third parties for rent, is valid. Bunyard v. Seabrook, 1 F. & F. 321.

Sale for good Consideration.]—A sale of property for good consideration is not, either at common law or under 13 Eliz. c. 5, fraudulent and void, merely because it is made with the intention to defeat an expected execution of a judgment creditor. Wood v. Dixie, 7 Q. B. 892; 9 Jur. 796.

Bill of Sale—For Money Lent.]—A bill of sale by way of mortgage of personal chattels, if executed as a security for money actually lent, is not fraudulent and void within 13 Eliz. c. 5, though its object is to defeat an expected execution of a judgment creditor. Darvill v. Terry, 6 H. & N. 807; 30 L. J., Ex. 355.

—— To Creditor.]—A bill of sale of goods executed by a debtor to his creditor is not void by reason of preference given over other creditors. If intended by the parties really to operate, and to give the creditor the power of taking possession, it is good, although not acted on by taking possession. Eveleigh v. Purssord, 2 M. & Rob. 539.

Interpleader—Transfer by Debtor to Claimant—Intention to Operate.]—On an interpleader issue, there being strong evidence that the claimant had been privy to a scheme to defeat and defraud the execution creditor, not only after, but before the judgment; and that, in pursuance of this scheme, he had taken a transfer of the property of the debtor, his partner:—Held, nevertheless, that, though if it was merely meant as a trick and a device by way of a pretended transfer, it was invalid; yet, if as between the parties it was intended to take effect, then, whatever its object, it was valid. Luff v. Horner, 3 F. & F. 480.

Trader.]—A trader, by a voluntary settlement, settled all his property, present and future (reserving to himself a control over the settled property), upon his wife, for her separate use for life, with remainder to himself for life, with remainder to his children. Five years afterwards he became bankrupt. In a suit by his assignees to set aside the settlement, although some evidence was adduced to prove that the trader was in solvent circumstances at the date of the execution of the settlement:—Held, that it was void as against his creditors, under 13 Eliz. c. 5. Ware v. Gardner, 38 L. J., Ch. 348; L. R. 7 Eq. 317; 20 L. T. 79; 17 W. R. 439.

Seventeen months before his bankruptcy, a trader assigned by deed all his estate and effects by way of security for the repayment of a sum due, and a further advance of a moderate amount:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the deed was not void under 13 Eliz. c. 5, or as an act of bankruptcy. Allen v. Bonnett, L. R. 5 Ch. 577; 23 L. T. 437.

Semble, also, that even if there had not been a further advance, the lapse of twelve months before the bankruptcy prevented the deed from being invalidated as an act of bankruptcy. Ib.

A trader, being in insolvent circumstances, assigned his business and stock-in-trade, part of the consideration consisting of two annuities, one payable to himself for life, the other payable to his wife during her life, in case she survived him. The trader died, having appointed his wife executrix. Upon a creditor's suit being instituted, it was decided that the annuity to the wife was void as against creditors; and afterwards, in an administration suit:—Held, that the annuity was legal, and not equitable, assets in the hands of the wife. Hue v. French, 26 L. J., Ch. 317; 5 W. R. 386.

A trader in embarrassed circumstances, possessed of freehold property subject to a mortgage, sold the same on the 17th of March to his brother, in consideration of the money paid to the mortgagee, and in consideration of a further sum then due from the vendor to the purchaser, the conveyance stating the whole consideration as money paid at the time. The purchaser, on the 15th of April, mortgaged the property to a third party. On the 11th of September the trader became bankrupt. On a bill filed by his assignees to set aside the sale, on the ground of fraudulent preference with a view to defeat the creditors, and against the mortgagee, on the ground of notice to the mortgagee of the state of embarrassment of the vendor at the time of the sale, the court considered that the question as to the validity of the sale was more than strong enough for further inquiry, and directed an issue to try whether the deed of the 17th of March was fraudulent; but, as to the mortgagee, that the plaintiff had failed in making any case against him. Follett v. Wesley, 10 Jur. 327.

A., a trader, being in difficulties, and having five executions against him, all his goods were conveyed to the defendant by bill of sale from the sheriff, with an understanding that they should remain on A.'s premises, to enable him to repurchase them. The jury having found that the object of the transaction was not merely to relieve A. from a forced sale of his goods, but also to protect them from the demands of other creditors:—Held, that the transaction was void under 13 Eliz. c. 5, s. 1. Graham v. Furber, 14 C. B. 410; 2 C. L. R. 10, 452; 23 L. J., C. P. 51; 18 Jur. 226; 2 W. R. 163.

S., a retail trader, being in difficulties, by deeds, dated July, 1882, assigned to C., wholesale manufacturers, to whom he was indebted, all his stock-in-trade, effects, &c., together with the premises on which the business was carried on—such assignment comprising substantially the whole of his property; and by an agreement of the same date S. agreed to carry on the business in his own name as servant of C., and he continued to carry it on as the apparent owner, although really acting under the directions of C., until March, 1883, when he was adjudicated a bankrupt. The assignment was expressed to be made in consideration of a debt of 3,271*l.* then due from S. to C., which C. thereby released. There was a contemporaneous verbal agreement between S. and C. that C. should undertake the payment of S.'s other creditors, but whether all or only his trade creditors did not appear. At the date of the assignment the only debt due from S. to C. was 1,370*l.*, but all S.'s debts, so far as they could be ascertained, amounted to 3,271*l.* C., either immediately before or after the execution of the assignment, paid out some executions for S., and also some arrears of rent due from him to his landlord, and subsequently made advances and supplied goods for the purposes of the business. C., however, notwithstanding the verbal agreement, did not pay or give any security to a creditor of S. who was pressing him, but induced S. himself to give a promissory note in his own name for his debt :—Held, that the deed was clearly void under the statute of Elizabeth. Chaplin, Ex parte, Sinclair, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 732 ; 26 Ch. D. 319 ; 51 L. T. 345—C. A. See also Godfrey v. Poole, ante, col. 309.

Indebtedness.]—In a settlement, executed by a person in embarrassed circumstances, being in part merely meritorious, but untruly recited as valuable, where the operation of the deed was to withdraw property from the creditors of the settlor, the court declared the deed invalid as against creditors, and set it aside. Penhall v. Elwin, 1 Sm. & G. 258.

A solicitor, in straitened circumstances, assigned the goodwill of his business, his credits, and all chattels, in his office, in consideration of a sum of cash and of an annuity secured by bond, and payable to his wife for life, and, after her decease, to him for life, with option to each of them, when in possession, to accept a sum down in lieu and discharge of the annuity :—Held, that this settlement of the annuity was void as against creditors. Neale v. Day, 28 L. J., Ch. 45 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1225 ; 7 W. R. 45.

An insolvent debtor, within a month of his death, and while suffering from illness, from which there was no probability of his recovering, assigned policies of insurance on his own life for 800*l.* in consideration of the release of a debt of 174*l.* In a creditors' suit for the administration of his estate, the assignment was held to be voluntary and void under 13 Eliz. c. 5. The assignment was ordered to stand as a security for the debt due at the time of the assignment. Stokoe v. Cowan, 29 Beav. 637 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 901 ; 4 L. T. 695 ; 9 W. R. 801.

A person being indebted to five persons, as well as many others, and being aware that a writ of execution was about to be executed by one of the other creditors, executed a mortgage, substantially comprising the whole of his property, in favour of the five creditors. Under the mortgage deed the debtor was to remain in possession until default should be made in payment of the five debts at the expiration of six months, or until execution should be issued against his property :—Held, that the deed was not void within 13 Eliz. c. 5. Alton v. Harrison, 38 L. J., Ch. 669 ; L. R. 4 Ch. 622 ; 21 L. T. 282 ; 17 W. R. 1034.

It makes no difference as regards the 13 Eliz. c. 5, whether or not a deed executed in circumstances such as the above comprises all the property of the debtor. Ib.

C. being indebted, but not to the extent of insolvency, applied to his mother for a loan, who consented to make an advance to him upon the terms of his making a settlement of property to which he was entitled upon himself for life, and, after his death, upon his children. A mortgage deed was accordingly prepared and executed for securing the loan made to C. by his mother, and contemporaneously with such mortgage a settlement of the property in mortgage to C.'s mother was also executed by C. ; but neither the mortgage nor the settlement contained any reference to the other of them. C. became insolvent, and afterwards died. Subsequently to his death, his assignee in insolvency instituted a suit for the purpose of setting aside the settlement :—Held, that the settlement was not void under 13 Eliz. c. 5. Thompson v. Webster, 7 Jur. (N.S.) 531 ; 4 L. T. 750 ; 9 W. R. 641—H. L. Affirming 4 De G. & J. 600 ; 28 L. J., Ch. 700.

—— Liability for Breach of Trust.]—A., being liable to the plaintiffs for a breach of trust, conveyed his property to his son, in consideration of a life annuity of 60*l.* The consideration for the conveyance was greatly inadequate. The father was in a dangerous state of health, and died seven days after, leaving no property. The conveyance was set aside as fraudulent, for the benefit not only of the plaintiffs, but of all the other creditors of A. Strong v. Strong, 18 Beav. 408.

—— Executor.]—An executor indebted to his testator's estate creates a charge on his (the executor's) own freehold estate in favour of his wife and children, to the amount specified in the testator's will, as part of their share of his residuary estate :—Held, that the wife and children were entitled to the benefit of the charge, although the debt due to the testator's estate remained unpaid. Stilwell v. Mellersh, 20 L. J., Ch. 356.

Practice.]—A. seized B.'s furniture under a fi. fa., and disputed the validity of a voluntary settlement of the furniture, notice of which was served on the sheriff by the trustees. The sheriff accordingly filed a bill of interpleader. A. and B. were partners in business ; and, the partnership having been dissolved, A. elected to take B.'s share at a valuation, and continued in possession of B.'s share from the date of the dissolution, which was subsequent to the seizure but prior to the institution of the interpleader suit. The value of B.'s share was afterwards found to exceed, by a very large amount, the sum in respect of which the fi. fa. had been issued :—Held, that under these circumstances A. ought to have withdrawn from the suit, and could not be allowed to show that the settlement was invalid. White v. Witt, 24 W. R. 727.

—— Sale by Sheriff.]—Where goods seized under a fi. fa. founded on a judgment fraudulent against creditors remain in the sheriff's hands, or are capable of being seized by him, he is compellable, under 13 Eliz. c. 5, to sell or seize such goods under a subsequent writ, founded on a bonâ fide writ ; and if he neglects to do so, having notice of the fraud at the time that he ought to have executed the writ, or if he could then have discovered it by reasonable inquiry, he is responsible for neglecting to seize and sell them; nor is it necessary, in order to render the judgment void quoad the sheriff on the ground of fraud, that he himself should have been a party to it; and the fact that the sheriff himself assigned the goods, under the prior execution, to a bonâ fide purchaser, innocently and in ignorance of the fraud, does not excuse him from such liability. Christopherson v. Burton, 3 Ex. 160; 18 L. J., Ex. 60.

d. Settlement on Marriage.

General Principles.]—Although a woman may know that a man is in embarrassed circumstances and that her marrying him at the time may be of service to him and preserve his property, if nevertheless her object in marrying him is not solely for the purpose of preserving his property, but for the ordinary reasons which lead men and women to take that position with regard to each other, an ante-nuptial settlement executed by the husband will not be void. But where the marriage is not an honest marriage, and is entered into solely for the purpose of attempting to make a settlement valid which otherwise would be void, and where, but for a desire to defraud the creditors, no marriage between the two parties would have taken place, the ante-nuptial settlement will be set aside. Thus where a man executed an ante-nuptial settlement and married a woman with whom he had had an immoral intimacy, and the evidence showed that such marriage was entered into solely with intent to defraud his creditors, the wife being implicated in the transaction:—Held, that the settlement was fraudulent and void as against the creditors. Cooper, Ex parte, Pennington, In re, 59 L. T. 774; 5 Morrell, 216. Affirmed, 5 Morrell, 268—C. A.

Generally.]—Unless the court finds that the ceremony of marriage has been resorted to as a pretence and cloak for fraud, and finds clear evidence that it is a fraudulent marriage, there is no case in which a settlement executed in consideration of marriage has been set aside on the ground of insolvency or embarrassed circumstances, or as being a fraud against creditors. Fraser v. Thompson, 1 Giff. 49; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 669; 7 W. R. 607.

—— Chattels.]—The consideration of marriage will support a settlement even of movable effects, and neither the joint possession of furniture nor the want of an inventory, nor the fact that the settlor was indebted at the time, and that his wife knew it, will affect the settlement. Campion v. Cotton, 17 Ves. 271.

—— Solvency of Debtor.]—The debtor shortly before his marriage executed an agreement by which, after reciting his intended marriage, he conveyed and assigned to the claimant, as trustee, all the personal chattels and effects he then possessed upon certain trusts for the benefit of his wife. At the time of his marriage the debtor had sufficient money to pay his creditors in full, but shortly afterwards judgment was recovered against him, and his furniture was seized:—Held, that the expression "personal chattels and effects" used in the agreement included the furniture of the debtor, and that, as the debtor was solvent at the time of executing the agreement, and had no intention of defrauding his creditors, the agreement was not void as a fraud upon his creditors. Wenman v. Lyon, 64 L. T. 88; 39 W. R. 301. See S. C., in C. A., 60 L. J., Q. B. 663; [1892] 2 Q. B. 192; 65 L. T. 136; 39 W. R. 519.

Appointment, under power to charge, valid against General Creditors.]—A., on the marriage of his son B., settled, among other estates, one of which he had been, but was not then, in possession, and as to which he was then engaged in litigation, and to which he was ultimately declared not to be entitled: by the settlement, he covenanted generally with F., the lady's father, for title to all the lands, and he and B. entered into, with the trustees, covenants for title and quiet possession, notwithstanding any acts done by A. or B.; by the settlement it was provided, that if A. should purchase the head rents and inheritance of any of the settled estate which were held for lives, that his purchase should be subject to the trusts of the settlement, but that he should have power to charge with the purchase money the estate so purchased; A. did so purchase, and charged the estate with the purchase money in favour of his daughter D., without consideration:—Held, that this appointment was as valid against general creditors as the settlement of any other part of his property would have been, and would, therefore, prevail against them, unless A. had been indebted to the extent of insolvency at the time; and that the parties claiming under the settlement, in respect of the breach of the covenants therein contained, were general creditors. Martyn v. Macnamara, 2 Con. & L. 541; Dr. & War. 411.

Settlement by Heir, valid against Ancestor's Specialty Creditors.]—Settlement by the heir, upon his marriage, of the ancestor's estates supported against the claims of the specialty creditors of such ancestor. Sir W. H. died indebted in specialty. After his death, on the marriage of his heiress, a settlement was executed whereby (after reciting the insufficiency of the personal estate to pay the debts, and that a considerable sum was due on that account) a part of the estates was conveyed to provide a fund to pay the debts, and the remainder was settled on the heiress, her intended husband, and their issue. Many years after, the produce of the estates appropriated to the payment of the debts was found insufficient:—Held, that the circumstances did not afford any proof of fraud, or any want of bona fides in the execution of the settlement; that the settled estates were not liable to the specialty debts; and that, even if a want of bona fides had appeared, relief could only be obtained in a suit putting the mala fides properly in issue. Richardson v. Horton, 7 Beav. 112; 13 L. J., Ch. 186; 7 Jur. 1144.

Surrender and Settlement of Copyhold.]—A. surrenders the reversion in fee of copyhold lands to his son, to lessen the fine he must have paid in case it had come to him by descent; after the son's treaty of marriage, the father tells the wife's friends that this copyhold was so settled; in consideration of which, and of some leasehold lands, a marriage was had, and 2,000*l.* portion paid:—Held, this surrender of the copyhold not to be voluntary or fraudulent. Kirk v. Clarke, Pre. Ch. 276.

On Second Marriage.]—Husband on second marriage contracts to pay money in trust for the wife for life, and afterwards for the issue of that marriage and a son by a former wife; his creditors cannot come upon this against the son, as being a voluntary disposition as to him. Ithell v. Beane, 1 Ves. 216; Dick. 132.

A widow, before marriage with A., her second husband, conveys her estate to trustees, in order to make settlement upon the issue of her first marriage. Afterwards A. and his wife mortgaged the settled estates to persons who had notice of the settlement. Here it was declared that the settlement is no voluntary agreement, but a binding one; and no instance where such a limitation has been held fraudulent and void against subsequent purchasers or creditors; for if it should, no widow on her subsequent marriage could make any certain provision for the issue of a former. Newstead v. Searles, 1 Atk. 265; Cotton v. King, 2 P. Wms. 358, 374.

Voluntary Settlement in case of ever Marrying.]—Where a party, whilst unmarried, made a voluntary settlement, upon trust, in case of her ever marrying, for her husband and children, and she afterwards became insolvent, the court dismissed a bill by the assignee to have the fund transferred. Kirk v. Cureton, C. P. Cooper, 191.

Voluntary Bond to Wife's Father.]—A voluntary bond, though given as a provision which a man may consider it his duty to make, shall, as against creditors, be deemed fraudulent and void; as where A., intending to marry B., gave her father a bond for 500*l*., payable on a day certain, with an agreement that it should not be sued, but remain as a security in case of misfortune, to be paid before other creditors. Wise's Case, Sel. Ch. Cas. 46.

Family Arrangement.]—On the treaty of marriage between A. and B., the father and mother of B., in consideration of the settlement to be made by A., join in conveying a small estate (out of which the mother was dowable) to A. in fee (but no fine was levied); and they also joined in settling another estate, of which the father was seised in fee, on the father for life, remainder to the mother for life, remainder to the uses of the marriage. At the time of the settlement the father was indebted by specialty. This being a fair and reasonable family settlement, and not made with any view to defeat creditors, the limitation to the mother for life is not fraudulent as against creditors, within the stat. 13 Eliz., more especially as she had joined in conveying the small estate in fee to the husband. Jones v. Boulter, 1 Cox, 288.

Of Wife's Property.]—Limitation of wife's property until the bankruptcy of her husband, or a lease determinable on the bankruptcy of the lessee, good. Higginbotham v. Holme, 19 Ves. 88.

—— By Bond.]—Settlement on marriage of wife's fortune in case of bankruptcy of the husband, though in form of bond by him; but as his bond, affecting his property, it is void as against the creditors. Hodgson, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 206; 12 R. R. 171.

—— False Recitals.]—Settlement sustained by the consideration of marriage against creditors, notwithstanding false recitals that the property was the wife's, protecting also voluntary expenditure by the husband after the marriage, in improvement by building and enfranchising copyholds, but not jewels and furniture purchased by him after the marriage and given to her. Campion v. Cotton, 17 Ves. 264.

C., who carried on the business of a flax spinner at the Shepley mills in partnership with R., by a settlement made in contemplation of his marriage, after reciting that he was indebted to his intended wife in 20,000*l*., covenanted to pay the 20,000*l*. to the trustees of the settlement, upon trust that as soon as he should become owner in fee simple of the Shepley mills estate, which he had agreed to purchase, they should advance the 20,000*l*. to him on the security of the same estate; and it was declared that the trustees should stand possessed of the 20,000*l*. and the securities for the same upon trust to pay the income to his intended wife for life for her separate use, and after her death to C. during his life or until he should become bankrupt, with remainder in trust for the children of the marriage, and in default of children for his wife absolutely. The recital that C. was indebted to his intended wife was entirely false, and C. was at the time of the marriage in insolvent circumstances; but the wife had no knowledge of the insolvency of her husband, and understood nothing about the recitals or the arrangement as to the 20,000*l*., except that that sum was to be settled. C. subsequently purchased the Shepley mills estate, and mortgaged it to the trustees of the settlement for securing 20,000*l*., but no money actually passed between the parties. C., and also his firm, afterwards became bankrupt, and a bill was filed by the trustee in C.'s bankruptcy against C. and his wife, the trustees of the settlement, and the trustee in the bankruptcy of the firm, praying that the settlement and the mortgage might be set aside as fraudulent against the creditors; and that the rights of all parties might be declared:—Held, that, notwithstanding the falsity of the recitals, the settlement and the mortgage deed were valid against the creditors so far as concerned the interests of the wife and the children. Kevan v. Crawford, 46 L. J., Ch. 729; 6 Ch. D. 29; 37 L. T. 322; 25 W. R. 49.

Trader.]—A trader cannot on marriage secure a provision out of his property for his wife in the event of bankruptcy in prejudice to his creditors. But marriage settlement of a trader securing a provision in case of bankruptcy for the wife, good to the extent of her property. Higginson v. Kelly, 1 Ball & B. 252, 255; 12 R. R. 28.

A trader, on his marriage, received a fortune of 5,000*l*. with his wife, and settled a sum of stock in trust for himself for life, with limitations over for the benefit of his wife and children in the event of his becoming bankrupt or insolvent; and it was provided that if he should survive his wife, and the issue of the marriage should fail, and he should then be or should have been a bankrupt, fifteen sixty-sixths of the stock should belong to the wife's next of kin in blood. No part of the 5,000*l*. was settled, but the whole of the settled fund was the husband's property, and it did not appear from any of the expressions in the settlement what was the consideration for the provision as to the fifteen sixty-sixths of the stock:—Held, that the limitations over in the event of the bankruptcy of the husband were good as to fifteen sixty-sixths of the trust fund, that being the proportion of the trust fund which the wife's fortune would have purchased, but were void as to the remainder. Lester v. Garland, 5 Sim. 205.

In an ante-nuptial settlement, conferring considerable benefits upon the husband in the property of the wife, to which it chiefly related, which settlement contained a recital that it was made by the wife in consideration of the marriage, and of the provision thereinafter made and provided for her by the husband, he covenanted that whatever estates and property, whether real and personal, and wherever situate, or either or both, should, in the event of his decease, if the wife should survive him, be charged and chargeable with and subject to the payment of an annuity or yearly rent-charge of 250*l.*, to be paid and payable to her and her assigns during so many years as she should live, besides and in addition to the provision thereby made and intended for her, with the exception of a contingent reversionary interest in a policy of assurance for 3,000*l.* on the life of the husband, which policy was subject to a debt of 2,000*l.* and interest thereon at 4 per cent. There was not any provision made out of his property for her beside the annuity of 250*l.* At the period of the marriage he was engaged in trade, and was seised of real estate. Subsequently he acquired other real estate, and afterwards became a bankrupt: —Held, that the annuity of 250*l.* was well charged both upon the real estate of which he was seised at the marriage, and upon the real estate which he subsequently acquired. White v. Anderson, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 419.

—— Covenant to Settle.]—Under a will the testator's widow had a power to appoint among her children, and in default of appointment the property was to be held in trust for all the children equally. One of the children, being then a trader within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, executed an ante-nuptial settlement whereby he covenanted to settle his share whether appointed or not. His mother appointed the property equally amongst A. and the other children. He subsequently became bankrupt:—Held, that his covenant was not void under s. 91 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Andrews, In re, 7 Ch. D. 635; 38 L. T. 137; 26 W. R. 572.

Cohabitation.]—A. makes a bill of sale of his goods to a trustee for one who lived with him as his wife, and so reputed. Bill of sale set aside as fraudulent against creditors. Fletcher v. Sidley, 2 Vern. 490.

Voluntary bond, though given under a strong moral obligation (as a marriage contracted and property received as husband by a man having a wife living at the time) is void against creditors. Gilham v. Locke, 9 Ves. 612.

—— Past.]—Where a man executed an ante-nuptial settlement, and married a woman with whom he had previously cohabited, with intent to defraud his creditors, the wife being implicated in the transaction:—Held, that the settlement was fraudulent, and void as against creditors. Bulmer v. Hunter, 38 L. J., Ch. 543; L. R. 8 Eq. 46; 20 L. T. 942.

A man in insolvent circumstances, upon his marriage with a woman with whom he had previously cohabited, by a deed of settlement and articles of agreement executed prior to the marriage, conveyed and assigned all his estate to trustees upon trust for his wife, with a power of appointment among the children of the marriage, reserving no interest to himself; immediately after the marriage the power was exercised in favour of an illegitimate daughter. The property remained under the control of the husband till his bankruptcy, two months after the marriage: —Held, that the settlement was void. Colombine v. Penhall, 1 Sm. & G. 228.

Evidence.]—To avoid an ante-nuptial marriage settlement as a fraud upon creditors it must be shown that both husband and wife were parties to the fraud. Parnell v. Stedman, 1 Cab. & E. 153.

e. Settlement after Articles or Agreement.

Variation from Articles.]—A settlement made after marriage on the wife and children, pursuant to articles entered into previous to the marriage, though not exactly agreeing with them, not voluntary nor fraudulent against bond creditors. Brunsden v. Stratton, Pre. Ch. 520.

In excess of Articles.] — By marriage articles, reciting the lady's fortune to be 1,000*l.*, the husband agreed to settle 4,000*l.*, secured by his bond and judgment, with a proviso that it should be void if he should afterwards settle lands to the value of 100*l.* a year. He did subsequently settle lands to a value considerably beyond 100*l.* a year. The lady's friends had given her an additional sum of 1,000*l.* On a bill filed under the former Bankrupt Act (in pari materiâ with the Statute of Fraudulent Conveyances):—Held, that the settlement could not be impeached as voluntary as to the excess beyond 100*l.* a year. Maguire v. Nicholson, Beat. 592.

Parol Promise.]—A parol promise before marriage will not support a deed executed after marriage, as against creditors. L'Estrange v. Robinson, 1 Hog. 202.

—— Wife's Property.] — Settlement after marriage of the wife's property, reciting a parol agreement before marriage for such settlement; the creditors of the husband cannot set aside such settlement. Dundas v. Dutens, 2 Cox, 235; 1 Ves. J. 196; 1 R. R. 112. S. P., Stuckey, Ex parte, 2 Cox, 284.

A husband executed a post-nuptial settlement of railway stock, the property of the wife, in pursuance of a parol ante-nuptial agreement. The wife had been induced by the husband to marry before the execution of the settlement, on the representation that the settlement would be as good after as before marriage. The husband was insolvent at the time of the marriage, although he had assured the wife and her family that he was solvent. On a bill filed by a creditor to set aside the settlement:—Held, that the subsequent execution of the settlement was not such a part performance of the parol agreement as would avoid the Statute of Frauds, and that the settlement was void, as against creditors, under 13 Eliz. c. 5. Warden v. Jones, 2 De G. & J. 76; 27 L. J., Ch. 190; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 269; 6 W. R. 180.

Evidence.]—It seems that a recital in a settlement after marriage is not evidence, against creditors, of articles before marriage. Battersbee v. Farrington, 1 Swanst. 106; 1 Wils. Ch. 88; 18 R. R. 32.

f. Post-nuptial Settlements.

Generally.]—A settlement after marriage is good when husband was not indebted at the time, and the wife, when married, an infant. Middlecomb v. Marlow, 2 Atk. 579.

Settlement after marriage voluntary and void against creditors. Beaumont v. Thorpe, 1 Ves. 27.

A settlement made in consideration of marriage is good against everybody if made before marriage; if made after, is voluntary against creditors. Wheeler v. Caryl, Amb. 121.

A. conveyed part of his lands in trust to pay his debts, and other part to maintain his children. This last conveyance is voluntary, and void as against creditors, though good against A. himself. Sneed v. Cullpepper, 7 Vin. Abr. 52 pl. 7.

Every conveyance that is voluntary, is fraudulent against creditors; and, though a man is bound by law to maintain his wife and children, yet the funds out of which the maintenance is to arise are liable to creditors. Fitzer v. Fitzer, 2 Atk. 511.

A husband may make a settlement on his wife when he is solvent, and pecuniarily in a condition to make such a gift, if it is not unreasonable in amount, and if after making it he still has abundant assets to pay those debts which he owed at that time. Sedgwick v. Place, 5 Bankr. Reg. 168; 25 L. T. 307.

A voluntary settlement without fraud by a husband, not indebted, in favour of his wife and children is valid against subsequent creditors. On a bill by the wife, the court established the settlement, no creditor attempting to impeach it, and there being no allegation that the husband was indebted at the time, without directing an inquiry on that subject. Battersbee v. Farrington, 1 Swanst. 106; 1 Wils. Ch. 88; 18 R. R. 32.

Stock was bequeathed to A. after his marriage, which he vested in trustees for the benefit of himself and wife for life, and then to their children. This settlement is void as against the husband's creditors, both before and after the marriage. Taylor v. Jones, 2 Atk. 600.

Such a settlement good as against a father after marriage, and against a voluntary conveyance. Ib.

—— Wife's Property.]—A trust created by the husband of the wife's estate, not being deemed fraudulent against creditors, or a subsequent purchaser, equity will not carry it further, though voluntary conveyances are generally held fraudulent against purchasers. White v. Sansam, 3 Atk. 410.

A husband who had made no provision for his wife, agrees that her fortune, which was in trustees' hands, should be laid out in a purchase of lands: this agreement, though after marriage, not to be considered as voluntary, so as to be set aside in favour of a creditor of the husband. Moore v. Rycault, Pre. Ch. 22.

Bill to impeach a post-nuptial settlement, whereby the husband, who was indebted to the plaintiffs and other persons, conveyed and assigned real estate and funds in court accruing in right of his wife, upon trust to pay a part to the husband, and as to the rest, upon trust for her children, was dismissed with costs. Turnley v. Hooper, 3 Sm. & G. 349.

A person, who was in loco parentis to a married woman, devised to her a rent-charge for her life, and bequeathed certain personal property to her for her separate use. The will being inoperative both as to the real and personal estate, the heir-at-law and next of kin of the testator made a partial sacrifice of their interests in order to carry the testator's intentions into effect, the property given up by them being invested in the funds, and afterwards settled upon the woman and her children. At the time of the investment, the husband of the woman was insolvent in his circumstances, and about three months after the date of the settlement he became bankrupt:—Held, that the settlement was for valuable consideration, and was good against husband's creditors. Pott v. Todhunter, 2 Coll. C. C. 76; 9 Jur. 589.

—— Equity to a Settlement.]—Previously to a contemplated marriage the intended husband and wife went to a solicitor to have a settlement prepared of some railway stock, of which the intended wife was the registered proprietor, but which was subject to a mortgage, and the certificates of which were in the hands of the mortgagee. The solicitor not being able to prepare the settlement before the time fixed for the marriage, the husband told the wife that it would be equally good if made afterwards, and no settlement or agreement for a settlement was made in writing before the marriage. Shortly after the marriage a settlement was executed, whereby the husband covenanted to invest part of the proceeds of the stock upon trust, for the benefit of his wife and children. He sold the stock, paid off the mortgage, and invested the stipulated amount according to his covenant:—Held, that the settlement was voluntary, fraudulent, and therefore void as against creditors, and that the wife had no equity to settlement. Warden v. Jones, 2 De G. & J. 76; 27 L. J., Ch. 190; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 269; 6 W. R. 180.

By Person not Indebted.]—A settlement after marriage by a person not indebted is not within the Statute of Fraudulent Conveyances. Stephens v. Olive, 2 Bro. C. C. 90.

Subsequent Creditors.]—A post-nuptial settlement executed when the assignor was perfectly solvent is not invalid as against subsequent creditors. Gugen v. Sampson, 4 F. & F. 974.

Existing Creditors.]—Settlement after marriage, fraudulent only as against creditors at that time. Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Ves. 136; 2 R. R. 118.

Purchase by Wife from Husband.]—Purchase by wife from husband, through the medium of trustees, for her separate use and appointment, may be sustained against creditors, if bonâ fide, though the husband is indebted at the time, and even though the object is to preserve from his creditors, for the family, the subject of the purchase. Arundell (Lady) v. Phipps, 10 Ves. 139.

In Bar of Dower.]—Where settlement was made on wife after marriage, in bar of dower, &c., and, by wife's waiving it, lands would go to heir to prejudice of creditors, she was decreed to have the estate for life according to settlement, but that she should assign it over in trust for creditors, who should convey to her a third for dower. Miller v. Eden, 10 Mod. 487.

In Consideration of Portion.]—Settlement after marriage, in consideration of portion given to wife, is good against husband's creditors. Russell v. Hammond, 1 Atk. 13. S. P., Anon., Pre. Ch. 101; Jones v. Marsh, Ca. t. Talb. 64; Brown v. Jones, 1 Atk. 190; Lanoy v. Athol, 2 Atk. 444; Ward v. Shallet, 2 Ves. 16; Wheeler v. Caryl, Amb. 121.

A settlement made in 1694, in consideration of a portion then paid, though after marriage, cannot be impeached by subsequent creditors. Stileman v. Ashdown, 2 Atk. 477; Amb. 13.

Of Property Purchased under Prior Settlement.]—A settlement of property purchased by money raised by a wife joining with her husband in appointing property settled on the husband in fee, subject to a joint power reserved to the husband and wife, is not voluntary. Acraman v. Corbett, 1 J. & H. 410: 30 L. J., Ch. 642; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 624; 4 L. T. 203; 9 W. R. 409.

For Spendthrift Settlor's own Protection.]—A post-nuptial settlement for value by a solvent spendthrift is not fraudulent under 13 Eliz. c. 5, as defeating and delaying creditors, because the object is to tie up the settled property for the benefit of the settlor and his wife and children, and so prevent its being squandered by any future extravagance of the settlor. Tetley, In re, Jeffery, Ex parte, 66 L. J., Q. B. 111; 75 L. T. 166; 3 Manson, 226.—Affirmed in C. A. on the facts.

Marriage in Scotland.]—A settlement after a marriage in Scotland, not supported against creditors in bankruptcy, as upon valuable consideration, by a recelebration of the marriage in England, but it was sustained as the consideration of an agreement to settle by the parent of the other party. Hall, Ex parte, 1 Ves. & B. 112; 1 Rose, 30.

Practice—Evidence.]—To impeach a settlement after marriage, under the statute 13 Eliz. the husband must be proved to have been indebted at the time, and to the extent of insolvency. The creditor not producing any evidence, his bill was dismissed, with liberty to file another. Lush v. Wilkinson, 5 Ves. 384.

g. Leaseholds.

Generally.]—When a lease is held at a full or substantial rent, and contains onerous covenants on the part of the lessee, an assignment (free from actual fraud) to an assignee, who subjects himself to the performance of the covenants, is not voluntary. Greer, In re, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 502.

In 1872 R. R. gave to the W. bank a guarantee to secure the balance due from his son R. H. R. on his banking account to the extent of 1,000*l.* On the 25th of May, 1877, R. H. R.'s account was overdrawn by 1,515*l.* On that day R. R. made a voluntary settlement of a leasehold property worth 200*l.* a year, which he held at a rent of 3*l.* 10*s.* His only other property was furniture worth less than 200*l.*, and a debt of 1,500*l.* due to him from R. H. R. In 1880 R. H. R., whose account was then overdrawn by 1,313*l.*, went into liquidation and paid a dividend of 3*s.* in the pound. There was some general evidence that R. H. R. was solvent at the date of the settlement. R. R. having died, the bank took proceedings to set aside the settlement and to have the leasehold treated as assets of R. R. in a suit for administration of his estate in which the bank had been admitted creditors for 1,000*l.* on the guarantee:—Held, by the court of appeal, that the settlement was not a settlement for value within the meaning of 13 Eliz. c. 5, the doctrine of Price v. Jenkins (5 Ch. D. 619) not being applicable to cases under that statute. Ridler v. Ridler, Ridler, In re, 52 L. J., Ch. 343; 22 Ch. D. 74; 48 L. T. 396; 31 W. R. 93—C. A.

Held also, that the settlement was invalid as against creditors, for that under the circumstances the liability under the guarantee ought to have been regarded as a substantial one: that R. R. had no right to treat the 1,500*l.* due from R. H. R. as a good debt; that the settlement must therefore be looked upon as a settlement of all his property, leaving him nothing out of which he could meet his liability under the guarantee, and that an intention to defeat or delay creditors must be inferred. Ib.

—— Bankruptcy Act, 1869.]—A settlement of leasehold property, to which liability is attached, is of necessity a settlement for valuable consideration, and cannot therefore be avoided as a voluntary settlement under s. 91 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, even though no other consideration be given. Doble, Ex parte and In re, 38 L. T. 183; 26 W. R. 407.

See also II. B. 3. d. post, col. 357.

4. Indebtedness.

a. At Date of Conveyance.

Generally.]—A person being indebted at the time of making a voluntary conveyance is an argument of fraud. Grogan v. Cooke, 2 Ball & B. 234.

In order to make void a deed as fraudulent against creditors, it is not necessary to prove that the party was insolvent at the time, if it appear that the intention was to delay creditors. Richardson v. Smallwood, Jacob, 553.

Assignments by a person much in debt of policies of insurance effected by him on his life to relatives to whom he was indebted, not fraudulent as against his other creditors. Grogan v. Cooke, 2 Ball & B. 230.

The solvency or insolvency of the debtor affords no certain test whether a deed is void under stat. 10, Car. 1, c. 6, s. 10 (13 Eliz. c. 5, Eng.), but each case must be judged by its own circumstances. Clements v. Eccles, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 229.

If the settlor was at the time of a voluntary settlement not necessarily insolvent, but so largely indebted as to induce the court to believe that the intention of the settlement was to defraud his creditors, and some of those debts are still unpaid, the settlement may be set aside. Holmes v. Penney, 3 K. & J. 90; 26 L. J., Ch. 179; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 80; 5 W. R. 132.

In order to set aside a voluntary settlement as fraudulent against creditors, it is not necessary to prove an actual intention to delay creditors present to the mind of the settlor at the time. If the necessary consequence of the settlement is to hinder or delay creditors, the intention will be presumed. Freeman v. Pope, 39 L. J., Ch.

In the absence of an actual intent to defeat, delay, or hinder creditors, a voluntary settlement, made by a settlor in embarrassed circumstances, but having property not included in the settlement ample for payment of the debts owing by him at the time of making it, may be supported against creditors, although debts due at the date of the settlement may to a considerable amount remain unpaid. Kent v. Riley, 41 L. J., Ch. 569; L. R. 14 Eq. 190; 27 L. T. 263; 20 W. R. 852.

Under the 13 Eliz. c. 5, the question is one of fact whether the transaction was bonâ fide or a contrivance to defraud creditors. A deed is void as against creditors when the debtor is in a state of insolvency, or when the effect of the deed is to leave the debtor without the means of paying his present debts. If this is the condition of the debtor, or the consequence of his act, it is not sufficient to render a deed valid, that it should be made upon good consideration. Corbett v. Radcliffe, 14 Moore, P. C. 121; 4 L. T. 1.

If the debt of a creditor, by whom a voluntary settlement is impeached under 13 Eliz. c. 5, existed at the date of the settlement, and it is shown that the remedy of the creditor is defeated or delayed by the existence of the settlement, it is not necessary for him to show insolvency on the part of the debtor at the date of or occasioned by the settlement. Spirett v. Willows, 3 De G. J. & S. 293; 34 L. J., Ch. 365; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 70; 12 L. T. 614; 13 W. R. 329.

A settlement was set aside as against creditors generally in a suit instituted by a person who had recovered judgment against the settlor in an action commenced after the date of the settlement for a tort committed before it. Crossley v. Elworthy, 40 L. J., Ch. 480; L. R. 12 Eq. 158; 24 L. T. 607; 19 W. R. 842.

A. made a voluntary assignment of a sum of money, being, at the time, indebted to B., on balance of running account. A. afterwards made payments to B., exceeding in amount the balance due at the date of the assignment; but the balance continually increased. The assignment was set aside at the suit of B. Whittington v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 493: 3 L. J., Ch. 157.

A party largely indebted makes a voluntary settlement, and becomes insolvent within three years:—Held, sufficient to avoid the settlement under 13 Eliz. c. 5; and held also, that in order to set it aside, it was not necessary to prove that the settlor was in a state amounting to insolvency. Townsend v. Westacott, 2 Beav. 240; 4 id. 58; 9 L. J., Ch. 241; 4 Jur. 187.

A settlement executed by a man in a state of insolvency, his wife, who gave up nothing, joining therein, and by which a power of revocation, in case any children should be born after the date of its execution, was reserved:—Held, fraudulent and void as against creditors. Acraman v. Corbett, 1 J. & H. 410; 30 L. J., Ch. 642; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 624; 4 L. T. 203; 9 W. R. 409.

E. placed a sum of money in the hands of her solicitor for investment. He died insolvent without investing the money, and after his death a declaration of trust was found among his papers, addressed to E., by which he declared himself trustee of some leasehold property whereof he was mortgagee, and of a bill indorsed by himself to E., to secure the repayment of this sum:—Held, as between E. and the general creditors of the solicitor's estate, that the transaction was bonâ fide within 13 Eliz. c. 5. Middleton v. Pollock, Elliott, Ex parte, 45 L. J., Ch. 293; 2 Ch. D. 104.

A person being in debt to the extent of 300*l.*, and having some other debts, applied to his mother for advances to pay the debts other than the 300*l.* She, not knowing of the debt of 300*l.*, refused, unless he would make a settlement of his property on his wife and children. Ultimately, he acceded and did so, reserving to himself a life interest, with about 1,700*l.*, and he afterwards died insolvent, not having paid the 300*l.*:—Held, that the settlement was not, under the circumstances, made with intent to defraud creditors, and was good against the assignees of the insolvent. Thompson v. Webster, 4 Drew. 628; 28 L. J., Ch. 700; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 668; 7 W. R. 596. See S. C., 7 W. R. 648—L.JJ.

A., having previously borrowed 1,000*l.* of B., executed to him a bond for that sum, and B., two days afterwards, executes a deed, whereby he covenants that the bond shall not be enforced. Some years afterwards B., having become bankrupt, his assignees bring an action on the bond, and file a bill to have the deed of covenant declared fraudulent:—Held, that the court will not interfere against the legal operation of the deed, there being nothing to show that B. was insolvent when he executed it, and there being evidence that A. had also at that time pecuniary claims on B., and that the execution of the bond was accompanied by an agreement that payment of it should not be enforced. Slack v. Tolson, 1 Russ. 553.

A debtor, being possessed of a policy of assurance on his life for 500*l.*, in October, 1837, assigned the policy and sum assured to one of his creditors as a security for 100*l.*, with a declaration constituting the creditor, after securing his own debt, a trustee for M. At this time the debtor was indebted to other persons, and continued so indebted to some of them up to the time of his death, and died intestate and insolvent in December, 1837. The assignee of the policy received the 500*l.*, and, after retaining the amount due to himself, paid the balance into court under the Trustee Relief Act, 1850:—Held, that the trust in favour of M. was void as against the creditors of the debtor at the time, and who continued so up to the debtor's death: but that, subject thereto, it was a good declaration of trust in favour of M. Magawley's Trust, In re, 5 De G. & Sm. 1; 15 Jur. 1005.

Bill by creditors against the representative of a settlor (deceased), and against a volunteer assignee of two policies of insurance on the life of the settlor, alleging that at the date of the assignment the settlor was in insolvent circumstances, and that his assets were now insufficient to pay his creditors, and praying to have the assignment set aside. All that appeared in evidence was that the testator was, at the date of the assignment, indebted to one of the plaintiffs in a sum of 200*l.*, which debt still was due:—Held, that the mere fact of the settlor having been indebted at the date of the settlement was not sufficient to vitiate it as fraudulent, under the statute of Elizabeth; but, on the other hand, that it was not necessary to prove that the settlor was in a state of insolvency at that time. Reference to the master to inquire what debts were owing by the settlor at the date of the settlement and at his death, and what was the amount of the settlor's property, at the date of the settlement, not included in the settlement. Skarff v. Soulby, 1 Mac. & G. 364; 1 Hall & Tw. 426; 19 L. J., Ch. 30; 13 Jur. 1109.

—— Administration.]—In the administration of the estate of a deceased person, a security given by him to a particular creditor will not be set aside on the ground of preference, if the object was payment, although the deceased person was at the time of giving the security insolvent to his own knowledge. Middleton v. Pollock, Elliott, Ex parte, 45 L. J., Ch. 293; 2 Ch. D. 104.

—— Extent of Application of Act.]—Stat. 10, Car. 1, c. 6, s. 10 (13 Eliz. c. 5, Eng), avoids only deeds which would deprive creditors of such property as they could make available without their debtor's aid, and does not apply to the case of a tenant in tail opening his estate and re-settling it on himself for life, remainder over. Clements v. Eccles, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 229.

Consideration, moving from whom.]—A. being entitled to a life interest in the dividends of 9,000*l.* consols, and being largely indebted, his brother agreed to pay all debts not charged on A.'s life interest, upon condition that such life interest should be settled so as to be applicable for the maintenance of A., his wife, and children, or any of them, at the absolute discretion of the trustees. This transaction having been carried into effect:—Held, that such settlement was valid against subsequent creditors, and also against a person who was a creditor of A. at the time of the settlement, and whose debt was concealed by A. from his brother, and was the only one not paid by him. Holmes v. Penney, 3 K. & J. 90; 26 L. J., Ch. 179; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 80; 5 W. R. 132.

The bonâ fides to be established in order to support such a transaction is bonâ fides in the party from whom the consideration moves. Ib.

—— Secret Trust.]—During the negotiation which preceded this arrangement, the solicitor of A.'s brother wrote to A.: "The only object of your brother is to save your life interest, in case anything happens to you, and, to effect this, he was willing to pay your debts." And again he wrote to A.'s solicitor: "The income will of course be paid to A. as long as this can safely be done; but our conveyancer states, that it will be quite impossible to give A. any interest, however slight, without such interest passing to creditors in the case of bankruptcy or insolvency":—Held, that these letters did not amount to a secret trust for A.'s benefit, and that, therefore, they could not affect the validity of the settlement. Ib.

—— Apportionment.]—The discretion of the trustees being absolute:—Held, that the court could not apportion the income between A., his wife, and children, so as to make A.'s part of it available for his creditors. Ib.

—— Right to Sue.]—The settlor having subsequently become insolvent:—Held, that the assignee in insolvency might institute a suit to impeach the deed. Ib.

Post Nuptial Settlement.]—Settlement after marriage, fraudulent only as against creditors at that time. Kidney v. Coussmaker, 12 Ves. 136; 2 R. R. 118.

Settlement after marriage is good against creditors, when husband was not indebted at the time, and wife when married an infant. Middlecomb v. Marlow, 2 Atk. 519.

A settlement after marriage, by a person not indebted, is not within the statute of fraudulent conveyances. Stephens v. Olive, 2 Bro. C. C. 90.

To impeach a settlement after marriage under the statute 13 Eliz., the husband must be proved to have been indebted at the time, and to the extent of insolvency; the creditor not producing any evidence, his bill was dismissed, with liberty to file another. Lush v. Wilkinson, 5 Ves. 384.

A post-nuptial settlement, executed in pursuance of an ante-nuptial agreement, set aside at the instance of creditors of the husband, he being insolvent at the time of its execution. Warden v. Jones, 2 De G. & J. 76; 27 L. J., Ch. 190; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 269; 6 W. R. 180.

Purchase by Wife from Husband.]—Purchase by wife from husband, through the medium of trustees, for her separate use and appointment may be sustained against creditors if bonâ fide, though the husband is indebted at the time, and even though the object is to preserve from his creditors for the family the subject of the purchase. Arundell (Lady) v. Phipps, 10 Ves. 139.

Leaseholds.]—A voluntary gift of leaseholds by a father to his son, in 1835 and 1841, was set aside, it being ascertained in a reference that at those periods the settlor's debts exceeded his assets. Christy v. Courtenay, 26 Beav. 140.

Partnership.]—C. having competent private means, and being engaged as a member of a partnership, which was indebted to the extent of 375*l.*, made a voluntary settlement of property amounting to 5,000*l.* odd in favour of his wife and married daughter, reserving no benefit to himself. One year and a half afterwards (he having become of unsound mind), the other partners were made bankrupts on their own declaration, and no dividend had been paid:—Held, that the settlement was void under 13 Eliz. c. 5, but an inquiry granted at the peril of the defendants. Denison v. Tattersall, 18 L. T. 303.

Trader.]—Where a trader conveys his real estate to trustees in consideration of 5*s.* and other valuable considerations, in trust to himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, then to his eldest son, if he survive his father and mother, and so to the next son, the conveyance was holden as falling within 1 Jac. 1, c. 15, and trustees ordered to convey to assignees; but it is necessary to prove that party was indebted at the time. Walker v. Burrows, 1 Atk. 93.

A trader, being in insolvent circumstances, agreed to sell his business and stock-in-trade in consideration of a money payment, and that the purchaser should, during the joint lives of the trader and his wife, pay the former an annuity equal to one-fourth of the profits, and a contingent annuity to the wife, if she survived her husband, equal to one-sixth of the profits. The trader having died, and a creditor's suit having been instituted for the administration of his assets:—Held (reversing a decision of Stuart, V.-C.), that the annuity to the wife was void as against creditors, under the 13 Eliz. c. 5, and that it was quite competent for the creditor to impeach the annuity, without seeking to set aside the whole transaction of which it was a part; and there was a provision in the decree that it was to be without prejudice to any claim of the widow upon the estate of her husband, if there should ultimately be a surplus after payment of creditors. French v. French, 6 De G. M. & G. 95; 25 L. J., Ch. 612; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 169; 4 W. R. 139.

Isle of Man.]—According to the general law prevailing as well in the Isle of Man as in England, a deed is void against creditors when the debtor is in a state of insolvency, or when the effect of the deed is to leave the debtor without the means of paying his present debts. Corbett v. Radcliffe, 14 Moore, P. C. 121; 4 L. T. 1.

A deed of settlement and a conveyance in favour of the son of the grantor, upon certain beneficial considerations for his wife and younger children, made by the grantor when in insolvent circumstances, set aside as being fraudulent and void against the creditors of the grantor. Ib.

Where Effect of Assignment is to render Assignor Insolvent.]—Where a testator assigned his property, and the plaintiff, in an action against the executor, set up fraud in the assignment, and suggested, to prove the fraud, that the testator was insolvent at the time of the assignment, it is sufficient for the purposes of the plaintiff in the action, if, by the very act of assignment, the testator made himself insolvent—that is, if the property left after the conveyance was not enough to pay his debts. Jackson v. Bowley, Car. & M. 97.

But where the sum realised after the death of the testator very nearly equalled the amount of his debts, the judge still left it to the jury to say whether there had been fraud in the assignment. Ib.

Onus of Proof.]—Nine months after a voluntary settlement had been made the settlor became insolvent:—Held, that the onus lay on him to prove that he was solvent at the date of the settlement. Crossley v. Elworthy, 40 L. J., Ch. 480; L. R. 12 Eq. 158; 24 L. T. 607; 19 W. R. 842.

Practice—Primâ facie case—Inquiry.]—If the evidence raises a primâ facie case that the effect of a voluntary settlement will be injurious to settlor's creditors, a creditor may file a bill and have an inquiry into the state of the settlor's property and debts at the date of the execution of the settlement. Crabbe v. Moxey, 1 W. R. 226.

b. Subsequent Creditors.

Generally.]—13 Eliz. c. 5 renders void conveyances made to defeat future as well as existing creditors. Barling v. Bishopp, 29 Beav. 417; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 812; 8 W. R. 631.

Voluntary conveyance by person not indebted, not set aside afterwards. Russell v. Hammond, 1 Atk. 15.

Not necessary that a man should be actually indebted at the time of voluntary settlement to make it fraudulent; if he does it with a view to his being indebted at a future time, it is equally so, and ought to be set aside. Stileman v. Ashdown, 2 Atk. 481.

The result of the authorities decided upon 13 Eliz. c. 5 is that, where a debt contracted antecedently to the settlement exists, a subsequent creditor has the same rights as an antecedent creditor would have against the settlor. Freeman v. Pope, 39 L. J., Ch. 148. Affirmed, 39 L. J., Ch. 689; L. R. 5 Ch. 538; 21 L. T. 816; 18 W. R. 906.

Where a clergyman, with an annual income of nearly 1,000*l.*, made in 1863 a voluntary settlement in favour of his god-daughter, and died in 1868 in insolvent circumstances, owing to his bankers the balance of a debt which had been contracted prior to the date of the settlement, a creditor, whose debt was contracted subsequently to the settlement, obtained a decree to set aside the settlement as fraudulent, within 13 Eliz. c. 5, although, having regard to the income and means of the settlor, the court was of opinion that in executing the settlement he had no intention whatever to cheat his creditors at that time. Ib.

Bond Debts.]—Voluntary conveyance is bad against bond debts contracted since. St. Arnaud v. Jersey, 1 Comyns, 255.

Judgment Creditors.]—A. conveys lands to the use of himself for life, with power to mortgage such part as he shall think fit, remainder to trustees to sell to pay all debts, and afterwards becomes indebted by judgment bonds and simple contract. This is fraudulent as against the judgment creditors, and they shall not be compelled to take a satisfaction in average with the other creditors, having no notice of the settlement. Tarback v. Marbury, 2 Vern. 510.

Creditor on Running Account.]—A. made a voluntary assignment of a sum of money, being at the time indebted to B., on balance of running account. A. afterwards made payments to B., exceeding in amount the balance due at the date of the assignment, but the balance continually increased. The assignment was set aside at the suit of B. Whittington v. Jennings, 6 Sim. 493; 3 L. J., Ch. 157.

Provision for Debts.]—Provision for debts in a voluntary settlement will support it against all future creditors. George v. Milbanke, 9 Ves. 194; 7 R. R. 157.

Post-nuptial Settlement.]—Stock was bequeathed to A. after his marriage, which he vested in trustees for the benefit of himself and his wife for life, and then to their children. This settlement is void as against the husband's creditors, both before and after the marriage. Taylor v. Jones, 2 Atk. 600.

A post-nuptial settlement was made by a person indebted considerably at the time. It was not clear that all those debts were paid at the time the bill was filed by a subsequent creditor to set aside the deed:—Held, that a subsequent creditor may file a bill if any of the antecedent debts remain unsatisfied, and inquiries were directed as to the solvency of the settlor at the time of his death. Jenkyn v. Vaughan, 3 Drew. 419; 25 L. J., Ch. 338; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 109; 4 W. R. 214.

In Favour of Strangers.]—A voluntary settlement in favour of strangers, by one not indebted at the time, nor meaning a fraud, good against subsequent creditors. Holloway v. Millard, 1 Madd. 414.

In Favour of Child.]—But if to a child, and no fraud, and the party were not indebted at the time, it is good against subsequent creditors. Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. 10.

In Favour of Wife and Children.]—A voluntary settlement without fraud by a husband not indebted, in favour of his wife and children, is valid against subsequent creditors. On a bill by the wife, the court established the settlement, no creditor attempting to impeach it, and there being no allegation that the husband was indebted at the time, without directing an inquiry on that subject. It seems that a recital in a settlement after marriage, is not evidence against creditors of articles before marriage. Battersbee v. Farrington, 1 Swanst. 106; 1 Wils. Ch. 88; 18 R. R. 32.

Trader—Indebtedness.]—T. filed a bill on behalf of himself and other creditors of C., to administer his estate, and to set aside a voluntary settlement executed by C. T.'s debt was contracted after the date of the settlement, but it appeared, on inquiries directed in the suit, that C., who was a trader, with a capital of more than 120,000*l.*, was insolvent to the extent of about 1,300*l.* at the date of the settlement:—Held, that T. was entitled to have the settlement set aside. Taylor v. Coenen, 1 Ch. D. 636; 34 L. T. 18.

Evidence.]—If a voluntary settlement or a deed of gift is impeached by creditors whose debts had not been contracted at the date of the settlement, it is necessary to show either that the settlor made the settlement with an express intent to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors, or that, after the settlement, the settlor had no sufficient means or reasonable expectations of being able to pay his then existing debts, but was reduced to a state of insolvency, in which case the law infers that the settlement was made with intent to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors, and is therefore fraudulent and void. Spirett v. Willows, 3 De G. J. & S. 293; 5 Giff. 49; 34 L. J., Ch. 365; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 70; 12 L. T. 614; 13 W. R. 329.

The fact of a voluntary settlor retaining money enough to pay the debts which he owes at the time of making the settlement, but not actually paying them, gives no different character to the settlement, and does not take it out of the statute (13 Eliz. c. 5). Ib.

c. In Contemplation of Trading.

Generally.]—A baker, who had carried on business for some years, being about to purchase a grocery business, which he intended to carry on together with his own trade, executed a voluntary settlement of nearly the whole of his property upon his wife and children. He afterwards bought the grocery business, and, having lost money by it, sold it, and continued to carry on his baking business. Within three years after the date of the settlement he filed a liquidating petition, his liabilities being in excess of his assets:—Held, that, independently of the question whether he was solvent at the date of the settlement, the settlement was void as against the trustee in the liquidation under the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, on the ground that it was evidently executed with the view of putting the settlor's property out of the reach of his creditors in case he should fail in the speculation on which he was about to enter in carrying on a new business of which he knew nothing. Mackay v. Douglas (L. R. 14 Eq. 106) approved and followed. Russell, Ex parte, Butterworth, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 521; 19 Ch. D. 588; 46 L. T. 113; 30 W. R. 584.

Settlor afterwards becoming Trader.]—One not in debt nor a trader makes a voluntary settlement on a child, and afterwards becomes a trader and a bankrupt; this settlement not liable to the bankruptcy. Lilly v. Osborne, 3 P. Wms. 298.

In 1858 a man, who was not then engaged in trade, and who owed no debts, made a voluntary settlement of 1,000*l.* The trusts of the deed were a life estate to himself determinable on bankruptcy, then a life estate to his wife for her separate use, then trusts for the children of the marriage, and an ultimate remainder to the settlor. In 1873 he for the first time engaged the trade. In 1875 he was adjudicated a bankrupt:—Held, that the settlement was void in toto as against the trustee. Stephens, Ex parte, Pearson, In re, 3 Ch. D. 807; 35 L. T. 68; 25 W. R. 126.

—— Settlement on Marriage.]—Settlement, on marriage, of freehold estates of inheritance, or freeholds for lives and years, by a man not indebted in trade or intending it, to the use of himself for life, unless he shall embark in trade and in the life of his wife become bankrupt, and from his decease or bankruptcy to secure an annuity for his wife, and subject thereto for his heirs, executors, etc. On his afterwards engaging in trade, and becoming bankrupt, void as against his creditors. Higinbotham v. Holme, 19 Ves 88; 12 R. R. 146.

Partnership.]—G., previous to entering into a partnership trade, executed a bond for 500*l.* to a trustee upon trust that, upon his death, failure in trade, or bankruptcy, the interest should be paid to his wife for her life, and that she should have a power to appoint the principal among the issue of the marriage. G. and his partner became bankrupts; the bond was voluntary, and decreed not to be set up against the creditors, but to be paid in case of a surplus, after payment of joint and several creditors. Gardiner v. Shannon, 2 Sch. & Lef. 228.

Subsequent Creditors.]—A voluntary settlement whereby the settlor takes the bulk of his property out of the reach of his creditors, shortly before engaging in trade of a hazardous character, may be set aside in a suit on behalf of creditors who became such after the settlement, though there are no creditors whose debts arose before the date of the settlement, and though when the settlement was made it was doubtful whether the arrangements under which the settlor was to engage in the business would take effect. Mackay v. Douglas, 41 L. J., Ch. 539; L. R. 14 Eq. 106; 26 L. T. 721; 20 W. R. 652.

Onus of Proof.]—When a voluntary settlement is made on the eve of the settlor engaged in trade, the burden rests upon him of showing that he was in a position to make it. Ib.

Evidence.]—In order to set aside a voluntary settlement as being void as against creditors, it is not necessary to show that the settlor contemplated becoming actually indebted. It is sufficient if he contemplated a state of things which might result in bankruptcy or insolvency. Ib.

Defence to Suit.]—A debtor is not entitled to set up, as a defence to a suit to set aside a voluntary settlement, a release contained in an inspectorship deed by which he vested all his property in the inspectors, the settlement or the existence of the property comprised in it not having been disclosed at the time the inspectorship deed was executed. Ib.

5. Pending Actions or Judgments.

Generally.]—A conveyance by a debtor, who afterwards becomes insolvent, for the benefit of his creditors, is only void as against the assignees, and is not fraudulent, though made with the object of defeating or postponing persons claiming under a decree. Lee v. Green, 25 L. J., Ch. 269; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 170; 4 W. R. 270—L.JJ.

After notice of trial in an action of trespass, the defendant executed a voluntary conveyance of real estate to his daughter. The verdict went against him, and he afterwards took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act:—Held, that the conveyance was void under 13 Eliz. c. 5, it being intended to defeat the plaintiff in the action. Barling v. Bishopp, 29 Beav. 417; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 812; 8 W. R. 631. See Blenkinsopp v. Blenkinsopp, 1 De G. M. & G. 495; 21 L. J., Ch. 401; 16 Jur. 787.

A. brings an action against B. for lying with his wife, after which B. assigns his estate to trustees in trust to pay the several debts mentioned in a schedule, and such other debts as he should name, within ten days; then A. recovers 5,000*l.* damages, and brings his bill to set aside the deed as fraudulent, and made to defeat him of his recovery:—Held, not to be fraudulent, the plaintiff being no creditor at making the deed, and his debt, recovered after, founded in maleficio; but the others were real creditors, which it was conscientious to prefer; but for the surplus the plaintiff may come in. Lewkner v. Freeman, Pre. Ch. 105; Free. C. C. 236.

R., being indebted to A. by specialty and simple contract, and being sued in equity for the amount, executed a deed in 1816, whereby he purported to convey certain real estates to his daughter W. and her heirs. In 1817 A. obtained a decree against R. for payment of the money due to him, and thereupon issued a sequestration, and the sequestrators entered into possession of the lands comprised in the deed of 1816, and so continued until the death of R. in 1834. In 1826 W. sold and conveyed the lands to B., who had notice of the circumstances under which the deed of 1816 was executed. Afterwards, and after the passing of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, R. died. The court were of opinion that the deed of 1816 was void for actual fraud, and:—Held, that R. died seised of the lands comprised in it, and that they were assets for the payment of his simple contract debts. O'Connor v. Bernard, 2 Jones, 654.

Absence of Consideration.]—A deed of sale conveying real estate, the property of a defendant in a suit then pending in the supreme court at Bombay:—Held, in the absence of satisfactory evidence of a bonâ fide consideration having been paid by the vendee, to be fraudulent and void as against the creditors of the vendor, and to have been executed for the purpose of defeating a sequestration. Musadee Mahomed Cazum Sherazee v. Meerza Ally Mahomed Shoostry, 6 Moore, Ind. App. 27; 8 Moore, P. C. 90.

Husband and Wife.]—In 1842 a husband, pending proceedings against him in the ecclesiastical court for a divorce, executed a voluntary settlement of real and personal estate. Sequestration afterwards issued against him, which was defeated by the deed. This court set aside the deed. Blenkinsopp v. Blenkinsopp, 12 Beav. 568; 19 L. J., Ch. 425; 14 Jur. 777. Affirmed, 1 De G. M. & G. 495; 21 L. J., Ch. 401; 16 Jur. 787.

Marriage Settlement—Privity.]—A person pending an action against him for the recovery of a debt married a woman with whom he had cohabited for several years, and in consideration of the marriage executed a settlement of all his property. A court of equity, upon the suit of the creditor, finding that the wife had knowledge of the facts, declared the settlement fraudulent and void. Bulmer v. Hunter, 38 L. J., Ch. 543; L. R. 8 Eq. 46; 20 L. T. 942.

Sums Advanced for Maintenance.]—Bill against children for discovery of sums advanced to them, pendente lite, by their father, an insolvent executor; it appears, on the answers, that two of them received 500*l.* each on their marriages, but two others received 500*l.* each for their maintenance; it was decreed that the two last should refund, although they denied knowledge of their father's insolvency. Partridge v. Gopp, Amb. 596.

Costs of Suit.]—A remainderman, who failed in a suit instituted by him against the tenant for life in respect of alleged waste, and who was ordered to pay the costs of the suit, sold his remainder and executed a conveyance of it to the purchaser before the costs could be taxed, and he paid his solicitor's bill out of the proceeds of the sale without leaving sufficient to pay the defendant's costs of the suit, and without having any means of paying them:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to have the conveyance set aside or declared fraudulent, or to recover from the remainderman's solicitor the portion which the solicitor had received of the proceeds of the sale in payment of his costs, and that the fact of the purchaser having or not having notice of the circumstances attending the sale, or the purpose of it, was immaterial. Norteliffe v. Warburton, 4 De G. F. & J. 449; 10 W. R. 635.

Trader—Assignment, in expectation of Sequestration.]—A trader debtor being in expectation that a writ of sequestration would issue against him for non-payment of a sum of money ordered to be paid by him into the court of chancery, executed a deed of mortgage, which was registered as a bill of sale, vesting substantially all his property in trustees for the benefit of five of his creditors. The deed contained a proviso that the debtor should remain in possession of his property for six months, but not so as to let in any execution or sequestration, and in case any such should be enforced his possession was to cease. A writ of sequestration was subsequently issued:—Held, that the deed was not void under 13 Eliz. c. 5, notwithstanding the fact that it conveyed the whole of the debtor's property for the benefit of some of his creditors, and that it contained a proviso that the debtor should remain in possession for six months. Alton v. Harrison, Poyser v. Harrison, 38 L. J., Ch. 669; L. R. 4 Ch. 622; 21 L. T. 282; 17 W. R. 1034.

—— Privity of Purchaser—Sale of Goods.]—A pawnbroker bought the stock of a trader in a hasty manner and without making any inquiries whether he was indebted, or why he was obliged to sell in a hurry. There were other circumstances of suspicion as to the bonâ fides of the sale, particularly that the purchaser did not call the vendor as a witness. Due change of possession took place, but no public manifestation of it was made, and the vendor was at the time of the sale liable to process for debt, and a few days after the sale execution issued:—Held, that, there being proof of payment and change of possession, the circumstances of suspicion did not amount to proof of fraud, and the purchase was good against the execution creditor. Hale v. Metropolitan Saloon Omnibus Co., 4 Drew. 492; 28 L. J., Ch. 777; 7 W. R. 316.

Assignment for Benefit of Creditors.]—Where a debtor to the plaintiff, being sued by the plaintiff, pending the suit and before execution, being insolvent, executed an assignment of all his effects to trustees for the benefit of all his creditors, under which possession was immediately taken:—Held, that the assignment was not fraudulent within 13 Eliz. c. 5, although made to the intent to delay the plaintiff of his execution. Pickstock v. Lyster, 3 M. & S. 371; 16 R. R. 300.

A., being in insolvent circumstances, assigned his property for the benefit of his creditors. B., who was a non-assenting party to the deed, was a creditor of A. on two bills of exchange, on which he was proceeding at the time of the deed of assignment. The deed was expressed to be meant to secure all the debts existing at the time of the execution:—Held, that the deed was not fraudulent and void against B., as tending to deprive B. of costs in the action. Evans v. Jones, 3 H. & C. 423; 34 L. J., Ex. 25; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 784; 11 L. T. 636.

Sale of Book Debts at Undervalue—Application of Proceeds in Defending Actions.]—Upon certain actions being commenced against the debtor, he sold book debts of the alleged value of 800*l.* for the sum of 150*l.*, part of which he used to defend the actions to which he was advised he had a good defence, and the remainder for the support of his family:—Held, that, the transfer made by the bankrupt not being an assignment of the whole of his property, nor an assignment to a person who was a party to the fraud, the transaction was not fraudulent either under the bankruptcy laws or under the statute of Elizabeth, and therefore the court below was wrong in not granting him an order of discharge. Cranston, Ex parte, Cranston, In re, 9 Morrell, 160.

Evidence.]—A., in 1856, while two actions (for debt and false imprisonment) were pending against him, executed two deeds, which purported to convey his property for valuable consideration to his step-son, O. In 1857, A. was arrested for the debt and costs recovered in one of the actions, and shortly afterwards petitioned the Insolvent Debtors Court for his discharge from custody, and the plaintiff, who had been his attorney, was appointed the assignee of his estate and effects. A bill that the conveyances were not made for good consideration, or bonâ fide, but with the intent and purpose to delay, hinder, and defraud creditors, was dismissed with costs, on the ground that the evidence failed to support the allegations. Marlow v. Orgill, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 829—L.JJ. Affirming 6 L. T. 854.

H., being indebted to the plaintiff, who had entered up judgment for the amount, and other persons, with his wife, by an indenture made in 1853, subsequent to their marriage, conveyed all the messuages, lands, and hereditaments of and to which his wife and himself in her right were or was seised or entitled, at law or in equity, for any estate of inheritance, to a trustee, upon trusts; and by another indenture of the same date an undivided moiety of a fund in court, to which H. and his wife, or H. alone in her right, were or was entitled, was assigned to the same trustee. The trusts declared were for the benefit of the wife for life, for her separate use, and after her decease for her children, with power to the wife to direct that the produce should after her death be paid to H. for life, and also power to direct the trustee to raise during her life a certain sum, and pay the same to H. The sum was subsequently raised, and a portion paid to H. The fund in court had, by a decree made in another cause in January, 1854, been ordered to be transferred to the trustee, and the residue was subsequently transferred. The plaintiff, having obtained a charging order, filed a bill, alleging that at the time of the execution of the indentures H. was insolvent, and that they were executed without good or valuable consideration, and intended to defeat creditors; and it prayed that they might be set aside as fraudulent and void against the creditors, or at all events so far as they affected the real estate. At the hearing the case against the personal estate was abandoned, and relief was sought against the real estate only, but it was not proved that there was any real estate:—Held, that the plaintiff was bound to show not only that he was a creditor, but that the settlement did actually put property out of the reach of creditors. Turnley v. Hooper, 2 Jur. 1081.

Held, also, that as the plaintiff had not proved that H. was indebted to the extent of insolvency, or that the object of the settlement was to defeat or delay creditors, the bill must be dismissed, with costs. Ib.

Practice—Statute of Frauds—Evidence.]—The plaintiff conveyed an estate to the defendant by a deed, in which the conveyance was expressed to be absolute in consideration of a sum of money paid by the defendant; but no purchase money actually passed, and the plaintiff alleged that he conveyed the estate to the defendant as a trustee for him. The defendant, in his answer, admitted that he gave no consideration for the estate, but stated that the plaintiff made the conveyance fearing that an adverse decision would be made against him in a suit pending in chancery; and that it was understood that the defendant should account to the plaintiff for the rents until he could make arrangements for paying the purchase money, and if no such arrangements could be made that he should reconvey the estate. The defendant claimed to hold the estate discharged of any trust, and claimed the benefit of the Statute of Frauds:—Held, first, that there was no sufficient averment that the transaction was an illegal one. Haigh v. Kaye, 41 L. J., Ch. 567; L. R. 7 Ch. 469; 26 L. T. 675; 20 W. R. 597.

Held, secondly, that the Statute of Frauds could not be pleaded in answer to the claim; and that, as the evidence did not establish the existence of any such agreement as was alleged by the defendant, he must reconvey the estate. Ib.

—— Outlawry — Charging Order — Right to Sue.]—In December, 1845, the plaintiff obtained a judgment against his debtor, who in the same month, being otherwise largely indebted, conveyed his reversionary interest in certain real estate to trustees, upon trust for sale and to hold the proceeds, in default of a joint appointment by himself and his wife, for the benefit of his wife and child. In May, 1846, a settlement of the proceeds of the sale was made in favour of his wife and child. Previously to the execution of the settlement the plaintiff had sued out a writ of outlawry against the debtor, who had absconded, and on his return, in May, 1852, the plaintiff filed a bill against him, the cestuis que trustent and trustees of the settlement of May, 1846, for the purpose of impeaching it as voluntary. After the institution of the suit, the debtor was declared insolvent, and his assignee was made a party to the cause. The defendants, the trustees and cestuis que trustent of the settlement, alleged in their answers that the settlement of May, 1846, was in pursuance of the previous deed of December, 1845, and at the bar objected that, having regard to the outlawry, the plaintiff ought to have clothed himself with the legal title by a grant from the crown; that he ought also to have obtained a charging order under s. 12 of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and that the judgment debtor having become insolvent, the right of suit was in his assignee:—Held, declaring that the settlement of May, 1846, was void against creditors; first, that the objection as to the want of a grant from the crown was invalid, because the plaintiff's claim was paramount to the settlement, which was good as against the insolvent, whose estate only vested in the crown; secondly, that, inasmuch as the funds which formed the subject of the settlement were in the names of trustees, not for the insolvent, but for others, the proceeding by charging order would have been nugatory; and, thirdly, that the insolvency having occurred after the institution of the suit, the frame of the suit was right. Goldsmith v. Russell, 5 De G. M. & G. 547; 25 L. J., Ch. 232; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 985; 3 W. R. 218.

6. Operation between Parties.

Generally.]—Voluntary settlement void against creditors, good for other purposes. Curtis v. Price, 12 Ves. 103; 8 R. R. 303.

Voluntary settlement by bankrupt, though void against his creditors, subsists for all other purposes. Bell, Ex parte, 1 Glyn & J. 282.

Where an instrument has been entered into between two parties, for a purpose which may be considered fraudulent as against a third party, it may yet be binding as between themselves. Shaw v. Jeffery, 13 Moore, P. C. 432; 3 L. T. 1.

A supposed fraudulent intention as to third parties cannot be interpolated in construing an instrument as to the rights of the contracting parties. Ib.

An assignment of goods in fraud of creditors is valid as between parties to the deed. Bessey v. Windham, 6 Q. B. 166; 14 L. J., Q. B. 7.

An assignment in fraud of creditors is good as against the parties executing it, and their assigns stand in no better position. Robinson v. McDonnel, 2 B. & S. 134; see Steel v. Brown, 1 Taunt. 381; 9 R. R. 795.

—— Conveyance to give Qualification.]—A voluntary conveyance for the purpose of conferring a qualification under the Bedford Level Act, was executed by a father in favour of his son, and registered, but never communicated to the son, who died soon afterwards. The legal estate was outstanding in a mortgagee:—Held, that the father was entitled to have the property comprised in the deed conveyed to him. Childers v. Childers, 1 De G. & J. 482; 26 L. J., Ch. 743; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1277; 5 W. R. 859.

Where a deed of conveyance of an estate from one brother to another was executed to give the latter a colourable qualification to kill game:—Held, that as against the parties to the deed it was valid, and was sufficient to support an ejectment from the premises. Doe d. Roberts v. Roberts, 2 B. & Ald. 367; 20 R. R. 447.

—— To Confer Vote.]—Under 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 25, s. 7, and 10 Anne, c. 23, s. 1, a fraudulent conveyance made for the mere purpose of conferring a vote, is void only to the extent of preventing the right of voting from being acquired, but is valid and effectual as between the parties to pass the interest. Phillpotts v. Philpotts, 10 C. B. 85; 20 L. J., C. P. 11.

Rights of Party under Void Deed.]—Party in possession under a deed which was fraudulent and void as against creditors:—Held, not entitled to any allowance for sums expended by him for improvements upon the estate. Musadee Mahomed Cazum Sherazee v. Meerza Ally Mahomed Shoostry, 6 Moore, Ind. App. 27; 8 Moore, P. C. 90.

Suit by Debtor for Cancellation.]—A., with the view of placing his property out of the reach of his creditors, assigned and conveyed real and personal estate to B., to secure the repayment to B. of several alleged debts, together amounting to 4,900*l.*, which was the full value of the property; and the deeds contained powers of sale, with ultimate trusts for the benefit of A. A bill being filed by A. against B. to have the deeds given up and cancelled, and the property restored, it appeared from B.'s answer, which was the only evidencee in the cause, that, at the time the deeds were executed, A. was indebted to B. in the sum of 480*l.* B. also alleged by his answer a secret trust in favour of A.'s wife for her separate use:—Held, that the suit was maintainable by A., and that the deeds in any event could only stand as a security for what was actually due to B. Decree made, directing inquiries as to the existence of the debt claimed by B., and reserving the question as to the security. Barnard v. Sutton, 12 L. J., Ch. 312 ; 7 Jur. 685.

B. AS AGAINST PURCHASERS (27 Eliz. c. 4).

1. PROPERTY WITHIN THE STATUTE.

By 56 & 57 Vict. c. 21, an act to amend the law relating to voluntary conveyances, such conveyances if bonâ fide are not to be avoided under 27 Eliz. c. 4, saving transactions completed before the passing of the act.

Generally.]—Voluntary settlements of personal property made by persons not indebted at the time are good against subsequent purchaser for valuable consideration. Jones v. Croucher, 1 Sim. & S. 315.

Equitable Reversion.]—A voluntary assignment by deed of an equitable reversionary interest in personal property is valid. Voyle v. Hughes, 2 Sm. & G. 18 ; 2 Eq. R. 42 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 238 ; 18 Jur. 341 ; 2 W. R. 143.

A person entitled to an equitable reversionary interest in stock made a voluntary assignment of it by deed to trustees. No notice was given of this deed, either to the trustees named in it, or to any person interested in it, or to the original trustees of the stock ; the assignor retained the deed, and subsequently destroyed it, and made a different disposition by will of the fund, which was still standing in the names of the original trustees :—Held, that, unless the deed could be successfully impeached on the ground of fraud, mistake, or surprise, it operated as an effectual disposition of the fund, notwithstanding the absence of notice, and the retention and destruction of the deed by the assignor. Way's Trusts, In re, 2 De G. J. & S. 365 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 49 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1166 ; 11 L. T. 495 ; 13 W. R. 149.

Copyhold Lands.]—Copyholds are within 27 Eliz. c. 4. Doe d. Tunstill v. Botterill, 2 N. & M. 64. S. C., nom. Doe d. Tunstill v. Bottriell, 5 B. & Ad. 131 ; 2 L. J., K. B. 158.

Charitable Gift.]—A voluntary gift for charitable purposes is not to be treated as convinous within the meaning of 27 Eliz. c. 4, and is not avoided by a subsequent conveyance for value. Ramsay v. Gilchrist, 61 L. J., P. C. 72 ; [1892] A. C. 412 ; 66 L. T. 806 ; 56 J. P. 711—P. C.

Limitation without Consideration.]—In a conveyance of lands, a limitation without consideration is void as against a subsequent purchaser for good consideration, being fraudulent under 27 Eliz. c. 4. Doe d. Ravenstock v. Rolfe, 8 A. & E. 650 ; 3 N. & P. 648.

Covenant against Incumbering Lands Charged with Jointure, void against Incumbrancer.]—A., being tenant for life of certain premises, with power of limiting a jointure to his wife, a settlement is executed on his marriage, by which he demises the lands of which he was tenant for life to trustees for a term of ninety-nine years, on trust to secure the payment of a yearly sum to his wife as pin-money during the coverture, and he limits a jointure to her after his death. The same parties, on the same day, execute another instrument by which A. covenants not to sell or incumber the lands comprised in the term, and it is declared that if he shall at any time sell or incumber them, or attempt to do so, the trustees of the term shall receive the rents and profits and apply them as they may think fit for the maintenance and support of A. or his wife, or children or issue ; the covenant and this proviso are fraudulent and void as against a subsequent incumbrancer of A.'s life estate. Phipps v. Ennismore, 4 Russ. 131 ; 28 R. R. 27.

Purchased Estate—Furniture.]—By indenture of the 25th March, 1850, reciting that V. had contracted for the purchase of the H. estate, that estate was conveyed, by the direction of V., to trustees for sale, the sale's moneys to be held upon trusts of indenture of even date, being a voluntary settlement for the benefit of V. and his wife and family. By the same indenture of even date, V. assigned certain plate and furniture in the house at H. to the same trustees, upon the same trusts. The trustees were informed, and consented to act as trustees of the settlement of realty ; but it did not appear that they had ever seen the deeds, or executed them, or been informed of the particular contents, nor been communicated with as to the settlement of chattels, nor was any delivery made thereof. In 1851 V., being indebted to S. in the sum of 10,000*l.* and upwards, by indenture of the 29th of November, 1851, reciting that fact, conveyed "all his real and personal estate" to S., to sell and pay his own debt, and then to pay the surplus to V., his executors, administrators, and assigns. S. immediately took possession of the house at H., and of all the furniture and effects therein, which were substantially the same as those assigned by the indenture of the 25th March, 1850. V. was, from a period anterior to 1850 down to his decease in December, 1851, practically insolvent :—Held, that the transaction of 1850 was void as against S., claiming under the indenture of the 29th November, 1851, as a purchaser for valuable consideration, and without notice within the stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4 ; that the fact of the land never having been conveyed to V. at all made no difference ; the recital being that he had contracted for the purchase, he was held to be the owner in equity, and his equitable fee, therefore, would pass to S. ; and that the general description in the indenture of the 29th November, 1851, "all my real estate," would sufficiently include this, and satisfy the words of the stat. 27 Eliz., as to a subsequent sale of "the same estate." Barton or Stone v. Van Heythuysen, 11 Hare, 126 ; 18 Jur. 344.

2. PURCHASERS WITHIN THE STATUTE.

a. From Settlor.

Generally.]—Voluntary conveyance, though no fraud, void against subsequent purchaser for valuable consideration, and also against creditors, if indebted at the time, and also against mortgagee, who is considered as purchaser. (See Cowp. 280.) Townshend v. Windham, 2 Ves. 10.

The 27 Eliz., c. 4, against fraudulent conveyances, enables a settlor to defeat a settlement which he has created on behalf of his family, but it only does so upon a subsequent conveyance to a purchaser for actual value. A mortgagee is a purchaser within the meaning of the statute. Dolphin v. Aylward, L. R. 4 H. L. 486 ; 23 L. T. 636 ; 19 W. R. 49.

The power of the settlor to defeat a voluntary settlement by selling the estate, under the 27 Eliz., c. 4, is not a "disposing power" within the meaning of the 13th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. Beavan v. Oxford (Lord), 6 De G. M. & G. 507; 25 L. J., Ch. 299; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 121; 4 W. R. 275.

A court of equity will not interfere actively against a volunteer through the medium of a person (not a purchaser for value) claiming only through him who has created the voluntary settlement. Dolphin v. Aylward, L. R. 4 H. L. 486; 23 L. T. 636; 19 W. R. 49.

To make a voluntary settlement void against a subsequent purchaser within 27 Eliz. c. 4, it must be covinous and fraudulent, not voluntary only: a purchaser, to entitle himself to the protection of the statute against such fraudulent settlement, and to set it aside, must be a purchaser bonâ fide, or for good consideration, as marriage; but the consideration need not be marriage. Doe d. Watson v. Routledge, Cowp. 705.

Judgment Creditors.] — Judgment creditors are not purchasers of lands or hereditaments within the meaning of the statute against fraudulent conveyances, 27 Eliz. c. 4, so as to avoid a voluntary conveyance. Beavan v. Oxford (Lord), 6 De G. M. & G. 507; 25 L. J., Ch. 299; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 121; 4 W. R. 275.

In 1836 T. recovered a judgment against Lord O., which was duly docketed. In 1838 (before the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 came into operation) Lord O. executed a voluntary settlement in favour of his wife. After that statute had passed, other creditors recovered judgments against Lord O., which were duly registered under the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11. T. omitted to register his judgment till 1849, and thereby lost his priority as against the subsequent creditors:—Held, that this did not entitle the latter to stand in his place as against the voluntary settlement. Ib.

The case of Watts v. Porter (3 El. & Bl. 743; 23 L. J., Q. B. 345) observed upon. Ib.

Where a voluntary settlement has been made, subsequent judgment creditors of the settlor cannot acquire rights in derogation of it which the settlor himself would not have possessed. Dolphin v. Aylward, L. R. 4 H. L. 436; 23 L. T. 636; 19 W. R. 49.

Power of Attorney—Sale.]—A power of attorney did not authorise the sale of any portion of certain land comprised in a voluntary settlement:—Held, that a sale, purporting to be in exercise of the power, was not sufficient to call into operation the statute 27 Eliz. c. 4. General Meat Supply Association v. Boutfler, 41 L. T. 719. Affirmed on other grounds.

Partnership.]—A. enters into partnership in fifths, with three owners, for twenty-one years, in digging for mines in A.'s lands, A. to have two-fifths, and in consideration of his ownership of the land, to have a tenth out of the share of the other partners; A. dies, and his widow sets up a voluntary settlement made after marriage: court inclined that the partners were as purchasers, and that the voluntary settlement should not stand against them. Shaw v. Standish, 2 Vern. 326.

Mortgagor and Mortgagee.]—Semble, that if the meaning of a transaction between a mortgagor and mortgagee is that the mortgagee should have his security, but that the mortgagor should have the title deeds, and be enabled therefrom to deal with third persons, that is within the principle of the statute of Elizabeth. Perry-Herrick v. Attwood, 27 L. J., Ch. 121; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 101; 6 W. R. 204—L.JJ.

Mortgage for Former Advance void against Subsequent Mortgagee.]—A mortgage executed in 1871 contained a recital that the mortgagor was indebted to the mortgagee in the sum of 1,500*l.* for moneys advanced by her to him, and that he had agreed to secure the payment of the same by the mortgage. The money had been advanced in 1864, and the evidence showed that there was at that time no agreement for a mortgage, and that there had been no subsequent pressure by the lender. The mortgage deed was retained in the possession of the mortgagor, and there was nothing to show that the mortgagee knew of its execution until February, 1874:—Held, that the mortgage was void under 27 Eliz. c. 4, as against a mortgagee for value whose mortgage was executed in February, 1872, the recital of the agreement not operating as an estoppel against him. Cracknell v. Janson, 48 L. J., Ch. 163; 11 Ch. D. 1; 40 L. T. 640; 27 W. R. 851.

A. voluntarily gave to his sisters, in 1848, a mortgage for a term of 200 years, to secure an antecedent debt. The sisters allowed him to retain the title deeds, that he might give security on the estate for another debt, for which he was being sued by L. Shortly afterwards A. agreed, in writing, to give L. a mortgage on the estate for the debt, and the deeds, in pursuance of this agreement, were deposited with P. and B., the London agents of A's solicitor, and who shortly afterwards became his solicitors, to be held by them for the purpose of giving effect to the security. A., in 1851, made a mortgage in fee to C., who had no notice of the prior incumbrances, and P. and B. handed over to C. the title deeds:—Held, that the mortgage of 1848 was void under 27 Eliz. c. 4, as against C., who therefore took the legal fee discharged of the term. Lloyd v. Attwood, 3 De G. & J., 614; 29 L. J., Ch. 97; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1322.

Estoppel—Tenant for life under Voluntary Settlement joins Settlor in Mortgage in Fee.]—A son, who, under a voluntary settlement executed by his father, was entitled in remainder to an estate for life with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, subsequently to his marriage joined his father in two mortgages, which recited that his father was seised in fee, and covenanted that he was so seised; the father and the two mortgagees executed a subsequent mortgage in fee (to pay them off and raise a further sum), which the son did not execute, but was aware of and joined in a collateral deed for the purpose of barring all possible estates tail and vesting the fee in his father; part of the money raised by all the mortgages being for, and applied to, the use of the son:—Held, that he was estopped from setting up against his own acts any estate which he had at the time of the mortgages, and that, therefore, the mortgage was a good charge on his life estate. Guardian Assurance Co. v. Avonmore (Viscount), Ir. R. 6 Eq. 391.

Suit by Tenant in Tail under Recovery Deed —Right as against Purchaser from Tenant for Life.]—A tenant for life, and his son, who was tenant in tail male in remainder, joined in recovery deeds purporting to assure the entailed property to the use of trustees for a term, in trust to pay off mortgage debts, with remainder to the use of the son during the life of the father, with remainder to the use of the father's wife for life, with remainder to the use of son for the life, with remainder to the use of the sons of the son successively in tail, with remainder to the use of the daughters in tail, with ultimate remainder to the use of the father in fee. The father executed these deeds with intent to defraud his creditors, but that object was concealed from the son. The father became bankrupt, and the deeds were, at the suit of the assignees, ordered to be delivered up and cancelled :—Held, in a subsequent suit of a grandson (tenant in tail under the recovery deeds), that the deeds were not only void as against the creditors, but that the grandson had no equity as against a purchaser from the son to have the trusts of the term performed. Tarleton v. Liddell, 4 De G. & Sm. 538. S. C., 17 Q. B. 390 ; 20 L. J., Q. B. 507 ; 15 Jur. 1170.

Equity against Resettlement, Lost by Marriage and Acquiescence.]—A son, tenant in tail in remainder, when just of age in 1769, joined his father, tenant for life, in a recovery for the purpose of raising 3,000*l.* for the father, and resettling the estate ; the son taking back only an estate for life, with remainder to his first and other sons, &c. Whatever equity he might have had against that settlement was lost by his marriage and acquiescence, till after the death of his father in 1793, though under the circumstances there was no probability of issue. Upon this ground a bill, by trustees under a general trust for his creditors, claiming as purchasers under the statute 27 Eliz. c. 4, was dismissed without deciding whether they could sustain that character, or how a settlement, merely as being voluntary, is affected by the statutes of Eliz. Brown v. Carter, 5 Ves. 862 ; 5 R. R. 191.

Post-nuptial Settlement—Valid against Trustees of Inspectorship Deed.]—B., when solvent, by a voluntary post-nuptial settlement covenanted to assign certain leaseholds for his wife for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage, with ultimate remainder to himself, and executed the assignment. Three days afterwards, and about a year from the date of the settlement, he and his partner executed a deed of inspectorship, containing a general provision for the conveyance of the whole of their joint and separate estate to trustees for the benefit of creditors. The trustees of the settlement, in compliance with the trusts, having sold the leaseholds, a bill was filed to determine their rights and those of the trustees under the deed respectively to the proceeds of the sale :—Held, that the trustees, under the deed, could not be considered purchasers for value within 27 Eliz. c. 4, and consequently that the settlement was valid. Cadell v. Bewley, 15 L. T. 141 ; 15 W. R. 703.

Held, also, that even assuming the trustees were purchasers, the fact of the property not being particularly referred to in the deed of inspectorship was in itself sufficient to exclude the right of those claiming under it. Ib.

—— Sale—Title of Purchaser.]—A testator devised a copyhold estate to trustees, in trust for his wife for life, with remainder in trust for such persons as she should appoint by will or deed, attested by three witnesses, with remainder over. The wife married again, and she and her second husband, after their marriage, by deed attested by three witnesses, in pursuance of the power, appointed the estate, and directed the surviving trustee of her former husband's will to surrender it to the use of a mortgagee, in trust to secure the sum of 1,600*l.* and interest, and subject thereto to the use of the husband and wife, for their joint lives, and the life of the survivor, and after the decease of the survivor, in case there should be any daughters or younger sons of the marriage, upon trust to divide the produce among such daughters or younger sons ; and if there should be none such, then upon trust to surrender the estate to the use of such persons as the wife should, by will or deed, attested by three witnesses, appoint, and in default of such appointment to the right heirs of the wife. A surrender was made to the mortgagee accordingly. The husband and wife afterwards sold the estate, and the mortgage was paid off out of the purchase money ; the husband and wife joined with the mortgagee in surrendering to the use of the purchaser, and they all released to him all their interest, by a deed attested by two witnesses only :—Held, that the purchaser could make a good title by the assistance of the statute of 27 Eliz. c. 4 (against voluntary conveyances), without showing that there were no daughters or younger sons of the wife's second marriage. Currie v. Nind, 1 Myl. & Cr. 17 ; 5 L. J., Ch. 169.

Right of Purchaser from Voluntary Donee.]—A voluntary donee cannot, by a subsequent conveyance for valuable consideration, defeat a party who has a preferable title under the voluntary settlement. Lewis v. Rees, 3 K. & J. 132 ; 26 L. J., Ch. 101 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 12 ; 5 W. R. 96.

Conveyance for Value to One of Two Voluntary Donees.]—A voluntary conveyance from A. to B. and C. is defeated by a subsequent conveyance from A. to B. for a valuable consideration. Doe d. Tunstill v. Botteril, 2 N. & M. 64. S. C., nom. Doe d. Tunstill v. Bottriell, 5 B. & Ad. 131 ; 2 L. J., K. B. 158.

Prior Voluntary Conveyance.]—A. B. by deed of the 30th of June, 1828, conveyed fee simple lands to a trustee for himself for life, and after his decease to pay an annuity of 50*l.* thereout to his daughter C. D., and subject thereto to convey to his son M. N. (the principal defendant), his heirs, executors, &c. By a deed of the 24th July, 1829, the lands were reconveyed to A. B. by the trustee and C. D. and M. N., discharged of the trusts of the deed of 1828. Subsequently A. B., in consideration of an annuity of 100*l.* for his own life, and 50*l.* for that of his widow, conveyed the same lands to M. N., his heirs, &c. A. B. having died, C. D. filed her bill to raise the arrears of the annuity of 50*l.* under the deed of 1828, and to have the deed of 1829 set aside, and made X. Y. a mortgagee of part of the lands from M. N., under a mortgage of 1836, a party to the suit ;—Held, that the deed of 1829 could not be sustained against the plaintiff, and that she was entitled to the arrears of the annuity under the deed of 1828. Held, also, that as between C. D.

and M. N., the deed of 1828 was not voluntary. Blake v. Hyland, 2 Dr. & Wal. 397.

Prior Deed for Value—Subsequent Voluntary Deed—Marriage of Grantee under Voluntary Deed.]—J. S., under his marriage settlement, was seised of certain estates in the county of Clare, for life, remainder to his sons successively in tail, subject to a charge of 5,000*l.* as a provision for younger children. B. S. was the eldest son of this marriage, W. S. another son, and there was a daughter Diana. J. S. afterwards purchased other estates, one of which was called K., which, in 1806, he conveyed by way of mortgage security to the Bishop of Elphin. In February, 1807, he executed a deed, by which, assuming to be the owner in fee of K., he conveyed it and other lands to trustees for himself for life, then to his eldest son, B. S., for life, remainder to the eldest and other sons of B. S. successively in tail. This deed contained a covenant on the part of B. S. to pay J. S.'s debts, and to discharge a sum of 2,000*l.* which J. S. had undertaken to pay to two children of Diana; and also an assignment by J. S. of his personal estate in favour of B. S., who was thereby appointed the attorney of J. S., with power to call in the debts due to him. The deed was registered (apparently without the knowledge of J. S. or of W. S.) upon the 1st June, 1807. On the 13th June, 1807, by a deed, to which J. S., B. S., two trustees, and W. S. were parties, J. S. granted, and B. S. confirmed to the trustees the lands of K. to J. S. for life, then to W. S. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with a power to each succeeding tenant for life to charge the same with a jointure for his wife; and by the same deed W. S. gave up his share of any benefit from the provision for younger children under his father's marriage settlement or otherwise. This deed was registered a few days afterwards. J. S. died in November, 1808, and W. S. entered into possession of the lands of K. W. S. married in 1815, and B. S. was a party to his marriage settlement, in which the lands of K. were included, and by which, under the power contained in the deed of June, 1807, W. S. created a jointure for his wife. B. S. paid his father's debts, satisfied the mortgage on the lands of K., obtained a reconveyance of them to himself, and died in 1837, having allowed W. S. to remain in undisturbed possession up to that time. W. S. continued in possession, and died in 1843. The son of B. S., claiming under the deed of February, 1807, brought ejectment against the son of W. S., who relied on the deed of June for his title. At a trial of this ejectment, the jury found that the deed of February, 1807, was a voluntary deed, and that that of June, 1807, was given for a valuable consideration. The court of queen's bench in Ireland directed a new trial, which took place, but the defendant did not appear, and the plaintiff obtained judgment against him by default. A bill was filed by the plaintiff in the court of chancery in Ireland to have the trusts of the deed of February, 1807, carried into execution, and that court decreed accordingly:—Held, that the decree was right; that after what had occurred at law it must be assumed that the deed of February, 1807, was given for a valuable consideration, and that the deed of June, 1807, was a voluntary deed; and, further, that the subsequent marriage of W. S., and the circumstances attending it, did not constitute his children purchasers for value under the latter deed, which could not prevail against an earlier and a previously registered deed that had been executed for a valuable consideration. Scott v. Scott, 4 H. L. Cas. 1065; 18 Jur. 755.

First and Second Conveyances by Different Persons.]—Semble, that the protection given to a purchaser under the statute against fraudulent conveyances is not to be confined to cases where the first and second conveyances are made by the same person. Blake v. Hyland, 2 Dr. & Wal. 397.

Revocation — Adverse Possession — Acquiescence.]—A. T., on the 25th September, 1835, assigned the principal sum of 740*l.* and interest, secured to her upon premises, unto her daughter E. T., for her own absolute use; and by a deed dated the day following E. T. covenanted with A. T. that she would stand possessed of the greater part of the sum upon trust to pay the interest to A. T. for life, and, after her decease, upon trust for H. L. for life for her separate use, with remainder in trust for her children. The indentures were, as alleged, executed by A. T., and delivered by her to E. T., who thereupon served notices upon the tenants and the mortgagor to pay the rents and interest to her, which had accordingly been paid to her. A. T. died in September, 1841. On a bill filed by H. L. and her children to have the trusts of the indenture of the 26th September, 1835, carried into effect, their claim was resisted by E. P. (formerly E. T.) and her husband W. P., on the ground that, in March, 1841, A. T. assigned the fund to W. P., in trust for E. P., with whom he intermarried in June, 1842, and upon that occasion the fund was, with other property belonging to W. P., assigned to trustees upon certain trusts. W. P. alleged that he had no knowledge of, and that his marriage settlement was made without notice of, the indenture of the 26th September, 1835, and that he was a bonâ fide purchaser for value of the fund claimed by H. L. and her children:—Held, that the indenture of the 26th September, 1835, was not revocable by A. T., and that neither upon the ground of adverse possession, nor upon that of acquiesence, had the plaintiffs lost their right to the fund. Lanham v. Pirie, 2 Jur. (N.S.) 753; 4 W. R. 699.

b. From Heir or Devisee of Settlor.

Generally.]—Voluntary settlement made by the father is fraudulent as to any mortgage by himself; otherwise, as to a mortgage made by the son. Jones v. Purefoy, 1 Vern. 46.

From Heir.]—A purchaser for value from an heir is not entitled, under the 27 Eliz. c. 4 to set aside a voluntary conveyance by his ancestor. Lewis v. Rees, 3 K. & J. 132: 26 L. J., Ch. 101; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 12; 5 W. R. 96.

—— Bond.]—Where obligor in bond binds his heir, and suffers land to descend, and heir aliens the land, relief was given against him and purchaser. Bateman v. Bateman, 1 Eq. Abr. 149.

Right of Heir.]—Semble, the heir-at-law of the author of a voluntary deed cannot avoid the deed under the stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4, by a conveyance for value. Parker v. Carter, 4 Hare, 409.

An heir cannot take advantage of the want of consideration to defeat his ancestor's voluntary conveyance bonâ fide executed. Lewis v. Rees, 3 K. & J. 132; 26 L. J., Ch. 101; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 12; 5 W. R. 96.

From Devisee.]—A purchaser from a devisee of one who has made a voluntary conveyance during life is not entitled, under 27 Eliz. c. 4, to avoid the voluntary conveyance. Doe d. Newman v. Rusham, 17 Q. B. 723; 21 L. J., Q. B. 139; 16 Jur. 359.

Assignment of Equitable Interest—Legal Estate got in—Sale by Beneficiaries under Will.]—Where an assignment was made by a settlor of an equitable interest upon definite and declared trusts in favour of volunteers, the legal estate being outstanding and subsequently got in by the settlor and sold by persons interested under his will:—Held, that claimants under the settlements were entitled to the assistance of the court against the owner of the legal estate to have the trusts of the settlement carried into execution. Gilbert v. Overton, 2 H. & M. 110; 33 L. J., Ch. 683; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 721; 10 L. T. 900; 12 W. R. 1141.

3. Consideration.

a. Valuable Consideration.

Generally.]—In deciding whether a deed is voluntary or not, the court will anxiously lay hold of any circumstances showing a consideration moving from the grantee to the grantor. Rosher v. Williams, 44 L. J., Ch. 419; L. R. 20 Eq. 210; 32 L. T. 387; 23 W. R. 561.

What is sufficient.]—A settlement purporting to be voluntary was made in consideration of a loan of 150*l.* given on the security of a promissory note, payable on demand:—Held, that the consideration was sufficient to exclude the operation of 27 Eliz. c. 4, and that the settlement was good against a subsequent purchaser for value. Bayspoole v. Collins, 40 L. J., Ch. 289; L. R. 6 Ch. 228; 25 L. T. 282; 19 W. R. 363.

A deed conveying the property of an intestate, upon trust, in pursuance of an agreement for the division of such property, made soon after the death of the intestate, between his sister and heiress-at-law, her husband, and her illegitimate son, and which agreement was founded on the supposition that the intestate had made a will disposing of his property in favour of the illegitimate son, which will had not been found:—Held, not to be voluntary within the statute of Elizabeth; but supported and enforced against the heiress-at-law and her husband, and also against subsequent purchasers from them for valuable consideration with notice of the trust deed. Heap v. Tonge, 9 Hare, 90; 20 L. J., Ch. 661.

Under the agreement and trust deed, other children of the sister and heiress-at-law, both legitimate and illegitimate, besides the child in whose favour it was suggested that a will might have been made, took interests in the property of the intestate; and it was held that the deed was not voluntary as to such other parties, but that they were within the consideration of the family contract. Ib.

A contract for sale for value, which had been entered into by a vendor upwards of ninety years of age, was upon his death resisted by his devisee, on the ground that the vendor had, by a deed executed by him before the date of the contract, conveyed the property in fee to the devisee, his great-nephew. The deed was expressed to be in consideration of natural love and affection, and contained a covenant by the grantee to "commence" a house upon the property according to plans to be furnished by the grantor; and that, if the grantor failed to furnish such plans, then the grantee "would build such a house as he, the grantee, should think fit." No house was ever commenced, and the deed contained no proviso for re-entry or other penalties for breach of covenant. Upon a bill by the purchaser for specific performance:—Held, that the deed was purely voluntary, there being an absence of any consideration by way of payment or benefit moving from the grantee to the grantor, and specific performance decreed accordingly. Rosher v. Williams, 44 L. J., Ch. 419; L. R. 20 Eq. 210; 32 L. T. 387; 23 W. R. 561.

—— Concurrence in Conveyance.]—The concurrence of a necessary party, in a conveyance containing a limitation without consideration, does not amount to a consideration, where the limitation is shown, by circumstances apparent on the face of the conveyance, and of other conveyances forming part of the transaction, not to have been made for the benefit, or at the desire, of such party, and the concurrence of such party does not appear to have been a part of the contract at the time. Doe d. Ravenstock v. Rolfe, 8 A. & E. 650; 3 N. & P. 648.

—— Release of Adverse Claim.]—The release of an adverse claim to a litigated estate is a good and valuable consideration in a deed to avoid a former voluntary grant by virtue of 27 Eliz. c. 4, although the releasee was not party to the original suit, but came in by consent, and entered into an order of reference; and although he would not have been bound by the judgment in the original suit. Hill v. Exeter (Bishop), 2 Taunt. 69; 11 R. R. 527.

—— Post-nuptial Settlement—Wife parting with her Interest.]—A. and his wife, tenants in fee, in 1818 mortgaged their estate to B., the proviso for redemption being that on payment of the mortgage money B. should reconvey to A. and his wife, their heirs or assigns, or unto such other person or persons, and for such intents and purposes, and in such manner and form as A. and his wife, or the survivor of them, or the heirs or assigns of such survivor, should appoint. In pursuance of a covenant in the mortgage deed, a fine was levied by A. and his wife. In 1823 the mortgage money was repaid, and in 1827, by a deed reciting these circumstances, B., by the direction of A. and wife, conveyed, and A. and wife appointed trustee, the property to be held to the use of the wife for life, then of A. for life, and afterwards of S. (a daughter) and her children. After the death of the wife, A. in 1854 conveyed the estate of his son for a valuable consideration. The son, after A.'s death, instituted a suit to set aside the settlement of 1827 as voluntary and void against himself, a purchaser for value. Kindersley, V.-C., made a decree in the plaintiff's favour [4 Jur. (N.S.) 963], but upon appeal:—

Held, that a power was created by the proviso in the deed of 1818, which enabled A. and his wife effectually to convey their interests, as they did by the settlement of 1827, without levying a fine; and that the wife's parting with her interest for the purpose of the settlement was sufficient to prevent the settlement being voluntary on defendant's part, and accordingly the plaintiff's bill was dismissed with costs. Atkinson v. Smith, 28 L. J., Ch. 2; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1160; 7 W. R. 42—L.JJ.

—— Subsequent Mortgage by Husband and Wife.]—A married woman, having become entitled under a will to freehold and leasehold property for her sole and separate use, joined her husband in making a settlement, whereby the husband and wife conveyed the freeholds, and the husband alone demised the leaseholds, subject to the annual payment of a shilling, if demanded, to trustees, upon trust for the wife for her separate use for life, remainder to the husband for life, remainder for the children (if any), with ultimate remainder to the wife absolutely. Two years afterwards the husband and wife (there being no children of the marriage) made a mortgage of the property:—Held, that the conveyance by the husband, though binding on the estate by the curtesy which he would have had in his wife's freeholds, if there had been issue, in the absence of any conveyance by her, was not sufficient to raise a consideration moving from the husband: and that the settlement was voluntary and void under the statute as against the mortgagee. Shurmur v. Sedgwick, 53 L. J., Ch. 87; 24 Ch. D. 597; 49 L. T. 156; 31 W. R. 884.

Mortgage for Benefit of Another—Indemnity and Settlement by Person benefited.]—A. mortgaged his own estate for 5,000*l.* for the benefit of B., and B. (pursuant to an agreement to that effect with A.) conveyed his estate, not only as an indemnity to A., but also to uses for the benefit of his own (B.'s) children and their issue:—Held, that there was a sufficient valuable consideration as between A. and B. to support the limitations to B.'s children, as against subsequent purchasers for valuable consideration from B. Held, also, that this court would have specifically enforced the whole agreement at the suit of A. Ford v. Stuart, 15 Beav. 493; 21 L. J., Ch. 514.

Mortgage—Additional security, not communicated to Mortgagee—Subsequent Mortgage of Lands comprised in further Security.]—A solicitor, having mortgaged an estate to the trustee of his settlement, fraudulently deposited with a creditor the title deeds which were in his possession as solicitor for the mortgagees, suppressing the fact of the original mortgage. In 1871 he mortgaged other lands to H. and T. in fee. He died insolvent in 1872, and shortly after his death a deed of November, 1860, was found in his safe, by which he had demised to the original mortgagee for the term of 400 years some of the lands comprised in the mortgage of 1871 by way of further security for the amount due on the original mortgage. No consideration was stated in this deed, and the conclusion was that it had never been communicated to the original mortgagee, or been out of B.'s possession:—Held, that the deed of November, 1860, was fraudulent and void, under 27 Eliz. c. 4, as against H. and T. Barker, In re, Jones v. Bygott, 44 L. J., Ch. 487; 23 W. R. 944.

Held, also, that the circumstances of the solicitor having been solicitor to the original mortgagee did not entitle the latter to claim the benefit of the deed as if it had been actually communicated to him. Ib.

Conveyance of Right of Presentation.]—A conveyance of the interest of one of four sisters, having the right of presentation, at a time when the church was full, of the clerk, presented by the eldest, in consideration of twenty shillings, of true and faithful services done, and for good and valuable consideration, is not on the face of it fraudulent against a subsequent purchaser. Gully v. Exeter (Bishop), 10 B. & C. 584; 2 M. & P. 266; 8 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 281.

Conveyance in Trust to Pay Debts, with Remainder for Wife and Children—Purchaser under New South Wales District Courts Act.]—Where a debtor conveyed all his real estate upon trust to sell and pay off his debts, and as to any ultimate surplus to pay the same to trustees to be held by them in trust for the separate use of his wife for life, and after her decease in trust for their children in equal shares as tenants in common:—Held, in a suit by a subsequent purchaser for value (at a sale in execution) of the grantor's interest in some lands comprised in the conveyance, that the deed of conveyance was not void under 27 Eliz. c. 4, as against a purchaser for value under the New South Wales District Courts Act, 1858, ss. 78 & 79. Godfrey v. Poole, 57 L. J., P. C. 78; 13 App. Cas. 497; 58 L. T. 685; 37 W. R. 357—P. C.

Failure of Consideration ex post facto.]—The failure by matter ex post facto, of what was at the date of a conveyance of land sufficient to constitute a valuable consideration for it, will not operate retrospectively so as to render the conveyance liable to be defeated, under the statute 10 Car. 1, sess. 2, c. 3 [similar to 27 Eliz. c. 4], by a subsequent conveyance for value of the same land by the same grantor to other uses. Paget v. Paget, 9 L. R. Ir. 128.

Consideration—Quantum of.]—In considering the operation of the 27 Eliz. c. 4, the court only considers whether the transaction is one purely voluntary or whether it is one of bargain, and the mere quantum of consideration is not material. Townend v. Toker, 35 L. J., Ch. 608; L. R. 1 Ch. 446; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 477; 14 L. T. 531; 14 W. R. 806.

—— What is Valuable.]—A settlor who was seised of an estate in fee simple, subject to mortgages, settled it upon herself for life, with remainder to her nephew in fee, the sole consideration expressed upon the instrument being natural love and affection, and a covenant by the nephew to pay off the mortgages when called on, and to indemnify the settlor against the same, and against all proceedings and costs in relation thereto. The settlor afterwards contracted to sell the estate to a purchaser for value, who filed his bill against the volunteer and the settlor for a specific performance of the contract:—Held, first, that the covenant for the payment of the mortgage money and of indemnity constituted a valuable consideration for the settlement, and took the case out of the operation of the 27 Eliz. c. 4. Ib.

—— Evidence of.]—Held, secondly, that evidence was admissible to show valuable consideration, ultra what appeared upon the face of the deed. Ib.

—— Parties to Suit.]—Held, thirdly, that the volunteer was a proper party to the bill. Ib.

—— Evidence of.]—When a settlement is expressed to be made in consideration of natural love and affection, and no other consideration is expressed in the deed, evidence is admissible to prove that valuable consideration was given for the settlement, but such evidence must be most conclusive in order to induce the court to uphold the settlement as against a subsequent mortgagee for value, even though the latter had notice of the settlement. Levy v. Creighton, 31 L. T. 1.

The statement in a deed of settlement, executed after marriage, was that it was made in consideration of 5*s.*, and divers other good and valuable considerations:—Held, that this statement did not, as against strangers to the settlement, amount to evidence that it was not voluntary; and, a defendant claiming against it as a purchaser for valuable consideration, and insisting at the bar that the settlement was fraudulent and void under the statute 27 Eliz. c. 4, the court directed an inquiry whether the settlement was founded on any and what valuable consideration. Kelson v. Kelson, 10 Hare, 385; 22 L. J., Ch. 745; 17 Jur. 129; 1 W. R. 143.

Practice—Principles of Court's Intervention.]—Distinction upon the want of consideration upon a contract merely voluntary: this court will do nothing but take jurisdiction upon a trust actually created, unless perhaps against a party having a right to put an end to it by his own act under a sole power of revocation, by analogy to the distinction between the cases where an entail can be barred by fine, and where a recovery is necessary. Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 99.

b. Settlements on Marriage.

Limitations in favour of issue—Settlor, having no issue, mortgages—Effect as to Successive Limitations.]—A., having the fee simple of an estate, on his marriage settles it to the use of self for life, remainder to trustees for 100 years to secure wife's jointure; remainder to other trustees for 500 years, for raising portions; remainder to the use of first and other sons of the marriage in tail male; remainder to first and other sons in tail male of any other marriage; remainder to the use of divers persons for life, etc.; with ultimate remainder to A., his heirs and assigns for ever. A., having no issue, executed a mortgage of part of the estate to B., and created a term of 500 years for securing the money lent; A. died without ever having had any lawful issue; and B. filed his bill to have the limitations, subsequent to those of the benefit of A.'s issue, declared voluntary as against him:—The court made a decree in favour of the security. Gray v. Legard, 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 80.

Voluntary Settlement, what—Collaterals.]—By a marriage settlement, an estate, the property of the wife was limited in default of children of the wife to trustees, in trust to sell and divide the proceeds amongst the brothers and sisters of the wife. The wife died without issue:—Held, that the limitation in favour of her brothers and sisters was voluntary, and therefore void against the purchaser. Cotterell v. Homer, 13 Sim. 506; 7 Jur. 544.

Volunteers under Settlement—Subsequent Mortgage.]—A woman on her marriage conveyed certain property to trustees to the use of herself for life, and after her decease to the use of her husband, and after the decease of the survivor to the use of her son born before the marriage, and after his death to the use of his children as tenants in common, with an ultimate limitation in favour of the heirs of the woman, subject to a general power of appointment not in favour of any particular persons within the marriage consideration. After the decease of her husband the woman joined with the son in a mortgage of the property for valuable consideration:—Held, that the children of the son were volunteers, and that the limitations in their favour was defeated by the mortgage, and that there was nothing to bring their case within the principle laid down in Newstead v. Searles, (1 Atk. 264). De Mestre v. West, 60 L. J., P. C. 66; [1891] A. C. 264; 64 L. T. 375; 55 J. P. 613.

Ex post facto consideration—Prior voluntary settlement.]—The court, having come to the conclusion, as a matter of fact, that the marriage of W. had taken place upon the faith of a previous voluntary settlement made by his father:—Held, first, that the marriage supplied an ex post facto consideration for the settlement. Guardian Assurance Co. v. Avonmore (Viscount), Ir. R. 6 Eq. 396.

—— Presumption of.]—Held, secondly, that, in such a case there is no presumption as to whether or not a marriage had taken place on the faith of the voluntary deed, but that it is the duty of the court in the absence of direct proof, to form a reasonable judgment, by way of inference from the circumstances shown to have existed, whether or not the parties did know of the deed and act on it. Ib.

Bond before Marriage, afterwards Settlement.]—A bond before marriage to settle a jointure, and afterwards a settlement is made which settles the estate on the wife, and the issue of the marriage. This settlement is good as to the jointure, but fraudulent as to the children in respect of a purchaser. Jason v. Jervis, 1 Vern. 286.

Settlement by Widower—Limitation to first Wife's Children—Mortgage.]—By a settlement made on the second marriage of a widower, land belonging to him was conveyed in trust for his children by a first marriage absolutely, and personalty belonging to the wife was settled on her absolutely. The husband afterwards mortgaged the land:—Held, that the settlement was voluntary as regards the children of the husband, and that by 27 Eliz. c. 4, the limitation in their favour was void as against the mortgagee. Cameron and Wells, In re, 57 L. J., Ch. 69; 37 Ch. D. 32; 57 L. T. 645; 36 W. R. 5.

Settlement on Second Marriage—Illegitimate child by first husband.]—A widow, having an illegitimate child by her first husband before her marriage with him, entered into marriage articles with a second husband, the settlement reciting that she was seised in fee of certain lands and that it was agreed on the treaty for the intended marriage that the lands, &c., should be settled as therein mentioned, and then the property was settled to the use of the wife for life; remainder to the use of the husband for life; remainder in fee to the child, described as her son, by her late husband begotten. The husband and wife afterwards joined in mortgaging the property, and the mortgagees had sold:—Held, that the limitation in favour of the child was not void as voluntary and fraudulent within 27 Eliz. c. 4, and that he was entitled to recover in ejectment. Dickenson v. Wright, 29 L. J., Ex. 150; 2 L. T. 155; 8 W. R. 418.

c. Post-nuptial Settlements.

Generally.]—A settlement by a tenant in fee for the maintenance of herself and children for her life, to raise portions for younger children, and the surplus to her heir-at-law, she having then many sons and daughters, is a voluntary settlement, and void against purchasers, under 27 Eliz. c. 4. Goodright d. Humphreys v. Moses, 2 Wm. Bl. 1019.

Voluntary settlement void, under the stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4, against a subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration with notice, though a fair provision for a wife and children. An injunction restraining the husband from selling was refused, but a demurrer by the husband overruled as covering too much, the plaintiff being entitled until a sale to an execution of the trust. Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 84; 11 R. R. 151.

A settlor being under no obligation, either at law or in equity, to settle certain land which he had, in consequence of the inability of C. to convey it, purchased of the trustees of H., without the intervention of C., a settlement of it, being made after marriage, was held purely voluntary, and void as against a bonâ fide purchaser for a valuable consideration. Doe d. Barnes v. Roe, 6 Scott, 525; 4 Bing. (N.C.) 737; 1 Arn. 279.

Consideration, what Sufficient.]—The owner of a freehold estate, which was worth beyond a mortgage to which it was subject, about 1,300*l.*, was persuaded by a relative of his wife to make a post-nuptial settlement of it on his wife and children. As an inducement to do this, he agreed to advance him 150*l.* on his promissory note to meet the interest on the mortgage which was then in arrear. The settlement was accordingly prepared and executed, but no mention was made in it of the advance of 150*l.*:—Held, on a bill by a subsequent mortgagee to establish priority over the settlement, that the advance of 150*l.* was a sufficient valuable consideration to support the settlement under 27 Eliz. c. 4, Bayspoole v. Collins, 40 L. J., Ch. 289; L. R. 6 Ch. 228; 25 L. T. 282; 19 W. R. 363.

Settlement for Value and Advancement of Issue.]—A settlement made after marriage, for valuable consideration, for advancement of the issue, may be considered as a purchase, and defeat a subsequent purchaser; and the value paid is not to be too strictly examined, there being room for bounty. Jones v. Marsh, Ca. t. Talbot, 64.

Settlement of a portion paid.]—Settlement after marriage of a portion paid is on good consideration, and equal to one made before marriage. Ramsden v. Hylton, 2 Ves. 305.

In consideration of portion paid.]—If A., in the lifetime of his first wife, settles lands to the use of himself for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and the wife dies without issue: and A., on his second marriage agrees, in consideration of a portion paid, to settle part of the lands as a jointure on his second wife; the Court will set aside the first settlement as fraudulent against the second wife, who is a purchaser. Douglasse v. Waad, 1 Ch. Ca. 100.

Consideration—Something given up by both Husband and Wife.]—In an action for specific performance of an agreement to sell certain freehold property, a question arose as to whether a post-nuptial settlement was void under 27 Eliz. c. 4, as being a voluntary settlement. Previously to the settlement the property had been settled on the wife for life, with remainder to the husband in fee, and the wife was absolutely entitled to a one-seventh share of certain other property. The settlement contained a recital in the following words: "Whereas the said J. D. and E. D. are desirous that the hereinbefore-recited deed-poll should be altered, and that the property thereby settled should be re-settled as hereinafter appearing, and also that the said one-seventh share of the said hereditaments at Whitechapel, so as aforesaid vested in the said E. D., should be included in the new settlement intended to be hereby made," and the wife purported to revoke the deed-poll mentioned, and to join with the husband in re-settling the property upon trusts, giving the husband a life-interest in the whole after her decease, and subject thereto upon trust for third parties:—Held, that there was clear evidence of a bargain between the parties, and that, as both husband and wife gave up something in order to make a re-settlement, the settlement was not voluntary within the statute. Schreiber v. Dinkel, 54 L. T. 911—C. A. Affirming 54 L. J., Ch. 241.

—— Relinquishment of Dower—Wife not Executing.]—A person being entitled to the reversion in fee of certain lands, assigned by post-nuptial settlement the said lands to trustees in trust for himself for life and subject thereto to the intent that his wife (not a party to the deed) should, in lieu of dower, receive an annuity for her life. The settlor subsequently mortgaged the said lands, no mention being made of the settlement, and afterwards died:—Held, that as against the mortgagees the settlement was a voluntary deed and void; and that the alleged relinquishment of the wife's dower was not a valuable consideration for the settlement, as her dower still remained. Conlan's Estate, In re, 29 L. R. Ir. 199.

Conveyance by Married Woman.]—A voluntary conveyance by a married woman is within the statute against fraudulent conveyances (27 Eliz. c. 4). Butterfield v. Heath, 15 Beav. 408; 22 L. J., Ch. 270.

Of Wife's Property.]—Husband and wife executed a post-nuptial settlement of the wife's estate in favour of themselves and their children:—Held, that it was void as against a subsequent purchaser from them for valuable consideration. Butterfield v. Heath, 15 Beav. 408; 22 L. J., Ch. 270.

Post-nuptial settlement of property belonging to the wife, upon trusts for the benefit of the husband and wife and her children, supported as against a subsequent mortgage of the property by the husband and wife. Hewison v. Negus, 22 L. J., Ch. 655; 17 Jur. 567; 1 W. R. 262.

Where a husband makes a post-nuptial settlement of property belonging to his wife, on his wife and children, otherwise unprovided for, if it be such as a court of equity, on a bill filed by the wife for a settlement, would direct to be made, it is not voluntary within the meaning of the 10 Car. 1, sess. 2, c. 8, s. 1. Ashe v. Lowe, Hay. & J. 287.

—— Of Wife's Realty.] — Real estate was devised to a single woman with a declaration of a wish that if she should marry she would before marriage settle it to her separate use for life and to such uses as she should by will appoint. She married without a settlement, and afterwards, by an acknowledged deed expressed to be made for giving effect to the testator's wish, the husband and wife conveyed the land to trustees during the life of the wife upon trust for her for her separate use without power of anticipation, and after her death to the use of the husband for life, with remainder to their children as therein mentioned. Subsequently the husband and wife mortgaged the property without notice of the settlement:—Held, that the settlement was for valuable consideration, and not void as against the mortgagee under 27 Eliz. c. 4. Teasdale v. Braithwaite, 46 L. J., Ch. 725; 5 Ch. D. 630; 36 L. T. 601; 25 W. R. 546—C. A.

—— Of Wife's Freeholds.]—By a post-nuptial settlement, freeholds belonging to the wife were settled by the husband and wife to the use of the wife for life, and after her decease to such uses as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of her children, with a power during her life for the wife to lease at rack rent, and with a power of sale and exchange in the trustees with her consent:—Held, that the settlement was for valuable consideration, and therefore not void under 27 Eliz. c. 4, and that the same must be upheld against a subsequent mortgagee. Foster and Lister, In re, 46 L. J., Ch. 480; 6 Ch. D. 87; 36 L. T. 582; 25 W. R. 553.

—— Marriage with Deceased Sister's Husband.] — In July 1853, W., at that time a widow, married N., the widower of her deceased sister. In October, by a deed which purported to be a post-nuptial settlement and made between N. and A., his wife of the one part, and a trustee of the other part, they conveyed and assigned real and personal estate belonging to A., in trust for N. absolutely. The settlors lived together until 1859, when A. left the house of N., and ceased to reside with him. In 1860 A. assigned the same property to her brother C. for value; and, N. having advertised the property for sale, he instituted a suit for the purpose of having the deed of October set aside. A. was subsequently joined as co-plaintiff, and she stated that it was not until 1859 that she became fully aware of the invalidity of the marriage:—Held, that the deed must be set aside on the ground that the consideration failed. Coulson v. Allison, 2 Giff. 279; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1140; 3 L. T. 260. Affirmed, 3 L. T. 763—L.JJ.

Revocable Settlement of Wife's Freeholds—Subsequent Mortgage.] — By a post-nuptial settlement, lands, of which the wife, before the marriage, had been seised in fee, were settled, subject to successive life estates for husband and wife, upon the children of the marriage, reserving to the husband and wife power of revocation, and power to charge the lands with 1,000*l*. The husband and wife executed a subsequent settlement, in conveying the lands in trust for the wife for her separate use during their joint lives, and, subject thereto, and to an annuity for the survivor, in trust for the children of the marriage. Afterwards both husband and wife purported to mortgage the lands in fee. There were children of the marriage who, after the death of their parents, the mortgagors, contended that the mortgage only affected the life estate limited to their mother by the second settlement:—Held, that the settlements were deeds for value, so that the mortgage could not prevail against the estates in remainder of the children of the marriage; also, that the second settlement, operating as a revocation of the first, extinguished the general power to charge 1,000*l*. thereby reserved. Bell's Estate, In re, 11 L. R. Ir. 512.

Assignment of Wife's Interest for benefit of Children — Covenant by Husband, enforced against Purchaser from Husband and Wife.]—A term of years was held upon trust for the separate use or E., a married woman, for her life, with remainder for T., her husband, for life, with remainder for their children. There were several children: and by deed, reciting that E., in order to further the prospects in life of the children, had consented to assign her life estate for the benefit of the children, and that T., for the same purpose, agreed to assign his life interest, in case he should survive his wife. E. assigned her life interest to trustees, for the benefit of the children; and T. covenanted that, if he should survive his wife, he would, if called on by the trustees, assign his estate and interest on the same trusts. E. and T. subsequently, for a valuable consideration, assigned to H.:—Held, that the children were entitled to enforce against H. a specific performance of T.'s covenant to assign his interest. Joyce v. Hutton, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 71.

Articles Upheld as for Valuable Consideration.] —The wife of A. claimed an annuity on his estates under a voluntary deed, or had a right to dower. She concurred in a sale of some of his estates to a stranger, and joined in a covenant to levy a fine, and was induced to do so by other estates of her husband being settled by articles under which the plaintiff (her grandson) claimed. The articles recited other considerations, but there was no proof of any; no fine was ever levied in pursuance of the covenant, but the purchaser was never disturbed. The articles were upheld as for sufficient consideration against a subsequent purchaser for value. Fitzmaurice v. Sadleir, Ir. R. 9 Eq. 595.

Agreement before Marriage, by Infant—Different Settlement Afterwards.]—In 1857 an infant engaged to be married wrote to his intended wife, promising that on coming of age he would give her seven specified houses. The marriage took place in 1859 after he came of age. In 1872 he executed a deed, not referring to any previous agreement, by which he conveyed the seven and two other houses to trustees upon trust for his wife for life, for her separate use, and, after her death, upon trust for himself for life, and, after the death of the survivor, upon such trusts as the wife should by deed or will appoint, and, in default of appointment, in trust for her in fee. He subsequently agreed to sell three of the houses, and the purchaser sued for specific performance :—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to specific performance, for that, as the settlement did not refer to any previous agreement, dealt with other property than that mentioned in the letter of 1857, and settled the property in a different way, there was no ratification in writing of the promise contained in that letter, and the settlement therefore was voluntary and void as against a purchaser for value. Trowell v. Shenton, 47 L. J., Ch. 738 ; 8 Ch. D. 318 ; 38 L. T. 369 ; 26 W. R. 837—C. A.

Purchaser's Liability as to Payment.]—A., by settlement after marriage, not being indebted, conveyed to trustees to family uses, reserving a power to sell, but covenanting that the purchase-money should be paid to the trustees, to be laid out to the same uses ; he sells to B., who has notice of the covenant, but pays his money to A., who dies insolvent ; B.'s representatives shall not be obliged to repay the money, the settlement being voluntary and fraudulent as against a purchaser. Evelyn v. Templar, 2 Bro. C. C. 148.

d. Leaseholds.

Generally.]—A lessee at a rack-rent is a purchaser for a valuable consideration. Goodright d. Humphreys v. Moses, 2 Wm. Bl. 1019.

There is no abstract and inflexible rule that every assignment of leasehold premises subject to a rent must necessarily be an assurance for good consideration within s. 14 of the 10 Car. 1, s. 2, c. 3 (Ir.), so as to prevail against a subsequent purchase for value. Lee v. Matthews, 6 L. R. Ir. 530.

Semble, the question in each case is, Was the dealing a bargain or a gift? The existence of onerous liabilities from which the assignee covenants to indemnify the assignor may give the transaction the character of a bargain, while, on the other hand, the gift of a valuable interest in lands is not less a gift because the property so given carries with it certain obligations. Ib.

Semble, the question in each case arises, Was the transaction a bargain involving mutual considerations, or a gift involving merely bounty from one party to the other? Price v. Jenkins (5 Ch. D. 619) dissented from. Gardiner v. Gardiner (12 Ir. C. L. R. 565) followed. Ib.

Premises held under a lease for an unexpired residue of twenty-five years, subject to a yearly rent of 1*l.* 10*s.*, were assigned by the lessee to his son-in-law the plaintiff, in consideration of natural love and affection, as recited in the deed of assignment. The lessee subsequently assigned the premises to the defendants in consideration of 50*l.* In an action by the plaintiff to recover possession, no evidence was given of any valuable consideration passing from the plaintiff, nor did the plaintiff require any question to be left to the jury, and the judge at the trial directed a verdict for the defendants :—Held, that the direction was right. Ib.

A bonâ fide settlement of leasehold property is not a voluntary settlement, since the obligation is cast upon the assignee of the lease of paying the rent and performing the covenants. Doble, Ex parte and In re, 38 L. T. 183 ; 26 W. R. 407.

A widower, on his second marriage, made a settlement, in which he assigned a leasehold property to trustees, one of whom was his son by a former marriage, upon trust for himself for life, and after his death for his said son. He afterwards contracted to sell the leasehold property to the plaintiff :—Held, that the settlement of the leasehold property on the son was not a voluntary conveyance under 27 Eliz. c. 4, on the ground that the assignment of leasehold property to which liability is attached is in itself a conveyance for valuable consideration. Price v. Jenkins, 46 L. J., Ch. 805 ; 5 Ch. D. 619 ; 37 L. T. 51—C. A. Reversing 25 W. R. 427. But see Ridler, In re, Ridler v. Ridler, 52 L. J., Ch. 343 ; 22 Ch. D. 74 ; 48 L. T. 396 ; 31 W. R. 93 ; 47 J. P. 479—C. A.

An assignment of leaseholds in consideration of natural love and affection, held not voluntary. Price v. Jenkins (5 Ch. D. 619) followed. Harris v. Tubb, 58 L. J., Ch. 434 ; 42 Ch. D. 79 ; 60 L. T. 699 ; 38 W. R. 75.

Surrender of Lease.] — Quære, whether a surrender of an old lease was a "conveyance" within s. 1 of 27 Eliz. c. 4, which would prevail over a previous settlement, assuming such settlement to be a voluntary conveyance within the same statute. Lulham, In re, Brinton v. Lulham, 53 L. T. 9 ; 33 W. R. 788—C. A. Affirming 53 L. J., Ch. 928.

See also II. A. 3. g. ante, col. 323.

4. Notice, Effect of.

Generally.]—Purchase is good, though notice of voluntary settlement, which is void. Tomkins v. Ennis, 1 Eq. Abr. 334.

If a settlement or other conveyance is void against a purchaser within 27 Eliz. c. 4, notice to the purchaser makes no difference. Chapman v. Emery, Cowp. 260.

Voluntary settlement, though free from actual fraud, meritorious as a provision for relations, void against a subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration, with notice, whether by conveyance or articles. Specific performance decreed in the latter case. Buckle v. Mitchell, 18 Ves. 100 ; 11 R. R. 155.

Notice of the contents of a voluntary instrument has no effect in postponing a purchaser for valuable consideration. Nixon v. Hamilton, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 55.

Notice of the contents of a voluntary settlement has no effect even in equity ; notice of a covenant in a voluntary settlement, that the purchase-money should be paid to trustees to be laid out in other lands to be settled to the same uses :—Held, immaterial. Buckle v. Mitchell, 18 Ves. 112.

—— Inference of Fraud.]—A voluntary settlement of lands, made in consideration of natural love and affection, is void as against a subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration, though with notice of the prior settlement before all the purchase-money was paid or the deeds executed; though the settlor had other property at the time of such prior settlement, and did not appear to be then indebted, and there was no fraud in fact in the transaction; for the law, which is in all cases the judge of fraud and covin arising out of facts and intents, infers fraud in this case, upon the construction of the 27 Eliz. c. 4. Doe d. Otley v. Manning, 9 East, 59; 9 R. R. 503.

Covenant to lay out Purchase-money.]—Court of equity will not act in favour of a mere voluntary settlement, and therefore, upon a subsequent purchase with notice, and covenant to lay out the money to the same uses, will not lay hold of the money. Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 93; 11 R. R. 151.

Post-nuptial Settlement—Covenant to settle Purchase-moneys—Payment.]—A., by settlement after marriage, not being indebted, conveys to trustees to family uses, reserving a power to sell, but covenanting that the purchase-money should be paid to the trustees, to be laid out to the same uses. He sells to B., who has notice of the covenant, but pays his money to A., who dies insolvent. B.'s representatives shall not be obliged to repay the money, the settlement being voluntary and fraudulent as against a purchaser. Evelyn v. Templar, 2 Bro. C. C. 148.

Rights of Sub-purchaser.]—A purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice of a voluntary settlement, from a person who bought without notice, shall shelter himself under the first purchaser; but he cannot defend himself in equity upon articles only. Brandlyn v. Ord, 1 Atk. 571.

Sub-purchase from Fraudulent Purchaser.]—The title of a purchaser for a valuable consideration cannot be defeated by a prior voluntary settlement of which he had no notice, though he purchased of one who had obtained a conveyance by fraud, but of which fraud he, the purchaser, was ignorant. Doe d. Bothel v. Martyr, 1 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 332; 8 R. R. 821.

Generally — Practice — Injunction.]—Voluntary settlement void under the stat. 27 Eliz., c. 4, against a subsequent purchaser for a valuable consideration with notice, though a fair provision for a wife and children. An injunction restraining the husband from selling was refused, but a demurrer by the husband overruled as covering too much, the plaintiff being entitled until a sale to an execution of the trust. Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 84; 11 R. R. 151.

Setting Aside after Lapse of Time.]—Fraudulent conveyance set aside, as against a purchaser with notice, notwithstanding a great length of time which had elapsed since the original transaction. Alden v. Gregory, 2 Eden, 280.

5. Specific Performance.

a. At Suit of Purchaser.

Generally.]—In a suit for specific performance against a vendor and those claiming under a voluntary settlement made by him previously to the contract for sale, the court refused to declare that the settlement was void under the 27 Eliz. c. 4. Fletcher v. Ketteman, 40 L. J., Ch. 624.

A. B. executed a voluntary settlement of real estate in favour of his wife and children, and afterwards contracted to sell it for valuable consideration. The purchaser filed a bill for specific performance against the vendor, his wife, children, and the trustees, in whom the legal estate was vested. One of the children was out of the jurisdiction, and did not appear. The court decreed a specific performance, and ordered the trustees to convey to the purchaser, saving rights of the absent party. Willats v. Busby, 5 Beav. 193; 12 L. J., Ch. 105.

b. At Suit of Settlor.

Generally.]—The author of a voluntary settlement cannot file a bill for the specific performance of a contract afterwards entered into by him to sell the settled estate. Johnson v. Legard, Turn. & R. 281.

A court of equity will not assist a vendor in defeating a prior voluntary settlement made by himself. Smith v. Garland, 2 Mer. 123; 16 R. R. 154.

Purchaser objecting to title on the ground of a voluntary settlement made by the vendor, a bill for specific performance by the vendor was dismissed, and an exception to the Master's report approving the title allowed. Ib.

On a bill by a vendor for specific performance, the purchaser set up a voluntary settlement as an objection to the title, but said he was willing to complete the purchase on having a good title. He had been let into possession as purchaser, and paid part of his purchase-money, and had paid off a mortgage and got a conveyance of the legal estate and possession of the title-deeds:—Held, that, notwithstanding the voluntary settlement the vendor was entitled to a decree for completing the purchase. Peter v. Nicolls, L. R. 11 Eq. 391; 24 L. T. 381; 19 W. R. 618.

Semble, that the principle of Smith v. Garland (2 Mer. 120; 16 R. R. 154) does not apply to a defendant who says he is willing to complete on having a good title. Ib.

At Suit of Creditors of Vendor.]—The court was of opinion that limitations in a marriage settlement to the brothers of the settlor and their issue were voluntary; but thought, under the circumstances, that a purchaser could not be compelled to take the title depending on the validity of those limitations, and dismissed a bill by the creditors of the vendor after his death for specific performance; there having been subsequent dealings with the estate which might have confirmed the settlement, the agreement for purchase being suspicious, and it being doubtful whether the creditors could file such a bill. Johnson v. Legard, Turn. & R. 281; 3 Madd. 283; 6 M. & S. 60; 18 R. R. 234; id. 301.

III. EFFECT OF.

1. On Judgments, Setting Aside for Fraud.

a. In what Cases.

Probate.]—Probate obtained by fraud relieved against here, and a deed importing a consent thereto, set aside here, not in ecclesiastical court, and the defendant decreed to consent to a revocation of the probate. Barnesley v. Powel, 1 Ves. 287.

In Case of Infant.]—On a bill to set aside a decree against an infant for fraud, if the same be not fraudulent, though in every respect not so equitable, the court will not set it aside. Richmond v. Tayleur, 1 P. Wms. 734.

A decree in equity is no protection to a purchase effected by management of vendor, tenant for life, and purchaser himself, to the prejudice of the remainderman entitled to the inheritance under colour of decree in equity, the remainderman though a party to suit being an infant at the time. Colclough v. Bolger, 4 Dow, 62.

Purchase under Decree.]—Purchase of estate under decree fraudulently obtained, set aside after a great length of time. Gore v. Stacpoole, 1 Dow, 18.

Quære, whether purchaser for valuable consideration, under decree fraudulently obtained, though ignorant of fraud, can protect himself when fraud appears on face of proceedings. Id. 30.

Where sales of estates had fraudulently taken place under decrees of the court of exchequer in Ireland, obtained by collusion between the tenant for life, the mortgagee, the person in whose favour a charge had been created, and the purchaser, and where the interests of the tenant in remainder had not been protected in such suits, a decree of the court of chancery in Ireland, on his coming into possession, granting him relief on a bill filed to redeem, was affirmed by the lords. Bandon (Earl) v. Becher, 3 Cl. & F. 479; 9 Bligh (N.S.) 532.

A decree of foreclosure had on sequestration in 1777, in pursuance of 7 Geo. 2, c. 14, against an absent mortgagor, known by the plaintiff to be incompetent from mental imbecility to conduct his affairs, and advantage having been taken in the account of the state of the defendant, and of his absence, and of his having nobody to manage his defence, and a sale had in 1780, in pursuance of such decree, to the person conducting the suit, set aside as fraudulent, and an inquiry directed into the circumstances, upon the ground of which the decree and former proceedings were impeached on original bill filed in 1785 by the heir of mortgagor. Carew v. Johnston, 2 Sch. & Lef. 280.

Bill, after length of time, to set aside, for fraud, a decree which had been made in favour of a protestant discoverer:—Dismissed, and dismissal affirmed on appeal. Mulcahy v. Kennedy, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 331.

Consent Order.]—A bill to set aside, on the ground of fraudulent representation, an order in an action at law made by consent, staying the action and directing the payment of a certain sum of money by the defendant to the plaintiff, and which sum the plaintiff afterwards accepted:—Held, to be demurrable, as it did not state that the plaintiff was ignorant of the alleged representation being fraudulent, not only at the time of the order, but at the time he received the money. Dunn v. Cox, 11 Hare, 61.

It appearing that a second action had been brought by the plaintiff, and had been stayed by the court of law, in consequence of the consent order made in the first action, and that the plaintiff had taken regular proceedings at law to set aside the order staying the second action, but that order had been sustained, this court refused to aid a suit in equity brought by the plaintiff, by giving him leave to amend, upon allowing a demurrer to his bill to set aside the consent order on the ground of such alleged fraud. Ib.

After Compromise.]—A judgment obtained by fraud after a compromise was treated as a nullity. Gossain v. Gossain, 8 W. R. 196.

Fraudulent Defence put in by Solicitor, without Client's Knowledge.]—Where a solicitor has put in a fraudulent defence for his client without the knowledge of the client, making admissions on which judgment was obtained against the client:—Held, that the court had jurisdiction to set aside the judgment and permit the client to withdraw the defence, and put in a fresh defence. Williams v. Preston, 51 L. J., Ch. 927; 20 Ch. D. 672; 47 L. T. 265; 30 W. R. 555.

After Enrolment—Fraud or Mistake.]—To set aside on the ground of fraud a decree signed and enrolled, actual positive fraud ought to be shown. Mere constructive fraud is not sufficient, at all events, after long delay. Patch v. Ward, L. R. 3 Ch. 203; 18 L. T. 134; 16 W. R. 441.

—— Surprise.]—Where the enrolment of a decree is gained by surprise, the court will vacate it. Stevens v. Guppy, Turn. & R. 178.

Enrolment of a decree may be opened if the enrolment was gained by surprise, or there is some irregularity in it. Anon., 1 Vern. 131.

A decree obtained by surprise, and enrolment, vacated. Parker v. Dee, 3 Swanst. 534.

Order Ex parte.]—An order obtained ex parte was discharged on the ground of the suppression of material facts. Atkin v. Moran, Ir. R. 6 Eq. 79.

b. Proceedings for.

Generally—Fraud or Mistake.]—As to the mode of proceeding to be relieved from an admission in a decree fraudulently inserted or consented to by mistake. Davenport v. Stafford, 8 Beav. 503; 14 L. J., Ch. 414; 9 Jur. 801.

By Petition.]—A decree, though obtained by fraud, cannot be set aside by petition. Mussel v. Morgan, 3 Bro. C. C. 74.

A decree gained by fraud may be set aside by petition, as well as a judgment at law by motion; à fortiori may such decree be set aside by bill. Sheldon v. Aland, 3 P. Wms. 111.

On Original Bill.]—On suggestion of a gross fraud, the court will, upon an original bill, overrule a plea of a decree, and report made and confirmed thereon, if the suggestion of fraud be not denied. Lloyd v. Mansell, 2 P. Wms. 73.

—— Bill of Review.]—A bill of review, with matter come to the party's knowledge since the hearing, lies. Where the plaintiff in the bill has since the hearing discovered matter which would vary the decree; and where, if such matter was known to the other party, he was not in conscience obliged to have discovered it to the court; for, if the matter was known to the other party, and such as in conscience he ought to have discovered, he obtains the decree by fraud, and it ought to be set aside by original bill. Manaton v. Molesworth, 1 Eden, 25.

The plaintiffs commenced an action to restrain the defendants from infringing their patent, and obtained a judgment which was reversed by the court of appeal, who dismissed the action on the ground that the defendants' process was no infringement of the plaintiffs' patent. After the order on appeal was passed and entered, the plaintiffs applied to have the appeal reheard with fresh evidence, on the ground that, when an expert sent down by the court, and whose evidence was in fact the only material evidence before the court as to the nature of the defendants' process, examined their works, they had fraudulently concealed from him parts of the process, so that he had no opportunity of discovering the points in which it resembled that of the plaintiffs:—Held, that the court of appeal had no jurisdiction to rehear the appeal, and that the remedy of the plaintiffs was by original action analogous to a suit under the old practice to set aside a decree as obtained by fraud. Flower v. Lloyd, 6 Ch. D. 297; 37 L. T. 419.

The plaintiffs afterwards commenced an action to have it declared that the judgment on the appeal had been obtained by fraud, the defendants having made misstatements to and misled the inspector. The vice-chancellor considered the case of fraud proved, and made a decree in the plaintiffs' favour, but the court of appeal was of opinion that no fraud was proved, and dismissed the action. Semble, that an action to impeach a judgment on such grounds was not maintainable. S. C., 10 Ch. D. 327; 39 L. T. 613; 27 W. R. 496.

After Confirmation on Appeal.]—Where a judgment has been obtained by fraud, and more especially by the collusion of both parties, such judgment, although confirmed by the house of lords, may even in an inferior tribunal, be treated as a nullity. Shedden v. Patrick, 1 Macq. H. L. 535.

But the allegations of fraud and collusion must be specific, pointed and relevant, otherwise they cannot be admitted to proof. Ib.

To set aside a judgment procured by fraud, the proper course, when such judgment has been confirmed by the house of lords, is to apply to the house of lords. Ib.

Therefore it is wrong to ask the court below, upon proof of the fraud or collusion, to set aside a judgment confirmed by the house of lords. Ib.

In Case of Consent Order.]—If a plaintiff's consent to an order effecting a compromise has been obtained by fraud, his proper course is to move to have the order annulled before the judge who made it. Parker v. Simpson, 18 W. R. 204.

Jurisdiction of Court of Chancery.]—Though the court of chancery cannot review or correct a decree of the court of exchequer, yet, where such decree has been obtained collusively and fraudulently, a party whose interests are affected by it may raise in the court of chancery, either as actor or defendant, a question as to its validity. Bandon (Earl) v. Becher, 3 Cl. & F. 479; 9 Bligh (N.S.) 532.

Parties.]—To a bill to set aside for fraud a decree and purchase under it, a demurrer by the purchaser for not making creditors parties, who had proved in the office under the decree, and their debts afterwards by final decree made charges on the estate, and directed to be paid out of the purchase-money, overruled: although the decree fastened the debts on the estate, yet it did not fix them on the identical money of the purchaser. For when a valid sale shall have been made, the charge will then be transferred from the land to the purchase-money: in the meantime, it is on the land only. If the creditors were necessary parties to such a bill, the court, to be consistent, ought in all other cases to hear them before it opened a sale under its decree, which would be an intolerable grievance to the suitor. Wallace v. Smith, Beat. 381.

Evidence.]—In 1798, a marriage was solemnised by licence between a man and a female minor. Three years afterwards, in pursuance of a previous agreement, the woman instituted a suit for nullity of marriage, and a decree of nullity was pronounced, on the ground of non-consent of the minor's father. Early in the following year a daughter was born:—Held, that evidence showing that the sentence of the ecclesiastical court had been obtained by fraud and collusion was admissible. Harrison v. Southampton Corporation, 4 De G. M. & G. 137; 22 L. J., Ch. 722; 18 Jur. 1; 1 W. R. 422.

A marriage was solemnised between A. and B., but it was declared void by the ecclesiastical court. Some years afterwards a child of A. and B., en ventre sa mère at the time of the sentence, and who necessarily was no party to the proceeding, claimed property in this court as descendant of A.:—Held, first, that he was bound by the sentence, though he might avoid its effect by showing fraud and collusion in obtaining it; secondly, that such fraud and collusion must be shown to have taken place between the parties to the proceedings; and, thirdly, that proof that the costs of the unsuccessful party had been agreed to be paid, that witnesses were not examined and others not cross-examined, and that the difficulties were not interposed which might have been, did not, altogether, amount to proof of fraud and collusion. Perry v. Meddowcroft, 10 Beav. 122.

On appeal the lord chancellor, upon the claimant undertaking to file a bill to establish his claim as male lineal descendant of the father, allowed the exceptions to stand over, &c. Ib.

2. On Contracts.

Voidable—Not Void.]—A contract induced by fraud is not void, but voidable. Oakes v. Turquand, 36 L. J., Ch. 949; L. R. 2 H. L. 325; 16 L. T. 808; 15 W. R. 1201. S. P., Murray v. Mann, 2 Ex. 538; 17 L. J., Ex. 256; 12 Jur. 634.

Fraud only gives a right to avoid a contract or purchase; the property vests until avoided, and all the mesne dispositions to persons not parties to, or at least not cognisant of, the fraud, are valid. Stevenson v. Newnham, 13 C. B. 285; 22 L. J., C. P. 110; 17 Jur. 600—Ex. Ch.

Contracts which may be impeached on the ground of fraud are not void, but voidable only at the option of the party who is or may be injured by the fraud, subject to the condition that the other party, if the contract is disaffirmed, can be remitted to his former state. Urquhart v. Macpherson, 3 App. Cas. 831—P. C.

When a contract has been entered into by fraud, the person defrauded has the right to avoid it at any time, unless in the interval either he has elected to affirm it, or an innocent third person has acquired an interest under it, or the position of the fraudulent person is affected by the delay. Morrison v. Universal Marine Insurance Co., 42 L. J., Ex. 115 ; L. R. 8 Ex. 197 ; 21 W. R. 774—Ex. Ch.

Making Good—Rescission.]—Where a party, by misrepresentation, draws another into a contract, such party may be compelled to make good the representation, if that be possible ; but, if it be impossible, the person deceived may avoid the contract. The same principle applies, though the party at the time believed the statement to be true, if in the due discharge of his duty he ought to have then known otherwise. Pulsford v. Richards, 17 Beav. 87 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 559 ; 17 Jur. 865 ; 1 W. R. 295.

Third parties, who by false representations induce others to enter into contracts, are stopped from afterwards falsifying their statement, and, if necessary, may be compelled to make them good. But the false statement of one, not a party to the agreement entered into on the faith of it, is not a ground for avoiding it. Ib.

Election to Rescind—When made.]—To support a plea of rescission of a contract on the ground of fraud, it is not necessary to prove that the circumstances of the fraud were known to the defendant, and the contract rescinded before action brought. The election to rescind may be made at any time, unless there has been a previous election to affirm the contract. Clough v. L. & N. W. Ry., 41 L. J., Ex. 17 ; L. R. 7 Ex. 26 ; 25 L. T. 708 ; 20 W. R. 189—Ex. Ch.

A. purchased goods of a company, not intending to pay for them. The company delivered them to a carrier to deliver them, according to A.'s instructions, to C. The carrier afterwards held the goods for C., at his request, as a warehouseman. A. becoming bankrupt, the company demanded the goods, and the carrier redelivered them, under the mistaken supposition that the transitus was not yet over. In an action of trover against him :—Held, that an equitable plea of rescission of the contract, on the ground of A.'s fraud, to which C. was privy, would raise a good defence to the action, although the fraud was not discovered till the cross-examination of C. at the trial of the action. Ib.

Repudiation.]—In an action on a contract of sale signed by the defendant :—Held, that if, as he stated, the plaintiff had obtained his signature by leading him to understand that his attorney had prepared it, and approved of the security, and, that turning out not to be the fact, the contract had been repudiated immediately, the contract was avoided. Ralph v. Barton, 1 F. & F. 473.

Repudiation or Affirmation of Contract.]—A solicitor took money of his client's, and pretended to have invested it upon four mortgages. After his death it was discovered that three of these mortgages were absolutely valueless, and the client took no steps as regards them. He brought an action to enforce the other, which resulted in a compromise out of which he obtained part of the money due :—Held, that as regards this last one he had affirmed the contract, and could not now repudiate the mortgage, but as regards the other three he could. Murray, In re, Dickson v. Murray, 57 L. T. 223.

Waiver.]—Fraud cannot be condoned unless there is full knowledge of the facts and of the rights arising out of those facts, and the parties are at arm's length. Moxon v. Payne, 43 L. J., Ch. 240 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 881.

An agreement rendered inoperative by a collateral fraudulent agreement cannot be made valid by the abandonment of the collateral agreement. Ib.

The right of a person dealing with a company to set aside (as against the company) a contract, founded on the latter's unintentional misrepresentation, may be waived or released, expressly or indirectly ; but cannot be easily waived by anything the person does, or omits, while the falsehood of the misrepresentation remains doubtful. Bank of Hindustan, China and Japan, In re, Campbell, Ex parte, 42 L. J., Ch. 771. S. C., on appeal, 43 L. J., Ch. 1 ; L. R. 9 Ch. 1 ; 29 L. T. 519 ; 22 W. R. 113.

Repudiation before Fraudulent Purpose Effected.]—The plaintiff, being in embarrassed circumstances, in pursuance of an agreement between him and A., made over all his stock-in-trade to A., and fictitious bills of exchange were given by A. in the plaintiff's favour. Possession of the goods was given to A., together with an inventory, but no bill of sale was executed by the plaintiff. The object of the transaction was to prevent the plaintiff's creditors getting hold of the goods, and so being paid in full. The defendant was a creditor for 100*l.*, and was cognisant of what was concocted between the plaintiff and A. After A. had removed the goods from the plaintiff's premises, two meetings of the plaintiff's creditors were held, but no compromise was effected with the creditors. Some months afterwards A. executed a bill of sale of the goods to the defendant, for the alleged purpose of securing the debt due from the plaintiff to the defendant, but the plaintiff was no party to the bill of sale, nor did he sanction or know of it. The plaintiff having demanded the goods from A. and the defendant, brought an action against the defendant for the detention :—Held, that, the fraudulent purpose not having been carried out, the plaintiff was not relying on the illegal transaction, but was entitled to repudiate it and recover his goods from A., and the defendant had no better title than A., as he knew how A. had become possessed of the goods. Taylor v. Bowers, 45 L. J., Q. B. 163 ; 1 Q. B. D. 291 ; 34 L. T. 938 ; 24 W. R. 499—C. A.

Reinstating Opposite Party.]—A contract cannot be avoided for fraud unless the person defrauded has disaffirmed the contract and reinstated as far as possible the opposite party. Dawes v. Harness, 44 L. J., C. P. 194 ; L. R. 10 C. P. 166 ; 32 L. T. 159 ; 23 W. R. 398. S. P., Urquhart v. Macpherson, 3 App. Cas. 831—P. C.

Where status quo not Possible.]—A person induced by fraud to enter into a contract under which he pays money may, at his option, rescind the contract, and recover back the price, if he can return what he has received under it. But, when he can no longer place the parties in statu quo, as if he has become unable to return what he has received in the same plight as that in which he received it, the right to rescind no longer exists, and his remedy must be by an action for deceit, and not for money had and received. Clarke v. Dickson, El., Bl. & El. 148; 27 L. J., Q. B. 223; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 715.

The rule, that a party cannot repudiate an executed contract on the ground of fraud, unless on the condition of restoring the other party to his original position, is not affected by the fact that the latter has by his acts rendered such restoration impossible. Savage v. Canning, Ir. R. 1 C. L. 434; 16 W. R. 133.

As to Part of Contract.]—A fraudulent representation as to any part of that which induces a party to enter into a contract authorises a rescission of the contract. Kennedy v. Panama, New Zealand, and Australian Royal Mail Co., 8 B. & S. 571; 36 L. J., Q. B. 260; L. R. 2 Q. B. 580; 17 L. T. 62; 15 W. R. 1039.

Aliter, where there has been an innocent misrepresentation or misapprehension, unless it is as to the substance of the whole consideration, going as it were to the root of the matter. Ib.

Collateral Statements.]—A collateral statement, made at the time of entering into a contract, but not embodied in it, must, in order to invalidate the contract on the ground of its being a fraudulent statement, be shown not only to have been false, but to have been known to be so by the party making it, and that the other party was thereby induced to enter into the contract. Moens v. Heyworth, 10 M. & W. 147; 10 L. J., Ex. 177.

A. applied to B. for a lease of premises, intending at the time he applied to use them as a brothel; B. relying upon the innocent though false misrepresentations of a third party, to whom he was referred by A., that A. was a respectable man, and on A.'s own fraudulent representation that he intended to carry on the trade of a perfumer, granted him a lease; A. accordingly entered into possession, and used the premises as a brothel; whereupon B. forcibly ejected him; A. brought ejectment to recover possession:—Held, that he was entitled to recover, for that the fraudulent misrepresentations were as to matters collateral to the lease, and did not avoid it. Feret v. Hill, 15 C. B. 207; 2 C. L. R. 1366; 23 L. J., C. P. 185; 18 Jur. 1014; 2 W. R. 493.

A contract may be avoided by a false and fraudulent representation, though not relating directly to the nature or character of its subject-matter, if it is so closely connected with the contract as that the party sued upon it would not, but for the representation, have entered into it, and was induced to enter into it, to the knowledge of the other party, by such representation. Cunham v. Barry, 15 C. B. 597; 3 C. L. R. 487; 24 L. J., C. P. 100; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 402.

Insurance.]—Pending a contract for the sale of a policy of insurance, the person whose life was insured met with an accident, which was proved by medical evidence not to have had effects serious or dangerous to his life. He was afterwards attacked by a disease of old-standing, of which he died, but from which no danger to his life was apprehended until after the contract was completed. The vendee was aware of both the accident and the illness, but did not communicate either to the vendor. The court refused to rescind the contract, or to restrain proceedings at law upon it. Thompson v. Lambert, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 433; 17 W. R. 111.

A policy of insurance on the life of A. had been assigned to the plaintiff; the defendant, having privately ascertained that A. was dangerously ill, treated with the plaintiff for the purchase of the policy for a small sum, representing it as the then value of the policy, the plaintiff not being aware of A.'s illness:—Held, that the sale was void, and that the plaintiff might recover the value of the policy in an action of trover. Jones v. Keene, 2 M. & Rob. 348.

Contracts between Solicitors—Interests of Minors.]—The court would not enforce the terms of a contract between two solicitors, whereby the one, who was solicitor for minors in a matter and several causes, agreed, without notice to the court or the friends of the minors, to hand over to the other, and the other to undertake, the business on behalf of the minors, to be conducted by the latter in the name of the former, on the terms of getting half [illegible] of the [illegible] although the latter had, in pursuance of the contract, conducted the business for a year, and made large expenditures, such contract being at variance with the interests of the minors and the policy of the court. Both parties to such a contract being in pari delicto, the court would not act for either of them. Leech, Ex parte, Ir. R. 5 Eq. 371.

Bankrupt Purchasing Goods.]—A trader, after being served with the petition on which he was afterwards adjudicated bankrupt, purchased goods at an auction, and removed them without payment, without disclosing the fact of the bankruptcy proceedings:—Held, that this omission did not of itself amount to a misrepresentation such as to avoid the contract, and entitle the vendor to a return of the goods. Whittaker, Ex parte, Shackleton, In re, 44 L. J., Bk. 91; L. R. 10 Ch. 446; 32 L. T. 443; 23 W. R. 555.

Shareholder after Winding-up Commenced—Right of Innocent Third Parties Intervening.]—A shareholder, who has been induced by fraud to take shares in a company, cannot maintain his action against the company to rescind the contract and recover back the amount paid for his shares, after the company, being unable to pay its creditors, has commenced winding up voluntarily without supervision under the Companies Act, 1862. Collins v. City and County Bank, 47 L. J., C. P. 681; 3 C. P. D. 282; 38 L. T. 9—C. A. S. P., Morrison v. Universal Marine Insurance Co., ante, col. 365.

Misrepresentation in Prospectus of Company—Recovery of Price of Shares.]—A steam-packet company entered into a contract with the government of New Zealand relating to th mail service of the colony. This contract the government of the colony refused to recognise, on the ground that it was beyond the authority of the postmaster-general. Meantime the company issued a prospectus, giving notice that they were prepared to receive applications for new shares "in order to enable the company to perform the contract recently entered into with the general government of New Zealand for a monthly mail service between Sydney, New Zealand, and Panama." A party, after seeing this prospectus, applied for and obtained an allotment of shares:—Held, that he was not entitled, upon finding that the mail service contract was repudiated by the colonial government, to recover back the price of his shares, as, although the prospectus contained an implied statement that the contract was binding upon the colonial government, yet the misrepresentation was not fraudulent, and was not such as to show that there was a complete difference in substance between the shares which were bargained for and those which were obtained, so as to constitute an entire failure of consideration. Kennedy v. Panama, New Zealand, and Australian Royal Mail Co., 8 B. & S. 571; 36 L. J., Q. B. 260; L. R. 2 Q. B. 580; 17 L. T. 62; 15 W. R. 1039.

Recovery of Deposits on Shares.]—In an action by an allottee of shares in a railway company for the recovery of his deposit, it appeared that the company issued a prospectus, which stated the capital to consist of 60,000 shares, of 25*l.* each, and the plaintiff, after having paid his deposit, executed the subscribers' agreement, which contained the usual terms as to the disposition of the deposits. At the time when he executed the deed the deposits upon 18,160 shares only had been paid, although 35,000 shares had been allotted, which fact was not communicated to him:—Held, that the withholding of this fact did not amount to such a fraud as to avoid the deed, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover back his deposit. Vane v. Cobbold, 1 Ex. 798.

To get Company's Shares quoted.]—A telegraph company invited applications for shares, received some in the ordinary way and allotted some, on which deposits were paid. The number allotted was, however, insufficient to procure a settling-day on the Stock Exchange, and some of the directors of the company, S., the promoter, and C., the manager of the bank, agreed, in order that the bank might certify to the committee of the Stock Exchange the requisite amount of shares to have been subscribed, that an account should be opened in S.'s name with the bank, and another account in the name of the company; that the company should guarantee to the bank the repayment of any money drawn by S., and charge with such repayment any balance in their favour; that the bank should have a bonus of 600*l.*, and C. of 1,000*l.*; that S. should get persons to apply for shares which should be duly allotted, and should draw on his account for, and pay into the company's account the requisite deposits, taking blank transfers from the pretended allottees. This plan was carried out. Accounts were opened, that in the name of the company with 1,500*l.* really paid in; that in S.'s name with a loan of 1,500*l.* from the bank. Sham applicants were obtained by S., and shares allotted to them. S. thereupon drew on his account, and with the proceeds paid the requisite deposits into the account of the company. The pretended allottees, immediately after the shares were allotted, handed blank transfers to S. Finally the account with the bank stood with a credit of 24,505*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*, made up of the 1,500*l.* really paid in and the pretended deposits. S.'s account stood with a debit of 24,506*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, made up of the sums he had drawn and the 1,500*l.* loan. No settling-day was ever granted; and the company afterwards went into liquidation under a winding-up order. In an action by the company to recover the whole amount of their credit, the bank paid their bonus of 600*l.* into court, and denied liability as to the residue:—Held, that the company was entitled to the 1,500*l.* actually paid by them to the bank, but to no more; and that judgment must therefore be given for them for 900*l.* British and American Telegraph Co. v. Albion Bank, 41 L. J., Ex. 67; L. R. 7 Ex. 119; 26 L. T. 257; 20 W. R. 413.

Dealings between Principal to a Contract and Agent of other Principal.]—A telegraph works company agreed with a telegraph cable company to lay a cable, the cable to be paid for by a sum payable when the cable was begun, and by twelve instalments payable on certificates by the cable company's engineer, who was named in the contract. Shortly afterwards the engineer, who was engaged to lay other cables for the works company, agreed with them to lay this cable also for a sum of money to be paid to him by instalments payable by the works company when they received the instalments from the cable company:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the agreement between the engineer and the works company was a fraud, which entitled the cable company to have their contract rescinded, and to receive back the money which they had paid under that contract. Panama and South Pacific Telegraph Co. v. India Rubber, Gutta Percha and Telegraph Works Co., 45 L. J., Ch. 121; L. R. 10 Ch. 515; 32 L. T. 517; 23 W. R. 583.

Any surreptitious dealing between one principal to a contract and the agent of the other principal is a fraud in equity, and entitles the first-named principal to have the contract rescinded, and to refuse to proceed with it in any shape.—Per James, L.J. Ib.

As the works company had by their fraudulent conduct prevented the cable company from having the full benefit of the contract, the cable company was entitled to have the contract rescinded.—Per Mellish, L.J. Ib.

And see Smith v. Sorby, 3 Q. B. D. 552, n.

Sale of Fittings of Public-house—Misrepresentation of Business.]—A contract for the sale of fixtures and fittings of a public-house is avoided by a false representation by the vendor as to the amount of business attached to the house, though the agreement expressly excludes goodwill. Hutchinson v. Morley, 7 Scott, 341; 2 Arn. 2; 3 Jur. 288. And see Redgrave v. Hurd; 51 L. J., Ch. 113; 20 Ch. D. 1; 45 L. T. 485; 30 W. R. 251—C. A.

Bond—Lapse of Time.]—Action to set aside bond for misrepresentation, undue influence, and want of consideration:—Held, no undue influence or misrepresentation or want of consideration; and, plaintiff having delayed for over five years before disputing liability, no relief in court of equity. Richards v. Witham, 66 L. T. 695—C. A.

Effect of Time-tables.]—The tickets issued by a railway company were expressed to be "issued subject to the company's regulations and to the conditions in the time-tables." In these conditions it was stated that every attention would be paid to ensure punctuality, but that the company would not be responsible for loss or injury arising from unpunctuality, nor in cases where they had granted tickets to places off their own line for the arrival of their own trains in time for the nominally corresponding train of any other company. The plaintiff took a through ticket from a station on the company's line to a station on the line of another company, and travelled by a train by which, according to the company's time-tables, he should have reached his destination at 7.30 p.m. This train was twenty-seven minutes late at the last station on their line, and the plaintiff consequently failed to catch the corresponding train at that place, and, having proceeded a further stage by a later train which stopped short of the place to which he had booked, he completed his journey in a special train, and arrived at his destination between 8.30 and 9 p.m. He had no business or engagement to necessitate his punctual arrival, and had he waited for the next ordinary train he would have arrived at 10 p.m. The Common Pleas Division held that he was entitled to recover the cost of the special train from the company. On appeal by the company:—Held, that the company had contracted to pay every attention to insure punctuality, and that there had been a breach of such contract, but that the taking of a special train was under the circumstances an unreasonable proceeding, and that he was not entitled to the cost of so doing. Le Blanche v. L. & N. W. Ry., 45 L. J., C. P. 521; 1 C. P. D. 286; 34 L. T. 667; 24 W. R. 808—C. A.

The Great Northern Railway Company, whose line communicated with the line of the North-Eastern Railway Company at Milford, had arrangements by which their trains starting from Peterborough at 7 p.m., and going to Milford, there met a train of the North-Eastern Railway Company running from Milford to Hull, by which passengers from Peterborough to Hull were forwarded. The Great Northern Company published monthly time-tables, in which they stated, in the usual way, that the 7 p.m. train from Peterborough carried to Hull. At the end of a month, after the Great Northern time-tables for the ensuing month were prepared in this form and printed, but before they were published, the North-Eastern Company discontinued the train from Milford to Hull. The Great Northern made no alteration in their time-tables already printed, but published and circulated them after they knew that there was no such train. The plaintiff having seen one of the time-tables, made arrangements, on the faith of it, to go from Peterborough to Hull by the 7 p.m. train; he came to Peterborough in time, went to the station, and then, for the first time, learned that he could go no further than Milford by that train. He was delayed in his journey and sustained damage, for which he sued the Great Northern Company:—Held, that he was entitled to recover, on the ground that the circulation of the time-tables amounted to a representation on the part of the Great Northern Railway Company that there was a train, which was false to their knowledge, and calculated to induce the plaintiff to act as he did. Denton v. G. N. Ry., 5 El. & Bl. 860; 25 L. J., Q. B. 129; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 185; 4 W. R. 240.

3. Misrepresentations as to Credit.

What is a Representation—Within 9 Geo. 4, c. 14.]—A representation made by a party as to the credit of a firm, of which he is a member, is a representation as to the credit of "another person," within the statute. Devaux v. Steinkeller, 8 Scott, 202; 6 Bing. (N.C.) 84; 8 D. P. C. 33; 9 L. J., C. P. 30; 3 Jur. 1053.

A representation by the defendant that money might be safely lent to A., because the title-deeds to an estate, which belonged to A., were in the defendant's possession, and that nothing could be done without his knowledge, and that the plaintiff would be safe in making the loan, is a representation as to the ability of A. within the statute. Swan v. Phillips, 3 N. & P. 447; 8 A. & E. 457; 1 W. W. & H. 374; 7 L. J., Q. B. 200; 2 Jur. 494.

The "certification" of a transfer of shares given by a secretary on behalf of his company is not a representation as to credit or ability within s. 6 of Lord Tenterden's Act. Bishop v. Balkis Consolidated Co., 59 L. J., Q. B. 565; 25 Q. B. D. 512; 63 L. T. 601; 39 W. R. 99; 2 Meg. 292—C. A.

When Action Lies.]—In an action for giving a false character to a tradesman, whereby he was induced to trust an insolvent person, fraud is necessary to support the action. Tapp v. Lee, 3 Bos. & P. 367.

If A. fraudulently represents the circumstances of B. to be good, in order to induce C. to give him credit, and adds, "if he does not pay for the goods, I will"; an action may be maintained against A. for the misrepresentation, notwithstanding the addition of the promise. Hamar v. Alexander, 2 Bos. & P. (N.R.) 241.

If a person employs an agent to take orders, and a representation is made to him of the solvency of a person, whom he advises his employers to trust for goods, if he at the time knew that such person was not solvent, though he did not communicate it to his employers, they cannot maintain an action against the person who made such false representation. Cowen v. Simpson, 1 Esp. 290.

If A. inquires generally of B. concerning the circumstances of C., A. cannot maintain an action against B. for a deceitful representation upon this subject if C. pays A. for the goods which it was in contemplation to sell when the representation was made, although C. becomes insolvent, and is indebted to A. for other goods subsequently sold. De Graves v. Smith, 2 Camp. 533.

To an inquiry concerning the credit of another who was recommended to deal with the plaintiff, a representation by the defendant that the party might safely be credited, and that he spoke this from his own knowledge, and not from hearsay, will not sustain an action for damages, on account of a loss sustained by the default of the party, who turned out to be a person of no credit, if it appears that such representation was made by the defendant bonâ fide, and with a belief of the truth of it; for the foundation of the action is fraud and deceit in the defendant, and damage to the plaintiff by means thereof. And taking the assertion of knowledge secundum subjectam materiam, viz. the credit of another, it meant no other than a strong belief, founded on what appeared to the defendant to be reasonable and certain grounds. Haycroft v. Creasy, 2 East, 92; 6 R. R. 380.

—— For Goods Sold or for Deceit.]—A man by false representation induces another to supply goods on the credit of a third person, and enters into a collateral undertaking, not in writing, to pay for them; he is not liable for goods sold, but must be sued in an action of deceit. Thompson v. Bond, 1 Camp. 4.

—— 9 Geo. 4, c. 14.]—Section 6 of Lord Tenterden's Act—which provides that no action shall be brought whereby to charge any person upon a representation concerning the credit of any other person, to the intent that such other person may obtain credit, money, or goods, unless such assurance be in writing, signed by the party to be charged—applies to a case where the representation is made, in order that the party to be charged may obtain a benefit from the credit, money, or goods being obtained by such other person. Pearson v. Seligman, 48 L. T. 842; 31 W. R. 730—C. A.

An action cannot be maintained against a trustee for a false representation by parol of the incumbrances effected on the trust fund by the cestui que trust, such a representation being within the statute. Per Lord Abinger, C. B., and Gurney, B., diss. Parke, B., and Alderson, B. Lyde v. Barnard, 1 Gale, 388; 1 M. & W. 101; 1 Tyr. & G. 250; 5 L. J., Ex. 117.

Where a false and fraudulent representation has been made in writing concerning the character or credit of a third person, to the intent and purpose that such third person may obtain credit, and he does obtain credit, an action will lie against the person making the misrepresentation, at the suit of the person injured by giving the credit, though there may have been other circumstances which concurred in inducing such credit, if the representation substantially and mainly conduced to the obtaining of the credit. Wade v. Tatton, 18 C. B. 371; 25 L. J., C. P. 240; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 491; 4 W. R. 548—Ex. Ch.

—— Misrepresentation must be in Writing.]—Where credit was given upon the representation of a third person, and the representation was fraudulent, no action would lie unless the representation was in writing. Haslock v. Fergusson, 2 N. & P. 269; 7 A. & E. 86; 6 L. J., K. B. 247; 1 Jur. 689.

Mercantile Law Amendment Act (Scotland), 1856.]—Section 6 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act (Scotland), 1856, by which "all guarantees, securities, or cautionary obligations made or granted by any person for any other person, and all representations and assurances as to the character, conduct, credit, ability, trade, or dealings of any person made or granted" for the purpose therein stated, must be in writing, makes any verbal representations to which it applies absolutely inefficacious, no matter what may be the further and fraudulent design of the person who made them. Clydesdale Bank v. Paton, 65 L. J., P. C. 73; [1896] A. C. 381; 74 L. T. 738—H. L. (Sc.).

But if a person induces another to accept bills on behalf of a third person, not for the purpose of obtaining further credit from that person, but in order to obtain payment of a debt due to himself, the case is outside the statute; and, to sustain an action for the amount of such bills, such purpose must be shown to have been carried into effect. Ib.

By Lord Herschell: Section 100 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, has not repealed pro tanto the Mercantile Law Amendment Act wherever obligations or bills of exchange have been obtained by representations as to conduct, credit, or character. Ib.

The pursuers (respondents) alleged that the agent of the defenders (appellants), who were a bank, gave them a verbal assurance that no portion of the proceeds of any acceptances by the pursuers would be applied towards extinction of a debt due by the drawers to the bank, and that, acting on such assurance, the pursuers accepted bills which were applied to the credit of the drawers' banking account. But it was not proved that the bank closed the drawers' account or failed to allow the drawers the free use of the proceeds of the acceptances:—Held, that the respondents were not entitled to recover the amount of the acceptances. Ib.

When Action Lies—Lapse of Time—Amount of Liability.]—If A. makes an inquiry of B. as to the circumstances of C. with respect to opening an account with him as a general customer, and B. fraudulently misrepresents them, in consequence of which A. sells C. goods from time to time, and is afterwards a loser by him, an action lies for the deceit, although the buyer pays for the first parcel of goods, on the purchase of which the reference is made; but the defendant is liable only within a reasonable time, and to a reasonable amount. Hutchinson v. Bell, 1 Taunt. 658.

Amount of Liability.]—A tradesman can only recover, against a person making a false representation of the means of one who referred to him, such damage as is justly and immediately referable to the false representation. Therefore, if the tradesman gives an indiscreet and ill-judging credit, he cannot make the referee answerable for any loss occasioned by it. Corbett v. Brown, 8 Bing. 35; 1 M. & Sc. 85; 5 Car. & P. 363; 1 M. & Rob. 108; 1 L. J., C. P. 13.

Evidence.]—In an action for falsely representing the character of another, by reason of which false representation he obtained credit of the plaintiff, it is necessary to prove against the defendant both fraud and falsehood, viz., that the representation which he made was false, and that the defendant knew it to be false at the time he made it: falsehood without fraud is not sufficient. Ashlin v. White, Holt, N. P. 387.

—— Foundation of Action.]—Where a defendant recommended an agent to the plaintiff with a knowledge that his representation of the character of the agent was false:—Held, in an action to recover damages arising from the misconduct of the agent, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove a malicious or an interested motive by the defendant for the misrepresentation; if what the defendant said was false within his own knowledge, and occasioned an injury to the plaintiff, it is a sufficient ground of action. Foster v. Charles, 4 M. & P. 61, 741; 6 Bing. 396; 7 id. 105; 8 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 118; 31 R. R. 446.

Remedy in Damages—Evidence.]—Effect of wilful misrepresentation as to credit, giving a remedy by way of damages on ground of fraud. In bankruptcy where evidence of party is received, it must be in all particulars consistent, clear, and unambiguous. Carr, Ex parte, 3 V. & B. 108; 13 R. R. 158.

—— Liability in Damages.]—A., who was about to grant a lease to B., wrote to C., who was named by B. as a referee: "B. is desirous of leasing premises from us of about the annual value of 400*l.*, and we will be glad if you will say if you know him to be in a good and responsible position to meet the responsibility of such an undertaking, and if you can recommend him as a safe and advisable tenant." C. answered: "I have much pleasure in replying affirmatively." On this B. was accepted as tenant, but afterwards deserted the premises without paying any rent. C., when he answered the reference, was well acquainted with the antecedents of B., and knew him to be a person of no substantial means, who had twice previously failed in business similar to that which he intended to carry on on the premises in question. C., however, had no positive intention to deceive:—Held, that C. was answerable to A. in damages for misrepresentation. Leddell v. McDougal, 29 W. R. 403—C. A.

4. On Other Transactions.

Generally.]—If a person be fraudulently prevented from doing any act, it will in equity be considered as if that act had been done. Middleton v. Middleton, 1 J. & W. 94; 20 R. R. 233.

Deed.]—If a party executes a deed, under a false representation as to its effects, or contents, it is avoided by fraud. Consols Insurance Association v. Newall, 3 F. & F. 130.

If an ignorant person is induced to execute an instrument, supposing it to operate in one way, and it really operates in another, such instrument is invalid. Doe d. Lloyd v. Bennett, 8 Car. & P. 124.

On the 18th January, 1883, A., a solicitor, obtained from his sisters, B. and C., their signatures to two deeds, by which, in alleged consideration in each case of the release of a debt of 400*l.* and payment to them of 300*l.*, they conveyed their shares of freehold property, which was subject to a mortgage to K., to A. in fee. No money was at the time due from B. and C. to A., nor was any payment whatever made to them. The deeds were not read over or explained to B. and C., who had no idea that they were thereby conveying their property, and signed in full reliance on A.'s statement that he was going to clear off the mortgage and wanted to send the deeds to K. On the next day A. deposited the deeds with a bank as security for an advance. A. having absconded, the property was claimed by the bank as equitable mortgagees, and the claim was resisted by B. and C. on the ground that the conveyances, having been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation, were void as against them:—Held, that, inasmuch as B. and C., though they may not have understood the nature of the deeds, knew they were executing something which dealt in some way with their property, the deeds of the 18th of January, 1883, were not void but voidable only. National Provincial Bank of England v. Jackson, 33 Ch. D. 1; 55 L. T. 458; 34 W. R. 597—C. A.

A. procured B. to execute to him an assignment of a lease, by means of a false and fraudulent representation that he, A., was executor and devisee of C., and in that capacity a creditor of B.; B. was, in fact, indebted to C. for part of the alleged consideration-moneys:—Held, that A. might maintain ejectment; the fraudulent representations not being sufficient (at law) to avoid the deed, and a court of law being incompetent to do perfect justice between the parties. Austin v. Taite, 8 Ir. C. L. R. 35—Ex. Ch.

Claim, stating that the defendants were carriers of passengers by railway, and the plaintiff was received by them as a passenger in an express train, which, by their negligence came into collision with an engine, and he was injured. Defence, that after the collision the plaintiff accepted money from the officer of the company in satisfaction of his cause of action, and executed a release. Reply, that the officer procured the plaintiff to execute the release by fraudulently representing to him for that purpose that his injuries were of a trivial and temporary nature, and, that if they should afterwards turn out to be more serious than he then anticipated, he would still, though he had executed the deed, be in a position to obtain further compensation from the company, and that the plaintiff was thereby induced to execute the deed, and that after he had executed it his injuries turned out to be of a more serious nature than he had anticipated:—Held, that the reply was good, as it contained a separate and independent statement that the plaintiff was induced to execute the deed in consequence of a fraudulent representation that his injuries were of a trivial and temporary character. Hirschfield v. L. B. & S. C. Ry., 46 L. J., Q. B. 94; 2 Q. B. D. 1; 35 L. T. 473.

Semble, that a fraudulent representation as to the effect of a deed may be relied upon as a defence to an action upon the deed. Ib.

—— Fraud of Solicitor.]—Where A., a solicitor, induced B. to execute a mortgage of her estate to C., under the representation that it was necessary to raise money to pay off an old mortgage of her sister's on their common estate, and that the thing was a mere renewal, and would not cause her to incur liability:—Held, that the deed was void. Lee v. Angas, 15 W. R. 119.

—— Release of Equity of Redemption, obtained by Misrepresentations of Mortgagor and Solicitor, set Aside.]—A release of the equity of redemption was set aside at the instance of the mortgagee, he having been induced to accept it, and in consideration thereof to covenant for the payment of a perpetual annuity to the mortgagor, and to give the mortgagor a perpetual right of redemption, by means of misrepresentations by the mortgagor and his solicitor (who was also the solicitor for the mortgagee) as to the title of the mortgagor, the value of the premises, and the nature of the contract he was entering into. Roddy v. Williams, 3 Jo. & Lat. 1.

—— Remainder in Settlement set Aside.]—A remainder in a marriage settlement fraudulently inserted by party drawing settlement for his own benefit, set aside. Morris v. Nixon, 1 Str. 144.

—— Setting Aside Rent-charge.]—Grant of a rent-charge in fee, after A. dying without issue male, set aside for fraud. Ardglasse v. Muschamp, 1 Vern. 237; 2 Ch. Rep. 266.

Revocation of Will.]—A deed obtained by fraud is not a revocation of a prior will. Howes v. Wyatt, 3 Bro. C. C. 156. And see 2 Cox, 263.

Disinheriting Heir.]—Though a person has an intention to disinherit his heir, yet, if it was owing to fraud, this will fetch the estate back and revest it in the heir. Bennet v. Vade, 2 Atk. 324; 9 Mod. 312.

Fraudulent Assignment—Effect as between Party and Stranger.]—An assignment of goods in fraud of creditors is valid as between either party and a stranger. Bessey v. Windham, 6 Q. B. 166; 14 L. J., Q. B. 7.

Invoking own Fraud.]—No man can be allowed to allege his own fraud to avoid his own deed. Watts v. Brookes, 3 Ves. 613.

Grant of Property acquired by Fraud—Intention to Defeat Claim.]—It is no objection to a conveyance that the grantor acquired the property by fraud, and that the grant tends (and was designed, as the adverse party alleges) to defeat the equitable right of third persons to relief against such fraud. Murley v. Sherren, 8 A. & E. 754; 1 P. & D. 126; 8 L. J., Q. B. 152.

Stockbroker—Fraudulently Obtaining Cancellation of Transfer.]—A broker employed by the plaintiff to purchase shares, which the plaintiff paid for, procured the instrument of transfer to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff's signature thereto, and received from the plaintiff the certificates and transfer for the purpose of registration. Soon afterwards he fraudulently procured the plaintiff to cancel his signature to the transfer, and by means of the cancelled transfer and the certificates, induced the vendor to execute a fresh transfer to himself, and thereupon procured the shares to be registered in his own name, and then mortgaged them:—Held, that the effect of the first transfer was not destroyed by the cancellation fraudulently procured, and the registration in the name of the broker, and the transfer to his mortgagee, were decreed to be set aside. Donaldson v. Gillot, L. R. 3 Eq. 274; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 959; 15 L. T. 382; 15 W. R. 166.

When Interest of Third Parties has Intervened.]—B., for the purpose of enabling a company to have a fictitious credit in case of inquiries at their bankers, placed money to their credit, which they were to hold in trust for him. Some of the money having been drawn out with B.'s consent, and the company having been ordered to be wound up while a balance remained:—Held, that B. could not claim to have the balance paid to him. Great Berlin Steamboat Co., In re, 54 L. J., Ch. 68; 26 Ch. D. 616; 51 L. T. 445—C. A.

Sale of Goods.]—An action lies for the value of goods which the defendant had by fraud procured the plaintiff to sell to an insolvent, and which the defendant had gotten into his own possession; for he could not set up the sale, because his own fraud had procured it, and the mere possession, unaccounted for, raises an assumpsit to pay. Hill v. Perrott, 3 Taunt. 274.

Where goods were supplied to a minor upon a fraudulent representation by his father that he was about to relinquish his business in favour of his son:—Held, that the father was responsible for goods sold and delivered. Biddle v. Levy, 1 Stark. 20.

IV. PRACTICE.

1. GENERALLY.

Pleading.]—Equity will not allow unfair demands to be set up against just and fair ones. Walker v. Gascoigne, 13 Vin. 544, pl. 13.

Pending Suit for Relief.]—Held, that, pending a suit to set aside agreements, defendants were bound to give plaintiff the benefit of those terms in agreement, which were for his advantage. Rowe v. Wood, 2 J. & W. 559; 22 R. R. 208.

Innocent Persons.]—If one of two innocent persons is to suffer by the fraud of a third, the person who employs the fraudulent agent must suffer rather than the other. Nixon v. Hamilton, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 57.

Relief against fraud intended against one person takes effect upon another; and the same principle prevails in trespass and criminal cases. Clifford v. Brooke, 13 Ves. 132.

Particeps Criminis.]—A party to a fraud cannot file a bill against his accomplice to prevent him from taking more of the spoil than his share, for the court will not interfere to enforce honour among thieves. Hamilton v. Ball, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 191.

Where Part Performance.]—If an agreement is in part performed by one of the parties, it is too late for the other to complain of fraud, surprise, &c., or attempt to set the agreement aside on that account; for a court of equity will decree a specific performance of the remaining part of it. Anglesey (Earl) v. Annesley, 1 Bro. P. C. 289.

Presumption of Fraud—Lapse of Time—Principles of Exercise of Jurisdiction.]—After a long lapse of time since the transaction complained of, there having been parties in esse competent to impeach them, fraud is not to be assumed on doubtful evidence; but, if it be clearly proved, no lapse of time will protect the parties to it, or those who claim through them, against the jurisdiction of a court of equity, and in that case it is immaterial by what machinery or contrivance the fraudulent transactions may have been effected, whether by a decree in equity, or judgment at law or otherwise. But, in proportion as such jurisdiction is powerful, so ought the caution of the court to be anxiously exercised, lest, in its zeal to do equity, the reverse may be effected. Bowen v. Evans, 2 H. L. Cas. 257. Affirming 1 Jo. & Lat. 178; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 569.

2. Jurisdiction.

Generally.]—It is the peculiar province of courts of equity to give relief in all cases of fraud, or of contracts in which any advantage is unduly taken by either of the parties of the distress or necessities of the other. Kenrick v. Hudson, 2 Bro. P. C. 222.

—— Practice at Law and in Equity.]—Distinction between misrepresentations giving a legal, and those giving an equitable, remedy. Whitmore v. Makeson, 16 Beav. 126.

To set aside bargains at law, fraud must be proved; equity relieves against presumptive fraud. Chesterfield (Earl) v. Janssen, 1 Atk. 352; 2 Ves. 125.

Distinction between legal and equitable jurisdiction upon fraud, which at law must be proved, not presumed; and the equitable jurisdiction may be exercised upon an instrument unduly obtained, where a court of law could not enter into the question. Fullagar v. Clark, 18 Ves. 483.

All deceitful practices and artful devices, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty, are frauds at common law, and punishable there; but for some frauds or deceits there is no remedy at law, in which cases they are cognisable in equity, as one of the chief branches of its original jurisdiction. Farmer v. Smith, Toth. 101. White v. Small, 2 Ch. Ca. 103. Jones v. Crawley, Rep. t. Finch, 161.

—— Concurrent Jurisdiction.] — Courts of equity have a concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law in cases of fraud, and, therefore, a demurrer for want of equity will not lie to a bill praying relief against a fraudulent policy of insurance. Sowerby v. Warder, 2 Cox, 268.

Court of chancery has concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law in cases of fraud, but there are courses of conduct which chancery construes as fraudulent but which courts of law would not notice. Clarke v. Manning, 7 Beav. 162.

R. filed a bill in equity against B. to recover money advanced. Upon demurrer by B. stating the facts, and alleging all the representations to be false:—Held, that the allegation of fraud gave jurisdiction to a court of equity notwithstanding the concurrent jurisdiction at law. Ramshire v. Bolton, 38 L. J., Ch. 594; L. R. 8 Eq. 294; 21 L. T. 51; 17 W. R. 986.

Relief at Law, no Bar.]—It is no objection to a party's applying to equity for relief in a case of fraud, that he may also have relief at law. Blackwood v. Gregg, 1 Hay. & J. 310.

—— Receipt obtained by Fraud.] — To an action for compensation for injuries from a railway accident, the company pleaded a receipt in full; the plaintiff then filed a bill alleging the receipt to have been obtained by fraud, and praying that the company might be restrained from setting it up, but for no further relief:—Held, on demurrer, that although the plaintiff might have met the plea by equitable replication, he was entitled to come to equity for the relief needed for the purposes of his action, and that he had rightly limited the prayer of his bill to such relief. Stewart v. G. W. Ry., 2 De G. J. & S. 319; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 627; 13 L. T. 79; 13 W. R. 907.

—— Attempt to Defeat Plaintiff's Claim.]—In a suit arising out of a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, it appeared that, if the contract had been correctly acted on, the plaintiff would have had a legal right against the defendant, but that he was deprived of this right by the acts of the defendant and his agents:—Held, under the circumstances, and on demurrer to a bill filed for discovery and for relief according to the terms of the contract, that for the defendant to use these acts as a means of defeating the plaintiff's remedy was a fraud which the court would interfere to prevent; and, also, that it was no answer to the plaintiff's claim to say that the conduct of the defendant rendered him subject to an action for damages by the plaintiff. M'Intosh v. G. W. Ry., 2 Mac. & G. 74; 2 Hall & Tw. 250; 19 L. J., Ch. 374; 14 Jur. 819. Affirming 2 De G. & Sm. 748. And see Steward v. East India Co., 3 De G. & Sm. 770, n.

—— Money Paid.]—The court will grant relief on a bill filed to recover money paid on the faith of fraudulent representations, and it is no objection to such bill that the plaintiff has his remedy at law. Hill v. Lane, 40 L. J., Ch. 41; L. R. 11 Eq. 215; 23 L. T. 547; 19 W. R. 194.

Money Advanced.]—Where on representations which a man knows to be false another is induced to advance money, or do some other act, that is a fraud which will be taken cognisance of as within the jurisdiction of a court of equity. Ramshire v. Bolton, 38 L. J., Ch. 594; L. R. 8 Eq. 294; 21 L. T. 51; 17 W. R. 986.

Representation of Intention to Abandon a Legal Right.] — Where a person possesses a legal right, a court of equity will not interfere to restrain him from enforcing it, though, between the time of its creation and that of his attempt to enforce it, he has made representations of his intention to abandon it. Nor will equity interfere even though the parties to whom these representations were made have acted on them, and have, in full belief in them, entered into irrevocable enjoyments. To raise an equity in such a case there must be a misrepresentation of existing facts, and not of mere intention. Jorden v. Money, 5 H. L. Cas. 185; 23 L. J., Ch. 865.

It is immaterial whether there is a misrepresentation of a fact as it actually existed, or a misrepresentation of an intention to do or abstain from doing an act, which would lead to the damage of the party whom you thereby induced to deal, in marriage, or in purchase, or in anything of that sort, on the faith of that representation. Semble. Per Lord St. Leonards. Ib.

To give Effect to an Equity.]—When a defendant in an action in one of the divisions of the high court of justice other than the chancery division relies on an equity to have a deed set aside as part of his defence, the division in which the action is may give effect to the equity so far as is incidental to the purposes of the defence. Mostyn v. West Mostyn Coal and Iron Co., 45 L. J., C. P. 401 ; 1 C. P. D. 145; 34 L. T. 325; 24 W. R. 401.

To Deal with Disputed Facts.]—A bill having been filed for the cancellation of two agreements entered into between the plaintiff and defendant, as having been obtained by the misrepresentation of the latter, a motion was made to restrain an action which had been commenced by the defendant upon the first agreement, shortly before filing the bill :—Held, that, although the court of chancery had complete jurisdiction in such a case, yet a court of law was the more proper tribunal for dealing with disputed facts respecting the circumstances under which the agreements were entered into ; and the motion was accordingly refused with costs. Clark v. Chapple, 29 L. T. 204.

Deed.]—The court will not refuse relief to an injured party to a deed on the ground that he has executed it with an illegal purpose, if that purpose has not taken effect. Symes v. Hughes, 39 L. J., Ch. 304 ; L. R. 9 Eq. 475 ; 22 L. T. 462.

It is no ground for a court of equity to set aside a deed that a person put an unguarded confidence in another. Langley v. Brown, 2 Atk. 202.

Mistakes and misapprehensions in the drawers of deeds are as much a head of relief as fraud and imposition. Ib.

Will.]—Settled, ever since the case of Powis v. Andrews, that a will cannot be set aside for fraud here, because, where it is a will of personal estate, it may be done in the ecclesiastical court, and if of real estate, at law. Bennet v. Vade, 2 Atk. 324 ; 9 Mod. 312.

Deed and Will.]—Diversity betwixt a deed and a will gained from a weak man, and upon a misrepresentation ; equity will set aside the first, but not the latter. James v. Greaves, 2 P. Wms. 270.

Fraud in Deeds.]—Equity can determine as to fraud in deeds without issue at law. White v. Hussey, Pre. Ch. 14.

Agreements.]—Agreements, and solemn conveyances in consequence of them, are not to be set aside on slight grounds, where the contracting parties have not been deceived or misled by any concealment or misrepresentation on the part of the persons with whom they contracted. Butler v. Butler, 1 Bro. P. C. 383.

Contract.]—The plaintiffs, through the introduction of R., entered into a contract with B. de M. for the supply of goods. During the negotiations for a second contract, R. falsely represented that B. de M. would not complete it without the advance of an extra sum by the plaintiffs, on which R. was also to have a commission. The plaintiffs accordingly paid R. a sum of money in part discharge of what was due for such commission, and gave him a letter undertaking to pay the rest. They subsequently discovered the fraudulent representations, and on R. bringing an action on the letter of undertaking against the plaintiffs, they filed a bill to restrain the action and to make him deliver up the letter of undertaking :—Held, that the fraud could be pleaded in the action, and that a court of law was the proper tribunal, and that there was no equity to compel R. to give up the letter of undertaking. Fennelly v. Ranscelot, 19 W. R. 966.

Policy of Assurance.]—A bill will lie to have a policy of assurance upon life delivered up to be cancelled on the ground of fraud ; and the more proper time to institute such a suit is during the lifetime of the party whose life is insured. Fenn v. Craig, 3 Y. & C. 216 ; 3 Jur. 22.

Grant of Annuity.]—Where the grantee of an annuity is induced by false representations, or improper concealment of facts, on the part of the grantor, or his agent, to become the purchaser of an annuity, although he may have relief at law, a court of equity has concurrent jurisdiction. Adamson v. Evitt, 2 Russ & M. 66 ; 9 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 1.

Letters Patent.]—Bill in equity lies to set aside letters patent obtained by fraud. Att.-Gen. v. Vernon, 1 Vern. 227, 370 ; 2 Ch. Rep. 353.

Unfair Possession of Bond.]—Where A. purchases a rent-charge of B. for a certain sum of money, and gives his bond for part of the purchase-money, and afterwards unfairly gets the bonds into his own possession, a court of equity will oblige him to pay the principal and interest thereby secured. Kenrick v. Hudson, 4 Bro. P. C. 222.

Cutting Timber Contrary to Bond.]—A. agreed with B. for the purchase of timber, and, together with C., entered into a bond, that A., his executors and administrators, should not cut any timber under a particular size ; but A.'s name was only made use of in this agreement for C. C. cuts down timber under the size stipulated ; but, as there could be no remedy against C. upon the bond, it was held to be a fraud upon B., the seller, and therefore relievable in equity. Butler v. Prendergast, 4 Bro. P. C. 174.

Extending Lands.]—If extender of lands extended undervalue lands by fraud, equity will give relief. Duplege's case, Cary, 5.

Fine by Releasee to Uses.]—By an antenuptial settlement, lands of the wife were released to the use of the releasees to uses and their heirs during the joint lives of the husband and wife and the life of the survivor, on certain trusts, with a limitation to the use of the wife in fee, in the event (which happened) of there being no issue of the marriage. After the death of the husband, who survived the wife, the surviving releasee to uses, with a tenant in possession of the land under a lease from the husband, made a feoffment and levied a fine to the use of himself in fee :—Held, that a court of equity might entertain a suit instituted by the heir-at-law of the wife against the releasee to uses to recover possession of the land and title-deeds. Semble, that the surviving releasee to uses, after the determination of his own legal estate, had no rightful title to the custody of the title-deeds, and could not be considered as holding them as a trustee for the reversioner; but, semble, that the fine was fraudulent, and that, whether void at law on that ground or not, the question of its validity ought not of necessity to be left to the decision of a court of law. Reece v. Trye, 1 De G. & Sm. 273.

Intended Marriage, not Taking Place.]—Where a man, in consideration of an intended marriage which never took effect, and of a debt stated to be owing by him to the intended wife, conveys to her, and there is no proof of actual fraud nor of actual mistake, though some of the deeds in the transaction are absurdly framed, it was held that there was no ground to relieve, either under the head of fraud or mistake, nor any pretence to set aside the deeds. Langley v. Brown, 2 Atk. 195.

Misrepresentation of Solicitor on Mortgage.]—The plaintiffs lent A. B. money on mortgage, on the application of his solicitor, who assured them, in writing, that in his opinion he would be able to pay the amount. The plaintiffs, alleging this to be a false and fraudulent misrepresentation, instituted a suit in equity to make the solicitor personally liable:—Held, that their remedy, if any, was at law. Whitmore v. Mackeson, 16 Beav. 126.

Partnership—Sale of Bankrupt Partner's Share.]—An uncertificated bankrupt's creditors had been paid their principal in full, but without interest. He filed a bill against his former solicitor, his two partners, and the assignee of the estate in bankruptcy, to set aside a sale which had been made of a share of his business to his partners as having been made at an undervalue, fraudulently and by means of a conspiracy between all the parties. The sale had been made under the direction of the court of chancery in a partnership suit:—Held, that he had no locus standi in the court of chancery. Motion v. Maojen, 41 L. J., Ch. 596; L. R. 14 Eq. 202; 20 W. R. 861.

Railway.]—There is no equity to restrain by injunction the owners of a railroad made over the plaintiff's land from using the railroad after it has been completed, or from interrupting the plaintiff's workmen in removing it, and restoring the land to its original state, although the possession of the land for the purpose of constructing the railroad may have been obtained from a tenant of the plaintiff by means of circumvention and fraud. Deere v. Guest, 1 Myl. & Cr. 516; 6 L. J., Ch. 69.

Foreign Securities.]—A court of equity will not relieve against fraud, where the transaction, in which the fraud was practised, was a contract for the purchase of securities purporting to be granted by a foreign government not recognised by the government of this country. Thompson v. Barclay, 6 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 93. Affirmed, 9 id. 215.

Foreign Country.]—Semble, a person on whom an injury is fraudulently committed may have a remedy in the courts of any country where the fraud occurs, and even although he be at the time an alien enemy. Collins v. Brown, 3 K. & J. 423; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 929; 5 W. R. 676.

Indictment.]—For any offence within 13 Eliz. c. 5, s. 3, the offender may be proceeded against by indictment. In such an indictment it is not necessary to set out the specific acts which constitute the fraud. Reg. v. Smith, 6 Cox, C. C. 31.

Question for Jury.]—Although a deed, which defeats or delays the sheriff on an execution, must defeat and delay an execution creditor, and it may be matter of law whether it would delay or defeat the sheriff, yet, under 13 Eliz. c. 5, it is for the jury on all the facts whether that was the intent with which it was executed. Henderson v. Lloyd, 3 F. & F. 7.

Relief in Damages.]—Bill not sustained on the ground of fraud or mistake; the relief being in the nature of damages, the subject of an action; and the charges of fraud not being proved, the bill was dismissed with costs. Clifford v. Brooke, 13 Ves. 131.

3. Action, when lies.

Generally.]—If A. fraudulently makes a representation which is false, and which he knows to be false, to B., meaning that B. shall act upon it, and B., believing it to be true, does act upon it, and thereby suffers a damage, B. may maintain an action on the case against A. for the deceit, there being in such case the conjunction of wrong and loss, entitling the injured and suffering party to a compensation in damages. Gerhard v. Bates, 2 El. & Bl. 476; 1 C. L. R. 868; 22 L. J., Q. B. 364; 17 Jur. 1097; 1 W. R. 383.

Except in cases where a contract has been entered into, a party is not liable to an action for making a false representation to another, by which damage accrues to that party, unless the representation is made under circumstances which render it morally fraudulent. Taylor v. Ashton, 11 M. & W. 401; 12 L. J., Ex. 363; 7 Jur. 978.

But if a party makes an untrue representation to another, for a fraudulent purpose, with the intent to induce the latter to do an act which he afterwards does to his prejudice, an action for deceit lies, and it is not necessary to show also that the defendant knew the representation to be untrue, if he communicated it for a deceitful purpose. Ib.

The representation must, however, be fraudulently made; and where directors of a banking company published a report representing the flourishing state of the bank, which was calculated to induce parties to purchase shares, such representation being false, but not false within the knowledge of the directors, who published it without any intention to deceive:—Held, that they were not liable for loss sustained by the purchase and retention of the shares, on the faith of the report, though the jury found them guilty of gross negligence in publishing it. Ib.

In an action against brewers for fraudulently misrepresenting the value of a public-house business which they had sold:—Held, no case, that they had overstated the amount of the takings, it not being shown that the misstatement was wilful, and they having placed the publican's books before the purchaser. Collins v. Gripper, 1 F. & F. 332. And see Redgrave

v. Hurd, 51 L. J., Ch. 113; 20 Ch. D. 1; 45 L. T. 483; 30 W. R. 251—C. A.

—— Sufficiency of Declaration—Equitable Relief.]—The defendants, corn merchants in London, received a telegram from their agents at Gibraltar, to the effect that a cargo of rye, shipped for the defendants at Sulina, had arrived at Gibraltar in good condition. The defendants advertised the cargo for sale, and, on the plaintiff's agent negotiating with them for the purchase of it, showed him the telegram. The plaintiff thereupon purchased the cargo, which turned out to be rotten, and was sold by the plaintiff at a loss. The defendants did not know whether or not the cargo had been examined by their agents at Gibraltar; but they knew it was not usual to examine cargoes at a British port of call unless an order was sent to the agent there from the owner; and they had sent no such order in this instance:—Held, that these facts would not support a count in a declaration before the Judicature Acts for false representation, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to any equitable relief, not claimed in the pleadings, as having suffered loss through a false representation innocently made by the defendants. Schroeder v. Mendl, 37 L. T. 452—C. A.

—— Sufficiency of Allegation.]—The plaintiff being desirous to dispose of his interest in certain buildings, trade and stock, in which trade he was engaged with the defendant, pending a treaty between them for the purchase by the defendant, the latter falsely and deceitfully represented to the plaintiff that he was about to enter into partnership in the same trade with other persons whose names he would not disclose, and that those persons would not consent to his giving the plaintiff more for his interest than a certain sum; whereas, in truth, neither A. and B., with whom he was then about to enter into partnership, nor any other intended partners of his, had refused to give more than that sum, but had then agreed with the defendant that he should make the best terms he could with the plaintiff, and would have given him a larger sum, and, in fact, the defendant charged them with a larger price in account for the purchase of the plaintiff's interest:—Held, that an action did not lie for this false and deceitful representation by the bidder of the seller's probability of getting a better price for his property, for it was either a mere false representation of another's intention, or, at most, a gratis dictum of the bidder upon a matter which he was not under any legal obligation to the seller to disclose with accuracy, and on which it was the folly of the seller to rely; but that, at any rate, the count was bad, in not showing that the plaintiff had been damaged by such false representation, inasmuch as it was not alleged that the other intended partners of the defendant would have bid at all without him, or that he would have joined in giving the additional price. Vernon v. Keys, 12 East, 632. Affirmed, 4 Taunt. 488; 11 R. R. 499—Ex. Ch.

—— Knowledge of Defendant.]—No action will lie for a false representation unless the party making it knows it to be untrue and makes it with the intention of inducing the party to act upon it, and the latter does so act upon it and sustains damage in consequence. Behn v. Kemble, 7 C. B. (N.S.) 260.

A statement, or a representation, false in fact, but not known to be so by the party making it, but, on the contrary, made honestly and in the full belief that it is true, is not actionable. Collins v. Evans, Dav. & M. 669; 5 Q. B. 805; 13 L. J., Q. B. 180; 8 Jur. 345—Ex. Ch.

An action of deceit does not lie against a person making an untrue representation to another, on the faith of which the hearer acts, and thereby incurs damage, if the party making such representation did not know it to be untrue. Freeman v. Baker, 5 B. & Ad. 797; 2 N. & M. 446; 5 Car. & P. 475; 3 L. J., K. B. 17.

—— For Damages for Misrepresentation, where neither Breach of Contract nor Fraud.]—In an action for damages for a misrepresentation with reference to the subject-matter of a contract, in the absence of any breach of contract or warranty, fraud is an essential element of the cause of action. Jolliffe v. Baker, 52 L. J., Q. B. 609; 11 Q. B. D. 255; 48 L. T. 966; 32 W. R. 59; 47 J. P. 678.

—— Voluntary Agreement—Subsequent Contract for Value.]—A. entered into a voluntary agreement as to a leasehold with B., and he afterwards contracted to sell it to C. for a valuable consideration:—Held, that a suit by C. against A. and B. to have the rights of the parties declared could not be maintained. De Houghton v. Money, 35 Beav. 98; 13 L. T. 447; 14 W. R. 159.

Action of Deceit.]—The wilfully telling an untruth to a party, to induce him to alter his condition, whereby he is induced to alter it, is a fraud in law for which an action of deceit will lie. Murray v. Mann, 2 Ex. 538; 17 L. J., Ex. 256; 12 Jur. 634. S. P., Watson v. Poulson, 15 Jur. 1111.

An action of deceit will not lie in respect of a negligent as distinguished from a fraudulent misrepresentation. Angus v. Clifford, 60 L. J., Ch. 443; [1891] 2 Ch. 449; 65 L. T. 274; 39 W. R. 498—C. A.

The authorities establish the following propositions:—First, in order to sustain an action of deceit there must be proof of fraud, and nothing short of that will suffice. Secondly, fraud is proved when it is shown that a false representation has been made (1) knowingly, or (2) without belief in its truth, or (3) recklessly, careless whether it be true or false. Thirdly, if fraud be proved, the motive of the person guilty of it is immaterial. Derry v. Peek, 58 L. J., Ch. 864; 14 App. Cas. 337; 61 L. T. 265; 38 W. R. 33; 1 Meg. 292; 54 J. P. 148—Herschell (Lord).

If, by false and fraudulent representations, a party is induced to enter into a written agreement, and is thereby damnified, he may maintain an action for the deceit. Dobel v. Stevens, 3 D. & R. 490; 3 B. & C. 623; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 89.

If a representation is made, before a sale, of the quality of the thing sold, with full opportunity for the purchaser to inspect and examine the truth of the representation, and a contract of sale is afterwards reduced into writing, in which that representation is not embodied, no action for deceit lies against the vendor on the ground that the article sold is not answerable to that representation, whether the vendor knew of the defects or not. Pickering v. Dowson, 4 Taunt. 779.

Where a false representation as to the value of a business which has been made by A. to B. is communicated by B. to C., with notice to A., and C. acts upon it, an action for deceit may be brought by C. against A. Pilmore v. Hood, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 97; 6 Scott, 827; 1 Arn. 390; 7 D. P. C. 136; 8 L. J., C. P. 11.

The purchaser of a warranted but worthless watch is entitled to maintain an action for deceit, although it is stipulated that, if he dislikes the watch, the vendor will exchange it for one of equal value. Wallace v. Jarman, 2 Stark. 162.

—— Not Sustainable in Absence of Fraud.]—A declaration stated that the defendants falsely and fraudulently deceived the plaintiff in this, that the defendants, as brokers employed by him to purchase oil, falsely represented to him that they had purchased for him twenty-five tons of palm-oil, to arrive by the "Celma," at 30*l.* per ton; by reason of which false representation the plaintiff, believing that twenty-five tons of palm-oil had been so bought, and would be delivered accordingly, entered into certain contracts, whereas the defendants had not purchased the quantity of palm-oil or any palm-oil by the "Celma" on the terms aforesaid, but on different terms, viz. that the twenty-five tons were sold, and would be delivered to the plaintiff after and subject to the prior delivery of 800 tons of palm-oil from the vessel. The declaration proceeded to state that, by reason of the vessel not having more than 800 tons of palm-oil on board, no part of the twenty-five tons could be delivered to the plaintiff, whereby he was obliged to purchase a like quantity of palm-oil at other places at a higher price:—Held that, as the declaration was founded upon deceit, in the absence of fraud the action could not be sustained. Thom v. Bigland, 8 Ex. 725; 22 L. J., Ex. 243; 1 W. R. 290. And see Ward v. Hobbs, 48 L. J., Q. B. 281: 4 App. Cas. 13; 40 L. T. 73; 27 W. R. 114.

Foundation of Suit.]—Where representations are made of the nature and character of property offered for sale, affecting its value, and those representations turn out to be false to the knowledge of the party making them, a foundation is laid for an action of damages for the deceit, and for a suit in equity to set aside the contract of sale. Attwood v. Small, 6 Cl. & F. 232.

—— Falsehood of Defendant — Damage to Plaintiff.]—A false affirmation made by a defendant with intent to defraud the plaintiff, whereby the plaintiff receives damage, is the ground of an action upon the case, in the nature of deceit. Pasley v. Freeman, 3 Term Rep. 51; 1 R. R. 634.

In such an action, it is not necessary that the defendant should be benefited by the deceit, or that he should collude with the person who is. Ib.

Plaintiff having Means of Knowledge of Fraud.]—The mere possession by a purchaser of the means of knowledge does not prevent the vendor's liability for a false representation; and the vendor having sold a lease as of a longer term, he knowing it to be of a shorter, is liable, although he sent a draft conveyance reciting the lease, the recital not having been referred to by the purchaser. Ferrier v. Peacock, 2 F. & F. 717.

Rights pending Action.]—Pending an action to rescind an executed contract for the purchase of debentures on the ground of misrepresentation, the plaintiffs have a lien on the debentures for the purchase-money, and are entitled to intervene in an action instituted by other debenture-holders for the protection of all the debentures, in order to do all that is reasonable to protect and prevent the purchased debentures from being injured, so long as they do not thereby injure them, and they are entitled to oppose the vendors in such proceedings, provided they do so in good faith, and in the interest of those entitled to the purchased debentures. Imperial Ottoman Bank v. Trustees, Executors and Securities Insurance Corporation, 13 R. 287.

Lloyd's Register—Misstatement in Class Certificate—Action by Purchaser of Ship.]—Lloyd's committee had furnished the owner of a sailing yacht with a certificate which classed the yacht A 1 for eleven years. After the owner had sold the yacht to the plaintiff, it was discovered that she was not entitled to this classification. The plaintiff brought an action for damages against the committee upon the ground that owing to the representation in the certificate he had given more for the yacht than she was worth:—Held, that the plaintiff had no cause of action. Thiodon v. Tindall, 60 L. J., Q. B. 526; 65 L. T. 343; 40 W. R. 141; 7 Asp. M. C. 76.

Written Contract — Previous Parol Representations Untrue—Written Contract silent as to Subject-matter of Representation.]—The defendant had let a house to the plaintiff for a term of seven years. The plaintiff alleged that previous to the execution of the lease the defendant said he would make the drainage and water-closet perfect in every way, and subsequently, after certain alterations had been made, the defendant said that the water-closet was as sound as could be and in perfect order. The lease, which was executed after these representations, was silent as to the state of the drainage and water-closet, but the plaintiff said he was induced by these representations to take the lease. In an action to recover damages in respect of an illness alleged to have been caused by the defective state of the water-closet:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, as, assuming the representations to have been made, they did not amount to an agreement, but were at most a misrepresentation, for which in the absence of fraud no action would lie. Burtsal v. Bianchi, 65 L. T. 678.

Stock Exchange—Cornering Market.]—By his statement of claim the plaintiff alleged that the defendants, who were the promoters of a company, conspired to make and made false and fraudulent representations to the directors of the company by which the bulk of the shares in the company were allotted to the nominees of the defendants, instead of to the public as the directors were induced to believe, and also by false and fraudulent representations to the Committee of the Stock Exchange obtained from them a settling day; and that the object of the defendants was to gain control of the market in the shares of the company, and to cause a belief that allotment had been bonâ fide made to the public, and to induce the public to make contracts for selling such shares, and so to compel such members of the public as had entered into such contracts to purchase shares from the defendants at such prices as the defendants should choose to fix. The plaintiff was one of the members of the public who was thus induced to make contracts for the sale of shares in the company, and in order to fulfil his contracts was compelled to purchase shares at a greatly enhanced price, and suffered damage thereby :—Held, that no cause of action was disclosed. Salaman v. Warner, 65 L. T. 132 —C. A.

Company — Prospectus — Misstatement — Material Inducement.]—The directors of a company issued a prospectus inviting subscriptions for debentures, stating that the property of the company was subject to a mortgage of 21,500*l*., but omitting to state a second mortgage of 5,000*l*. The prospectus further stated that the objects of the issue of debentures were—(1) to purchase horses and vans ; (2) to complete alterations and additions ; (3) to supply cheap fish. The true object was to get rid of pressing liabilities. The plaintiff advanced 1,500*l*. upon debentures under the erroneous belief that the prospectus offered him a charge, and would not have advanced his money but for such belief, but he also relied upon the false statements contained in the prospectus as to the financial condition of the company :—Held, that the misstatement of the objects for which the debentures were issued was a material misstatement of fact, influencing the conduct of the plaintiff, and rendered the directors liable to an action for deceit, although the plaintiff was also influenced by his own mistake. Edgington v. Fitzmaurice, 55 L. J., Ch. 650 ; 29 Ch. D. 459 ; 53 L. T. 369 ; 33 W. R. 911 ; 50 J. P. 52—C. A.

At Suit of Sheriff.]—A sheriff, upon the representation of the plaintiff in a suit, having seized goods under a fi. fa. as belonging to the defendant, and damages having been recovered against the sheriff by a third person claiming the goods, an action lies at the suit of the sheriff for the false representation. Humphrys v. Pratt, 5 Bligh (N.S.), 154.

4. Parties.

Persons partially Interested.] — A person, partially interested in an estate, may maintain a suit to set aside a conveyance of such interest fraudulently obtained from him, without making the other persons interested in the estates parties. Henley v. Stone, 3 Beav. 355.

Grantor and Grantees.]—The right of instituting a suit to set aside a conveyance on equitable grounds passes by the grantor's subsequent conveyance of the same property, and the grantee under the subsequent conveyance may institute such suit without making the grantor a co-plaintiff. Dickinson v. Burrell, 35 L. J., Ch. 371 ; L. R. 1 Eq. 337 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 199 ; 14 W. R. 412.

A. having executed a conveyance of real estate to B., which was liable to be set aside on equitable grounds, afterwards made a voluntary settlement of the same property in trust for himself for life, with remainder to his children as he should appoint, and in default of appointment to all his children who should attain twenty-one, or (being daughters) should marry, in equal shares :—Held, that the infant children of A. could maintain a bill, making A. and the trustees of the settlement defendants, to set aside the conveyance to B. Ib.

Heir of Grantor—Devisee of Grantor—Remaindermen.]—A bill, filed in 1850 to set aside for fraud a limitation under a deed of 1818, by which the reversion in lands was limited to the defendant for life, stated that the defendant went to America in 1822, to avoid service of subpœna, and there concealed herself, which prevented the grantor from taking proceedings to set aside the deed ; and that the grantor devised the said lands to the use of the plaintiff for life, "with remainder as therein," and also devised the said lands to the use of the plaintiff absolutely :—Held, on demurrer, that lapse of time was not a bar to the plaintiff, and that she might, as devisee, maintain a suit to set aside the deed without making the heir at law of the grantor a party ; but held, also, that the persons entitled to the estate after the death of the plaintiff were necessary parties. Johnston v. Howison, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 463.

Creditor having Judgment at Law.] — To impeach a settlement for fraud there must be a creditor to complain of it, and he must be enabled to sue by having obtained judgment at law for his debt, and must state that he is defrauded by it. Colman v. Croker, 1 Ves. 161.

Parties Grieved.]—The assignees of an insolvent debtor are parties grieved, within 13 Eliz. c. 5, s. 2, against fraudulent conveyances, and may recover the penalty thereby given from the insolvent and others, parties to such conveyance. Butcher v. Harrison, 4 B. & Ad. 129 ; 1 N. & M. 677 ; 2 L. J., K. B. 189. S. P., Doe d. Grimsby v. Ball, 11 M. & W. 531 ; 12 L. J., Ex. 328.

Creditor having Lien.]—In order to entitle a creditor of a living debtor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance under 13 Eliz. c. 5, it is not necessary that the creditor should have any lien or charging order on the property comprised in the conveyance ; but in the absence of such lien the court will not apply the property in satisfaction of the creditor's claim. Reese River Silver Mining Co. v. Atwell, L. R. 7 Eq. 347 ; 20 L. T. 163 ; 17 W. R. 601.

Heir.]—Where a young man just of age was imposed on in the sale of an estate, his heir held not precluded from suing to set aside the sale because the party defrauded had by will bequeathed a third of the balance of purchase money remaining due at his death to a third party. Bellamy v. Sabine, 2 Ph. 425 ; 17 L. J., Ch. 105. And see S. C., 5 L. J., Ch. 36.

Devisee of Client, Action by—Heir, not Necessary Party.]—The right to set aside a conveyance improperly obtained by a solicitor from his client is devisable, and the heir at law is not a necessary party to a suit by the devisee to set it aside. Uppington v. Bullen, 2 Dr. & War. 184; 1 Con. & L. 291.

Agreement against being made a Party.]—A party cannot protect himself from being made a co-defendant to a suit in which fraudulent misconduct upon his part is alleged, upon the mere ground of an agreement between himself and the plaintiff anterior to the acts complained of that he should not be made a party to, or required to answer, any suit at law in equity in respect of anything done or omitted to be done by him in the performance of certain duties, to his neglect of which the charge of misconduct refers. Nor can he object in such a case that the bill does not pray any active relief as against himself. Scott v. Liverpool Corporation, 25 L. J., Ch. 227; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 111; 4 W. R. 210.

Fraud of several Persons.]—Where the bill seeks to be relieved from the consequences of a fraud, committed by several persons, it is not necessary to make all of them defendants, because in such a case there is no right to contribution between them. Seddon v. Connell, 4 Myl. & Cr. 79; 9 L. J., Ch. 341.

Liability of several Parties.]—Where a liability arises from a wrongful act of several parties, each is liable for all the consequences, and there is no contribution between them, and each case is distinct, depending upon the evidence against each party. Att.-Gen. v. Wilson, Cr. & Ph. 1; 9 Sim. 30.

For Purpose of Discovery.]—The rule that a person implicated in a fraudulent transaction may be a party to a suit impeaching the transaction, for purposes of discovery and costs, is confined to cases in which the defendant fills the position of agent (including that of attorney or solicitor) or arbitrator. Weise v. Wardle, L. R. 19 Eq. 171; 23 W. R. 208.

Where a solicitor is implicated in a case of fraud, he may be made a party to a bill seeking relief in respect of that fraud, for the purpose of discovery; the only relief asked against him being that he should be ordered to pay the costs. Gilbert v. Lewes, 1 De G. J. & Sm. 38; 32 L. J., Ch. 347; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 187; 9 L. T. 541; 11 W. R. 223.

Solicitors.]—A solicitor, who has joined with his client in practising a fraud, may be made a co-defendant to a suit to set aside the transaction. Beadles v. Burch, 10 Sim. 332; 9 L. J., Ch. 57; 4 Jur. 189.

A solicitor assisting his client in obtaining a fraudulent release is properly made a party, and liable to costs, if the principal be not solvent. Bowles v. Stewart, 1 Sch. & Lef. 227.

In a suit to impeach a deed for fraud, a solicitor or agent concerned in procuring it may be made a party, but the bill must pray costs against him. Crofts v. Allman, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 451.

A solicitor may be made a party to a bill to set aside a deed for fraud, if he be a party to the fraud, and costs are prayed against him. Kelly v. Jackson, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 129.

Agents—Fraud of Co-Agent.]—Two agents of a company (brothers) conspired to conceal the true state of its affairs, whereby H., one of them, was enabled, in 1817, to buy shares of G. at a price much below their real value. The fraud was not discovered till 1860, soon after which time G.'s representative filed a bill against the representatives of both, praying a re-transfer of the shares, and payment of the intermediate dividends. It was not pretended that J., the other agent, derived any pecuniary benefit from the sale to H. The bill was demurred to by J.'s representative, for want of equity, and for multifariousness; the court overruled the demurrer on both points. Walsham v. Stainton, 3 N. R. 56; 32 L. J., Ch. 557; 8 L. T. 633; 11 W. R. 771. And see 1 H. & M. 322.

In such a case agents are in a sense trustees for their principal, and they are liable for the frauds by either, with the privity of the other against the principal. Though an action would lie for deceit against the conniving agent, who derived no pecuniary benefit from the purchase, there is a concurrent jurisdiction in equity. Ib.

Invalid Marriage by Fraud—Suit to Enforce Subsequent Assignment.]—A., already married, went through the ceremony of marriage with W., and joined with her in executing an assignment of her interest in a trust fund to a purchaser, B. The fraud practised upon W. by A. did not affect the validity of the assignment, nor was it necessary to make A. a party to a suit by B., to obtain the benefit of the assignment. Sturge v. Starr, 2 Myl. & K. 195.

Persons Having no Interest.]—A bill charging fraud, in which both A. M. and W. M. were concerned, and that the defendants (therefore including A. M.) might pay the costs, this case came within the rule that a person charged with fraud, though having no interest, was a proper party to a suit; and, as it could not be said that no relief could be had against A. M. at the hearing, a demurrer for want of equity must be overruled. A demurrer ore tenus was not sustainable, the two matters alleged to be improperly joined (realty and personalty) being properly connected as the subject of one instrument. Innes v. Mitchell, 5 W. R. 673.

Persons not Implicated.]—Observations on the practice of making solicitors, agents, and arbitrators parties to a suit, alleging against the principal defendant fraud, in which the co-defendants were not implicated. Mathias v. Yetts, 46 L. T. 497—C. A.

Bankrupts.]—A bill was filed against a bankrupt and his assignees, seeking to set aside conveyances as having been fraudulently procured by the bankrupt before his bankruptcy:—Held, that the charge of fraud did not make the bankrupt a proper party. Gilbert v. Lewis, 2 J. & H. 452; 32 L. J., Ch. 347. Affirmed, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 187; 7 L. T. 541; 11 W. R. 233.

Held, also, that, although a decree declaring the deeds to be fraudulent would, in a sense, make the bankrupt a trustee of the property, this was not sufficient to make him a proper party to the suit. Ib.

A bill was filed by the trustee in bankruptcy of W., against W. and his son, praying that it might be declared that a voluntary conveyance by W. to his son previously to the bankruptcy was fraudulent and void, and that the defendants might deliver up certain documents, and that the defendants, or one of them, might pay the costs of the suit:—Held, that W. was not a

Arbitrators.]—An award was made upon a submission not under the statute of Will. 3, between two parties in difference, on which one of the parties obtained judgment against the other party in action at law. The unsuccessful party filed a bill in equity against the successful party and the arbitrator, to set aside the award:—Held, that, whether the award was or was not impeachable on equitable grounds, yet, inasmuch as there was no evidence to raise suspicion that the arbitrator had acted corruptly, partially, or unfairly, he ought not to have been made a party to the suit, and the bill was dismissed as against him with costs, before the court had come to any opinion for or against his award. Hamilton v. Bankin, 3 De G. & Sm. 782; 19 L. J., Ch. 307; 15 Jur. 70.

Creditors.]—To a bill to set aside for fraud a decree and purchase under it, a demurrer by the purchaser for not making creditors parties, who had proved in the office under the decree, and their debts afterwards, by the final decree, made charges on the estate, and directed to be paid out of the purchase-money, overruled; although the decree fastened the debts on the estate, yet it did not fix them on the identical money of the purchaser; for, when a valid sale shall have been made, the charge will then be transferred from the land to the purchase-money; in the meantime, it is on the land only. If the creditors were necessary parties to such a bill, the court, to be consistent, ought in all other cases to hear them before it opened a sale under its decree, which would be an intolerable grievance to the suitor. Wallace v. Smith, Beat. 381. Creed v. Creed, 2 Hog, 215.

Persons Having Equitable Charges.]—It is not an universal principle that all persons having equitable charges on land must be defendants to suits relating to it. There are many cases in which the court can sufficiently protect such interests, without loading the estate by such defendants. Wallace v. Smith, Beat. 385.

Parents.]—The parent is not a necessary party to a suit to set aside a deed fraudulent on marriage, but is a competent witness to prove the fraud on a bill filed by the husband and wife. Scott v. Scott, 1 Cox, 367.

Person Having Outstanding Term.]—A bill was filed for relief against a conveyance of a real estate made fraudulently to defeat a sequestration of the privy council:—Held, that a person alleged to have concurred in the fraud, and to whom an outstanding term had been assigned to attend the inheritance, was properly made a party to the suit. Taylor v. Wild, 8 Beav. 159.

Person Joining in Bond.]—To a bill filed against the executors and trustees under a will, seeking to set aside, on the ground of fraud, a bond of indemnity and a release executed by one of the plaintiffs, and a release executed by the other, it was objected, at the hearing, that another person, who had joined in executing the bond, had not been made a party to the suit:—Held, that he was a necessary party. Colby v. Hawkins, 6 Jur. 162.

Mortgagee.]—To bill by creditors to set aside purchase from defendant on ground of fraud, mortgagee of purchaser ought to be made party. Copis v. Middleton, 2 Madd. 410; 17 R. R. 226.

5. Pleadings.

Plea of Fraud.]—To an action upon a contract of indemnity, a plea that the defendant had been induced to enter into the contract by the fraudulent misrepresentation of the plaintiff, but without averring that he had repudiated the contract by giving up the benefit which he had received under it, is a bad plea. Anderson v. Costello, Ir. R. 5 C. L. 544; 19 W. R. 628.

The ordinary plea of fraud in an action on a contract contains an averment by implication that the defendant repudiated the contract, and, if the defendant has affirmed the contract, the plea is not proved, and no special replication is needed. Dawes v. Harness, 44 L. J., C. P. 194; L. R. 10 C. P. 166; 32 L. T. 159; 23 W. R. 398.

A general allegation of fraud is, on demurrer, an answer to an alleged contract, although the pleading alleging the contract shows that the person defrauded took a special benefit under the contract. Irlam v. Midland Ry., 23 W. R. 660.

When in an action for a debt the defendant pleads that he has liquidated his affairs by arrangement, and that the debt sued for is provable under the liquidation, and the plaintiff replies that the liquidation resolution has been obtained by fraud, the High Court of Justice has jurisdiction to inquire into and decide the question of fraud. Eyre v. Smith, 2 C. P. D. 435; 37 L. T. 417; 25 W. R. 871—C. A.

To an action for rent on an indenture of demise, whether entry under the demise is averred or not, a plea that the defendant accepted the lease in consequence of a representation fraudulently made by the lessor to him that the lessor was the owner of the premises, the lessor well knowing when he made the representation that the title to the premises was in the defendant, is bad, for want of averment that the contract had been repudiated by him. Meldon v. Lawless, 18 W. R. 261.

The 10 Car. 1 (Ir.) sess. 2, c. 3, s. 10, corresponds with 13 Eliz. c. 5, ss. 1, 2. In an action for rent reserved by a lease, and claimed by the plaintiffs suing as assignees of the reversion, a paragraph of the defence alleged that the assignment of the reversion was made with the intent to defraud the creditors of the assignor, of which the plaintiffs had notice; that after the alleged assignment, and before action brought, the assignor became bankrupt, and that his assignee in bankruptcy demanded and obtained from the defendants payment of the rent sued for:—Held, upon demurrer, that this was a valid answer to the action, as the demand and receipt of such rent by the assignee in bankruptcy, representing the general creditors of the assignor, showed an election to treat any such assignment as void, and that it was immaterial whether, in so acting, the assignee in bankruptcy was in fact aware of the assignment having been made. Searton v. Canny, 8 L. R., Ir. 216.

A first set of counts was for work done and money paid by, and on an account stated with, the testator D. The second set was for the same, by and with the plaintiffs as executors of D. Plea, that the testator caused the defendant to enter into the promises by fraud:—Held, that the plea was applicable to the promises in the second set of counts, which were made after the death of the testator, inasmuch as the defendant might treat them as founded upon the contracts with the testator stated in the first plea. Connop v. Levy, 5 Railw. Cas. 124; 11 Q. B. 769; 17 L. J., Q. B. 125; 12 Jur. 306.

Plea of fraud in usual form, to be common counts for goods sold, &c., is good. Leave to reply and demur, refused. Lawton v. Elmore, 27 L. J., Ex. 141.

In an action on an agreement, in which fraud is pleaded, a wilful misrepresentation must be shown. Stevens v. Webb, 7 Car. & P. 60.

Declaration on a written agreement, by which the plaintiff agreed to purchase of the defendant his leasehold interest in a farm, possession of which was to be given by the defendant to the plaintiff on his delivering to the defendant bills of exchange, which had been delivered accordingly. Breach, not giving possession of the farm to the plaintiff. Plea, that the lease contained a covenant by the defendant not to part with his interest in the farm without the consent of his lessor, with a condition for re-entry by the lessor in case of breach of such covenant; that before making the agreement the defendant had, in answer to an application to the lessor for permission to part with the possession, been told by such lessor that there would be no objection to the defendant doing so if he could find a successor eligible as tenant; that the plaintiff had notice of this, and that the agreement was made for the purpose of M. becoming the occupier of the farm; and that, in order to induce the defendant to enter into the agreement, the plaintiff represented to the defendant that M. was a person of respectability, and eligible as tenant of the farm. The plea then stated that M. was not a person of respectability, and was not eligible as tenant, as the plaintiff at the time of making the agreement knew, but that the defendant was then ignorant thereof, as the plaintiff also knew:—Held, that the plea showed that the defendant had been induced to make the contract by a false representation in a material matter connected with the contract, and therefore was good as a plea of fraud. Canham v. Barry, 15 C. B. 597; 3 C. L. R. 487; 24 L. J., C. P. 100; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 402.

Action for non-performance of an agreement to take a ready-furnished house. Plea, that the plaintiff caused and procured the defendant to enter into the agreement by means of fraud, covin, and misrepresentation of the plaintiff and others in collusion with him. It appeared at the trial, that the plaintiff had employed C. to let the house, and the defendant being in treaty with C. for taking it, asked him "If there was any objection to the house?" to which he answered that there was not; and the defendant entered into and signed the agreement, but afterwards discovered that the adjoining house was a brothel, and on that ground declined to fulfil the contract. It appeared that the plaintiff knew of the existence of the brothel before, but C. the agent did not:—Held, that it was not sufficient to support the plea that the representation turned out to be untrue, but that for that purpose it ought to have been proved to have been fraudulently made; that, as the representation was not embodied in the contract, the contract could not be affected by it unless it was a fraudulent representation; and that the knowledge of the plaintiff of the existence of the nuisance, and the representation of the agent that it did not exist, were not enough to constitute fraud, so as to support the plea. Cornfoot v. Fowke, 6 M. & W. 358; 9 L. J., Ex. 297; 4 Jur. 919.

A contract entered into by a local board provided that payment for the work executed thereunder, i. e. the making of a reservoir, should be made by instalments upon the certificates of a certain engineer. Several payments had been made, when it was discovered that the reservoir would not hold water, and further payment was refused. Thereupon the contractor brought an action against the board for 1,067*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.*, the balance due under the contract, which was stayed, however, on the board executing an agreement with the contractor undertaking to pay the sum of 800*l.* at the expiration of six months. The agreement was assigned by the contractor to a bank with whom he had an account, and to whom he was indebted to an amount exceeding 800*l.* Notice of the assignment was given by the bank to the board, and at the expiration of the six months the bank brought the present action against the board to recover the amount secured by the agreement, when, for the first time, the board denied their liability, on the ground that they had discovered that the contractor and the engineer had conspired together to give false certificates; and that, therefore, the agreement was one which had been obtained by fraud:—Held, that the defence that the agreement had been obtained by the fraud and collusion of the contractor was a good answer to the action brought against the defendants. Wakefield and Barnsley Banking Co. v. Normanton Local Board, 44 L. T. 697; 45 J. P. 601—C. A.

Held, also, that there was no obligation on the part of the defendants to give notice to the bank of the discovery of the fraud until steps were taken to enforce the agreement. Ib.

Sufficiency of Plea.]—To an action for breach of an agreement to enter into partnership with the plaintiff, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff carried on trade in partnership with S., which partnership was about to be wound up and dissolved: that the defendant made the agreement on the faith, and under the belief, that the plaintiff had up to that time acted with honesty towards his partner in the conduct of the business, and in relation to the pecuniary affairs thereof; but that the defendant discovered that the plaintiff had before the agreement acted with fraud and dishonesty towards his partner in the conduct of the business, and in relation to the pecuniary affairs thereof, which fraudulent and dishonest acts were unknown to the defendant at the time of his entering into the agreement; wherefore he repudiated and declined to carry into effect the agreement:—Held, that this plea afforded no answer to the action. Andrewes v. Garstin, 10 C. B. (N.S.) 444; 31 L. J., C. P. 15; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1124; 4 L. T. 580; 9 W. R. 782.

Several Allegations of Fraud.]—Where material allegations of fraud are proved, the plaintiff will obtain relief though other allegations of fraud may not be proved. Moxon v. Payne, 43 L. J., Ch. 240; L. R. 8 Ch. 881.

Particulars of Fraud.]—In an action by an insurance company against a shareholder for calls, he pleaded that he had been induced to take the shares through the fraud of the company:—Held, that he must give particulars of the acts of fraud intended to be relied upon in support of such plea, or have the plea of fraud struck out. M'Creight v. Stevens, 1 H. & C. 454; 31 L. J., Ex. 455; 6 L. T. 503; 10 W. R. 798.

Particulars granted on a general plea (by way of equitable defence) of fraud on the part of a cestui que trust. Pitts v. Chambers, 1 F. & F. 684.

Where, in an action of contract, the defendant in one paragraph of the statement of defence pleaded fraud generally, an order was made, on the application of the plaintiff, for particulars of the acts of fraud relied upon in that paragraph, although the statement of defence in subsequent paragraphs specifically set out certain alleged fraudulent representations. Barton v. Bradshaw, 8 L. R. Ir. 30.

Particulars of Plea—Rebuttal.]—In an action to enforce a contract in which the defendant sets up the plea that he was induced by fraud to enter into the contract, it is not necessary for the defendant expressly to repudiate the contract; in order to rebut the plea, it is for the plaintiff to show that the defendant had adhered to the contract notwithstanding the discovery of the fraud. Aaron's Reefs, Limited v. Twiss, 65 L. J., P. C. 54; [1896] A. C. 273; 74 L. T. 794—H. L. (Ir.)

Sufficiency of Allegation.]—In an action for a deceit, the plaintiff declared that he had employed the defendant to obtain a lease for him; that the defendant fraudulently represented to him that a premium of 150*l.* was to be paid for it, whereas only 100*l.* was to be paid; by means of which fraudulent representation, the defendant obtained from him 50*l.*, and converted it to his own use:—Held, that these allegations were sufficient, without further stating that the 50*l.* so obtained was over and above the 100*l.* to be paid for the lease. Pewtress v. Austin, 2 Marshall, 217; 6 Taunt. 522; 16 R. R. 667.

Sufficiency of Plaint.]—The particulars of a plaint in a county court were as follows: "The plaintiff sues the defendant in tort for legal fraud and deceit committed under the following circumstances: for that the defendant in March, 1872, caused to be inserted in a public newspaper an advertisement for the letting by tender, with immediate possession, of a farm; and the plaintiff, believing in the bona fides of such advertisement, and desiring to become tenant of a place of the description advertised, did take trouble and pains and incurred expense in going to and inspecting the property, and in the employment of persons to inspect and value it for him, with a view of becoming tenant, whereas afterwards it appeared that the defendant had no power to let the property as advertised, and caused the advertisement to be issued to serve some purpose of his own other than that appearing by the advertisement. And that the defendant knew, at the time he caused such advertisement to be published, that he had not the power to let the farm, and that the farm was not to be let." The county court judge ruled that the particulars disclosed no cause of action, and nonsuited the plaintiff:—Held, that the particulars contained allegations amounting to a fraudulent representation, for which an action would lie. Richardson v. Silvester, 43 L. J., Q. B. 1; L. R. 9 Q. B. 34; 29 L. T. 393; 22 W. R. 74.

Sufficiency of Count.]—The attorney of P., who had obtained judgment in an action against W. F., caused a fieri facias to issue against W. F., and indorsed on the writ, "The defendant is a ——, and resides at R., in your bailiwick." The writ was delivered to the sheriff, who seized the goods of the son, he being the only person of that name who resided at R.; the real defendant, the father, resided at C., which adjoined R. An action having been brought by the son against the sheriff, in which the sheriff had to pay damages, he sued the attorney to recover compensation. It was agreed that both the attorney and the sheriff acted bonâ fide. The count alleged that the defendant, by an indorsement on the writ, and with the intent that the plaintiff should act on the statement contained in the indorsement, falsely stated and represented to the plaintiff that the W. F. against whose goods the writ was directed resided at R.:—Held, that the count, which was simply for a misrepresentation, could not be supported. Childers v. Wooler, 2 El. & El. 287; 29 L. J., Q. B. 129; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 444; 2 L. T. 49; 8 W. R. 321.

Sufficiency of Declaration.]—A declaration—after stating that the defendant let a house to the plaintiff, knowing at the time that it was in a state dangerous to occupy, knowing also that the plaintiff was ignorant of its state, that he took it for the purpose of immediate occupation, and that he believed that he could immediately occupy it—alleged that the defendant never at any time gave the plaintiff notice that the house was in that state: that the plaintiff entered, and that the house fell and did special damage:—Held, that the declaration did not disclose a good cause of action; for it did not show that the defendant made any misrepresentation to the plaintiff as to the state of the house, nor that the plaintiff was induced by his own belief of its soundness, or by anything in the conduct of the defendant amounting to deceit, to hire the house. Keates v. Cadogan (Earl), 10 C. B. 591; 20 L. J., C. P. 76; 15 Jur. 428.

—— Amendment.]—The plaintiff bought of the defendant the household furniture, fixtures, utensils in trade, &c., of a public-house, as per inventory taken by W. W., for 262*l.*, upon a representation by the defendant that the receipts of the house were 80*l.* per month, which representation turned out to be false. In an action for this misrepresentation, the declaration alleged the agreement to be for the purchase of the good-will, furniture, fixtures, &c.:—Held, that the declaration substantially stated the true nature of the agreement, and that, at all events, the court would, if necessary, amend it. Cater v. Wood, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 286.

—— Option of Issue.]—Where the case made by bill was, that a trust-deed, which it sought to set aside, was the produce of sheer imposture and plain dealing, and was obtained by means of a successful conspiracy between the defendant and his solicitor, whereby the plaintiff was entrapped into the execution of the deed, under the fiction that it was an instrument of a totally different kind; and evidence was adduced only to prove that the plaintiff was a very ignorant and illiterate person, easily imposed upon, and that she executed the deed in question without distinct explanation, and without the advice of her own solicitor, who resided near, and whom she expressed a desire to consult:—Held, that the case, as it appeared on the evidence, was not sufficiently put in issue by the bill, to enable the court to set aside the deed; but the court gave the plaintiff an option of an issue, to try whether the execution had been fraudulently obtained; and, the plaintiff declining such issue, the court, having regard to the evidence adduced, though the imputations in the bill on the defendant and on his solicitor were very grave, dismissed the bill without costs. Griggs v. Staplee, 2 De G. & Sm. 572; 13 Jur. 29.

—— Natural Result.]—A declaration stated that the plaintiff was a dealer in printed silk goods, and sent the defendant divers lots of such goods, the last of which contained handkerchiefs, which had been printed by the plaintiff with an ornamental pattern, and that he was about to print others in the same manner for profit; all which was known to the defendant; yet he, to defraud the plaintiff, and to induce him to desist from so printing the same and deprive him of the profits, and acquire the same for his own use and benefit, falsely represented to the plaintiff, concerning the last lot and the handkerchiefs, that in the last lot there was a copy of a registered pattern, and that the parties intended to proceed against the plaintiff in the most expensive manner by injunction (meaning that the pattern was a copy of a pattern registered according to the statute), whereas in fact no such pattern had been registered; and no parties did so intend, as the defendant well knew. Special damage:—Held, that the declaration disclosed a good cause of action, and that the special damage naturally flowed from the wrongful act of defendant, and that the innuendo was unnecessary. Barley v. Walford, 15 L. J., Q. B. 369; 9 Q. B. 197; 10 Jur. 917.

A declaration stated that the plaintiff, defendant and C. entered into a joint speculation in railway shares; that C. advanced 6,000*l*., 2,000*l*. on his own behalf, 2,000*l*. as a loan to the plaintiff, and 2,000*l*. on behalf of the defendant; that C. was desirous of retiring from the adventure, and the defendant offered to take upon himself the whole of the adventure and debt of 6,000*l*., provided the plaintiff would consent to abandon his share to the defendant, and C. would accept the defendant as his debtor in the place of the plaintiff for the 2,000*l*.; that the plaintiff abandoned his share of the adventure, and the defendant agreed to take upon himself the whole adventure and become debtor to C. for the 6,000*l*.; and C., on the faith and in the belief that such an arrangement was made, consented to accept the defendant as such debtor in the place of the plaintiff; nevertheless the defendant, knowing that he alone was capable of proving that the plaintiff had assented to the arrangement, fraudulently, falsely, and maliciously, and before the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, amending the law of evidence, and in order to induce C. to believe that the joint adventure had never been put an end to, and to induce C. to sue the plaintiff for the 2,000*l*. and to deter him from calling the defendant as a witness, and to destroy his credit as a witness if so called, wrote, and sent to C. a letter, purporting to be addressed to the plaintiff, but directed to C., wherein he fraudulently and falsely pretended to expostulate with the plaintiff, and asserted that the plaintiff had positively refused to concur in the arrangement, whereby C. was induced to believe that the plaintiff had never agreed to retire from the adventure, and acting on such belief C. brought an action against the plaintiff to recover the 2,000*l*.; that the action was referred upon the terms that neither the plaintiff nor the defendant should be examined, and C. recovered against the plaintiff 2,486*l*., which he was compelled to pay:—Held, bad, since it did not appear that the damage to the plaintiff was the natural result of the wrongful act of the defendant. Collins v. Cave, 6 H. & N. 131; 30 L. J., Ex. 55; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1160; 8 W. R. 586—Ex. Ch.

Sufficiency—Setting Aside Executed Contract, in Equity.]—Where an application is made in equity to set aside an executed contract, on the ground of the defendant having stated what is false, or concealed what ought to be disclosed, the circumstances alleged must show that his conduct amounts in equity to fraud. New Brunswick and Canada Ry. and Land Co. v. Conybeare, 9 H. L. Cas. 711; 31 L. J., Ch. 297; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 575; 6 L. T. 109; 10 W. R. 305.

General Charge of Fraud—Answer.]—Upon bill to set aside deed, except trust for debts upon a general charge of fraud, misapprehension, and misrepresentation, or to control management of trust, and for account against trustees:—Held:—1st, That deed could not be set aside partially for fraud, nor, under bill, totally. 2ndly, that general charges of fraud require no answer, and could not support a decree. Myddleton v. Kenyon (Lord), 2 Ves. 391.

Discovery.]—Bill to be relieved against fraud, defendant must answer discovery. Manningham v. Bolingbroke, Dick. 533.

Production.]—Where a deed is sought to be impeached, the plaintiff is entitled to have it produced, and the defendant cannot resist the production upon the ground of lien. Balch v. Symes, Turn. & R. 87; 23 R. R. 195. See Tyler v. Drayton, 2 Sim. & S. 309.

Interrogatories.]—To a bill filed in equity to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent under the 13 Eliz. c. 5, s. 3, the defendant, by his answer, refused to answer any portion of it, on the ground that the statute imposed a forfeiture and six months' imprisonment. After the time for excepting had expired, the plaintiff amended his bill by striking out the allegations of fraud, and by attempting to remove the objection, and he again filed interrogatories. The defendant, by answer, again insisted on the objection, and that the proceedings of the plaintiff were a mere snare, and he refused to answer any portion of the bill. The court came to the conclusion that the bills were substantially the same, and the answer to the first being deemed sufficient, the defendant was not bound to answer the second. Wich v. Parker, 22 Beav. 59.

Defence by Persons not Creditors—Plea of 13 Eliz. c. 5.]—On the 8th December, 1885, T. G. Tuck executed a deed of gift of certain furniture to Harriet his wife. This deed was not registered as a bill of sale. On the 5th April, 1888, T. G. Tuck gave a bill of sale of the same furniture to the defendants as security for a loan. On the 30th July, 1888, the defendants took possession. On the 31st July, T. G. Tuck died. On the 4th August his widow brought an action to restrain the defendants from entering into possession, and for damages. The defence was that none of the furniture was the property of T. G. Tuck, but belonged to the defendants under their bill of sale :—Held, that the defendants could not raise the defence of the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, because they were not defending as creditors, but as persons entitled to the possession of specific property, and had not raised the point in their pleadings. The point should have been raised by way of counter-claim or separate action by the defendants for themselves and all other creditors. Tuck v. Southern Counties Deposit Bank, 45 Ch. D. 471 ; 60 L. T. 885. Affirmed on other grounds in C. A.

Setting up Jus tertii.]—Judgment having been obtained against the plaintiff, he executed a bill of sale of his plate to M. to defeat the execution. M. afterwards took an assignment of the judgment, and issued an execution against the plaintiff and seized his goods, whereupon the latter, for the purpose of defeating the execution of M., deposited the plate with the defendant :—Held, in trover for the plate, that the defendant was entitled to set up the right of M. to it. Cheesman v. Excell, 6 Ex. 341 ; 20 L. J., Ex. 209.

Estoppel.]—In an action for calls by a company against a shareholder, in which the jury have found that the contract to take the shares was induced by fraud, the defendant is not estopped from setting up the plea of fraud merely on the ground that he did not, immediately on the discovery of the fraud, repudiate the contract. Aaron's Reefs v. Twiss, 65 L. J., P. C. 54 ; [1896] A. C. 273 ; 74 L. T. 794—H. L. (Ir.)

Striking out Statement of Claim—Order XXV., Rule 4.]—In an action to set aside a marriage settlement, the plaintiff alleged, as the ground of his action, that previous to the execution of the settlement made upon the marriage between himself and I. S., the latter stated to him that her first husband had been divorced from her, at her suit, by reason of his cruelty and adultery, and that she had not herself been guilty of adultery ; that such statements were made to induce him to execute the settlement and contract the marriage ; that, in reliance on the representations, he executed the settlement and married I. S. ; that he subsequently discovered that the representations were false to the knowledge of I. S., and that she herself had been divorced from her husband at his suit and by reason of her adultery :—Held, on motion by the defendant, that the plaintiff's statement of claim must be struck out under Ord. XXV. r. 4 as disclosing no reasonable ground of action. Johnston v. Johnston, 53 L. J., Ch. 1014 ; 51 L. T. 537 ; 32 W. R. 1016. Affirmed, 52 L. T. 76 ; 33 W. R. 239—C. A.

6. Evidence and Onus of Proof.

Generally.]—In a concerted account of a fraudulent transaction, the most striking contradictions may be expected on the minor details or collateral facts rather than on the leading circumstances. Brydges v. King, 1 Hag. Ec. 301.

Where equity is sought upon the ground of compelling a party to make good the representations which he has made, and which he has the power of making good, there must, if they relate to property, be clear and distinct evidence of the representations, and of the property to which they relate. Turner v. Ince, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1072.

—— Suspicion of Fraud.]—The party in possession of the legal right is entitled to put his antagonist on strict proof of fraud before the court can relieve or direct an issue. Suspicion of fraud is not sufficient. Ross v. Steele, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 171.

Mere suspicion of a fraudulent intention to protect property against the just claims of third parties will not suffice to establish the fact that the transaction was wholly colourable as between the original parties to the instrument, as such a transaction is not as between themselves rendered void, because it may have the effect of defeating the claims of creditors. Shaw v. Jeffery, 13 Moore, P. C. 432 ; 3 L. T. 1.

—— Confession of Fraud.]—Fraud is a conclusion of law resulting from facts. Confession is no fact, but merely evidence of it. Mulholland v. Hendrick, Beat. 280.

—— Action of Deceit.] — In an action for deceit the plaintiff must show, first, that the false statements made to him were fraudulent ; secondly, that they were a cause inducing him to act to his prejudice. Smith v. Chadwick, 53 L. J., Ch. 873 ; 9 App. Cas. 187 ; 50 L. T. 697 ; 32 W. R. 687 ; 48 J. P. 644—H. L. (E.)

Partial Proof.]—Where material allegations of fraud are proved, the plaintiff will obtain relief although other allegations of fraud may not be proved. Moxon v. Payne, 43 L. J., Ch. 240 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 881.

If a bill makes a case of actual fraud, and at the hearing the fraud is disproved, or not established, the court will not in general allow the bill to be used for any secondary or inferior kind of relief to which the plaintiff might otherwise have been entitled, but will dismiss it at once. But, where a bill sought to set aside a bottomry bond, as having been concocted in a fraudulent conspiracy between the captain of the ship and the obligee, though the fraud was disproved at the hearing, the court, at the request of the defendant, directed the usual inquiries for the purpose of ascertaining how much of the sum secured by the bond was a proper subject of bottomry. Glascott v. Lang, 2 Ph. 310 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 429 ; 11 Jur. 642. S. P., Dobson v. Lyall, 2 Ph. 323, n.

If a case of fraud is made by a bill, and is not established by the evidence, and another case for relief is alleged in the same bill and proved, so much only of the bill as relates to the case of fraud is dismissed, and relief may be given on the other part of it. Parr v. Jewell, 1 K. & J. 671 ; 3 W. R. 567.

But, if a case of actual fraud is alleged by the bill, the plaintiff cannot obtain relief upon such a bill by proving only a case of constructive fraud. Ib.

The bill alleged that the plaintiff, without consideration, gave a promissory note, and accepted certain bills of exchange, for the accommodation of A., and that A. discounted the note and negotiated the bills for his own use, and paid them before or after they became due, and told the plaintiff that he had done so, and that he was ready to give them up to the plaintiff. The bill also alleged that A. afterwards fell ill, and when he was near his death his son found among his papers the note and bill uncancelled, and handed them over to B., who gave them to the defendant, and that the defendant knew when he received them that B. had obtained possession of them without the sanction of A., and without consideration; and the bill sought to have the note and bills delivered up, and to restrain an action by the defendant upon them:—Quære, whether, the case of fraud not having been proved, the plaintiff could obtain relief upon proof that the note and bills were given without consideration to A., and that there was an express agreement between him and the plaintiff that they should not be negotiated when overdue. Ib.

Where the principal object of the bill is relief, on the ground of fraud, and the plaintiff fails to prove the fraud, the court may dismiss the whole bill. Maguire v. O'Reilly, 3 Jo. & Lat. 224; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 335.

Semble, when a bill sets up a case of actual fraud, and makes that the ground of the prayer for relief, the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree, by establishing some one or more of the facts quite independent of fraud, but which might of themselves create a case under a distinct head of equity. Price v. Berrington, 3 Mac. & G. 486; 15 Jur. 999.

Although, when a bill alleges a case of fraud only and the fraud is not proved, the bill will be dismissed; yet, if the case alleged is not one of fraud only, relief may be given on the alternative case made by the bill. Traill v. Baring, 4 De G. J. & S. 318.

If the relief sought by the bill is based on fraud, the failure to prove it is fatal; but, if by striking out of the bill the charge of fraud there is sufficient equity stated and proved, and the charge of fraud is only subsidiary, it is a matter only affecting costs. London Chartered Bank of Australia v. Lempriere, 9 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 426; 42 L. J., P. C. 49; L. R. 4 P. C. 572; 29 L. T. 186; 21 W. R. 513.

A bill which rests on a charge of fraud, if the charge of fraud fails, cannot be sustained on other grounds. M'Elroy v. Murphy, 22 W. R. 501.

A bill to set aside a deed containing charges of fraud, which the court deems not to be proved, will be dismissed as to those charges, but need not be dismissed altogether, if there are other charges which the court deems to constitute what amounts to great irregularity and legal fraud, and to require the granting of the relief prayed. Hilliard v. Eiffe, L. R. 7 H. L. 39.

Inference.]—Although the court requires strict proof of the existence of fraud, yet, where a case of fraud is proved, it will draw reasonable inference as to the time when it was commenced. Panama and South Pacific Telegraph Co. v. India-Rubber, Gutta-Percha, and Telegraph Works Co., 45 L. J., Ch. 121; L. R. 10 Ch. 515; 32 L. T. 517; 23 W. R. 583.

A., the executor of B., filed a bill against C., stating that he had fraudulently obtained a bill of exchange from B., and praying that the bill might be delivered up. It appeared that an action had been brought by the direction of C. on the bill, and that, after the evidence for the plaintiff had been gone into, the counsel for the plaintiff had elected to be nonsuited. C. declined to give any undertaking to have another action tried at the next assizes. The court took into consideration the alleged fraud, and, being satisfied that an inference of fraud was to be drawn, ordered the bill to be delivered up. Allen v. Davis, 20 L. J., Ch. 44.

After the death of A., a captain in the navy, who died at a very advanced age in Greenwich Hospital, B., a dentist, produced a bill of exchange for 262*l.*, alleged to have been given him by A., and stated at one time that 100*l.*, part of it, was for medical attendance, and the rest a gift, and at another time that there was a contract that he was to attend to A.'s teeth for the rest of his life, and supply him with teeth. B. indorsed the bill to C., to whom he owed about 14*l.*, on the understanding that C. should bring an action on it for their joint benefit. The action was tried, and the counsel for the plaintiff elected to be nonsuited:—Held, that under these circumstances an inference of fraud was to be drawn. Ib.

—— Clandestinity.]—Clandestinity is a strong indication of fraud. Brydges v. King, 1 Hag. Ecc. 310.

—— Inference of Fact—Not Presumption of Law—"Renewable Lease."]—In 1869, P., a member of a firm of solicitors, by his advice induced the plaintiff to invest moneys upon the security of an equitable mortgage of a lease which he represented as renewable, and which had previously been renewed by custom every fourteen years, but the future renewal whereof was prohibited by statute passed in 1868. In 1875 P. fraudulently, and without the knowledge of his partners, gave a legal mortgage of the lease to a third party without notice of the plaintiff's mortgage. The security proved insufficient, and P. having absconded, the plaintiff sought to make P.'s firm liable for the loss sustained by him:—Held, that it is an inference of fact, and not a presumption of law, that, if a material representation calculated to induce a person to enter into a contract is made to him, he was thereby induced to enter into the contract. Dictum of Jessel, M.R., in Redgrave v. Hurd (20 Ch. D. 1, 21), commented on and explained. Hughes v. Twisden, 55 L. J., Ch. 481; 54 L. T. 570; 37 W. R. 498.

Presumption.]—It is not easy to overcome the presumption that a man of mature age, who has long acted as a legal practitioner, is competent in an ordinary transaction to take care of himself, though unassisted by counsel. But there is an equity which in certain circumstances will give relief even to such an individual. Tennent v. Tennent, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 6.

A subsequent sale for value not being by the voluntary grantor, no presumption arose that the prior grant was fraudulent. Godfrey v. Poole, 57 L. J., P. C. 78; 13 App. Cas. 497; 58 L. T. 685; 37 W. R. 357.

—— Rebuttal of.]—Every primâ facie presumption of fraud or undue influence may be rebutted by positive proofs of fair dealing, showing that the contracting party was under no influence unduly exercised. Moore v. M'Kay, Beat. 294.

Laches.]—Fraud being established against a party, it is for him, if he alleges laches in the other party, to show when the latter acquired a knowledge of the truth, and prove that he knowingly forbore to assert his right. Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, L. R. 5 P. C. 221 ; 22 W. R. 492.

Purchase from Poor Ignorant Person.]—The circumstances of poverty and ignorance of the vendor, and absence of independent advice, throw upon the purchaser, when the transaction is impeached, the onus of proving that the purchase was fair, just, and reasonable. Fry v. Lane, 58 L. J., Ch. 113 ; 40 Ch. D. 312 ; 60 L. T. 12 ; 37 W. R. 135.

Conveyance by Father, Tenant for Life, and Son, Reversioner in Fee, Just of Age—Onus on Purchaser.]—If an estate held in trust for a father for life, with remainder to his son in fee, were sold by the father and son immediately on the son's coming of age, the whole purchase money being paid to the father, the trustee disapproving of the transaction, and, if the purchaser afterwards came to the court to obtain the legal estate, the purchaser would be bound to prove, as against the son, the straightforwardness of the transaction. Hannah v. Hodgson, 30 Beav. 19 ; 5 L. T. 42 ; 9 W. R. 726.

Fiduciary Relation between Parties—Onus.]—Where a person holding a fiduciary character purchases from his cestui que trust, and the sale is complained of, a court of equity imposes the burden of proof upon the purchaser, to show that all due protection has been afforded to the vendor ; aliter, where no such fiduciary relation subsists. Harrison v. Guest, 6 De G. M. & G. 424 ; 25 L. J., Ch. 544 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 911 ; 4 W. R. 585. Affirmed, 8 H. L. Cas. 481.

Annuity to Medical Attendant.]—A married woman joined with her trustee, who was her confidential medical attendant, in granting annuities secured on her separate estate for his benefit. She afterwards sought to set them aside :—Held that the onus of proving their invalidity was on her :—Held, also, that the principle of Archer v. Hudson (7 Beav. 551) did not apply. Blaikie v. Clark, 15 Beav. 595 ; 22 L. J., Ch. 377.

Sale to Elderly Spinster at Undervalue—Onus.]—A small freehold property was agreed to be sold by an elderly spinster in humble life to a person far above her in station. The agreement was come to between the parties alone. In respect of the consideration, the vendor sought and obtained a slight advance on that offered by the purchaser. The purchaser's solicitor drew the conveyance, and it was presented to the vendor ready for execution, and executed by her without any advice. The Master of the Rolls having set aside the conveyance :—Held, that his decree was right, because the parties to the contract were in such relative positions that (a case of undervalue being on the evidence affirmatively deposed to) it lay on the purchaser (contrary to the usual rule) to show affirmatively that the price he had given was the value, and on the evidence he had failed in doing so. Baker v. Monk, 4 De G. J. & S. 388 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 691 ; 12 W. R. 779.

Fraud as to Deeds.]—In every case where a plaintiff comes to the court to set aside a deed on the ground of fraud, it is necessary that there should be clear and unequivocal proof of the facts which are said to constitute the fraud, and it must be shown that the facts are such as in the eye of the court amount to fraud. Lumley v. Desborough, 22 L. T. 597.

Fraud in procuring a deed, and the circumstances attending it, may be proved by parol evidence. Blake v. Marnell, 2 Ball & B. 47 ; 12 R. R. 68. Affirmed, 4 Dow, 248 ; 16 R. R. 56.

Where the answer of a defendant insists that a covenant was inserted without his knowledge or consent in a deed executed by him, and that the deed was not read over to him, and that the covenant is a fraud upon him, such deed cannot be proved vivâ voce against him as an executor, but it may be so proved as against another defendant whose answer does not impeach the validity of the covenant. Barfield v. Kelly, 4 Russ. 355.

Declaration of a party to a deed previous to the execution, admitted in support of the deed against imputations of fraud ; declarations subsequent impeaching the deed were rejected. Conolly v. Howe (Lord), 5 Ves. 700.

A deed may be impeached by matter dehors, as upon averment of illegal and corrupt consideration. Bulmer, Ex parte, 13 Ves. 318.

From the obscurity and inaccuracy of a deed, fraud and inadequacy of consideration will not be presumed after the death of the parties. M'Namara v. Browne, 2 Ball & B. 1.

The recital in a deed of a fact, which may or may not (according to circumstances) in equity amount to a fraud, will not of necessity affect a purchaser for value denying notice of fraud. Kenny v. Brown, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 512.

—— Not Reading Document.]—Not reading a deed to a person in the rough draft before the execution, nor in the engrossment at the time it was executed, is a badge of fraud. Bennet v. Vade, 2 Atk. 324 ; 9 Mod. 312.

—— Evidence of Understanding Deed.]—When a party is subject to the obligation of showing that an unprofessional person understood the contents of a deed which he executed, the mere proof of its having been read over to him, unaccompanied with proper explanations, is not sufficient to satisfy the court that the person hearing it read understood it. Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 482 ; 17 Jur. 99.

—— Onus of Proof—Solicitor and Client.]—A deed prepared by an attorney and executed by his client, a young man, who had applied to him to procure a loan of money, settling the property of the client so as to restrict his power of dealing with it, and appointing the attorney the trustee, recited that the trusts of the deed were created at the desire of the client, and for the purpose of placing the property under the management of the attorney. The client, by his bill to set aside the deed, denied the truth of the recitals, and insisted that the settlement was made without his knowledge —— Denial of—Onus.]—When a party has practised a deception, with a view to a particular end which has been attained by it, he cannot be allowed to deny its materiality. The onus probandi that the end was not so attained lies on the party who used the deception. Smith v. Kay, 7 H. L. Cas. 750 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 45.

Admissibility.]—Plaintiff having prevented the fulfilment of an agreement in favour of the defendant, for purchasing the assignment of a mortgage, by obtaining himself an advance after notice, not allowed to take advantage of it, being mala fides. Evidence, therefore, of a parol agreement read against him under these circumstances. Scott v. Merry, 1 Ves. 2.

Estate settled on marriage upon the husband and wife for their lives, remainder to such child or children as the husband, with the consent of the trustees, should appoint, and in default of appointment to the first and other sons in tail; the father, with the consent of the surviving trustee, appointed to his youngest son; bill by the eldest son to set aside the appointment, for misrepresentation and imposition on the trustee; the trustee's evidence read to prove imposition; but the father's evidence to prove no misrepresentation or imposition was rejected. Scroggs v. Scroggs, Amb. 272.

In an action for falsely representing that a good living might be got at a certain public-house, evidence that, a year or two before the plaintiff took to it, someone else found it impossible to get a living is admissible, the character of the house not having since changed. Penn v. Steadman, 2 F. & F. 546.

——To reduce Damages.]—In an action against a vendor of a public-house, for fraudulent misrepresentations of the business of the house: evidence of the actual value of the premises is admissible in reduction of damages, but not as a bar to the action. Pearson v. Wheeler, Ry. & M. 303.

—— To prove Consideration.]—Evidence is admissible to show valuable consideration beyond what appears on the face of the deed. Townend v. Toker, 35 L. J., Ch. 608 ; L. R. 1 Ch. 446 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 477 ; 14 L. T. 531 ; 14 W. R. 806.

—— Admissions.]—In a suit for the delivery up by holders of notes fraudulently negotiated, admissions of the negotiator, made whilst the notes were in his possession, may be read. Claughton v. Harrison, C. P. Cooper, 498.

—— Declarations and Admissions.]—In an ejectment brought by a person claiming under a post-nuptial settlement against a subsequent purchaser from the husband, declarations and admissions by the husband that he had received valuable consideration from the purchaser are not admissible. Doe d. Sweetland v. Webber, 3 N. & M. 586 ; 1 A. & E. 733; 3 L. J., K. B. 208.

—— Contemporaneous Documents.] — The defendants sent to the plaintiff the prospectus of a company, for whom they acted as agents, on the faith of which the plaintiff took shares in the company. A few days afterwards the defendants sent the plaintiff a circular containing other statements concerning the company, but the plaintiff did not receive it till after he had taken the shares :—Held, that the circular could not be taken as a contemporaneous document with the prospectus, and could not be read for the purpose of explaining it. Smith v. Chadwick, 51 L. J., Ch. 597 ; 20 Ch. D. 27 ; 46 L. T. 702 ; 30 W. R. 661—C. A. Affirmed in H. L., infra, col. 413.

—— Belief.]—In an action against a vendor for misrepresentation on the sale of goods, if it is shewn that a material representation has been made by the vendor to induce the purchaser to buy, and that such representation is not true in fact, and it is proved that it was untrue to the vendor's knowledge, he cannot be asked in chief whether he believed the representation to be true. Hine v. Campion, 7 Ch. D. 344.

—— General Credit.]—In an action for fraudulently representing that W. was trustworthy, the defendant's shopman, who was conversant with the transaction between the plaintiff and W., was called to prove that at the time of the representation he believed W. to be trustworthy ; and, as to W.'s general reputation for solvency, two or three tradesmen proved that, in their belief, W. was trustworthy at the time in question :—Held, that the evidence was admissible. Sheen v. Bumpstead, 2 H. & C. 193 ; 32 L. J., Ex. 271 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 242 ; 8 L. T. 832 ; 11 W. R. 734—Ex. Ch.

—— Similar Frauds.] — In an action to recover money as obtained by a fraud, a statement to the effect that the defendant had pursued a similar course in various other cases is irrelevant, and, being scandalous and at the best only evidence, may be struck out, and such facts are not admissible in evidence. Blake v. Albion Life Assurance Co., 45 L. J., C. P. 663 ; 35 L. T. 269 ; 24 W. R. 677 ; 14 Cox, C. C. 246.

In an action against a company to recover a sum of money obtained by them from the plaintiff, through a fraud of the defendants' agent committed with their knowledge and for their benefit, evidence of similar frauds committed on persons other than the plaintiff, by the same agent, in the same manner, with the knowledge, and for the benefit, of the defendants is admissible on behalf of the plaintiff. Blake v. Albion Life Assurance Society, 48 L. J., C. P. 169 ; 4 C. P. D. 94 ; 40 L. T. 211 ; 27 W. R. 321.

On a plea by a defendant of fraud and covin, it is only competent in him to give evidence of particular fraud practised upon him on a given occasion, and not that the transactions of the plaintiff are generally fraudulent with respect to society at large. Green v. Gosden, 4 Scott (N.R.), 13 ; 3 Man. & G. 446 ; 11 L. J., C. P. 4 ; 5 Jur. 1010.

In an action for false representation, other false statements than those laid may be proved and considered by the jury, with reference to the question whether those laid were made fraudulently ; but the declaration will not be amended by introducing them as distinct causes of action, at all events without allowing, if necessary, time for their consideration by the defendant. Huntingford v. Massey, 1 F. & F. 690.

—— Similar Action.]—In an action charging a defendant with having made a fraudulent representation as to the price which certain seedsmen in London would give for certain seed, whereby the plaintiff was induced to sell it for a lower price than he otherwise would have done, the defendant, who appeared as a witness, having, in his examination in chief, denied the misrepresentation, was asked on cross-examination whether there had not been proceedings against him in a county court at the suit of A. in respect of a similar claim, which he had resisted, and upon which he had given evidence, and the jury had notwithstanding found a verdict for the then plaintiff. It was objected by the defendant's counsel that the question relating to the contents of public judicial proceedings, which must be in writing, could not be asked, but that the record must be produced. The objection having been overruled, and the question allowed to be put:—Held, that the ruling was correct. Henman v. Lester, 12 C. B. (N.S.) 776; 31 L. J., C. P. 366; 9 Jur. (N.S.), 601.

Ambiguity.]—The plaintiff took shares in a company formed to buy up and carry on certain ironworks. The prospectus contained the following statement:—"The present value of the turnover or output of the entire works is over 1,000,000*l.* sterling per annum." The works never had produced an actual turnover or output to the value of 1,000,000*l.* in any year, nor were they producing at that rate at the date of the prospectus, but the machinery was capable of turning out produce to that amount per annum. The plaintiff was asked in interrogatories how he understood the above statement, and replied that he understood the meaning "to be that which the words obviously conveyed." No questions were asked as to this at the hearing in examination or cross-examination:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Smith v. Chadwick, 53 L. J., Ch. 873; 9 App. Cas. 187; 50 L. T. 697; 32 W. R. 687; 48 J. P. 644—H. L. (E.)

Held, by Lord Selborne, L.C., Lords Blackburn and Watson, that the statement was ambiguous, and might refer to the output which the works were capable of producing; that, consequently, the burden lay upon the plaintiff to show that he understood it to refer to the actual output, and that he had failed to show this. Ib.

Held, by Lord Bramwell, that the statement could only refer to the actual output, and that the plaintiff had sufficiently shown that he so interpreted it, but that it was not made out that the statement was fraudulent on the part of the defendants. Ib.

Obligation to Answer.]—An assignment of all a trader's stock, nominally in consideration of a pretended debt, and a small additional advance, but really colourable and collusive, and with intent to defeat execution creditors, is fraudulent and void, under 13 Eliz. c. 5, as against judgment creditors, and the assignor being liable under that statute to criminal prosecution is not bound to answer questions as to the true object of the transaction. Michael v. Gay, 1 F. & F. 409.

Practice—Where Legal and Equitable Defences.]—A plaintiff in equity, having an equitable as well as a legal defence to an action (on a note obtained from him by undue influence by a person in a confidential relationship), and having filed his bill, was held not bound to go into evidence at the trial at law to establish his legal defence, but might rely on his defence in equity. Billing v. Southee, 9 Hare, 534; 21 L. J., Ch. 472; 16 Jur. 188.

Parol.]—If, by false and fraudulent representations, a party is induced to enter into a written agreement, and is thereby damnified, he may, in an action for the deceit, give parol evidence of the representations although they are not noticed in the written contract. Dobel v. Stevens, 5 D. & R. 490; 3 B. & C. 623; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 89.

—— Mala fides.]—Plaintiff having prevented the fulfilment of an agreement in favour of the defendant, for purchasing the assignment of a mortgage, by obtaining himself an advance after notice, not allowed to take advantage of it, being mala fides. Evidence, therefore, of a parol agreement, read against him under these circumstances. Scott v. Merry, 1 Ves. 2.

7. Relief, Mode and Terms of.

Ground of Relief.]—Mere folly in making an agreement without fraud is no ground for relief in equity. Milnes v. Cowley, 8 Price, 620.

Conveyance obtained by Misrepresentation—Ground for Setting Aside.]—Where a conveyance of a moiety of an estate was made by A. to B. upon a representation, first made to A. by B., that such moiety was to be the remuneration of the lawyer for recovering the estate, and upon a subsequent representation that such moiety had been made over to him, B., the circumstance that such representations as to the remuneration for professional services, and as to the transfer to B., were untrue, was held to be a ground for setting aside the conveyance. Reynell v. Sprye, 8 Hare, 222. Affirmed, 2 De G. M. & G. 660; 21 L. J., Ch. 633.

Knowledge of Defendant.]—Knowledge and non-communication of a fact which may influence the other party are not sufficient to rescind a contract. The fact must be, and be known by him who keeps it back to be, of sufficient importance to form a substantial element in the transaction, or there must be some active misrepresentation. Thompson v. Lambert, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 433; 17 W. R. 111.

Nature of Relief.]—In ordinary cases of fraud, equity undoes the whole transaction, and replaces the parties in their former situation. Daubeny v. Cockburn, 1 Mer. 644.

—— Where Consideration Given.]—No part of a fraudulent agreement can be supported, except where a consideration has been given, in consequence of which the parties cannot be replaced in the same situation. Daubeny v. Cockburn, 1 Mer. 643; 15 R. R. 174.

Setting aside Contract.]—Where a contract is founded on misrepresentation, a court of equity does not rectify it, but sets it aside, ab initio. Rawlins v. Wickham, 3 De G. & J. 304; 28 L. J., Ch. 188; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 278; 7 W. R. 145.

Rescission of Contract — Restitutio in Integrum.]—The respondent was induced by misrepresentations made without fraud by the appellants to become a partner in a business which either belonged to them or in which they were partners and which was in fact insolvent. The business having afterwards, owing to its own inherent vice, entirely failed with large liabilities:—Held, that the respondent was entitled to rescission of the contract and repayment of his capital, though the business which he restored to the appellants was worse than worthless, and that the contract being rescinded the appellants could not recover against him for money lent and goods sold by them to the partnership. Adams v. Newbigging, 57 L. J., Ch. 1066 ; 13 App. Cas. 308 ; 59 L. T. 267 ; 37 W. R. 97—H. L. (E.)

—— Partial Restitution.]—If a person seeks to set aside a sale of various kinds of property, on the ground of fraud, the contract must be rescinded in toto or not at all ; and if the plaintiff is unable to restore any one of the kinds of property included in the contract, relief cannot be given. Secus, if the property be all of the same sort. Semble, where the property is of a perishable nature, the plaintiff is not bound to keep it in a state of preservation after bill filed. Maturin v. Tredinnick, 4 N. R. 15 ; 10 L. T. 331 ; 12 W. R. 740.

See also col. 364.

Deeds.] — Deeds entered into by fraud and imposition relieved against. Bridgman v. Green, 2 Ves. 627.

—— Partial Setting Aside.]—See Myddleton v. Kenyon (Lord), ante, col. 400.

See also col. 375.

Making Good.]—Liability of a party to make good the result of his misrepresentations. Overbury v. Teale, 1 W. R. 27.

Conveyance to stand as Security.]—Where articles and a conveyance are not obtained with the strictest fairness, a court of equity will set them aside, and order the conveyance to stand as a security only for the consideration money. White v. Lightburne, 4 Bro. P. C. 181.

Where conveyance is for an undervalue, court will not set it aside absolutely, but it shall stand a security for the money advanced. Lane v. Page, Amb. 235. And see Addison v. Dawson, 2 Vern. 678.

In 1817 a deed of rent-charge was granted by A. M. while in distressed circumstances, for inadequate consideration, to a person lately a subsheriff, and in liquidation of a balance alleged to be due for the satisfaction of executions lodged against A. B., and for poundage thereon. In 1831 A. B. filed his bill to have the deed set aside: —Held, notwithstanding the length of time, that the deed was impeachable on grounds of public policy ; and ought only to stand as a security for the money actually advanced with interest. D'Arcy v. D'Arcy, Hay. & J. 115.

Securities to stand for Balance Due.]—On the ground of fraud, general account was decreed ; and the securities to stand only for the balance, though the vouchers had been destroyed by general consent. Wharton v. May, 5 Ves. 27.

Mortgage to stand as Security for Sums actually Advanced.]—A married woman and her brothers, persons in a humble position, being entitled, in reversion expectant on the death of a tenant for life, to a sum of 1,500*l.* charged on land, purported to mortgage this interest to B. as security for 500*l.*, though 250*l.* only was actually advanced. B. subsequently advanced 150*l.* more, for which a further charge for 300*l.* on the same reversionary interest was taken as security. This deed of further charge contained recitals and clauses to the effect that the nature of the transaction was perfectly understood by the borrowers, and that the difference, between the sums actually advanced and the sums expressed to be secured, was considered reasonable remuneration for the delay that must occur before repayment, on account of the age of the tenant for life. The securities were prepared by B's. solicitor, acting for all parties, and the borrowers had no independent advice. Only one year's interest was ever paid. On the death of the tenant for life the 1,500*l.* was paid into court, and upon a petition by the reversioners to set aside these securities on the ground of fraud, and for payment out of the fund :—Held, that the mortgage and further charge could stand as security only for the sums actually advanced, with six years' arrears of interest only. Slater's Trusts, In re, 48 L. J., Ch. 473 ; 11 Ch. D. 227 ; 40 L. T. 184 ; 27 W. R. 448.

—— Petition.]—Semble, the court will, upon petition for payment out of court, hear and decide questions of this nature without directing the issue of a writ. Ib.

Bankruptcy — Proof only for Amount Advanced.]—Grant of annuity void for want of a memorial registered ; being charged on an estate of less annual value than the annuity ; the grantor being the grantee's attorney, preparing the security, and depositing the title deeds but misrepresenting the value of the estate ; proof admitted under his bankruptcy only for the money advanced, with liberty to file a bill for an equitable lien upon the fraud, and the deposit. Wright, Ex parte, 19 Ves. 255.

False Statement of Mortgage Debt—Redemption on Payment of Debt Stated.]—Lands in mortgage running through three descents, and the person entitled to redeem, not knowing how much was due for the interest, is informed by the heir of the mortgagor that it was considerably less than it really was, whereupon he settles it upon his marriage as subject only to so much ; those who derive under this settlement shall redeem accordingly, without being obliged to pay the sum concealed by the fraud. Barret v. Wells, Pre. Ch. 131.

Forfeiture.]—On a fraudulent alienation of lands, the offending parties forfeit a year's value of the estate, but not the consideration money named in the conveyance. Butcher v. Harrison, 4 B. & Ad. 129 ; 1 N. & M. 677 ; 2 L. J., K. B. 189. See Doe d. Grimsby v. Ball, 11 M. & W. 531 ; 12 L. J., Ex. 328.

Repayment.]—Agreement for the purchase of part of the profits of a patent, which turned out to be a mere bubble, set aside as having been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation, and so much of the purchase money as had been paid under the agreement ordered to be repaid. Lovell v. Hicks, 2 Y. & C. 481 ; 6 L. J., Ex. Eq. 85 ; 5 Id. 101.

—— Bill against Executor.] — Apothecary agreed to give his patient 50 guineas to receive 800*l.*, or an annuity of 100*l.* if he should survive a year, which he did ; bill against executors dismissed, as plaintiff could not succeed at law ; but without costs, on account of the money actually advanced, which must have been repaid, upon bill to set aside the agreement. Priestley v. Wilkinson, 1 Ves. J. 214.

Insufficient Security—Payment of Deficiency.] —Where, for providing for payment of bills, a third person charged certain property for the benefit of acceptor by way of security, alleging it to be sufficient in value above encumbrances but which turned out to be otherwise:—Held, that the acceptor was entitled to have so much as he had paid, and interest, as the property was insufficient to pay, raised and paid out of the general estate of the deceased third person. Ingram v. Thorp, 7 Hare, 67.

Reimbursement for Improvements.]—Where the title is fraudulent, equity in giving relief will reimburse the party in possession for permanent improvements. Shine v. Gough, 1 Ball & B. 444.

Valuing Improvements.]—In estimating lasting improvements, old buildings pulled down, if incapable of repair, to be valued as old materials only. Robinson v. Ridley, 6 Madd. 2.

Purchase by Bankrupt's Assignee—Re-sale.] If an assignee purchase part of the bankrupt's estate, and improve, the estate must be resold, and put up at the price given by the assignee, adding the sum laid out in improvements. Hewitt, Ex parte, Johnston, In re, 2 Mont. & Ayr. 477.

Profits.]—The court only removes fraudulent conveyances out of the way; but will not decree profits back, against the original debtor and owner of the estate, received pendente lite, in favour of judgment creditors from the filing of the bill. Higgins v. York Buildings Co., 2 Atk. 107.

Account for enhanced Price.]—If A. buy from B., a minor, under circumstances of distress, the reversion of a house worth 40*l*. a year for 100*l*., and sell it again in a few days for 200*l*., equity will compel him to account to B. for the difference. Spencer v. Chase, 9 Mod. 29.

Account to Parties to Fraud.] — Where a transaction is set aside on the ground of fraud, no account will be allowed, to the parties to the fraud, of what they have laid out or advanced or expended in the committing of that fraud. Pinning v. Rushworth, 2 L. J., Ch. 176.

Lease of Church Land—Refunding.]—A building lease is made of church lands, by a deceit put upon this court by the lessor, who takes a large fine from the lessee, though nothing of that was mentioned in the proposal laid before a master; the executor of the lessor was decreed to refund this money, to be laid out in a purchase for the benefit of the successors; but the lease was allowed to stand good, because it did not appear that the tenant was privy to the imposition upon the court. Galley v. Baker, Cas. t. Talbot, 199.

Lease—Mistake of Lessor—Repayment.]—On a proposal to borrow money on the security of a lease, which the borrower said he was entitled to have granted to him, the lender, on the assurance of a letter addressed to his solicitor by the defendant, saying that he was ready to grant the lease, advanced his money on the security of the lease, but it appeared that the lessor had previously granted a lease to another person: the court ordered the lessor to repay the moneys, although there was no evidence of deliberate fraud, his defence being that he had forgotten the previous lease. Slim v. Croucher, 2 Giff. 37. Affirmed, 29 L. J., Ch. 273; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 437; 2 L. T. 103; 8 W. R. 347—L.JJ.

—— Making Good.]—Circumstances under which, after a contract (to grant a lease) actually executed, the court held a contracting party liable to make good representations (a promise to allow a right of way), on the faith of which the contract was entered into. Dendy v. Cary, 9 Jur. (N.S.) 845.

Purchase by Company—Combination of Vendors—Rescission, Repayment, Reconveyance.]—A. having two parcels and B. one parcel of land, supposed to contain petroleum, it was agreed between them and C. that C. should pay them $10,000 for the land if he succeeded in forming a company for the purpose of working the oil springs, and in inducing such company to pay him $13,750 as the price of the land, out of which he was to keep for himself $3,750. B. accordingly, assuming the character of owner, gave to C. a conditional promise to sell all the land to him for $13,750, provided the offer was accepted within a certain time. A. wrote a letter, meant to be shown to, and which was shown to, persons intending to become members of the new company, and was proved to have influenced them, in which letter he recommended the purchase, not disclosing that he had any interest therein. A. and B. actively co-operated with C. throughout the whole transaction. The company, in ignorance of the combination, accepted the proposal, but, having discovered the fraud, sued for a rescission of the contract:—Held, that the contract must be wholly rescinded, the price repaid, and the land reconveyed. There being a doubt (owing to the expiration of the term for which the company had been constituted) whether the company was competent to receive the money and to execute a reconveyance, the order provided that the repayment should be made to the company, or to such other persons as were entitled in their right, on the reconveyance of the lands being made to the satisfaction of the colonial court. Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, L. R. 5 P. C. 221; 22 W. R. 492.

Purchase declared a Trust—Payment of Accounts—Reconveyance.]—Bill to set aside a purchase made by the defendant, or to have same declared a trust of the plaintiff. By the decree, the plaintiff's right to have the purchase declared a trust was established, and certain accounts were directed: upon the taking of which it was ascertained that a sum of 5,162*l*. 11*s*. 8*d*. was due to the defendant; and under the final decree the plaintiff was ordered to pay same within six months, and that thereupon the estate should be reconveyed to the plaintiff. The plaintiff having failed to pay this sum within the appointed time, semble, that the proper remedy for the defendant, under such circumstances, was the dismissal of the bill. Austin v. Chambers, 1 Dr. t. Sugd. 85.

Reconveyance.]—Equity has power, by ordering a reconveyance, to vacate a fine fraudulently obtained. St. John v. Turner, 1 Eq. Abr. 258.

Where a deed is declared void in equity and cancelled, a reconveyance is not necessary; semble. Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278; 21 L. J., Ch. 482; 17 Jur. 99.

Where deeds are set aside for fraud, but the estate has been conveyed to a third person, who is merely instrumental to conveyance, and not privy to the fraud, or where they are set aside, on paying so much money, a reconveyance ought to be decreed. Bates v. Graves, 2 Ves. 295.

A purchase from an illiterate poor and old man, ill at the time, being set aside, the price being inadequate, the vendor having no professional advice, and the transaction being completed in great haste and on terms unduly advantageous to him, the proper form of decree is not to declare the deed void, but to direct it to be set aside and order a reconveyance. Clark v. Malpas, 4 De G. F. & J. 401 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 734 ; 10 W. R. 677.

Under a marriage settlement containing the usual powers of sale and exchange, with power to the trustees (of whom one was a minor), with the consent in writing of the wife, to lend the whole or part of the proceeds to the husband on his bond, the trustees, in order to make the loan, inconsiderately sold the estate under the power to the family solicitor, who, as owner thereof, raised a sum of money by way of mortgage, of which part was paid to the husband. The solicitor afterwards resold the estate, no money being paid to the husband, who, for valuable consideration, mortgaged it to other persons, and soon after became insolvent. On a bill filed by the infants interested under the settlement, impeaching the sale :—Held, they were entitled to have the inheritance reconveyed, free from encumbrance, to the uses of the settlement. Robinson v. Briggs, 1 Sm. & G. 188.

Agreement to Sell — Fraudulent Sale to Another—Cancellation.] — A. and B. having entered into a verbal treaty for the purchase of certain premises belonging to A., and not being able to agree as to the amount of the purchase money, A. addressed a letter to C., a third person, stating that he would take a certain sum from B. for the premises, reserving a small portion of same for his sister if C. approved of it ; B. subsequently lodged the sum named by A. with C., of which lodgment C. made a memorandum on A.'s letter, with a remark that it was "a great price." During the period of this negotiation between A. and B., A. entered into a contract with D. for the sale of the same premises, and, although notice of the agreement between A. and B. was given to D., actually conveyed the premises to D. :—Held, that D. having had notice of the agreement between A. and B. the conveyance to him must be considered fraudulent, and should be delivered up to be cancelled, and that, the conduct of A. being very fraudulent, the costs of B. should in the first place be paid out of the funds lodged by him in the hands of C. Field v. Boland, 1 Dr. & Wal. 37.

Agreement obtained by Professional Advice—Cancellation.]—The owner of some leasehold tenements, being persuaded by a conveyancer that other parties were entitled to part of the estate, entered into an agreement by which the estate was to be sold, and all these parties were to share in the purchase money, and 40*l.* was to be paid to the conveyancer. The court, being of opinion that the agreement had been obtained by fraud, misrepresentation, and pressure, ordered it to be delivered up to be cancelled, with costs as against the conveyancer. Brent v. Brent, 10 L. J., Ch. 84 ; 4 Jur. 1027.

Delivery Up.]—The cases of fraud where a bill has been ordered to be given up are confined to those where the possession of the bill but for the fraud would be that of the plaintiff in equity. Jones v. Lane, 3 Y. & C. 281 ; 8 L. J., Ex. Eq. 41 ; 3 Jur. 265.

—— Though Defence at Law.]—The court will order a legal instrument to be delivered up where it would be inequitable to sue upon it, even though there may be a defence at law. Cooper v. Joel, 27 Beav. 313 ; 1 De G. F. & J. 240 ; 1 L. T. 351.

—— Fraudulent Pledge.]—Where mortgage deeds were put into B.'s hands, to receive principal and interest, who pawned them to defendant S., for 100*l.* :—Held, that, as the pawner must by the deeds appear to have no property, court would decree S. to deliver deeds to plaintiff, and leave the pawnee to his remedy at law against B. Jackson v. Butler, 2 Atk. 306 ; 9 Mod. 297.

A bill here for recovery of deeds proper, for in an action of trover the plaintiff could only have damages for the detainer. Ib.

—— Bond.]—In 1869, B. gave a bond to H. for payment of money in 1874, with interest in the meantime. B. and H. both admitted that the bond was satisfied in 1870, but before complete satisfaction H. had deposited the bond with his bankers, who claimed a lien, and expressed an intention of suing at law on the bond when it should become due. The bankers had given no notice to B. of the deposit until after the alleged satisfaction, but they charged collusion between B. and H. :—Held, in 1873, that a bill would not lie for delivery up of the bond. Binns v. Fisher, 43 L. J., Ch. 188.

Re-transfer.]—Where debtor combines with creditor in fraud upon others, and creditor breaks trust, there is no punishment, but goods fraudulently transferred ordered to be re-transferred for benefit of creditors. "Fraus non est fallere fallentem." Woodford v. Multon, Cary, 13.

Undertaking to Execute Deeds.]—Where a decree is made to set aside a conveyance, on the ground of ignorance on the part of the party executing it, and for want of professional advice, the court, in its discretion, may oblige the party to give an undertaking to execute proper deeds to be settled by the judge in chambers. Cartledge v. Radbourn, 14 L. T. 187 ; 14 W. R. 603.

Acknowledgment of Satisfaction.]—Acknowledgment of satisfaction decreed here on a judgment obtained against conscience. Barnesly v. Powel, 1 Ves. 289.

Setting off one Fraud against Another—Restraining Action.]—A plaintiff having been induced by his solicitor to execute a deed as absolute purchaser of an estate, on the understanding that he was acting as trustee for another person, the real purchaser was afterwards induced by the same solicitor to execute a mortgage of the property to the defendant. The deed contained a fictitious recital of an agreement for a loan from the defendant to the plaintiff, and a fictitious receipt of the mortgage money by the plaintiff from the defendant. It also contained a covenant on the part of the plaintiff to pay the mortgage debt to the defendant. Afterwards, the security becoming doubtful, the defendant pressed the plaintiff for payment of interest, to which he answered that he had executed the deed as a mere trustee, and under the impression that he was to be freed from all pecuniary liability. Thereupon the defendant sued the plaintiff on his covenant, and the plaintiff filed a bill for an injunction. It turned out that the plaintiff's solicitor, being the defendant's debtor, and pressed by the defendant for further security, had offered the defendant the estate of his client, the plaintiff, as a security; so that the plaintiff was a necessary party to the mortgage, the solicitor being the real borrower; and, although the plaintiff had been guilty of a misrepresentation in the recitals and frame of the mortgage-deed, yet, as the defendant had been equally guilty of misrepresentation (no money having passed), one misrepresentation might be set off against the other, and the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction to restrain the action. Greenfield v. Edwards, 11 L. T. 663.

Restraining Proceedings.]—The court will restrain a party from enforcing a legal claim where promises have been made to the person legally liable not to enforce it, upon the faith whereof obligations have been entered into. Money v. Jorden, 21 L. J., Ch. 531.

—— Restraining Execution.]—In a suit for the cancellation of a deed on the ground of fraud, and for an injunction to restrain an action on an agreement contained in the deed, where the evidence was insufficient to enable the court to decide the question of fraud, and that question was raised by the pleadings in the action, the court refused to restrain the defendant from proceeding in the action to verdict and judgment, but did restrain him from suing out execution thereon, and from otherwise acting upon the deed until further order. Leader v. McEwen, 2 N. R. 474.

Husband and Wife.]—Though a husband have imposed on a wife by giving her bond void at law, yet the court will establish the agreement according to the intention of the parties. Watkyns v. Watkyns, 2 Atk. 97.

Gifts by Testator under Undue Influence—Recovery by Executor.]—Where a testator has during his life given away large sums under circumstances amounting to undue influence, his executors can recover the sums so paid, although the person to whom they were paid did not stand in any of the ordinary confidential relations to the testator. Where other persons have innocently received part of such sums from the person to whom the testator gave them, they can be compelled to repay them. Huguenin v. Baseley (14 Ves. 273; 9 R. R. 148, 276) followed. Morley v. Loughnan, 62 L. J., Ch. 515; [1893] 1 Ch. 736; 3 R. 592; 68 L. T. 619.

East India Bonds.]—Notwithstanding 51 Geo. 3, c. 64, which makes East India bonds pass by delivery merely without assignment, the court will restrain the company from paying to a person who has fraudulently obtained possession. Glasse v. Marshall, 15 Sim. 71.

Preventing Recovery.]—Tenant in tail prevented from completing a recovery by the fraud of a person whose wife is entitled in remainder. Relief in equity, treating the estate, even in favour of a volunteer, as if the recovery had been suffered. Mestær v. Gillespie, 11 Ves. 638; 8 R. R. 261.

Preventing Legacy.]—Devisee, preventing the testator from charging a legacy by undertaking to pay it, bound in equity, though not at law. Ib.

Fine Fraudulently Obtained.]—A., tenant for life, with remainder to B. in tail, by fraud gets B.'s authority to levy a fine; he sells the land and pays the purchase money in the funds, where it is clearly identified; B. has no lien on this money against the other creditors of A. Newcombe v. Burdon, 2 Anst. 343.

Bond by Lodger to Landlord.]—A plaintiff, while lodging at an hotel, and seriously ill, executed a bond to the landlord for 1,000*l.* payable at six months' date, to secure moneys paid and advanced for the plaintiff for hotel charges, the landlord undertaking to rectify all errors in the accounts; a court of equity restrained an action on the bond, the plaintiff giving judgment for the amount of the claim. Edwards-Wood v. Baldwin, 4 Giff. 613; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1280; 9 L. T. 474.

Mortgagor and Mortgagee.]—Where mortgagee entitled to only 4½ per cent. had compelled mortgagor to turn interest into principal at 5 per cent. at the end of every six months, and at the time the mortgage was paid insisted on an advance of six months' interest over and above interest which was due: on bill for relief against mortgagee, and to set aside a grant to defendant of the place of steward to a manor of plaintiff's as obtained by fraud, plaintiff was relieved, both in respect to the transactions relating to the mortgage, and also in regard to the grant of stewardship. Thornhill v. Evans, 2 Atk. 330; 9 Mod. 331.

Delivery up of Grant.]—Defendant having abused the trust reposed in him, and manifestly intending to get the estate into his own hands, the grant of stewardship must be delivered up, and plaintiff must have the costs of suit. Ib.

Deed alleged Fraudulent as against Creditors—Injunction.]—A father and his son settled real estate to the use of the father for life, and after his death to the use of the son, if then living, in fee; and a power was reserved to the father and son of revoking the uses and appointing new uses. By a subsequent deed, the son being at the time insolvent, the father and son revoked the old uses in favour of the son, and appointed the estate to such uses as the father should appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of the son absolutely. The son was afterwards adjudicated a bankrupt, and a bill was filed by the creditors' assignees to set aside the latter deed as fraudulent. Upon a motion in the cause an injunction was granted restraining the father until the hearing from exercising his power under the deed in favour of a purchaser for value, but without interfering with the exercise of his power in favour of volunteers. Beyfus v. Bullock, L. R. 7 Eq. 391; 20 L. T. 166; 17 W. R. 526.

—— Registration as lis pendens.]—In such a case registration of the suit as a lis pendens, under

2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, would not be a sufficient protection to creditors. Ib.

Voluntary Conveyance.]—If voluntary conveyance is defeated by sale, it is void as to purchaser; and no satisfaction unless a covenant on which suit might be maintained. Williamson v. Codrington, 1 Ves. 516.

The court will not decree a voluntary conveyance to be delivered up to a purchaser for a valuable consideration unless obtained by fraud. Oxley v. Lee, 1 Atk. 625. And see Doe v. Routledge, Cowp. 705; Walker v. Burrows, 1 Atk. 94.

Voluntary Settlement.]—Where a voluntary settlement of lands is avoided by a subsequent sale for valuable consideration, the volunteers have no equity against the purchase money payable to the settlor. Daking v. Whimper, 26 Beav. 568.

Voluntary Deeds.]—A purchaser for value of real estate cannot come into the court of chancery to have a prior voluntary deed, void under 27 Eliz. c. 5, delivered up to be cancelled. The court, in such case, leaves both parties to their respective legal rights and remedies. De Houghton v. Money, 35 Beav. 98; 13 L. T. 447; 14 W. R. 159.

Partial Setting Aside—Form of Decree.]—Form of decree on setting aside deeds partially—viz. as against creditors only. Bott v. Smith, 21 Beav. 511.

Practice.] — The court assuming that the plaintiffs had lent A. B. money on the security; first, of a leasehold; secondly, of a policy; and, thirdly, of the written representation of his solicitor as to his solvency:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not make the solicitor liable for misrepresentation, without showing that they had taken proper steps to make the other securities available. Whitmore v. Mackeson, 16 Beav. 126.

—— Fraud of Two—Single Bill against Both.]—Where a person has been induced by a joint fraudulent scheme of two others to make sales to them at an undervalue, a single bill against both to set aside the sales, though they were entirely distinct transactions, is not multifarious. Walsham v. Stainton, 33 L. J., Ch. 68; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1261; 9 L. T. 357; 3 N. R. 56; 12 W. R. 63—L.JJ.

8. Damages and Costs.

Measure of Damages—Action against Directors.]—At the trial the judge directed the jury that, if the real damage occasioned to the plaintiff by the defendants' fraud was the price he paid for the shares, he was entitled to recover that amount. The jury assessed the damages at the price paid by the plaintiff:—Held, that the direction was right, and that the shares taken by him being worthless he was entitled to recover the amount paid by him for them. Twycross v. Grant, 46 L. J., C. P. 636; 2 C. P. D. 469; 36 L. T. 812; 25 W. R. 701—C. A.

The proper mode of measuring damages in an action against directors of a company for false representation as to the affairs of the company, whereby they induced a party to purchase shares in the company, which were worthless, is to ascertain the difference between the purchase-money paid, and what would have been a fair price to be paid for the shares, according to the true circumstances of the company at the time of the purchase. Huntingford v. Massey, 1 F. & F. 690.

Loss of Profits.]—The defendants, warranting themselves as agents of L. & Co., sold to the plaintiff, in November, 1861, on behalf of L. & Co., certain cargoes of American wool, which were to arrive in England in the January following. L. & Co. having repudiated the contract, the plaintiff filed a bill in chancery against them for specific performance, which was dismissed with costs. He afterwards brought an action against the defendants for their breach of warranty:—Held, that the measure of damages should include first the difference between the contract price of the wool and the value of wool of similar quality at the time and place where the wool would have been delivered had the contract been binding; and, secondly, the costs of the chancery suit, taxed as between attorney and client. Hughes v. Graeme, 33 L. J., Q. B. 335; 12 W. R. 857.

The defendant, as agent of R., entered into a contract with the plaintiff for the purchase of a ship at a certain price. R., not having given the defendant authority, repudiated the contract, and the plaintiff sold the ship at a lower price. Both the contract price and the price on re-sale were the fair market value of the ship:—Held, that the plaintiff, in an action against the defendant for a breach of his contract, that he had authority as agent of R., could recover as damages the difference between the two prices. Simons v. Patchett, 7 El. & Bl. 568; 26 L. J., Q. B. 195; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 742; 5 W. R. 500.

Nominal Damages.]—Where a tenant from year to year, having no authority from his landlord to let in a new tenant, falsely represented to the plaintiff that he had, and thereby induced him to pay 100*l.* for allowing him to enter into possession, and also to take the stock at a valuation, but, the landlord refusing to accept him as tenant, he had to leave after a year's occupation, and it was left doubtful on the evidence whether on the whole the plaintiff had become a loser or a gainer, the jury, in an action for the false representation, were directed that they were at liberty, finding for the plaintiff, to give a sum less than the 100*l.*, or even nominal damages. Cracknell v. Davy, 1 F. & F. 57.

—— Remoteness of Injury—Onus to show Actual Loss.]—Costs incurred upon the discovery of the falsehood of a representation, in order to reverse the consequence of the representation, are too remote an injury to be included in a verdict upon an action of fraud. It devolves upon the plaintiff to show actual loss to himself in such an action, and, without proof of that loss, a verdict cannot be entered for nominal damages. Hyde v. Bulmer, 18 L. T. 293.

Natural Result.]—In an action for fraudulent misrepresentation, the plaintiff may recover damages for an injury which is the direct and natural consequence of his acting on the faith of the defendant's representations. Mullett v. Mason, 1 H. & R. 779; 35 L. J., C. P. 299; L. R.

1 C. P. 559; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 547; 14 L. T. 558; 14 W. R. 898.

Therefore, where a cattle dealer sold to the plaintiff a cow, and fraudulently represented that it was free from infectious disease, when he knew that it was not, and, the plaintiff having placed the cow with five others, they caught the disease and died:—Held, that he was entitled to recover as damages the value of all the cows. Ib.

—— Costs of Action.]—A plaintiff being desirous of purchasing a public-house, A. introduced him to C., who had one to dispose of, and who referred the plaintiff to her agent B. A. volunteered to see B. on the subject, and accordingly went to him, and afterwards told the plaintiff that B. represented the receipts of the house to average a certain sum daily, upon the faith of which statement the plaintiff bought the house for 400*l.* It turned out that the value of the business had been grossly exaggerated, and the plaintiff without any notice to A., and without making any inquiry, brought an action against C., charging her with a deceitful representation on the sale. B. swore at the trial that he never made any such representation as A. had stated, and the jury, being satisfied that A.'s statement was false, returned a verdict for the defendant. The plaintiff then sued A. for the damages he had sustained from his false representation, when the jury gave him 300*l.* (being the difference between the price he paid for the business and the sum for which he afterwards sold it), 100*l.* for loss of time, and 181*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* the costs of the abortive action against C.:—Held, that the action was maintainable so far as related to the 300*l.* and 100*l.*, but that the costs of the first action were not, under the circumstances, the natural and proximate consequence of A.'s misrepresentation, and therefore were not recoverable. Richardson v. Dunn, 8 C. B. (N.S.) 655; 30 L. J., C. P. 44; 2 L. T. 430; 8 W. R. 582.

A person who bonâ fide, but without authority, pretends to act as agent for another, and makes a contract on his behalf with a third party, impliedly warrants to such a third party that he has authority to make the contract; and, when a suit in chancery was brought by such third party against the supposed principal to enforce a contract made by the alleged agent, and the latter, after notice, said he would be responsible if the suit failed for want of authority to contract, never withdrew the assertion that he was authorised to make the contract, and the bill was dismissed on the ground of such want of authority:—Held, that the third party might, in an action against the agent on the implied warranty of authority, recover as damages his costs of the chancery suit. Collen v. Wright, 8 El. & Bl. 647; 27 L. J., Q. B. 215; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 357; 6 W. R. 123—Ex. Ch.

A declaration alleging that the defendant falsely and fraudulently represented to the plaintiff that he was authorised by L. to order, and did order, certain quantities of stone for the building of a church to be charged to L. and others, and did falsely and fraudulently write to the plaintiff a letter, and that the plaintiff, relying on the representation of the defendant, supplied the stone, whereas the defendant had no authority to order it; and, L. refusing to pay for it, the plaintiff brought an action against him for the price and failed in it, and was obliged to pay L.'s costs and his own costs; this being sufficient to show a false representation and assumption of authority, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, by way of damages, not only the price of the stone supplied, but the costs which he had paid in the action against L. Randell v. Trimen, 18 C. B. 786; 25 L. J., C. P. 307. See also Pow v. Davis, 1 B. & S. 220; 30 L. J., Q. B. 257; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1018; 4 L. T. 399; 9 W. R. 611, and Hughes v. Græme, 33 L. J., Q. B. 335; 12 W. R. 857.

Solicitor following Directions.]—An attorney's saying that he only followed directions in drawing deeds under fraudulent circumstances will not excuse him from paying costs. Bennett v. Vade, 2 Atk. 324; 9 Mod. 312.

Costs of Trustees and Infant.]—On setting aside a voluntary settlement made by a trader while insolvent, in favour of his wife and an infant child, the court, as to the costs of the trustees and infant:—Held, that the utmost it could do was to make the decree without costs. Elsey v. Coe, 26 Beav. 95.

Creditor found Guilty after Judgment.]—Where creditor, by judgment recovered, is afterwards found guilty of fraud, respecting the whole of his demand, he shall pay costs, both at law and in equity. Lloyd v. Wynne, 2 Bro. P. C. 374.

Irrelevant Charges of Fraud—Solicitor and Client Costs.]—Plaintiff having failed in proving an agreement, which he sought by bill to enforce, and his bill being dismissed with costs, he was ordered to pay the defendant's costs so far as they had been increased by the irrelevant charges of fraud as between solicitor and client. Forester v. Read, L. R. 6 Ch. 40.

V. RATIFICATION AND ACQUIESCENCE.

Generally.]—Though suggestions of fraud be probable and apparent, yet if the plaintiff acquiesces by his own solemn act, the court will not relieve him. Lloyd v. Tym, Colles, P. C. 14.

Laches—General Considerations.]—In ascertaining whether the plaintiffs, in an action to rescind an executed contract for the purchase of 70,000*l.* debentures on the ground of misrepresentation, are barred by laches, consideration is to be paid to the magnitude and difficulty of the interests and questions involved, and to the time that must necessarily elapse after an inquiry is commenced before the truth of the facts can be sufficiently established to justify them in bringing forward serious charges. Imperial Ottoman Bank v. Trustees, Executors and Securities Insurance Corporation, 13 R. 287.

Equitable and Legal Titles.]—Where facts constituting fraud are known, where no subsisting trust or continuing influence is proved, an equitable title is barred in the same manner as a legal title in a possessory action. Medlicott v. O'Donnell, 1 Ball & B. 166.

Confirmation—That Amounts to.]—Loose expression in a letter from a son:—Held, not to be a confirmation of bond obtained by parental influence. Carpenter v. Heriot, 1 Eden, 338.

Where a person entitled to impeach an instrument affecting his property makes a conveyance of that property "subject to" the estate created by the impeachable instrument, this may amount to a virtual confirmation or not, according to the circumstances under which the latter deed is executed, the material point being whether he has, prior to the execution of the second deed, had his attention called to the question whether the first deed is valid. Wright v. Vanderplank, 2 K. & J. 1; 8 De G. M. & G. 133; 25 L. J., Ch. 753; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 599; 4 W. R. 410.

Confirmation by Subsequent Deed.]—Where a settlor filed a bill to obtain the declaration of the court that a settlement executed by him eleven years previously was not binding upon him by reason of its being an unreasonable one, and of his having executed it in ignorance of its effect:—Held, that a subsequent deed executed by the settlor, reciting part of the former deed, and purporting to be in exercise of one of the powers therein contained, was an absolute confirmation of the whole, and was a bar to his suit, though the deed was one which, apart from lapse of time and subsequent confirmation, the court could not have upheld. Jarratt v. Aldam, 39 L. J., Ch. 349; L. R. 9 Eq. 463; 22 L. T. 192; 18 W. R. 511.

Abandonment of Fraud.]—An agreement rendered inoperative by a collateral fraudulent agreement cannot be made valid by the abandonment of the collateral agreement. Moxon v. Payne, 43 L. J., Ch. 240; L. R. 8 Ch. 881.

Must be Knowledge of Rights.]—Fraud cannot be condoned unless there is full knowledge of the facts and of the rights arising out of those facts, and the parties are at arm's length. Moxon v. Payne, 43 L. J., Ch. 240; L. R. 8 Ch. 881.

There can be no ratification of an invalid transaction where the person performing the supposed act of ratification has been kept, by the conduct of the party in whose favour it is made, unaware of the invalidity of the first transaction, and has not, at the time of the supposed ratification, the means of forming an independent judgment. Savery v. King, 5 H. L. Cas. 627.

Fiduciary Relation.]—Party acquiescing six years in a bond fraudulently obtained by party in fiduciary situation, his executor cannot object to it. Walmesley v. Booth, 2 Atk. 25; Barnard. 475.

Purchase by Solicitor from Client.]—In the case of a contract by a solicitor to purchase his client's property, a confirmation, to give a title to the solicitor to have the contract specifically performed, must be strong and plain, and with knowledge of the infirmity of the contract. Cutts v. Salmon, 4 De G. & Sm. 125. Affirmed, 21 L. J., Ch. 750; 16 Jur. 623.

In a cross suit by a solicitor, against the three vendors, to enforce specific performance of the contract of sale:—Held, that although there were acts of acquiescence which, in an ordinary case, might have entitled the purchaser to a decree, his relation to the vendors, as solicitor, disentitled him to such relief. Ib.

Purchase by Trustee.]—Purchase by a trustee from the cestui que trust established, under circumstances, with confirmation and acquiescence. Morse v. Royal, 12 Ves. 355; 8 R. R. 338.

Gift to Agent and Trustee.]—In a suit to impeach a deed of gift to an agent and trustee, it was held that, though it was voidable in its origin, and could not be sustained if it stood alone and had been impeached in reasonable time, yet the subsequent deliberate acts of the party impeaching it, assisted by his legal advisers, made it valid and binding on him. De Montmorency v. Devereux, 7 Cl. & F. 188; West, 64; 2 Dr. & Wal. 410; 4 Jur. 403.

Deposit by Wife—Acquiescence of Husband.]—Where wife made deposit as security, on part of husband, without his knowledge, but he subsequently acknowledged it as proper, from fraudulent conduct on part of husband, court would not decree deposit back again. Naish v. East India Co., 2 Comyns, 462.

Family Arrangement.]—Various arrangements for the relief of the family from existing burdens, though the father obtained some advantages, were supported; on the ground that the effect of the transactions was known to the son, and even acquiesced in by him. Hoghton v. Hoghton, 15 Beav. 278; 21 L. J., Ch. 482; 17 Jur. 99.

Brother and Sister—Laches.]—In 1841, sisters voluntarily surrendered to their brother his promissory notes for money owing to them, but under such circumstances that the transaction could not be sustained if complained of in due time. One sister died in 1852, and the other in 1857, and the brother died in 1860. In the following year, a bill was filed by the representative of the sisters to set aside the transaction:—Held, that the plaintiff wholly failed, this being an attempt to rip up a transaction nineteen years old, when all the actors in it were dead, and which transaction they all understood at the time. Mackintosh v. Stuart, 36 Beav. 21.

Fine acquiesced in.]—A fine levied upon a possession acquired by the fraud of a tenant, but acquiesced in by the landlord, with notice of the fraud, will operate as a bar. Conry v. Caulfield, 2 Ball & B. 273.

Lease acquiesced in.]—Where tenant for life and remainderman joined in a lease for twenty-one years to the steward of the former, in which certain common rights of disputed title were omitted, but in respect of which, six years after, valuable allotments were made, and the reversioner afterwards accepted the rent for five years:—Held, that the lease could not, after so long acquiescence and many acts, be impeached for fraud, although, considering the relation of the parties, the transaction might have been questioned recently after. Selsey v. Rhoades, 1 Bligh (N.S.) 1; 30 R. R. 1.

Taking Shares.]—Where a person believes that he has been misled by representations which are false and deceptive into taking shares in a proposed company, it is his duty to raise the objection at an early period, and to be guilty of no needless delay. Venezuela Central Ry. v. Kisch, 36 L. J., Ch. 849; L. R. 2 H. L. 99; 16 L. T. 500; 15 W. R. 821.

Statute of Limitations—Time from when Running—Concealed Fraud.]—In an action to recover by way of damages money lost by the fraudulent representations of the defendant, a reply to a defence of the Statute of Limitations that the plaintiff did not discover and had not reasonable means of discovering the fraud within six years before action, and that the existence of such fraud was fraudulently concealed by the defendant until within such six years, was held good by the court of appeal (Holker, L.J., dissenting). Gibbs v. Guild, 51 L. J., Q. B. 313; 9 Q. B. D. 59; 46 L. T. 248; 30 W. R. 591—C. A.

—— Person in a Fiduciary Position.]—An action was brought by a company in 1879 against a former director to recover 250*l.* on the ground that the defendant had received it from a debtor to the company as a bribe, to induce him to use his influence to obtain favourable terms of compromise for the debtor. The allegations that this bribe had been given had in 1872 been brought before the directors at a board meeting, they had investigated it, and as it seemed came to the conclusion that the charge was unfounded, as no proceedings were taken, and it was not alleged that the other directors had been acting otherwise than bonâ fide in the matter:—Held, that the claim of the company was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Metropolitan Bank v. Heiron, 5 Ex. D. 319; 43 L. T. 676; 29 W. R. 370—C. A.

——Trustee and Cestui Que Trust.]—Although, where a trustee receives money upon an express trust and wastes it, the Statute of Limitations does not run against the claim of the cestui que trust, yet, where a trustee receives money not belonging to the cestui que trust, but which the cestui que trust can claim on the ground that the receipt of it was a fraud upon him, the Statute of Limitations will run against the claim of the cestui que trust from the time when he discovers the fraud. Metropolitan Bank v. Heiron, 5 Ex. D. 319; 43 L. T. 676; 29 W. R. 373—C. A.

Where Doubt as to Fraud.]—The right of a person dealing with a company to set aside (as against the company) a contract, founded on the latter's unintentional misrepresentation, may be waived or released, expressly or indirectly; but cannot be easily waived by anything the person does, or omits, while the falsehood of the misrepresentation remains doubtful. Bank of Hindustan, China, and Japan, In re, 42 L. J., Ch. 771.

Impeaching after Confirmation.]—An agreement confirmed, not to be impeached without clear proof of imposition. Halhed v. Macke, or Marke, 3 Swanst. 444.

Release of One of Several.]—Plaintiff having released the principal in a fraud cannot go on against the other parties though they would have been secondarily liable. Thompson v. Harrison, 2 Bro. C. C. 164.

Laches in enforcing Legal Right, no Defence.]—A specialty creditor brought an action to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent under 13 Eliz. c. 5, nearly ten years after the death of the grantor. The plaintiff had been aware of the facts during the whole of that period, and gave no satisfactory reason for his delay:—Held, that, as the plaintiff was coming to enforce a legal right, his mere delay to take proceedings was no defence, as it had not continued long enough to bar his legal right, the case standing on a different footing from a suit to set aside on equitable grounds a deed which was valid at law. Maddever, In re, Three Towns Banking Co. v. Maddever, 53 L. J., Ch. 998; 27 Ch. D. 523; 52 L. T. 35; 33 W. R. 286—C. A.

Evidence—Onus.]—Fraud being established against a party, it is for him, if he alleges laches in the other party, to show when the latter acquired a knowledge of the truth, and prove that he knowingly forbore to assert his right. Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, L. R. 5 P. C. 221; 22 W. R. 492.

VI. RIGHTS OF THIRD PERSONS.

Maintaining Fraudulent Act.]—Instruments obtained through fraud cannot be maintained by third persons, although not themselves parties to the imposition. Bridgman v. Green, 2 Ves. 627.

Persons Acquiring Rights.]—Though the persons who by their fraud induced a contract may not enforce it, other persons may, in consequence of it, acquire interests and rights, which they may enforce against the party who has been so induced to enter upon it. Oakes v. Turquand, 36 L. J., Ch. 949; L. R. 2 H. L. 325; 16 L. T. 808; 15 W. R. 1201.

Relief.]—Relief against a fraud by preventing the recovery, affecting the interests of third persons, not parties in the fraud. Huguenin v. Baseley, 14 Ves. 290; 9 R. R. 148; Ib. 276.

Particeps Criminis.]—Fraud affects only as far as it extends; the court will not say participes criminis shall have no benefit of the agreement in any part. Lane v. Page, Amb. 235.

By seeking to derive any benefit under a fraudulent transaction, or to retain any benefit resulting therefrom, a third person, however innocent of the fraud in its inception, becomes particeps criminis. Scholefield v. Templer, 1 Johns. 155; 28 L. J., Ch. 452; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 619; 7 W. R. 353. S. C., on appeal, 4 De G. & J. 429; 7 W. R. 653.

Innocent Parties.]—Fraud vitiates a deed in toto, even against innocent parties. Bennet v. Wade, Dick. 84.

Where once a fraud has been committed, not only is the person who has committed the fraud precluded from deriving any benefit from it, but every innocent person is so likewise, unless there has been some consideration moving from himself. Scholefield v. Templer, 1 Johns. 155; 28 L. J., Ch. 452; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 619; 7 W. R. 353. S. C., on appeal, 4 De G. & J. 429; 7 W. R. 653.

A. authorised a stockbroker to purchase for him shares in a company, and paid the purchase money; and the shares were duly transferred to him by a deed or document, but his name was not registered. Afterwards the stockbroker, on a false pretence, prevailed upon A. to cancel his signature to the document of transfer, and to sign a deed of transfer to him (the stockbroker); A. believing, as the stockbroker represented, that he was executing a fresh transfer to himself, in the place of that which had been cancelled. The fraudulent transferee subsequently transferred the shares to an innocent party, B., as a security for money lent to him by B. a short time before:—Held, upon a bill filed by A., that the original transfer to A. must have its effect, and that the shares were thereby vested in A., notwithstanding the cancellation and the subsequent transactions. Donaldson v. Gillot, L. R. 3 Eq. 274; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 959; 15 L. T. 382; 15 W. R. 166.

Creditors.]—One being, in an under manner, drawn in to execute a conveyance of his estate, afterwards makes his will, and thereby devises all his land to be sold for payment of his debts; his creditors may set aside the conveyance, having a right, in nature of an equity of redemption, as the testator himself had, though urged that it was but in nature of a chose in action, and not assignable. Blake v. Johnson, Pre. Ch. 142.

A., tenant for life, with remainder to B. in tail, by fraud gets B.'s authority to levy a fine; he sells the land, and invests the purchase money in the funds, where it is clearly identified. B. has no lien on this money against the other creditors of A. Newcomb v. Burdon, 2 Anst. 343.

Purchaser without Notice.]—One having a bond, receives the money due upon it, and afterwards assigns it for a valuable consideration, as unsatisfied, to another, who has no notice of the payment, yet the purchaser can have no avail of this bond. Turton v. Benson, 1 P. W. 497; 2 Vern. 764; Pre. Ch. 522; 10 Mod. 455; 1 Str. 240.

Fraudulent Dealing with Bond.]—A., together with B. and C., as his sureties, executed a bond to D. for securing 300*l.* and interest; the debt is paid by C. with the proper money of A.; but C. neglects delivering up the bond to A. to be cancelled. C. afterwards produces this bond, to be assigned as a collateral security for a debt of his own:—Held, that this assignment was a gross fraud in C., and a perpetual injunction was granted to restrain all further proceedings upon the bond. May v. Harmer, 4 Bro. P. C. 156.

Assignee of Term void under 27 Eliz. c. 4.]—The assignees of a term, void under 27 Eliz. c. 4, as against third parties, are in no better position than the persons in whose favour the term was created, although such assignees took without notice of the claims of those third parties. Lloyd v. Attwood, Attwood v. Lloyd, 3 De G. & J. 614; 29 L. J., Ch. 97; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1322.

Purchaser from Voluntary Grantee.]—If a person grants a voluntary deed, enabling the grantee to raise money on it from a third person, the grantor cannot get back or set aside the deed without paying what is advanced upon it without fraud. Aldborough (Earl) v. Trye, West, 221; 7 Cl. & F. 436.

Minor Child of Purchaser.]—In a suit to set aside a conveyance for fraud after sixteen years, relief given against the purchaser not extended to his minor child claiming an equity under articles executed before the bill was filed. Purcell v. Kelly, Beat. 492.

A. SOCIETIES WITHIN THE ACTS.

Statutes.]—Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 25), ss. 8—31, 101; Collecting Societies and Industrial Assurance Companies Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 26).

What is a Friendly Society.]—A society is a friendly society under the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, s. 8, although it may not include in its objects all the objects there stated, provided its objects are substantially the same as those in the act. Knowles v. Booth, 32 W. R. 432.

Registration—Companies Act, 1862, s. 4.]—A society which has been registered under s. 8, sub-s. 5, of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, pursuant to the special authority of the Treasury, is excepted from the provisions of s. 4 of the Companies Act, 1862. Peat v. Fowler, 55 L. J., Q. B. 271; 34 W. R. 366.

Whether a Charity.]—In 1862, on the occasion of an accident at the Hartley Colliery, in Northumberland, a fund was raised by voluntary subscriptions and vested in trustees for the relief of the sufferers and their families. There being an ultimate surplus, the managers of the fund proposed to apportion it among several mining districts, including South Durham, for the relief of suffering occasioned by colliery accidents in those districts, and in aid of relief funds already in operation there. By the rules of a Miners' Relief Fund Friendly Society, established in 1862 for certain counties, including the county of Durham, provision was made for raising funds by voluntary subscriptions among the members (required to be persons employed in coal and other mines), and by donations, for defraying the funeral expenses of members, supporting their families, assisting members disabled by accident, old age, or infirmity, and for payment of a sum at the death of a member:—Held, in an action by the surviving trustee of the Hartley Colliery Fund, that the friendly society was a "charity," and that that portion of the fund intended for the South Durham district might be applied cy-près by payment to four of the trustees of the friendly society, to be applied by them, according to the rules of the society, for the relief of suffering occasioned by colliery accidents in the South Durham district, and for no other purpose:—Held, also, that the Hartley Colliery Fund, being a fund arising wholly from "voluntary contributions," was exempted by s. 62 of the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, from the operation of the act, and that, therefore, the consent of the Charity Commissioners to the action, under s. 17, was unnecessary. Clark's Trust, In re (45 L. J., Ch. 194; 1 Ch. D. 497; 24 W. R. 233), considered. Pease v. Pattinson, 55 L. J., Ch. 617; 32 Ch. D. 154; 54 L. T. 209; 34 W. R. 361. And see Cunnack v. Edwards, [1896] 2 Ch. 679; and Buck, In re, Bruty v. Mackey, [1896] 2 Ch. 727. Infra, col. 449.

Raising Shares by Subscriptions—Selling Privileges.]—A society established for raising shares at stated periods by the subscriptions of its members, and enabling such members to receive the value of their shares in advance on payment of a bonus, and entering into security for the payment of the subscriptions, fines, forfeitures, and interest (the privilege of receiving such advances being put up to auction and sold to the highest bidder), was not a friendly society within 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, and 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40; and the words, "for any other purpose which is not illegal," in 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, must be taken to relate to purposes ejusdem generis as those before enumerated. Reg. v. Scott, 13 L. J., M. C. 70; 8 Jur. 473. S. C., nom. Reg. v. Shortridge, 1 New Sess. Cas. 56; 1 D. & L. 855.

Visionary Scheme.]—A society based upon irrational principles, and seeking to realise a visionary and an unattainable object under Mr. Owen's system, is not founded for the propagation of irreligious and immoral doctrines, so as to prevent a creditor recovering his debt. Pare v. Clegg, 29 Beav. 589; 30 L. J., Ch. 742; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1136; 4 L. T. 669; 9 W. R. 795.

Trade Unions—Before 39 & 40 Vict. c. 22.]—When a friendly society was established for the purposes which, in the main, were the purposes of a trades union, it was not entitled to the protection of the Friendly Societies Act. Hornby v. Close, 8 B. S. 175; 36 L. J., M. C. 43; L. R. 2 Q. B. 153; 15 L. T. 563; 15 W. R. 336; 10 Cox, C. C. 393.

Such society was illegal in the sense of being void. Ib.

Encouragement of Men on Strike—Relief to Sick Members.]—A society which, in addition to rules for the bonâ fide mutual relief of sick members, and for other ordinary purposes of a friendly society, included also rules for the encouragement, relief, and maintenance of men on strike, is not a friendly society within 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, ss. 9, 44; first, because such last-mentioned purposes are not analogous to those of friendly societies properly so called; and, secondly, because such purposes are those of a trades union, and are illegal as being in restraint of trade; and consequently, therefore, the summary jurisdiction given to the justices by s. 24 does not apply to cases of fraud or misappropriation of the funds of such a society on the part of any of its members. Ib.

A mutual society which, in addition to rules for the bonâ fide relief of sick members, and for other ordinary purposes of a friendly society, includes also rules for the encouragement, relief, or maintenance of men on strike, is not a friendly society. Farrer v. Close, 10 B. & S. 533; 38 L. J., M. C. 132; L. R. 4 Q. B. 602; 20 L. T. 802; 17 W. R. 1129.

By one of the rules of the Amalgamated

Society of Carpenters and Joiners, it was provided that any free member or members leaving his or their employment under circumstances satisfactory to the branch or executive council, should be entitled to 15*s.* per week:—Held, per Cockburn, C.J., and Mellor, J., that this rule being ambiguous, and being, in their opinion, according to the evidence in the case, construed and applied by the society so as to render the funds of the society available for the purpose of supporting strikes, the society was not within the protection of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63. Held, per Hannen and Hayes, JJ., that the rule was not ambiguous but perfectly plain and lawful, and that, as in their opinion the evidence in the case did not show any illegal action under it, the society was within the protection of the enactment. Ib.

And see Warburton v. Huddersfield Industrial Society, 61 L. J., Q. B. 422; [1892] 1 Q. B. 817; 67 L. T. 43; 40 W. R. 346; 56 J. P. 453—C. A.

Rules in Restraint of Trade.]—A society formed for purposes which are primâ facie lawful and beneficial, but having rules in restraint of trade, is not on that ground deprived of the protection of the criminal law, but may prefer an indictment against a servant for embezzling the moneys of the society. Reg. v. Stainer, 39 L. J., M. C. 54; L. R. 1 C. C. 230; 21 L. T. 758; 18 W. R. 439.

Loan Society.]—A loan society established pursuant to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 23, became entitled to the benefit of those provisions upon its rules and regulations being certified by the barrister appointed for that purpose, and before enrolment at the sessions. Bradburne v. Whitbread, 5 Man. & G. 439; 6 Scott (N.R.) 283; 12 L. J., C. P. 218; 7 Jur. 629.

Evidence—Rules Conclusive.]—The rules of a society as certified by the barrister are to be treated as conclusive as to the character of the society. Pare v. Clegg, supra.

B. RULES.

1. VALIDITY.

Statute.]—Act of 1896, ss. 9, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18.

Illegal Rules—Restraint of Trade.]—Where the general objects of a society are legal, as in the case of a provident society the object of which is the relief of members when disabled by age or accident or when out of employment, the fact that some of its rules are illegal as being in restraint of trade does not constitute the society an illegal society, or prevent a member from recovering a sum of money payable to him under a rule of the society which is not illegal. Rules made for the bonâ fide purpose of protecting the funds of such a society from claims, which may be avoided, are not illegal because they are incidentally to some extent in restraint of trade, provided that their provisions go no further than is reasonable and necessary for that purpose. Swaine v. Wilson, 59 L. J., Q. B. 76; 24 Q. B. D. 252; 62 L. T. 309; 38 W. R. 261; 54 J. P. 484—C. A.

Alteration of Rules—Members in Receipt of Benefit—Diminution of Security for Benefit.]—The rules of a friendly society made under the Friendly Societies Act, 1855, do not cease to exist because that act has been repealed. Where a member joined a friendly society on the basis that the rules might be altered, and became entitled to a benefit in the society, the subsequent alteration of a rule which diminished his security for that benefit is not ultra vires. Smith and Galloway, In re, 67 L. J., Q. B. 15; [1898] 1 Q. B. 71; 77 L. T. 469.

Rules containing no Provision for Alteration—Registration of Amended Rules — Society formed before 1850.]—Sect. 6 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, does not impliedly re-enact s. 27 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1855, and thus empower societies formed prior to 1850 to alter their rules. Unless, therefore, the rules make provision for their alteration, they cannot be altered except by consent of all the members. The mere fact that amended rules have been registered does not preclude the court from inquiring into the power of a society to make such amendments. Souter v. Davies, 15 R. 261.

Altering Place of Meeting.]—A friendly society was established in 1832. In 1851 its rules were amended, and were certified by the registrar under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63. Rule 1 mentioned its name and place of business at No. 106, Duke Street, Liverpool. By r. 92 no new rule should be made, nor any of the rules amended, allowed, or rescinded, unless with the consent of a majority of the members present at a general meeting of the society specially called for the purpose. By r. 93, in case of any alteration in the place of meeting, written notice should be sent to the registrar of friendly societies. In 1865 the annual general meeting of the society was held in Manchester, and on the same day, and at the same place, a special general meeting was held for the purpose of rescinding the existing rules and making new ones. These meetings were convened by the president and secretary. Resolutions were passed at the special general meeting rescinding the existing rules, and making new rules, by one of which the committee was empowered to change the principal office of the society, either occasionally or permanently, should the interest of the society seem to require it. Upon an application for a rule for a mandamus to the registrar of friendly societies to certify the new rules, he stated that he refused, because he was of opinion that until the place of meeting of the society was by a resolution of the society at a proper meeting called for that purpose changed from Liverpool, no meeting of the society elsewhere than in Liverpool could conformably to law make new, or alter the existing, rules of the society; and that, in the notice convening the meeting, and the rules passed there, divers matters seemed to him in point of law objectionable, and he referred to them:—Held, that the alteration in the place of meeting could only be made at a meeting of the society legally convened, and therefore the rules made at the meeting summoned by the president and secretary at Manchester were void. Reg. v. Tidd Pratt, 6 B. & S. 627.

Meeting not duly Summoned.]—In an action by the trustees of a friendly society against the treasurer to recover money in his hands, it appeared that he had been appointed under the old rules of the society; that new rules were made in 1853, by which it was declared that three trustees should be appointed, one of whom should be treasurer, in whose names the funds of the society should be invested; and that the treasurer should invest the unappropriated stock exceeding 50*l.* as the board of management should direct, and pursuant to 13 & 14 Vict. c. 115. The three plaintiffs were elected trustees, but a fourth person was elected treasurer. The new rules received the barrister's certificate, under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 4, but they had been passed at a meeting not duly summoned in pursuance of s. 9 of 10 Geo. 4, c. 56:—Held, first, that the new rules were valid. Dewhurst v. Clarkson, 3 El. & Bl. 194; 2 C. L. R. 1143; 23 L. J., Q. B. 247; 18 Jur. 693; 2 W. R. 199.

Held, secondly, that the plaintiffs had no right to maintain the action, inasmuch as the new rules had not been pursued; and the treasurer was to hold the money until it was invested, pursuant to 13 & 14 Vict. c. 115, s. 12. Ib.

The provision of 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 6, did not apply to societies established before the passing of that act. Rex v. Somersetshire JJ., 4 B. & Ad. 549; 1 N. & M. 252; 2 L. J., M. C. 40.

Compliance with—Necessity of, for Proceedings.]—C., the husband of the respondent, was a subscriber in the appellant friendly society. By the rules of the society a subscription for a period of twenty-six weeks entitled the subscriber to a "half-benefit," and it was the duty of the collecting agent of the society to collect subscriptions from the members. C. subscribed for eleven weeks, from 17th Jan., 1881, and then changed his residence, and the collector did not call for his weekly payments. No further sums were ever paid by C. down to 29th Sept., 1881, when he died. His widow, the respondent, claimed 11*l.* 5*s.* as half-benefit; and on the society refusing to pay it, preferred a complaint to a police magistrate for the metropolitan district, who made an order upon the society to pay the amount claimed. The society appealed:—Held, on appeal, that the magistrate was wrong, and that the non-compliance with the rules of the society on the part of the person represented by the respondent was a bar to the recovery of the sum claimed, and that the alleged default on the part of the appellant society could not cure the defect in the title of the claimant. Taylor v. Collins, 46 L. T. 168.

—— When Unnecessary.]—Moneys borrowed for a friendly society and applied for its benefit, constitute a valid debt against the society, although the formalities required by its rules have not been followed. Pare v. Clegg, 29 Beav. 589; 30 L. J., Ch. 742; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1136; 46 L. T. 669; 9 W. R. 795.

Inrolment—Necessity of.]—The court refused to issue a mandamus to justices to hear the complaint of a member of a friendly society, which had been acting on rules not inrolled for upwards of 30 years, on the doubt entertained as to the existence of the society in such a case, although the original inrolled rules had never been repealed. Reg. v. Godolphin, 3 N. & P. 488; 7 L. J., M. C. 104. S. C., nom. Rex v. Cambridgeshire JJ., 8 A. & E. 338; 1 W. W. & H. 451; 2 Jur. 613.

2. Proof.

Benefit Society.]—An order of justices requiring the stewards of a benefit society to re-admit A., who had been expelled, recited that it had appeared to the justices that the rules of the society had been inrolled at the quarter sessions. On the trial of an indictment against the stewards for disobeying such order:—Held, that the recital was not evidence of the inrolment of the rules. Rex v. Gilkes, 8 B. & C. 439; 3 Car. & P. 52; 2 M. & R. 454; 6 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 118.

Loan Society.]—To give evidence of the transcript of the rules of a loan society, inrolled at the office of the clerk of the peace, by proof of an examined copy of it, the witness who examined the copy with the transcript must prove that he examined the copy of all the rules with the transcript. Reg. v. Boynes, 1 Car. & K. 65.

Friendly Society.]—In an action on a promissory note by the treasurer of a friendly society, the declaration alleged, that the rules of the society were filed before the making of the promise at the trial. It appeared that the rules were not filed until after the making of the note, but before it became due:—Held, no variance. Margett v. Parkes, 1 D. & L. 582; 13 L. J., Ex. 87.

By 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 2, it was provided, that the rules of every society should be exhibited in writing to the justices at sessions, to be by them confirmed; after which they should be signed by the clerk of the peace, and a duplicate deposited with and filed by him at such sessions; and that no such society should be deemed to be within the act, till good rules for its government should have been so confirmed and filed. By s. 15, if any member of such society established by virtue of the act, should think himself aggrieved by any act of such society, two justices of the county should determine the matter in a summary way, according to the rules of the society, confirmed pursuant to the act, and make such order therein as they should think just. There was no mention of filing in this section. On an indictment for disobeying an order so made to re-admit a member:—Held, to be no objection that the clerk of the peace signed the rules exhibited to the justices, but not the duplicates deposited with him. Rex v. Wade, 1 B. & Ad. 861; 9 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 113.

3. Effect of Rules.

Contracts by Committee—With Sick Member.]—By one of the rules of a benefit society, the committee was to meet "for the purposes of examining candidates for admission, and to settle and determine any matter relating to the breach or non-observance of the articles of the society by any of its members, and their exclusion in consequence thereof, and to settle and determine any other matter or thing relating to the society, subject nevertheless to the confirmation of the society at their next quarterly meeting":—Held, that the latter words were to be considered in conjunction with, and as qualified by, the preceding portion of the rule, and that they did not authorise the committee to enter into a contract which was in violation of the other rules of the society. Tyrrell v. Woolley, 2 Scott (N.R.) 171; 1 Man. & G. 809; 10 L. J., C. P. 5.

The other rules established a graduated scale of allowance to sick members, regulated by the state of the funds of the society, and by the period that the members continued a charge upon it; and prohibited them from working while they received such allowance; and also provided for the payment of certain sums on the death of a member, or of a member's wife:—Held, that the committee was not authorised in making a contract with a sick member (who had met with an accident which disabled him from working at his trade), allowing him a fixed weekly sum for life, with permission to attend to any business that he might be able to transact, in consideration of his giving up all further claim upon the society during his life and at his decease. Ib.

Sickness—What is.]—By the rules of a friendly society, established under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 9, after payment of a year's subscription, "any member shall receive 8*s.* per week during any sickness or accident that may befall him, unless by rioting or drunkenness":—Held, that insanity was sickness within the meaning of the rules. Burton v. Eyden, 42 L. J., M. C. 115; L. R. 8 Q. B. 295; 28 L. T. 408; 21 W. R. 593.

—— Member not entitled to Sick Pay if in Workhouse or Asylum.]—The rules of a friendly society provided that when a member was entitled to sick pay, he should cease to be so entitled when he became an inmate of a workhouse or a lunatic asylum. Guardians of the poor having relieved a member as a pauper lunatic:—Held, that their claim under section 23 of 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61, had been excluded by the above rule. Caistor Union v. Cleaver, 56 J. P. 503.

—— Old Age—Natural Decay.]—The respondent over 80 years of age, belonged to a friendly society, one of the rules of which provided that every member, after paying a certain amount of contributions, falling sick, lame, or blind, or otherwise disabled from work, should be entitled to receive a certain weekly amount from the funds of the society for sixteen weeks, if his illness continued so long, and half pay for the remainder; and another provided that where a member falls sick, lame, or blind, he is to give notice to the stewards, with a certificate from the surgeon of the society stating the cause of his indisposition. The surgeon of the society certified to the appellants (stewards of the society) that the respondent "continued unable to work by reason of natural decay." The respondent drew sick pay for some weeks; then the appellants refused to allow him any more, holding that the certificate did not entitle him to receive it:—Held, that incapacity to work arising from natural decay, as the result of old age, did not entitle the respondent to sick pay under the society's rules. Dunkley v. Harrison, 56 L. T. 660; 51 J. P. 788.

Death of Member Intestate — Payment of Death Allowance—Right of Administrator to Recover.]—The deceased, a member of an unregistered friendly society, had, upon making his application for admission to the society, signed a declaration agreeing to be bound by the rules of the society, and authorising the deduction from his wages of the sum specified in the rules for securing to himself, or to his representatives in case of his death, the benefits of the society. The rule relating to the payment of death allowances empowered and authorised the committee to pay the allowance to such person or persons as in their discretion they might think fit; and it further provided that the allowance should be paid to certain specified relatives in such proportions as the committee should determine, unless otherwise bequeathed by will, when it was to be paid to the person to whom it had been bequeathed; that, where there were no surviving relatives and no special bequest, only the funeral expenses should be defrayed by the society, and that where the allowance had been once paid neither the committee nor the society should be liable to any further claim in respect of it. Upon the death of the member intestate the society paid the amount of the death allowance to the defendant, his sister. The plaintiff, as administrator of the deceased, having brought an action against the defendant to recover the money so paid to her:—Held, that the rule constituted the contract between the member and the society as to the payment of the money; that the death allowance was not the property of the member during his life, and in the absence of a bequest by will was not assets for the payment of his debts, and that therefore the plaintiff could not recover. Ashby v. Costin, 57 L. J., Q. B. 491; 21 Q. B. D. 401; 59 L. T. 224; 37 W. R. 140; 53 J. P. 69.

Appointment of Treasurer.]—Where, by the articles of a benefit club, the society was empowered to appoint a treasurer:—Held, that an appointment of two persons to be treasurers was within the power. Sharp v. Warren, 6 Price, 131.

Stamping Securities.]—The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 37, does not exempt from stamp duty securities on which the funds of a friendly society are invested. Royal Liver Friendly Society, In re, 39 L. J., Ex. 37; L. R. 5 Ex. 78; 21 L. T. 721; 18 W. R. 349. And see Bradburne v. Whitbread, supra, col. 435.

Exemption from Stamp Duty.]—See Act of 1896, s. 33.

Assurance on Lives.] — A society enrolled under 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, and 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, cannot legally grant assurances on lives, notwithstanding rules authorising them to do so have been certified and allowed. Kelsall v. Tyler, 11 Ex. 513; 25 L. J., Ex. 153.

A person under 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, and 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, effected a policy of assurance on his life in 499*l.* 19*s.*, payable on his decease to his widow; and if none, to his executors, administrators, or assigns. All previous acts relating to friendly societies were repealed and consolidated by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 115, s. 2, and assurances in favour of relations were limited to 100*l.*, but the rights of parties under former acts were preserved. The testator paid the premiums till his decease, and died indebted, leaving his widow surviving:—Held, that the policy was good, though it exceeded 100*l.*, and that the widow was entitled to the sum assured. Owen, In re, Clayton v. Owen, 31 Beav. 285; 31 L. J., Ch. 825; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1117; 6 L. T. 802; 10 W. R. 770.

C. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF MEMBERS.

1. To whom Property Entrusted.

Statute.]—Act of 1896, ss. 49—51.

Treasurer—Who may be.]—An incorporated banking company cannot be the treasurer of a friendly society within the meaning of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875. West of England and South Wales District Bank, In re, Swansea Friendly Society, Ex parte, 48 L. J., Ch. 577; 11 Ch. D. 768; 40 L. T. 551; 27 W. R. 596.

—— Liability.]—The 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, ss. 20, 22, had not the effect of increasing the responsibility of a treasurer of such a society beyond that of a bailee, in respect of the loss of money immediately after its receipt. Walker v. British Guarantee Association, 18 Q. B. 277; 21 L. J., Q. B. 257.

—— Penalties.]—To render the treasurer of a friendly society liable to the penalties imposed by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 24, for withholding or misapplying moneys of the society which have come to his hands as treasurer, it must be shown that he has been guilty of some fraud or misrepresentation. Mere inability to pay over the money to the trustees is not enough. Barrett v. Markham, 41 L. J., M. C. 118; L. R. 7 C. P. 405; 27 L. T. 313.

—— With another Person.]—An officer of a friendly society, entrusted with moneys of the society jointly with another person, who is a member but not an officer of the society, was not within the summary remedy provided by 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 8. Heanor Friendly Society, In re, 1 Beav. 509.

—— When Association not Registered.]—An association not registered and without rules held meetings at the house of G., and, appointing him their treasurer, placed money in his hands. A majority of the association afterwards removed the meetings from his house, whereupon he resigned, but refused to deliver up the money. The association was afterwards registered without the concurrence of G., and proceeded against G. under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 24:—Held, that he was not liable under that act, as he was not a party to the registration. Patrick v. Gilbert, 18 W. R. 315.

—— Money for use of Doctor.]—By the rules of a friendly society, a medical attendant was entitled to 3*s.* per annum from every member; and a committee of the society was authorised to settle all disputes, grievances, &c., relative to the affairs of the society, subject to an appeal to two magistrates. The plaintiff, who had been duly appointed medical attendant, was dismissed by the committee without any meeting of the society at large, and another appointed; upon an application to magistrates, they recommended a public meeting, which being convened accordingly, a large majority of the members voted for the plaintiff, who thereupon sued the treasurer for the 3*s.* received for the use of the medical attendant:—Held, that he was entitled to recover, and that the treasurer was not exonerated by an order of the committee not to pay. Garner v. Shelley, 5 Bing. 477. S. C., nom. Garner v. Shelley, 3 M. & P. 98; 7 L. J. (o.s.) C. P. 194.

Bankruptcy of Officer—Preferential Payment—Debt due to Society.]—Upon the bankruptcy of an officer of a friendly society, the trustees are, under s. 15, sub-s. 7 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, entitled to preferential payment of sums received by him in virtue of his office, notwithstanding that these sums cannot be specifically traced, and are not at the time of the bankruptcy in his actual possession. Edmonds, Ex parte, Atkins, In re (51 L. J., Ch. 406), approved. Official Receiver, Ex parte, Miller, In re, 62 L. J., Q. B. 324; [1893] 1 Q. B. 327; 4 R. 256; 68 L. T. 367; 41 W. R. 243; 10 Morrell, 21; 57 J. P. 469—C. A.

See now Act of 1896, s. 35.

Section 15, sub-s. 7, of the Friendly Societies Act of 1875, entitles the trustees of a friendly society upon the bankruptcy of the financial secretary of the society—who was by the rules entitled to receive certain of the moneys due to the society, though bound to hand them over at once to the treasurer—to be paid out of his estate, in preference to other creditors, the balance due from him to the society in respect of moneys which he had properly received by virtue of his office; such moneys, though he ought to have handed them over to the treasurer, are in his possession by virtue of his office. Welch, In re, Oddfellows Trustees, Ex parte, 63 L. J., Q. B. 524; 10 R. 140; 70 L. T. 691; 42 W. R. 320; 1 Manson, 62.

Under the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, s. 15, sub-s. 7, the trustees of the society are entitled to preferential payment out of the estate of a bankrupt treasurer in respect of money received by him by virtue of his office, notwithstanding the fact that the debtor's assets consist only of stock in trade, furniture, and other property, which cannot be considered as specifically belonging to the society. Edmonds, Ex parte, Atkins, In re, 51 L. J., Ch. 406; 46 L. T. 240; 30 W. R. 432.

On the appointment of the bankrupt as treasurer of a friendly society, it was agreed that for the funds then in hand she was to pay interest for 120*l.*:—Held, that this was not to be considered as a loan to her; but that it was in her hands and possession by virtue of her office of treasurer within 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 12; and that the assignees must pay over the amount to the society. Ray, Ex parte, 3 Deac. 537; 1 Mont. & C. 50.

A treasurer of a friendly society established under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, and 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, paid himself a debt due from a third party, out of the moneys of the society, and took for the secretary of the society a very insufficient mortgage from his debtor, which mortgage two of the trustees of the society were induced to execute, they not knowing the contents of it:—Held, upon the bankruptcy of the treasurer, that this was money due and owing from him to the society at the time of his bankruptcy, within the meaning of the above act; and that the society were entitled to be paid in full, in priority to other creditors of the bankrupt. Burge, Ex parte, Baker, In re, 1 Mont. D. & D. 540; 10 L. J., Bk. 30.

Where an officer of a friendly society has received, as such officer, moneys belonging to the society, and afterwards executes an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and his assignees are possessed of enough of his estate and effects to repay the amount of such moneys, but the specific moneys so received by the officer are not traced to the assignees, the assignees are not liable to the provisions of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 24, if they refuse to repay to the society the amount of such moneys. O'Donnell, Ex parte, 35 L. J., M. C. 99 ; L. R. 1 Q. B. 274 ; 14 W. R. 83.

The 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 23, requires the assignees of the officers of such societies, "upon demand in writing," to pay the debts due from such officers in priority to their other creditors :—Held, that a bill filed to recover the amount is a sufficient demand in writing. Absolom v. Gething, 32 Beav. 322 ; 32 L. J., Ch. 786 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1263 ; 8 L. T. 132 ; 11 W. R. 332.

The treasurer of a benefit building society held not to be a "person appointed to or employed in any office in any society established under any of the acts relating to friendly societies," within the meaning of s. 167 of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act. Bailey, Ex parte, Barrell, In re, 5 De G. M. & G. 380 ; 23 L. J., Bk. 36 ; 18 Jur. 988 ; 2 W. R. 401.

Sect. 12 of the Friendly Societies Act, 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, and s. 4 of the Benefit Building Societies Act, 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, are repealed by the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act. Ib.

The preference given to friendly societies by the stat. 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 10, over other creditors, is confined to debts in respect of money in the hands of their officers, by virtue of their offices, and independent of contract ; therefore, it does not extend to money held by the treasurer upon the security of his promissory note payable with interest upon demand. Stamford Friendly Society, Ex parte, 15 Ves. 280. S. P., Buckland Ex parte, Buck, 214.

Preference by bankrupt laws given to friendly societies in case of bankruptcy, &c., does not extend to debts due from their officers individually, and not in their official characters. Amicable Society of Lancaster, Ex parte, 6 Ves. 98.

No Treasurer appointed.]—A person in the habit of receiving money of a friendly society, having no treasurer appointed, upon notes carrying interest payable a month after demand, is not an officer of the society, so as to entitle them to a preference under 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 10. Ashley, Ex parte, Corser, Ex parte, 6 Ves. 441. S. P., Ross, Ex parte, Ib. 802.

—— Bankers.]—By the rules of a friendly society it was provided that there should be appointed a treasurer or treasurers, in whose hands should be deposited all the cash belonging to the society until the same should be placed out at interest, and that, as soon as a sufficient sum should be collected, it should (after leaving in the club-box a sufficient sum to pay the sick and other expenses of the society) be deposited in the hands of the treasurer or treasurers of the society, and that the clerk and two stewards should take the same to the bank. No formal appointment of treasurer was made, but the moneys of the society were paid into a bank :—Held, that the bankers were not "employed" as officers of the society so as to entitle the society upon their bankruptcy to payment in full. Orford or Oxford, Ex parte, Rufford, In re, 1 De G. M. & G. 483 ; 21 L. J., Bk. 31 ; 16 Jur. 851. And see Whipham, Ex parte, 3 Mont. D. & D. 564.

The rules of a friendly society provided that the treasurer retaining upwards of 10*l.* more than seven days after he was required to pay it over should be excluded from the society. They also provided that a particular firm should be the bankers of the society, with power for a general meeting to appoint other bankers :—Held, that the bankers for the time being were not officers, so as upon their bankruptcy to entitle the society to payment in full. Harris, Ex parte, Clarke, In re, 1 De G. 162 ; 14 L. J., Bk. 25.

Default by Trustee.]—One of two trustees absconding, other ordered to transfer fund into his own name, and that of another appointed. Friendly Society, In re, 1 Sim. & S. 82.

Petition under 33 Geo. 8, c. 54, s. 10, in consequence of bankruptcy of trustee, should, it seems, be entitled in bankruptcy only, and not in matter of the society. Anon., 6 Madd. 98.

Surviving Trustee—Order to Transfer Funds.]—The defendant was the surviving trustee of an association for the relief of orphans and widows. A schism took place among the members, and a portion of them caused the society to be registered under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 115. The defendant was removed from the office of trustee by a meeting acting in compliance with the regulations prescribed by the rules, and new trustees appointed. The bill was filed by the plaintiffs, on behalf of themselves and all other persons interested in the trust fund, to compel the defendant to transfer stock standing in his name to the new trustees ; and he resisted the application, on the ground, amongst others, that he was a trustee not only for the members of the registered society, but also for those subscribers of the old association who had been excluded from the new society. The court, looking at the original rules, and the rules which had been certified :—Held, that the societies were identical, and that no persons claiming to be cestuis que trust, could object to the frame of the suit ; the object of placing the fund in the hands of the proper trustee being common to all ; that the power given to meetings, by the Friendly Societies Act and rules, of appointing new trustees, from time to time, included the power of removing trustees ; that the Friendly Societies Act did not oust the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery ; that where a society has been registered under the act, Clough v. Ratcliffe (1 De G. & Sm. 164) does not apply ; that the court would be unwilling to consider a society for the benefit of widows and orphans illegal under the 39 Geo. 3, c. 79, but would take the registrar's certificate to be conclusive as to the society being in conformity with, and therefore entitled to the benefit of the 21st section of, the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 115. Hodges v. Wale, 2 W. R. 65. And see Norrish, Ex parte, Jacob, 162.

The committee of a benefit club, which was not registered, advanced some of the club money on the security of a deposit of a lease. Afterwards the surviving members of the club formed a new society, under a different name, which succeeded to the funds of the old club. The new society was duly registered under the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56 :—Held, that the equitable mortgage would not vest in the public officer of the new society without a legal transfer. Davies v. Griffiths, 1 W. R. 402.

Power of Court to compel Members to restore Money of Society.]—Powers of the Court of Chancery under the act 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, to compel two members of a friendly society to restore money belonging to the society which had been received by them. Briton Friendly Society, In re, 1 W. R. 50.

Master—Expulsion of Lodge.]—A district Odd Fellows society, after expelling a lodge of the society for non-payment of subscriptions and fines, was registered as a friendly society pursuant to 13 & 14 Vict. c. 115, under a name which, upon an objection of the certifying barrister, was altered from the original name. Some deposit notes of a banker's, with whom a portion of the subscriptions were deposited, remained in the hands of the grand master of the expelled lodge, and were demanded from him by the trustees of the registered society:—Held, that whether the expulsion of the lodge had been proper or not, he was bound to deliver up the notes to the trustees, and he was ordered to pay the costs of a suit instituted by the trustees against him for their recovery. Yeates v. Roberts, 7 De G. M. & G. 227; 3 W. R. 461. Affirming 3 Drew. 170; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 319.

Ordinary Member.]—An action for money had and received may be maintained against one who had been a member of a benefit club, for money intrusted to his keeping by the rest of the society, in the name of the officers properly appointed for managing their affairs under the articles. Sharp v. Warren, 6 Price, 131.

Available Securities.]—A bond given to the plaintiff as the treasurer of a friendly society, for the use of the society, is an available security at common law, though the rules and regulations of the society have not been confirmed at the quarter sessions, in pursuance of 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 2. Jones v. Woollam, 1 D. & R. 393; 5 B. & Ald. 769; 2 Chit. 322.

Box to be Delivered to Committee—Condition in Bond.]—Where the landlord of a public-house had given a bond to deliver to the committee of a friendly society the box at all times when required by a majority of the society at one of their annual or quarterly meetings, "or by their committee for the time being," and likewise to render a just and true account, "according to the rules, orders, and regulations of the society, and of the act of parliament, and of the bond":—Held, that the latter words did not qualify the power of the committee to demand the box, &c., and that a refusal to comply with their request to do so was a breach of the condition, it having been shown that such committee had been duly elected by a majority of the society at their annual meeting. Wybergh v. Ainley, M'Cle. 669.

Theft by Third Person.]—By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 18, the property and moneys of the society are vested in the trustees. A resolution of a meeting of one of these societies directed that 40*l.* should be sent to a bank, and that the prisoner, one of the trustees, should take it. The money was handed by the treasurer's clerk to the prisoner, who misappropriated it:—Held, that he could not be convicted as a bailee, or under a common count for larceny, of stealing the 40*l.* as the money of the treasurer. Reg. v. Loose, Bell, C. C. 259; 29 L. J., M. C. 132; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 513; 2 L. T. 254; 8 W. R. 422; 8 Cox, C. C. 302.

Property withheld or misapplied—Criminal Proceedings.]—Where an officer of a friendly society is entrusted with property for the value of which he has to account, and a deficiency exists which cannot fairly be attributed to depreciation and waste, this constitutes a primâ facie case for the granting of a summons under s. 16, sub-s. 9, of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875. Reg. v. Bennett, 63 L. J., M. C. 181; 10 R. 456.

—— Conviction and Order for Repayment—Imprisonment in Default—Subsequent Civil Proceedings.]—Where a person who has under s. 16, sub-s. 9, of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, been convicted of withholding the moneys of a society, and ordered to pay a penalty and repay the moneys, and in default to be imprisoned, and has, in default of repaying the moneys or of paying the penalty, suffered imprisonment, he cannot afterwards be sued for the moneys in a civil action. Vernon v. Watson, 60 L. J., Q. B. 472; [1891] 2 Q. B. 288; 64 L. T. 728; 39 W. R. 520; 56 J. P. 85—C. A.

Sum paid for Funeral Expenses of Child under Ten Years of Age—Production of Certificate of Death.]—A society, whose registration under the Friendly Societies Act had been cancelled, and which was registered under the companies acts, did not issue policies of assurance, but collected and entered upon a contribution card fortnightly contributions from its members, and was liable to pay sums of money upon the death of a member for funeral expenses. The society was convicted under s. 28 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, for having paid such a sum on the death of a child under the age of ten years without the production of a certificate of death:—Held, that the words in s. 2 of the Life Assurances Companies Act, 1870, "who issue, or are liable under, policies of assurance upon human life," must be excluded from the definition of "society" in s. 28 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, as being inconsistent with the context; and that the society fell within that definition, and the conviction was right. Newbold Friendly Society v. Barlow, 62 L. J., M. C. 124; [1893] 2 Q. B. 128; 5 R. 435; 68 L. T. 798; 41 W. R. 543; 57 J. P. 565.

Embezzlement—Rules in Restraint of Trade.]—An officer of a friendly society, some of whose rules were in restraint of trade, embezzled their money:—Held, that rules in restraint of trade are not criminal, although they may be void as being against public policy, and that societies having such rules are entitled to the protection of the criminal law for their funds, and consequently, that he might properly be convicted of embezzlement. Reg. v. Stainer, 10 B. & S. 553; 39 L. J., M. C. 54; L. R. 1 C. C. 230; 21 L. T. 758; 18 W. R. 439. See Farrer v. Close, 38 L. J., M. C. 132; L. R. 4 Q. B. 602; 20 L. T. 802; 17 W. R. 1129.

Reg. v. Harris, 2 M. C. C. 267; 1 Car. & K. 179.

2. CONVENTION OF MEETINGS.

Requisition to call Meeting.]—The secretary or other officer of a friendly society being served with a requisition, duly signed, under 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 9, to call a meeting for the purpose of altering or rescinding the rules, could not, in the exercise of his discretion, refuse, but is bound to convene such meeting. Reg. v. Bannatyne, 17 Q. B. 524; 20 L. J., Q. B. 210; 15 Jur. 1035.

—— Mandamus.]—A mandamus to the officer to sign the notice for convening a meeting under 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 9, would not be granted unless it appeared that the requisition provided for by the section had been made within a year. Reg. v. Aldham and United Parishes Assurance Society, 2 W. R. 456.

3. RE-ADMISSION OF MEMBERS.

Indictment.]—An indictment lies against the president and stewards of a friendly society, for disobeying an order of justices addressed to them, to re-admit a member, though it is sworn that the power of doing so is not in the president and the stewards, but in a committee. Rex v. Wade, 1 B. & Ad. 861; 9 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 113. And see Rex v. Gilkes, supra, col. 438.

4. REMOVAL OF OFFICERS.

Meeting not Legally Constituted.]—At a meeting of a committee of a friendly society, the majority of such committee removed A. from the office of treasurer, and appointed B. in his stead. It appeared, however, that C., one of the members of such committee, did not attend the meeting, and had not been summoned thereto:—Held, that such meeting was not legally constituted, and that an amotion and appointment made thereat were, therefore, invalid. Roberts v. Price, 4 C. B. 231; 16 L. J., C. P. 169; 11 Jur. 352.

—— Waiver or Recognition of Validity.]—Held, also, that the fact of C. not having attended the meetings of the committee, or taken any part in the business of the society for a twelvemonth, did not amount, on his part, to a waiver of notice. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the fact of A. being present at such meeting, and demanding a poll upon the question whether he should be removed from the office of treasurer, did not amount to a recognition on his part of the validity of the meeting. Ib.

Mandamus to Restore Secretary.]—A rule nisi granted for a mandamus requiring the trustees of a friendly society, registered under the Joint Stock Companies Act, to require them to restore one, who had been secretary, to his office. Reg. v. Hearts of Oak Friendly Society, 13 W. R. 724. And see S. C., 14 L. T. 360.

Collector Wrongfully Dismissed—Property in Collecting Books.]—The defendants were a friendly society, and the plaintiff was one of some 1,300 persons employed by them, at a remuneration fixed by the committee of management, to collect the weekly premiums of the members of the society. Rule 16 of the society's enrolled rules provided (inter alia) as follows: "The society shall have an unlimited number of collectors. The collectors shall be furnished with books at the society's expense (the said books to be the property of the society), in which they shall enter the names, ages, residences, date of entrance and premiums of all the members they may collect from .... If any collector resign or be dismissed, he shall deliver up all .... collecting books .... being the property of or belonging to the society, to the treasurer, agent, or any other person or persons duly authorised to receive the same." It was the usual practice for a person desiring to become a collector of the society to purchase the collecting book of a collector desiring to resign, and the bargain between them for the sale and purchase of the book, though made outside the society, was recognised by the society. In accordance with the said practice the plaintiff purchased for 135*l.* the collecting book of one J., a collector, and paid that sum to J. with the knowledge and approval of the society's secretary, and was thereupon appointed a collector in J.'s place and district. A few months afterwards, with their knowledge and approval, he purchased and paid 50*l.* for the collecting book of K., another collector. In the first page of each book was the usual printed notice, "The collector shall be furnished with books at the society's expense. Such books to be the society's property," and on the back of each book, as was the usual practice, there was printed the plaintiff's name, "M. Ellwood," and also the defendants' name. The plaintiff was subsequently dismissed from his office of collector, and in an action by him in the Liverpool passage court to recover damages from the defendants for wrongful dismissal and the detention of his collecting books, the jury found that he was rightfully dismissed and that he had an interest in the books amounting to 50*l.*, whereupon judgment was entered for the defendants on the claim for wrongful dismissal, and for the plaintiff as to the books for 50*l.*, damages 1*s.* On appeal from the finding and judgment in favour of the plaintiff, it was held, by the exchequer division (Kelly, C.B., and Stephen, J.), overruling that finding and judgment, that the books were the property of the society, and that the plaintiff had never had any property or any interest whatever in them recognisable by law or giving him any right of action against the defendants, and that the question of his interest in the books ought not to have been left to the jury. Ellwood v.

Liverpool Victoria Legal Friendly Society, 42 L. T. 694 ; 44 J. P. 508.

Per Stephen, J.: Had the plaintiff been wrongfully dismissed, the fact of his having paid money for the books, in order to obtain the appointment of collector, might have been a matter to go to the jury for their consideration with regard to the amount of damages for wrongful dismissal. Ib.

5. OTHER CASES.

Right of Sole Surviving Member.]—The rules of a private society in the nature of a friendly society, the funds of which were furnished partly by the members, and partly by non-members, provided that the interest of the funds should alone be applied towards its purposes. No provision was made for the ultimate distribution of the capital. A sole surviving member of the society filed a bill for payment to her of the capital of the fund. It was ordered that the income of the fund should be paid to her during her life, with liberty to apply at her death, and notice of the application to be given to the attorney-general. Spiller v. Maude, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1089 ; 11 L. T. 329 ; 13 W. R. 69.

Notice of Withdrawal of Member.]—By the rules of a mutual guarantee society, notice of the withdrawal of any of the members was required to be given, but no particular form of notice was required, nor was it stated to whom the notice should be given :—Held, that parol notice of withdrawal given by a member to the agent through whom the original contract with the society was made was sufficient. Hawthorne, Ex parte, Solvency Mutual Guarantee Society, In re, 31 L. J., Ch. 625 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 934 ; 6 L. T. 574 ; 10 W. R. 572.

Failure of Objects of Society—Undisposed-of Fund—Charity.]—A society formed for the sole purpose of raising by the subscriptions of its members, and the fines and forfeitures imposed by its rules, a fund to provide annuities for the widows of deceased members of the society, and subsequently brought under the provisions of the Friendly Societies Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4 c. 56), is not a charity, and its funds cannot, on the failure of the objects of the society, be administered cy près. Cunnack v. Edwards, 65 L. J., Ch. 801 ; [1896] 2 Ch. 679 ; 75 L. T. 122 ; 45 W. R. 99—C. A.

The members of such a society are not in the position of cestuis que trust as regards the society, but are persons who have entered into a contract with the society that on their making certain payments their widows should receive certain benefits out of the funds of the society, and that being the only destination of the funds of the society there cannot, on the failure of the objects of the society, be any resulting trust of the funds remaining unexpended in favour of the representatives of the deceased members, and such funds must go to the crown as bonâ vacantia. Ib.

—— Application of Bequest—Cy près.]—A friendly society formed to provide a fund for sick and distressed members, their widows and children, and receiving voluntary donations, is a charity, where the rules show that poverty is a necessary ingredient in the qualification of applicants for the benefits of the society. Buck, In re, Bruty v. Mackey, 65 L. J., Ch. 881 ; [1896] 2 Ch. 727 ; 75 L. T. 312 ; 45 W. R. 106 ; 60 J. P. 775.

If a legacy is given to such a society which has not ceased to exist at the date of the testator's death, but which has only one amply secured annuitant with a claim upon its funds, such legacy will not lapse, but will be applied cy près. Cunnack v. Edwards, supra, distinguished. Ib.

And see Pease v. Pattinson, 32 Ch. D. 154, supra, col. 433.

Indorsed Receipt by Friendly Society.]—T. mortgaged his property first to a friendly society and then to a bank. Afterwards T. applied to a building society for an advance. The building society, without notice of the second mortgage, paid off the first mortgage, and made a further advance to T. The friendly society reconveyed the property to T. by means of a regular conveyance, and on the same day T. executed a mortgage to the building society :—Held, that the building society was entitled to the legal estate and to priority over the bank for the whole advance. Pease v. Jackson (37 L. J., Ch. 725) ; and Robinson v. Trevor (53 L. J., Q. B. 85), distinguished. Carlisle Banking Co. v. Thompson, 28 Ch. D. 398 ; 53 L. T. 115 ; 33 W. R. 119.

Discharge of Mortgage by Receipt Indorsed.]—See Act of 1896, s. 53.

D. ARBITRATIONS.

Statute.]—Act of 1896, s. 68.

Dispute between Society and Members.]—A claim by an administrator on a policy of life insurance granted to the intestate by a society enrolled under 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, and 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, is not "a dispute between the society and a member, or person claiming on account of a member," within 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 29, which requires such disputes to be determined by arbitration. Kelsall v. Tyler, 11 Ex. 513 ; 25 L. J., Ex. 153.

Before July, 1855, when the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63 came into operation, the treasurer of a friendly society received, as such, certain moneys, the balance of which he failed to pay over to the society's trustees, and to recover which they after that date brought an action :—Held, that whether the case was governed by 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, or by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, the action lay for that their claim was not a dispute between the society and the treasurer in his capacity as an individual member of it, which disputes alone were required by either statute to be dealt with under the society's rules, and otherwise than by action, Sinden v. Bankes, 3 El. & El. 623 ; 30 L. J., Q. B. 102 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 910 ; 3 L. T. 775 ; 9 W. R. 415.

Expelled Members.]—Where deposits are made in a savings bank by a benefit society, of whom a part has since been expelled by an order of a magistrate who had no authority to interpose, the managers of the bank are not compellable, upon the application of the members so illegally expelled, to appoint an arbitrator to settle disputes as between such managers and the depositors. Rex v. Witham Savings Bank, 3 N. & M. 416 ; 1 A. & E. 321 ; 3 L. J., M. C. 85.

Trustees.]—Since 9 Geo. 4, c. 92, an action does not lie against a trustee of a benefit society. In case of disputes, the only mode of proceeding is by arbitration. Crisp v. Bunbury, 8 Bing. 394; 1 M. & Sc. 646; 1 L. J., C. P. 112.

Counsel.]—It is competent to arbitrators under the Friendly Society Act to decline to hear counsel. Semble, that all arbitrators have a like discretion. Macqueen v. Nottingham Caledonian Society, In re, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 793.

Arbitration Clause—Dispute between Members—Right to bring Action.]—A rule of a registered friendly society provided for a reference to arbitration of all disputes which might arise between any member or person claiming under or on account of any member, and the trustees, treasurer, or other officer of the committee thereof:—Held, that this did not include the case of a member who had been expelled (as he alleged wrongfully) from membership of a friendly society, and who had in consequence commenced an action in the high court with the view of being reinstated as a member of the society. Willis v. Wells, 61 L. J., Q. B. 606; [1892] 2 Q. B. 225; 67 L. T. 316; 41 W. R. 64; 56 J. P. 775.

Exclusion of Member—Member "who has for not more than six months ceased to be a member."]—The addition of the words "or any person aggrieved who has for not more than six months ceased to be a member of a registered society, or any person claiming through such person aggrieved," inserted by s. 10, sub-s. 1 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1895, in s. 22 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, does not bring within the scope of the last-mentioned section any disputes which were not previously within it, but only enlarges by six months the time for the decision of disputes within the meaning of the section. A dispute, therefore, as to whether a person aggrieved is a member of a registered society is not within s. 22 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, as amended by s. 10, sub-s. 1, of the Friendly Societies Act, 1895—repealed by s. 107, but re-enacted by s. 68 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1896—so as to require to be decided in manner directed by the rules of the society, but remains within the jurisdiction of the courts of law. Willis v. Wells, supra, and Prentice v. London (44 L. J., C. P. 353; L. R. 10 C. P. 679: 33 L. T. 251) approved. Palliser v. Dale, 66 L. J., Q. B. 236; [1897] 1 Q. B. 257; 76 L. T. 14; 45 W. R. 291—C. A.

Motion to Set Aside Award—Jurisdiction of High Court.]—The appellant, a member of a friendly society, having met with an accident, applied to his society for relief. His claim was refused, and under the rules of the society the dispute was referred to arbitrators, who decided against him:—Held, that the high court had no jurisdiction to interfere in the matter. Gollings and Tradesmen's Friendly Society, In re, 64 L. T. 775.

Misconduct of Arbitrators—Jurisdiction of Justices.]—The rules of a friendly society provided that all disputes between a member and the society should be decided by an arbitration committee, subject to an appeal to district arbitrators, and a further appeal to final arbitrators, whose decision should be binding and conclusive on all parties without further appeal. A dispute arose which was referred to the arbitration committee. The arbitration committee made an award, but were guilty of misconduct in the course of the arbitration:—Held, that justices had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter, as it could not be said that there had been "no decision" within the meaning of s. 22 (d) of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875. Reg. v. Grant (14 Q. B. 43) distinguished. Bache v. Billingham, 63 L. J., M. C. 1; [1894] 1 Q. B. 107; 9 R. 79; 69 L. T. 648; 42 W. R. 217; 58 J. P. 181—C. A.

Stay of Proceedings—Second Wife of Member.]—Where the rules of a friendly society provide that "if any dispute shall arise between any member or person claiming through or under a member and the officers of the society, it shall be referred to arbitration," proceedings in an action for a declaration that the wife of a member is entitled to be enrolled on the books of the society and for an injunction to restrain the society from paying away its funds in a manner contrary to the rules of the society, will be stayed by the court. Stone v. Liverpool Marine Society, 63 L. J., Q. B. 471; 10 R. 592. Affirmed in C. A.

Jurisdiction of Magistrates.]—Where the treasurer of a benefit society brought an action against a magistrate for issuing a warrant of distress against him, upon a previous order of two magistrates, for the relief of a member, in pursuance of 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 15:—Held, that the action could not be maintained; it appearing on the face of the order that the treasurer made no defence, and the magistrate's jurisdiction not having been questioned at the time, and the treasurer having neglected to present to his notice a rule of the society which directed all disputes between its members to be referred to arbitration; and which rule was confirmed by s. 16, whereby the award was made conclusive, without being subject to the control of the magistrates. Pike v. Carter, 10 Moore, 376; 3 Bing. 78; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 169.

—— Maintenance of Pauper.]—See POOR LAW. Reg. v. Richardson, 63 L. J., M. C. 212; [1894] 2 Q. B. 323; 10 R. 338; 70 L. T. 805; 42 W. R. 540; 58 J. P. 640.

See infra, JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES.

E. ACTIONS BY AND AGAINST.

1. WHO MAY SUE AND BE SUED.

Statute.]—Act of 1896, s. 94.

Trustees.]—Where trustees of a friendly society, established under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 115, were appointed after 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63 had become law:—Held, that it was not necessary to send to the registrar the resolution appointing the trustees; and that such trustees were liable to be sued for the debts of the society incurred before their appointment. Beckett v. Willetts, 5 W. R. 622.

Trustees of a friendly society may sue in a superior court to recover from the treasurer of the society moneys received by him and not paid over, and they are not confined to the summary procedure before justices, provided by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 40. Sinden v. Bankes, 3 El. & El. 623; 30 L. J., Q. B. 102; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 910; 3 L. T. 775; 9 W. R. 415.

Stewards.]—The stewards of a friendly society who were in fact, but not in name, trustees of the society, allowed to petition under the 33 Geo. 3, c. 54 Act by the description of trustees. Heanor Friendly Society, In re, 1 Beav. 508.

Secretary.]—By the Friendly Societies Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 63), s. 19, the trustees of any society are authorised to bring or defend any action, suit or prosecution in law or equity, touching or concerning the property, right or claim to property of the society. By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 101, s. 7, in any proceeding under this act or the above act against a society, it shall be sufficient to make the secretary or other officer of the society, at the time of the plaint or complaint, the defendant. Proceedings having been taken by a member of a society in a county court to enforce a claim against the society, a compromise was come to between the plaintiff, the solicitor of the member, and the society, by which the society promised to pay the plaintiff certain costs and charges. These costs and charges not having been paid, the plaintiff sued the secretary of the society in a superior court :—Held, that this was a proceeding within s. 19, touching the right of the society, and was properly brought against the secretary under s. 7. Roberts v. Page, 45 L. J., Q. B. 601 ; 1 Q. B. D. 476 ; 35 L. T. 325.

On Expulsion of Lodge.]—Disputes arising in a friendly society, consisting of several lodges, whose rules directed the expulsion of any brother who should for a given time neglect to pay his dues, all the members of one of the lodges refused to pay, and in consequence the lodge was expelled, but the legality of their expulsion was in question. The remaining members, afterwards duly registered but under a new name, appointed trustees :—Held, that for the purpose of holding the funds of the society, the members so registering were the society, and that the trustees were entitled to delivery by the grand master of the expelled lodge of funds in his hands. Yeates v. Roberts, 3 Drew, 170 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 319 ; 3 W. R. 315. Affirmed, 7 De G., M. & G. 227 ; 3 W. R. 461.

Action by Annuitants.]—Society for raising an annuity fund for the members, the rate of subscription being too low, though the subsisting fund was equal to the annuities then payable, and no adequate remedy by the articles, inquiries were directed, first, to ascertain the state of the society, the defect of the plan, &c. ; secondly, to provide a remedy, viz. by additional subscription adequate to the object, by paying the arrears, and providing for the present and future annuities. Pearce v. Piper, 17 Ves. 1 ; 11 R. R. 1.

The Association called Odd Fellows.]—Bill by certain members of a lodge of the association called Odd Fellows, against the chief officers of the association, the grand master and secretary of the district, some members of the lodge who had differed from the plaintiffs, and the lodge trustees, who had in their hands a sum of money arising from the subscriptions ; stating that they, the plaintiffs, had been improperly excluded from the society, and praying for a declaration that such exclusion was void, and for a determination as to their rights to the money in the hands of the trustees, was demurred to for want of equity. Demurrer allowed. Clough v. Ratcliffe, 1 De G. & Sm. 164 ; 16 L. J., Ch. 476 ; 11 Jur. 648.

Injunction.]—Injunction granted to restrain payments by friendly society founded on erroneous principles tending to exhaust their funds. Reeve v. Parkins, 2 J. & W. 390.

—— Motion to Commit Trustees.]—An injunction was granted against certain trustees of a friendly society by name, restraining them from dividing 2,000*l.*, part of the society's funds, among its members. These trustees shortly afterwards retired, and others were appointed in their place. A fresh resolution was then passed by the society for dividing the 2,000*l.*, and this was carried out by the new trustees. One of the former trustees was present when the resolution was passed, and assisted in distributing the money. All received their shares of the money, but had repaid them. On motion to commit all the trustees, old and new, for contempt :—Held, on the evidence, that the new trustees had notice of the order ; that they and the old trustees, who actively assisted in dividing the money, must be committed to prison, and the costs of the motion must be paid by all. Avery v. Andrews, 51 L. J., Ch. 414 : 46 L. T. 279 ; 30 W. R. 564.

Usury.]—In 1845 a society, called the Frugal Investment Society, was established, and a book of rules was framed and approved of by the barrister appointed under the Friendly Societies Act. By these rules it was declared that the society should last for one hundred months ; that every member should pay 1*l.* a month in respect of each share held by him ; that members might be paid their shares in advance upon the terms of paying 8*s.* a month by way of interest in respect of each share so anticipated, in addition to the subscription, and giving security for such payments. All moneys which should be paid to the society, exclusively of the subscriptions, were to be divided among the members every year. The society consisted of 180 members. A. took some shares in the society, and received the amount of them in advance, and made a mortgage of real estate to the trustees of the society, for the purpose of securing the sums payable by him under the rules. A. paid sums to the society, to an amount, however, less than the sums so payable. He afterwards filed a bill against the trustees, praying that, accounting for the sums advanced to him and interest, the difference, if any, between this amount and the sums paid by him might be repaid to him by the trustees, and that the mortgaged property might be reconveyed to him :—Held, that A. had, on the bill, no right to relief. Burbidge v. Cotton, 5 De G. & Sm. 17 ; 21 L. J., Ch. 201 ; 15 Jur. 1070.

The above-mentioned loans made to A., under the rules of the society, were not usurious. Ib.

2. LOAN SOCIETIES.

Statute.]—Loan Societies Act, 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 110) made perpetual by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 56.

Action by Treasurer pro tem.]—Under 5 & 6

Will. 4, c. 23, s. 8, an action cannot be maintained by the treasurer for the time being on a note given in the form prescribed by the statue to secure a loan from the society. Timms v. Williams, 2 G. & D. 621 ; 3 Q. B. 413 ; 11 L. J., Q. B. 210 ; 6 Jur. 1012.

Payment can only be enforced by complaint to a justice of the peace. Ib.

Rule that Surety receive Notice of Default before Proceedings Commenced.]—To an action upon a note, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiffs were trustees of a loan society ; that he signed the note as surety for money lent by the society to T. ; that it was, at the time of lending the money and making the note, agreed in writing, between the plaintiffs, the defendant, T., and the society, that if T. should make default in payment, notice in writing should be given to the defendant before legal proceedings should be taken ; but that no notice had been given to him of T.'s default :—Held, that this plea was not supported by proof that a book containing the printed rules of the society (among others, one "upon default by the borrower, the sureties will be written to, and, if the money be not paid according to such letter, proceedings will be taken") was handed to T. (and 1*s.* deducted for it), at the time the money was lent, and before the defendant had signed the note, the book being unsigned and the note purporting to refer to it. Brown v. Langley, 5 Scott (N.R.) 249 ; 4 Man. & G. 466 ; 12 L. J., C. P. 62.

Plea of Fraud.]—To an action on a note, the defendant pleaded that the note was obtained from him by the plaintiffs and others in collusion with them by fraud, covin and misrepresentation, wherefore the note was void in law :—Held, that this plea was not sustained by evidence that the note was given by the defendant and another as sureties, for a sum advanced to a third person by the plaintiffs, who falsely held themselves out to the world as a society formed and acting under certain rules and regulations. Green v. Gosden, 4 Scott (N.R.) 13 ; 3 Man. & G. 446 ; 11 L. J., C. P. 4 ; 5 Jur. 1010.

Bond—Penalty—Fraction of Pound in Arrear.]—A bond to a loan society contained a covenant for payment, in case of default in the monthly instalments, of "the further sum of one shilling for each and every pound of the monthly instalments which should not have been paid on the day when such instalments became due" :—Held, that such penalty was not recoverable in respect of a fraction of a pound in arrear. Three Towns Loan Society v. Doyle, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 290 ; 7 L. T. 276 ; 11 W. R. 22.

Investment Unauthorised—Action, whether Maintainable.]—The trustees of a friendly society lent out of the surplus funds of the society a sum of 300*l.* to A. on the security of a joint and several promissory note made by A., and by B. and C. as his sureties. None of the makers was a member of the society. C. having died, the trustees claimed to prove against his estate on the note :—Held, by Fry, J., that the loan on personal security to a person not a member of the society was forbidden by the Friendly Societies Act, that the transaction therefore was illegal, and that as C. had not received any money of the society, and the society had no claim against his estate except under the contract, the proof must be rejected. But held, on appeal, that as it was not alleged that the money was borrowed for an illegal purpose, the contract was not illegal, but merely unauthorised ; that it was not competent to the makers of the note to allege by way of defence that the payees had no authority to lend the money, and that the proof, therefore, must be admitted. Coltman, In re, Coltman v. Coltman, 51 L. J., Ch. 3 ; 19 Ch. D. 64 ; 45 L. T. 392 ; 30 W. R. 342—C. A.

Note given to Two Members.]—Where a note is given to two members of a loan society, by name, to secure an advance made by the society, it is not necessary, in suing upon the note, to join the whole of the members of the society. Bawden v. Howell, 4 Scott (N.R.) 331 ; 3 Man. & G. 638 ; 6 Jur. 37.

Jurisdiction of Superior Courts—Joint and Several Note.]—The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 23, authorised the trustees to lend money under certain circumstances, and to take promissory notes in the name of the treasurer as security for repayment. The act authorised a justice of the peace upon complaint of the treasurer, to summon such party, and award payment to be enforced by distress :—Held, that the jurisdiction of the superior courts was not thereby taken away, especially in an action brought upon a note, which did not appear from the pleadings to have been given in respect of a loan. Albon v. Pike, 5 Scott (N.R.) 241 ; 4 Man. & G. 421 ; 11 L. J., C. P. 266.

One of the rules of a loan society directed that the payment of loans should be secured by the joint promissory note of the borrower and his sureties, but gave a form of note which was joint and several :—Held, that a joint and several note was a note made in pursuance of the rules of the society, so as to come within the exemption from stamp duty created by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 23, s. 7. Ib.

F. JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES.

Statute.]—Act of 1896, s. 68.

Jurisdiction to Enforce Rules.]—A society, some of the rules of which were substantially those of a friendly society, whilst others related to trade movements and strikes, was registered under the Trade Union Act, 1871. A member summoned the secretary, under s. 2 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, for non-payment of a weekly allowance of 12*s.* for sick benefit and relief, and the justices in petty session made an order for such payment :—Held, that the objects of the society were not wholly those of a friendly society, many of them being in restraint of trade. The express reservations in s. 4 of the Trades Union Act, 1871, were therefore applicable ; and accordingly the justices had no jurisdiction to make the order. Old v. Robson, 59 L. J., M. C. 41 ; 62 L. T. 282 ; 38 W. R. 415 ; 54 J. P. 597.

Change of Rules—New Rules Void.]—The rules of a friendly society established in 1817, were duly made and confirmed at the sessions under 33 Geo. 3, c. 54. Afterwards some new rules were made, but they were neither made nor confirmed in the manner required by s. 3. One of such new rules altered the amount of entrance money, and another the amount of weekly allowance to sick members. A sick member who had entered the society since the making of the new rules, and had occasionally received relief under them, summoned the stewards to petty sessions for non-payment of a weekly allowance under the new rules. The justices dismissed the complaint, on the ground that the old rules had been abandoned, and that the new rules were void, and that the society therefore was no longer within the statute, so as to give them jurisdiction :—Held, that the new rules being void, the old rules were not affected by them, and that the justices had jurisdiction to order payment of a weekly allowance under to old rules, and this though the specific claim made by the summons was under the new rules, and the court made the rule absolute requiring them to hear and determine the case. Reg. v. Cotton, 15 Q. B. 569 ; 4 New Sess. Cas. 291 ; 19 L. J., M. C. 233 ; 14 Jur. 788.

Assignee of Treasurer.]—An officer of a friendly society, being indebted to the society for moneys received on their behalf, resigned his office, and made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors. The assignee received from the estate more than the balance due to the society, but refused to pay it over. No specific money belonging to the society was proved to have come to the hands of the assignee :—Held, that the assignee was not liable to be proceeded against before justices, under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 24. O'Donnell, Ex parte, 35 L. J., M. C. 99 ; L. R. 1 Q. B. 274 ; 14 W. R. 83.

As to Locality.]—Though the meetings of the society were held at Leeds, yet as the society was open to country members, and A. himself resided at Wakefield, where the circumstance occurred which was the ground of his expulsion, the justices of the West Riding had, locally, jurisdiction to determine the matter. Reg. v. Grant, 14 Q. B. 43 ; 4 New Sess. Cas. 13 ; 19 L. J., M. C. 59 ; 13 Jur. 1026. And see Sharp v. Aspinall, 10 B. & C. 47 ; 5 Man. & Ry. 71 ; 8 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 70.

Orders—In Excess.]—The 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 15, which authorised justices, on complaint made on oath by any member of a friendly society, "to hear and determine in a summary way the matter of such complaint, and to make such order therein as to them shall seem just," gave them no jurisdiction beyond the actual matter of the particular complaint made. Therefore, where a sick member complained that the steward refused to pay him his arrears of allowance, and the justice ordered that the arrears and costs should be paid, and that the complainant should be continued a member :—Held, that the justices had exceeded their jurisdiction in making the latter part of the order, and that the stewards were not bound to obey it. Rex v. Soper, 5 D. & R. 669 ; 3 B. & C. 857.

—— For Payment of Money.]—An order of justices upon a party, requiring him to pay money to a person claiming it as member of a friendly society (under 49 Geo. 3, c. 125, s. 3), must find in direct terms that the person applying is a member, that he is entitled to the money, and that the party against whom the application is made is, at the time, an officer of the society. Day v. King, 5 A. & E. 359 ; 6 N. & M. 845 ; 2 H. & W. 178 ; 5 L. J., M. C. 130.

An order for payment by a justice of the peace, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110 must be for immediate payment ; he has no jurisdiction to order payment in a certain time from making the order. Parker v. Boughey, 3 B. & S. 43 ; 31 L. J., M. C. 272 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 118.

Distress Warrant.]—The steward of a friendly society, not having paid money in obedience to an order of two justices, under 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 28, the justices, without further summons, issued a distress warrant, under which his goods were seized :—Held in an action of trespass, that the seizure was not justified by the statute. Hammond v. Bendyshe, 13 Q. B. 869 ; 3 New Sess. Cas. 619 ; 18 L. J., M. C. 219 ; 14 Jur. 62.

Power as to Statement of Case.]—When, by the rules of a friendly society, disputes between the society and a member are to be referred to justices, such justices have no power to state a case under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. Overruling Reg. v. Lambard (L. R. 1 Q. B. 388). Callaghan v. Dolliven, 38 L. J., M. C. 110 ; L. R. 4 C. P. 288 ; 21 L. T. 827 ; 17 W. R. 733.

Where, by the rules of a friendly society, disputes between the society and a member are to be referred to justices, pursuant to 21 & 22 Vict. c. 101, s. 5, such justices may be compelled to state and sign a case. Watts v. Kent JJ., 35 L. J., M. C. 190 ; 14 L. T. 448. S. C., nom. Reg. v. Lambard, L. R. 1 Q. B. 388 ; 14 W. R. 680.

Where the secretary of such a society is summoned as such secretary before justices to answer a complaint against the society, the society is substantially the appellant for the purpose of procuring a case to be stated. Ib.

—— Finality of Decision.]—The decisions of justices on disputes between members of friendly societies referred to them under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 101, s. 5, are final. Callaghan v. Dolliven, 38 L. J., M. C. 110 ; L. R. 4 C. P. 288 ; 21 L. T. 827 ; 17 W. R. 733.

Rules containing Power to Settle Disputes by Arbitration.]—The provisions of s. 30 of 38 & 39 Vict. c. 60, apply to all friendly societies, not only to friendly societies receiving contributions by means of collectors at a greater distance than ten miles from the registered office of the society. Consequently, though the rules of a friendly society provide for the settlement of disputes between the society and members by arbitration, a court of summary jurisdiction has notwithstanding, under sub-s. 10 of s. 30, jurisdiction to decide such disputes. Holt, In re, United Patriots Benefit Society, In re, 48 L. J., M. C. 55 ; 4 Q. B. D. 29 ; 39 L. T. 622 ; 29 W. R. 339.

—— Appeal from Award.]—On a dispute between the members of a friendly society and A., whom they had expelled, the arbitrators appointed by the rules of the society made an award that A. should be expelled the society. A. thereupon made a complaint to a justice of the peace, under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 7, that he had been wrongfully expelled, and that arbitrators had been appointed who had neglected and refused to make any award. And two justices, by their order, after reciting the complaint, adjudged that "all and singular the allegations were true," and ordered that A. should be reinstated in the society :—Held, that the statement in the order that the arbitrators had neglected to make an award was not conclusive, but that on motion to quash the order of justices, the circumstances under which the award was made might be gone into on affidavit. Reg. v. Grant, 14 Q. B. 43; 4 New Sess. Cas. 13; 19 L. J., M. C. 59; 13 Jur. 1026.

There were contradictory affidavits as to whether the arbitrators wrongfully refused to hear evidence on the part of A.:—Held, that there being sufficient evidence to warrant the conclusion at which the justices had arrived, it was to be presumed they were right as to the fact. Ib.

Held, also, that such fact warranted the statement, that the arbitrators had neglected to make an award, and that the order of the justices was therefore good. Ib.

—— Where Award Conclusive.]—The rules of a society enrolled under 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, provided for the election of nine arbitrators at the first meeting; and when a dispute should arise, the first five names drawn by the complaining party were to be the arbitrators, and their decision was to be final. In April, 1852, D. was expelled from the society. In June, in consequence of some of the arbitrators having refused to act, and others having left the neighbourhood, at a meeting duly called for the purpose nine new arbitrators were elected. In September, D. applied to have the question of his expulsion referred to arbitration. At a meeting for the purpose of the reference, in October, D. refused to draw five names, but offered to refer the dispute to five of the six arbitrators who were then present. This was assented to, and the arbitrators made an award confirming his expulsion. On the 18th of January, 1853, D. made an application for another reference, to which the society agreed. At the meeting held for that purpose on the 25th of February, when the names of the nine arbitrators last appointed were ready to be placed in a box that D. might draw out five, he refused to proceed with the reference. In March, 1853, he obtained a summons under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 7, to have the dispute decided by justices. On the hearing, the jurisdiction of the justices was objected to on the ground of the former award and proceedings. D. contended that the existing arbitrators had not been legally appointed, and therefore that the justices had jurisdiction. The justices decided that they had jurisdiction, and made an order for the reinstatement of him as a member of the society:—Held, that the justices had no jurisdiction to make the order; that s. 27 of the 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, had been substantially complied with, on the appointment of the second set of arbitrators, who had authority to decide the dispute; and that their award in October, 1852, was, as against D., conclusive. Reg. v. Evans, 3 El. & Bl. 363; 23 L. J., M. C. 100; 18 Jur. 696.

Where a dispute between a friendly society and one of its members has been referred to arbitration under s. 7 of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, the award of the arbitrators is final, and a magistrate has no jurisdiction to hear the dispute unless it can be shown that such award is a nullity. Long, Ex parte, 3 W. R. 18.

—— Objection not taken.]—But when a dispute as to the payment of money having arisen between the representative of a member and the secretary of a friendly society, whose rules did not direct disputes to be referred to justices (there being a rule that such disputes should be finally decided by arbitrators appointed by the society), and the secretary of the society was summoned before a magistrate to answer the complaint of having unlawfully refused to pay the money, and the rules of the society were put in evidence, but the magistrate's attention was not called to the fact that the rules did not direct disputes to be referred to justices, and an order was made for the payment of the money, and a rule having been obtained for a certiorari to quash the order on the ground of want of jurisdiction:—Held, that the conduct of the appellant in not directing the magistrate's attention to the absence of any rule directing disputes to be referred to justices, disentitled him to the writ; and the rule was discharged with costs. West London Philanthropic Burial Society, In re, Cordery v. Greaves, 20 L. T. 972.

Refusal to Determine a Complaint.]—The court refused to grant a mandamus to compel a magistrate to determine a complaint by a loan society with duly certified rules; the magistrate having refused so to do because the secretary of the society refused to answer questions put by the magistrate to discover whether the society was formed for an object within the scope of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110, s. 3. Reg. v. Davis, 13 L. T. 629; 14 W. R. 329.

G. JURISDICTION OF THE COUNTY COURT.

Statute.]—Act of 1896, s. 68.

According to District.]—A county court of any district in which any usual business of the friendly society is situated, and not only that in which its principal place of business is situated, has jurisdiction under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63. Shea v. United Sick and Burial Society of St. Patrick, 37 L. J., C. P. 50; L. R. 3 C. P. 21; 17 L. T. 176; 16 W. R. 84.

Persons Interested.]—The trustees of a burial society, who by the constitution of the society are not and cannot be members, are not persons interested within s. 41 of 18 and 19 Vict. c. 63, so as to enable them of their own accord to institute proceedings against the society in the county court for the purpose of controlling them in the proposed alteration of their rules. Hull v. M'Farlane, 2 C. B. (N.S.) 796; 27 L. J., C. P. 41; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1262.

Amalgamation—Dispute as to Provision.]—The committee of a friendly society having agreed for the amalgamation of the society with another company, summoned a general meeting in order to pass a special resolution for carrying the amalgamation into effect. Some of the members, who were dissatisfied with the provision proposed to be made for the satisfaction of their claims, filed a plaint in the county court to restrain the society from carrying into effect the amalgamation, and obtained a receiver of the assets of the society, although the resolution for amalgamation had not then been passed. The public officer of the society applied for a writ of prohibition to restrain the proceedings in the county court:—Held, that the county court had no jurisdiction to interfere with the action of the society until the special resolution had been passed and confirmed, and a writ of prohibition was ordered to issue. Jones v. Slee, 55 L. J., Ch. 908; 32 Ch. D. 585; 55 L. T. 129; 34 W. R. 692; 51 J. P. 83—C. A.

Dispute—Society and Member—Appeal from Branch to Society.]—By the Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), s. 22, disputes between members of a registered friendly society and the society are to be decided in manner directed by the rules of the society. By sub-s. (d), where no decision is made on a dispute within forty days after application to a society for a reference under its rules, the member or person aggrieved may apply to the county court, which may hear and determine the matter in dispute. A member of a branch of a friendly society, having been excluded therefrom by the branch committee, appealed, under the rules of the branch, to the general committee of the society, who failed to decide the dispute within forty days after application:—Held, that the appeal was a "reference" within the meaning of the subsection, and that a county court had jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter in dispute. Reg. v. Cuttley, or Reg. v. Northampton County Court Judge, 19 Q. B. D. 491; 57 L. T. 108; 35 W. R. 717; 52 J. P. 38.

—— Committee and Members.]—A county court has jurisdiction to determine a dispute between the committee of management of a friendly society and any of its members, as to the propriety of the mode of convening, and the manner and place of holding, special general meetings for the purpose of altering or amending the rules of the society. Hoey v. M'Farlane, 4 C. B. (N.S.) 718; 4 Jur. (N S.) 785.

—— Members and Trustees.]—Semble, that where a dispute has arisen between a member and the trustees of a friendly society, for the decision of which a specific tribunal is provided by the rules of the society, the jurisdiction of the county court is ousted by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 4. Denton v. Marshall, 1 H. & C. 654; 32 L. J., Ex. 89; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 337; 7 L. T. 689; 11 W. R. 268.

Rules not Inrolled.]—A friendly society inrolled its rules in 1832, under 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, and shortly afterwards framed new rules, which were never inrolled or certified. In an action in a county court, by a member against the stewards, for sick pay:—Held, that the society was a subsisting society under the original rules, by virtue of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 2; and, consequently, that the county court had jurisdiction. Meredith v. Whittingham, 1 C. B. (N.S.) 216.

—— Not Certified Rules.]—Under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 44, a county court has not jurisdiction where the rules of a society which have not been certified are deposited with the registrar after the dispute arose, but before the plaint is entered in the county court. Reg. v. Trafford, 7 El. & Bl. 339; 26 L. J., Q. B. 95; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 387; 5 W. R. 294.

When Reference to Members Compulsory.]—Where, by the rules of a friendly society, disputes between members and the trustees may be referred to the arbitration of a certain number of the committee, a dispute, which affects the interest of all the individual members of the society, arising between some of its members, who are also members of the committee, and the trustees, where the question is not one which necessarily requires that recourse should be had to a court of equity, such dispute cannot be referred to the judge of the county court under 13 & 14 Vict. c. 115, s. 22, but must be referred to other members of the committee. Grinham v. Card, 7 Ex. 833; 21 L. J., Ex. 321.

Where a dispute arose between two of the members of the committee of a friendly society and the trustees, touching the distribution of a fund in the hands of the latter, and by one of the rules of the society it was ordered that disputes were to be referred to such members of the committee as should not be personally interested in the matter:—Held, that the judge of the county court had no jurisdiction in such case, and the court granted a prohibition against further proceedings in a plaint issued out of the court over which he presided. Ib.

—— Reinstatement of Member.]—A rule of a friendly society provided that a dispute of any kind whatsoever, arising under the rules, should be referred to a committee. By another rule any member in the receipt of the gifts of the society being found imposing on the society was to be expelled. A member of the society, in the receipt of pay, was charged with receiving full when he was only entitled to half pay, and the matter being referred to a committee, he was expelled, but without being heard before the committee. The county court has jurisdiction, under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, ss. 41, 42, to order him to be reinstated, if he has been improperly expelled. Wooldridge, Ex parte, 1 B. & S. 844; 31 L. J., Q. B. 122; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 696; 5 L. T. 609; 10 W. R. 250.

—— Winding-up—Right of Appeal—Rules.]—In the case of an unregistered society under s. 30, sub-s. 10 of the Act of 1875 (explained by 42 Vict. c. 9), the right of appeal to a county court or court of summary jurisdiction overrides any rules of the society to the contrary. Knowles v. Booth, 32 W. R. 432.

Dissolution on Award of Chief Registrar—Jurisdiction of County Court to Vary or Set Aside.]—There is no jurisdiction in the county court by way of appeal on the merits, under s. 25, sub-s. 8, clause (d) of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, from an award of the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies dissolving a society:—Semble, the Treasury Regulations and forms framed under s. 38, so far as they assume the existence of jurisdiction in the county court, are ultra vires. Wilmot v. Grace, 61 L. J., Q. B. 498; [1892] 1 Q. B. 812; 66 L. T. 287; 40 W. R. 350; 56 J. P. 392.

Appeal—"Application to County Court."]—By s. 22 of the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, disputes between members of a friendly society and the society or its officers are to be decided in manner directed by the rules of the society, and by sub-s. (d), "where the rules contain no direction as to disputes, or where no decision is made on a dispute within forty days after application to the society for a reference under its rules, the member or person aggrieved may apply either to the county court, or to a court of summary jurisdiction, which may hear and determine the matter in dispute" :—Held, that the application to the county court contemplated by sub-s. (d) must be taken to be an application in the form of an action commenced in the county court, and not a reference to the county court judge sitting as an arbitrator, and that there was an appeal from the decision upon such application to the high court. Wilkinson v. Jagger, 57 L. J., Q. B. 254 ; 20 Q. B. D. 423 ; 58 L. T. 487 ; 36 W. R. 169 ; 52 J. P. 533. See Schofield v. Vause, 36 W. R. 170, n.—C. A.

—— Certiorari.]—The provisions in the Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (ss. 22 (d) and 30, sub-s. 10), for the reference of all disputes between the society and its members to the county court, are permissive only, and not peremptory ; and therefore there is, in a proper case, jurisdiction to remove to the high court by certiorari proceedings in an action commenced against a friendly society by one of its members. Royal Liver Friendly Society, In re, 56 L. J., Ch. 821 ; 35 Ch. D. 332 ; 56 L. T. 817 ; 36 W. R. 7.

Scotch Friendly Society.]—By 18 & 19 Vict., c. 63, disputes are to be referred to the county courts, which are to make such orders as the Court of Chancery may make ; but in Scotch friendly societies the jurisdiction is given to the sheriff. Some members of a Scotch society having sought relief before the sheriff, the defendants pleaded to the jurisdiction, whereupon the sheriff directed a case to the Court of Chancery, under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 63, to ascertain whether the court had jurisdiction in such a case in England :—Held, that the case did not come within the statute, and the court declined to express its opinion. Brodie v. Johnson, 30 Beav. 129.

H. WINDING UP.

Statute.]—Act of 1896, ss. 78—83.

By Consent.]—Under 10 Geo. 4, c. 56, s. 26, a friendly society may be dissolved, with the consent in writing of five-sixths in value of the members, without convening a general meeting, as required by s. 9, for the alteration or repeal of any of the rules. Eclipse Mutual Benefit Association, In re, 1 K. & J. 30 ; 2 Eq. R. 221 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 279 ; 2 W. R. 113.

A petition cannot be presented under this act for the purpose of appointing a person to assign, in the name of a trustee, property belonging to a friendly society which has been dissolved. S. C., Kay, App. xxx ; 2 Eq. Rep. 318 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 280 ; 2 W. R. 311.

The court will not enjoin a society from dissolving itself where a great majority of its members agree to such dissolution, notwithstanding a rule, that if "three agree to hold the society it shall not been dissolved." Waterhouse v. Murgatroyd, 9 L. J., (o.s.) Ch. 272.

Infant Members—Right to Dissolve—Consent of Governing Committee.]—A friendly society was formed as a juvenile branch of another society under the Friendly Societies Act, 1855, and consisted entirely of infants between the ages of six and eighteen. Rule 3 of the society placed its government in the hands of a committee of management appointed by the parent society. The members of the juvenile society being reduced to six in number, signed through their guardians an instrument of dissolution with a view of dividing the assets :—Held, that r. 3 was not a mere rule of management, but precluded the members of the society from dissolving without the consent of the committee, which had not been obtained : Held, also, that the trustees of the society could, under s. 21, sub-s. 1, of the Friendly Societies Act 1875, maintain an action for declaring the instrument of dissolution void. Rudd v. James, 65 L. J., Ch. 781 ; [1896] 2 Ch. 554 ; 74 L. T. 714 ; 60 J. P. 628—C. A.

Jurisdiction — County Court.] — A friendly society must first be registered under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87, and then wound up in a county court. Midland Counties Benefit Building Society, In re, 4 De G. J. & S. 468 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 520, 739 ; 12 W. R. 661.

Compulsory Winding-up Under Companies Act.]—The court has jurisdiction, under s. 199 of the Companies Act, 1862, to wind up compulsorily, as an unregistered company, a society registered under the Friendly Societies Acts, but not registered under the Companies Act, 1862. Independent Protestant Loan Fund Society, In re, Morton, Ex parte, [1895] 1 Ir. R. 1.

Right of Members to obtain Winding-up Order.]—Members of a friendly society who have given notice of withdrawal of deposits are not in the same position as outside creditors, and are not entitled ex debito justitiæ to obtain an order for winding-up ; but where the circumstances, in the opinion of the court, make it just and equitable so to do, the court will order such a society to be wound up. Ib.

Loan Society.]—A loan society held to be within the Winding-up Act, 1849. Sherwood Loan Society, In re, 1 Sim. (N.S.) 165 ; 20 L. J., Ch. 177. But see Crown and Cushion Loan Fund Society, In re, 14 Jur. 874.

On a creditor's petition for the winding-up of an unregistered loan society, formed under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110, the members of which formerly exceeded seven in number, but were now only four :—Held, that, having regard to ss. 199 & 200 of the Companies Act, 1862, a winding-up order could not be made when the number of members had at the date of the petition fallen below seven. Bolton Benefit Loan Society, In re, Coop v. Booth, 49 L. J., Ch. 39 ; 12 Ch. D. 679 ; 28 W. R. 164.

—— Liability of Shareholders—Set-off.]—The plaintiff, the official liquidator of a co-operative loan society, registered under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110, which had been ordered by the Master of the Rolls to be wound up as an unregistered company under the Companies Acts, 1862 and 1867, and the proceedings transferred to the county court, brought an action in the county court against the defendant, who had been a shareholder in the society, for 14*l.*, the balance due upon a bond or note, repayable by weekly instalments. By one of the rules of the society it was provided that members who were borrowers could not withdraw their deposits until the loan was repaid. Before the date of the loan the defendant had given the notice required by the rules of the society to withdraw money paid by him into the funds of the society amounting to 21*l.* 13*s.* The notice having expired, and the directors being unable to pay in accordance with the notice, they granted the loan of 15*l.* to the defendant. The defendant sought to set off the sum of 21*l.* 13*s.* against the sum sued for, on the ground that having given a proper notice, according to the rules, he was entitled to receive his money prior to the loan being made, and had a right of action against the society which entitled him to set off that amount against the amount sued for:—Held, that the defendant was not entitled to set off this sum. That the deposits had become a portion of the funds of the society, and were not specifically applicable to the repayment of the defendant's deposits merely by reason of the notice. That it was not, in any sense of the expression, a debt due to the defendant, but assets of the society in the winding-up. Further, that the defendant was precluded from setting off this sum under the provisions of the Companies Act, 1862. Phillipson v. Hale, 43 L. T. 507; 45 J. P. 39.

Parties—Recovery of Moneys.]—It having been found necessary to wind up the affairs of a friendly society and distribute its funds, pursuant to the trusts of the deed constituting it, several of its members were appointed trustees for that purpose; the moneys to be paid to the trustees, of whom the plaintiff was the survivor, were to be deposited with certain bankers and carried to the account of the society; the bankers were to pay such sums as the two solicitors F. and W., by their respective cheques on the bankers, countersigned by two members of the society named, should require to be paid. The principal part of the fund was distributed in that manner, and the balance in the bankers' hands was irregularly drawn out and invested in the names of F. and W., and the two members appointed to countersign the cheques. On a bill being filed by the last survivor of the trustees of the fund against F. and W., and the personal representatives of the two members appointed to countersign the cheques, praying the restoration of the fund by F. and W., with a view to its future administration, but not seeking the administration of it by the court, an objection for want of parties taken by F.'s answer, on the ground that all the members of the society ought to be before the court, was disallowed. Horsley v. Fawcett, 11 Beav. 568; 16 L. J., Ch. 457.

Society for relief in sickness, etc., by means of a fund raised by subscription of the members, considered merely as a partnership, having no corporate character. In a suit, therefore, against the trustees by some members for an account, alleging a dissolution contrary to the articles, all other members must be parties. Beaumont v. Meredith, 3 Ves. & B. 180.

In consequence of the failure and insolvency of a benefit society, there was no officer or board in existence who could be made parties to a suit by a creditor to obtain payment out of the company's property. The plaintiff having made the trustees and one of each class of members parties:—Held, that the suit was properly constituted. Pare v. Clegg, 29 Beav. 589; 30 L. J., Ch. 742; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1136; 4 L. T. 669; 9 W. R. 795.

Bequest—Cy-près.]—A friendly society is not a charitable institution, and therefore the doctrine of cy-près will not, on the society being voluntarily dissolved, be applied to a bequest made to it in aid of its funds, but the same will fall into the residuary estate of the testator. Clark's Trusts, In re, 45 L. J., Ch. 194; 1 Ch. D. 497; 24 W. R. 233.

Branch Seceding—Rules—Regularity of Procedure.]—A branch friendly society having resolved to secede from the parent society, and the grand secretary having refused without any reason to grant a certificate of secession, the branch society appealed against this refusal:—Held, that notice of the proposed secession need not be given to members who joined the branch after the resolution to secede; that the assent of the central body was not necessary to the holding of the branch society's special meeting; that the majority of the branch members must assent, and also the majority at the special meeting must assent, to secession; that in settling accounts, the funds of the branch meeting were not to be divided as in the case of being wound up. Sheffield Order of Druids Society, In re, 66 J. P. 613.

A. GENERALLY.

What are.]—Grouse are not birds of warren. Devonshire (Duke) v. Lodge, 7 B. & C. 36; 9 D. & R. 875; 5 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 319; 31 R. R. 143. And see Att.-Gen. v. Parsons, 2 C. & J. 279; 2 Tyr. 223; 1 L. J., Ex. 103.

Trespass on a free warren will not lie for shooting grouse. Ib.

An action will not lie for disturbing a rookery; on the ground that rooks are a species of birds feræ naturæ, of a destructive nature, not known as an article of food, and not protected by any statute; and therefore a person cannot have any property in them, or establish any legal right to cause them to resort to his trees. Hannam v. Mockett, 4 D. & R. 518; 2 B. & C. 934.

Property in Game Killed.]—Game started and killed wrongfully by one person on the land of another becomes the absolute property of the owner of the land, and not of the captor, though it is killed and carried away in one continuous act. Blades v. Higgs, 20 C. B. (N.S.) 214; 11 H. L. Cas. 621; 34 L. J., C. P. 286; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 701; 12 L. T. 615; 13 W. R. 927.

The plaintiff's dogs having hunted and caught on the defendant's land a hare, started on the land of another, the property is thereby vested in the plaintiff, who may maintain trespass against the defendant for afterwards taking away the hare. And so it would be, though the hare, being quite spent, had been caught up by a labourer of the defendant for the benefit of the hunters. Churchward v. Studdy, 14 East, 249; 12 R. R. 513.

Following Game.]—One who finds game on his own ground cannot pursue it in the land of another. Deane v. Clayton, 7 Taunt. 489; 2 Marsh. 577; 1 Moore, 203; 18 R. R. 553.

Deer—Property in.]—Deer in a park, when reclaimed, become personal chattels, and cease to be parcel of the inheritance. Ford v. Tynte, 2 Johns. & H. 150; 31 L. J., Ch. 177. And see Davis v. Powell, 7 Mod. 260.

And the court of chancery will not interfere to restrain waste in not keeping up the herd. Ib.

Evidence upon which deer in a park will be considered tame. Ib.

Deer in a park (though an ancient and legal park) may be so tame and reclaimed from their natural wild state as to pass to executors as personal property. Morgan v. Abergavenny (Earl), 8 C. B. 768.

The servant of the owner of an ancient park may justify shooting a dog that is chasing the deer, although such shooting may not be absolutely necessary for the preservation of the deer; and the servant may justify the shooting, although the dog may not have been chasing the deer at the moment when it was shot, if the chasing of the deer and the shooting of the dog were all one and the same transaction. Protheroe v. Mathews, 5 Car. & P. 581.

B. RIGHTS OF SPORTING.

1. GRANT, RESERVATION BY DEED, &C.

Presumption of Grant.]—Action for breaking and entering a close, parcel of Forton Farm; plea, that J. W., as whose tenant the defendant justified, was seised in fee of 50 acres of land adjoining the close, and that by deed of 1736, between C. who was seised in fee of the close, and R. W. who was seised in fee of the 50 acres, C. granted to R. W., his heirs and assigns for the time being, owners in fee of the 50 acres, the privilege of hunting for game in the close. Proof that by deed of the same date R. W., who was seised in fee of the manor of Middleton, conveyed Forton Farm to C. in fee, retaining all royalties; that from 1753 the gamekeepers of the lords of the manor were accustomed to sport over Forton Farm, with the knowledge of the plaintiff and his landlords, the owners of Forton Farm; that, about 14 years ago, the plaintiff, by desire of his landlord, gave notice to the gamekeeper of the lord of the manor not to trespass, but he continued to sport there, by the order of the lord of the manor, without further interruption:—Held, that, upon such evidence, the jury could not presume a grant. Pickering v. Noyes, 7 D. & R. 49; 4 B. & C. 639; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 10; 28 R. R. 430.

Reservation — Equity of Redemption.] — A plea of justification in an action for hunting and shooting over the plaintiff's lands stated that A. was entitled to the equity of redemption, and subject thereto, that B. and C. were seised in fee, and that they, by lease and release, granted the premises, excepting and reserving to A. and his heirs a free liberty of hawking and hunting:—Held, that, as A. had no legal interest in the land, but a mere equity of redemption only, there could be no reservation to him, and consequently that the plea was bad in substance, as the title was in itself defective, and not a title defectively set out. Moore v. Plymouth (Earl), 3 B. & Ald. 66.

—— New Grant.]—By deed, A. and B. conveyed to D. and his heirs lands, excepting and reserving to A., B. and C., their heirs and assigns, liberty to come into and upon the lands, and there to hawk, hunt, fish, and fowl:—Held, that this was not in law a reservation properly so called, but a new grant by D. (who executed the deed) of the liberty therein mentioned, and therefore it might enure in favour of C. and his heirs, although he was not a party to the deed. Wickham v. Hawker, 7 M. & W. 63; 10 L. J., Ex. 153.

Grant—Licence of Profit.]—The grant to a person, his heirs and assigns of "free liberty, with servants or otherwise, to come into and upon lands, and there to hawk, hunt, fish, and fowl," is a grant of a licence of profit, and not of a mere personal licence of pleasure; and therefore it authorises the grantee, his heirs and assigns, to hawk, hunt, fish, and fowl, by his servants, in his absence. Such a liberty is therefore a profit à prendre within the Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 2. Ib. See next case.

—— Interest in Land.]—The right of hunting, shooting, fishing, and fowling, is an interest in the realty, and a grant of it is a licence of a profit à prendre. Ewart v. Graham, 7 H. L. Cas. 331; 29 L. J., Ex. 88; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 773; 7 W. R. 621.

A grant of a right to shoot over land and to take away a part of the game killed is a grant of an interest in land, and within the Statute of Frauds. Webber v. Lee, 51 L. J., Q. B. 485; 9 Q. B. D. 315; 47 L. T. 215; 30 W. R. 866; 47 J. P. 4—C. A.

—— Of Soil and of Franchise.]—A grant by the owner both of the soil and of the franchise, of all that warren of coneys, with all and singular the rights, members, and appurtenances whatsoever in B., and that lodge thereupon built, and also that warren of coneys, with all the rights, &c., in R., both of which warrens of coneys are known by the name of B. warren, and do extend themselves in and over the wastes of B., F., S., and A., does not by its terms necessarily pass more than the franchise. Beauchamp (Earl) v. Wynn, L. R. 6 H. L. 223; 22 W. R. 193. Affirming 38 L. J., Ch. 556; 21 L. T. 253.

—— Free Warren.]—Free warren cannot be parcel of a manor, and therefore will not pass by a grant of the manor, with the appurtenances, though it is held with the manor. Morris v. Dimes, 3 N. & M. 671; 1 A. & E. 654; 3 L. J., K. B. 170.

A warren can be appertaining to a manor only by prescription. Ib.

Free warren in gross, of which a grantor is seised, will not pass by a grant of a manor and the appurtenances. Ib.

Nor by a grant of a manor and all free warren (or other term comprehending free warren) "belonging to or in anywise appertaining to the manor, or therewith or at any time theretofore usually held, and occupied and enjoyed, or accepted, reputed, deemed, taken, or known as part, parcel, or member thereof." Ib.

A right of free warren is divisible. Beauchamp (Earl) v. Winn, supra.

A. being possessed of lands, granted the same for a term of years to B., "excepting, and always reserving to himself, all royalties whatsoever to the premises belonging or appertaining." There was also a proviso in the deed, that it should be lawful for A., during the demise, to lay informations, in the name of B. or his tenants, being occupiers, against all persons trespassing upon the land, by means of hunting, coursing, shooting or sporting thereon, A. paying all the costs of such proceedings:—Held, that, under this deed, A. had no rights to enter upon the lands for the purpose of killing birds of free warren. Pannell v. Mill, 3 C. B. 625; 16 L. J., C. P. 91; 11 Jur. 109.

To an action of trespass for entering a close, a plea that R. W., who was seised in fee of the close by indenture of 1736, granted to C., his heirs, &c., the close, reserving all royalties, deducing title in the royalties from R. W. to J. W., and justifying as tenant to J. W. Replication, that the defendant did not enter the close to exercise the said royalties:—Held, that, upon this issue, the defendant was bound to prove, first, that he had a right of free warren; and secondly, that, at the time of the supposed trespass, he was in the due exercise of it. Pickering v. Noyes, 7 D. & R. 49; 4 B. & C. 639; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 10; 28 R. R. 430.

Lease not mentioning Right of Sporting.]—By the Scotch law if an agricultural lease is silent as to hunting, shooting, fishing, or other similar sports, the right to these enjoyments does not pass to the lessee, but remains in the landlord, by law, without any express or special reservation. Copland v. Maxwell, L. R. 2 H. L. (Sc.) 103.

Colourable Conveyance.]—Bill, for relief on loss of conveyance executed to give colourable qualification to kill game, retained for a year with liberty to bring an action. Quære, whether such a conveyance, executed by father and kept in his possession for life, without being used or made known to son, is valid. Cecil v. Butcher, 2 Jac. & Walk. 565; 22 R. R. 213.

A conveyance executed for purpose of giving grantee a colourable qualification to kill game, remains without being made use of in grantor's hands, and after his death, in his son's. Grantee afterwards obtaining possession of it by deceit, and bringing action at law on it, court of equity refused to relieve either party. Brackenbury v. Brackenbury, 2 Jac. & Walk. 391; 22 R. R. 180.

A person executing a deed for the purpose of defrauding the law, cannot come into equity for the purpose of setting it aside, even though the instrument has never been made use of; and therefore if A. convey an estate to B., as a qualification to kill game, equity will not compel a reconveyance. Roberts v. Roberts, Dan. 143; 18 R. R. 733.

What Included in Reservation.]—Where there was a clause in a deed bearing date 1655 (at which time shooting was not in use), reserving a right of hawking and hunting:—Held, that it did not include the liberty of shooting feathered game with a gun. Moore v. Plymouth (Earl), 1 Moore, 346; 7 Taunt. 614; 18 R. R. 604.

A reservation in a lease of the right of shooting and sporting over the land demised is not limited to game strictly so called, but reserves to the lessor the exclusive right to follow and shoot such animals as are in common parlance understood to be the subject of sport. Jeffryes v Evans, 19 C. B., (N.S.) 264; 34 L. J., C. P. 261; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 584; 13 L. T. 72; 13 W. R. 864.

B. having demised to A. lands, "excepting and reserving to himself the exclusive right of hunting, shooting, and sporting on and over the same," subsequently demised to C. the exclusive right of shooting and sporting over and taking the game and rabbits upon the land. In an action for the breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment contained in the demise to C.:—Held, that rabbits were within the reservation contained in the lease to A., and that B. was therefore not liable for A.'s act in killing them. Ib.

A. devised real estate to trustees in strict settlement, with a proviso that it should be lawful for the trustees for the time being, if they or he should think proper, to permit the person or persons who might, under the trusts of his will, be entitled to a life or other greater estate in the respective portions of his S. estate, to occupy the mansion house, gardens, "and premises," without paying any rent or compensation for the same, and without such person or persons being obliged, at his expense, to keep the same in repair, or being at any other expense than paying the rates and taxes. The word "premises" held to comprise a park attached to the mansion house; but, having regard to the construction put by the court upon that word, the occupation of a farm-house contiguous to the park, but separated by it from the mansion house, and the right of sporting over portions of the adjacent property, were afterwards held not to be included in the devise. The right to the sporting was held to be in the trustees. Lethbridge v. Lethbridge, 3 De G. F. & J. 523; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 856; 10 W. R. 449.

The mortgagees of land, consisting of copses and of a farm which was let without the shooting or the timber, gave notice to the tenant of the farm to pay the rent to the mortgagees, and afterwards moved to restrain the mortgagors from cutting the timber:—Held, that though the mortgagees had become mortgagees in possession of the farm, they had not become mortgagees in possession of the shooting, the copses, or the timber, so as to be liable to account for default. Simmins v. Shirley, 46 L. J., Ch. 875; 6 Ch. D. 173; 37 L. T. 121; 26 W. R. 25.

Interference with Right by Landlord.]—The right of shooting is the right to shoot over the lands as they may happen to be at the time, the landlord, of course, not doing anything for the express purpose of destroying the right. Semble, Gearns v. Baker, 44 L. J., Ch. 334; L. R. 10 Ch. 355; 33 L. T. 86; 23 W. R. 543.

The owner of a farm of 180 acres, subject to a right of shooting, which had been demised for a term to P., staked out a road across the farm, pulling down two hedges for the purpose, and put up the farm for sale by auction in thirteen lots, some of which were described as eligible for building purposes. The particulars mentioned the right of shooting, and stated that the sale was subject to such right. On a bill for injunction by P. to restrain the sale:—Held, that it did not appear that the sale must inevitably result in an injury to the plaintiff's right of shooting, and that accordingly the bill must be dismissed. Pattisson v. Gilford, 43 L. J., Ch. 524; L. R. 18 Eq. 259; 22 W. R. 673.

A landlord was restrained by injunction from interfering with his tenant in the exercise of the exclusive right of sporting, and killing game, according to an agreement not under seal, until a lease should be executed, under seal according to such agreement, pursuant to the decree in the cause. Frogley v. Lovelace (Earl), 1 Johns. 333.

Under an ordinary grant of the exclusive right of shooting over an estate, the tenant has no right to prevent the landlord from cutting down trees in the proper course of management of the estate, even though the result of the cutting will be prejudicial to the shooting. Gearns v. Baker, 44 L. J., Ch. 334; L. R. 10 Ch. 355; 33 L. T. 86; 23 W. R. 543.

2. COVENANTS RELATING TO, IN LEASES.

What is Reservation of Game.]—An agreement under which a tenant held contained a stipulation that he would not destroy any game, and would endeavour to preserve all game bred and being on the farm. He was convicted under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 12, that he being the occupier of land, the right of killing the game on such land being reserved to his landlord, did unlawfully kill upon such land game:—Held, that the stipulation in the agreement could not be construed as a reservation of game to the landlord, and that the conviction ought to be quashed. Coleman v. Bathurst, 40 L. J., M. C. 131; L. R. 6 Q. B. 366; 24 L. T. 426; 19 W. R. 848.

To leave "well-stocked with Game."]—C. demised to the defendant, for a term of years, the exclusive right and licence to shoot, kill and take game upon certain of his lands, together with the use of a cottage for the occupation of a keeper. There was a covenant by the defendant that he should leave the estate as well stocked with game in all respects as the same was at the time of the commencement of the term. The defendant entered upon the occupation and occupied for the term, during which C. assigned his reversion to the plaintiff. The plaintiff having brought an action against the defendant in respect of a breach of the covenant to leave the estate well stocked with game:—Held, that the demise was a demise of an incorporeal hereditament; that the covenant was one which would pass to the assignee of the reversion; and that the action would lie at the suit of the plaintiff. Hooper v. Clark, 8 B. & S. 150; 36 L. J., Q. B. 79; L. R. 2 Q. B. 200; 16 L. T. 152; 15 W. R. 347.

To keep down Game.]—A farmer being in treaty for a lease of a farm, declined to take it on account of the quantity of game. The lessor promised that he would kill down the game, and would not let the shooting, but refused to allow the promise to be inserted in the lease. The tenant accordingly executed a lease prepared by the lessor's solicitor, in which the right to kill game was reserved to the lessor, his friends and servants. The lessor afterwards let the shooting, and did not kill down the game:—Held, that there was a binding collateral agreement to kill down the game, and that the tenant was entitled to compensation for damage done by the same. Erskine v. Adeane, 42 L. J., Ch. 849; L. R. 8 Ch. 756; 29 L. T. 234; 21 W. R. 802.

A declaration stated that the plaintiff and other persons by deed, demised to the defendant the lands of the plaintiff, and also the sole right of shooting in, upon, and within all his lands for twenty-one years, and the defendant covenanted that he would not permit the rabbits to become so numerous as to cause damage to any of the farm tenants of the lands. Breach assigned, that he did permit the rabbits to become so numerous as to cause damage to the farm tenants, whereby they were injured, and the plaintiff became liable to them for such damage. A plea, that parts of the lands in, upon, and within which the plaintiff and the other persons demised to the plaintiff the sole right of shooting were held by and in the possession of certain persons, as tenants to the plaintiff and the other persons, without there being reserved to the plaintiff and the other persons the right of shooting, or otherwise killing rabbits in, upon, or within the same, and the plaintiff and the other persons had not any right or power to demise to the defendant the right of shooting rabbits on those parts of the lands; and that the defendant has never been able to enjoy the right of shooting rabbits in, upon, or within these lands, and has been prevented by the tenants from shooting rabbits in, upon, or within the same; and that the breaches of covenant assigned are breaches arising from and consequent upon rabbits being permitted, by the tenants of the lands, to become so numerous as to cause the damage alleged, and not from any default by or on the part of the defendant, is a good plea to the action. The plaintiff not having, in the leases to his tenant, reserved the right of shooting over the lands, had no power to authorise the defendant to enter thereon for the purpose of shooting, and so was himself the cause of the breach of covenant, by having rendered it impossible for the defendant to enter upon the lands for the purpose of performing it. Cornewall v. Dawson, 24 L. T. 664.

Declaration, that the defendant became tenant to the plaintiffs upon the terms that the defendant would keep such a number only of hares and rabbits as would do no injury to the trees of the plaintiffs, or to the crops of their tenants, and that in case he should keep such a number of hares and rabbits as should injure the trees or crops, he would pay to the plaintiffs or their tenants a fair and reasonable compensation for such injury. Breach, that he did keep such a number of hares and rabbits as did injury to such trees and crops, and had not paid a fair and reasonable or any compensation. Plea, that one of the terms of the tenancy was that in case any such injury should be done "the defendant would pay a fair and reasonable compensation for the same, the amount of such compensation, in case of difference, to be referred" to arbitration, and that a difference arose as to the amount of compensation, but no arbitrator had been appointed nor any award made:—Held, that the plea was bad, for the stipulation as to compensation and reference, though in the form of one sentence, contained in reality two covenants, and such covenants were distinct and independent. Dawson v. Fitzgerald (Lord Otho), 45 L. J., Ex. 893; 1 Ex. D. 257; 35 L. T. 220; 24 W. R. 773—C. A.

Implied as to Cultivation of Land.]—Where a right of shooting over land is demised, there is no implied covenant that the surface of the land, or the course of cultivation, shall remain unchanged. Jeffryes v. Evans, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 264; 34 L. J., C. P. 261; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 584; 13 L. T. 72; 13 W. R. 864.

Rabbits — Meaning of "Thousand."]—In a lease of a rabbit warren, the lessee covenanted that, at the expiration of the term, he would leave on the warren 10,000 rabbits, the lessor paying for them 60*l*. per thousand:—Held, in an action by the lessee against the lessor for refusing to pay for the rabbits left at the end of the term, that parol evidence was admissible to show that by the custom of the country where the lease was made, the word "thousand," as applied to rabbits denoted 1,200. Smith v. Wilson, 3 B. & Ad. 729; 1 L. J., K. B. 194.

Damages — Covenantee not Damaged.] — A lease was made between the plaintiff and defendant by which the plaintiff granted exclusive rights of sporting over his estate to the defendant, who covenanted that he would during the term keep down and destroy the rabbits on the estate, so that no appreciable damage might be done to the crops thereon. Appreciable damage was done to the crops of an occupier of the land by rabbits on the estate, but the plaintiff never was under any liability to compensate the occupier for any such damage, and paid him no sum whatever in respect thereof. In an action for breach of covenant:—Held, that the plaintiff having suffered no damage himself and not being in the position of a trustee for the occupier, was entitled only to nominal damages. West v. Houghton, 4 C. P. D. 197; 40 L. T. 364; 27 W. R. 678.

3. Under Inclosure Allotments.

Right of Sporting.]—An act for allotting the land of a stinted pasture of a manor for the purposes of improvement (in which manor there was no right of free warren), declared all the allotments freehold to all intents and purposes. It then reserved to the lord the right to mines, and the right to get the minerals, making compensation for damage to the herbage; it declared the allotment to him to be "in full recompense and satisfaction for all his right and interest as lord of the manor in and to the residue of" the stinted pasture. It provided that he should enjoy seigniories, royalties, &c.; "also the right of hunting, shooting, fishing, and fowling in, through, and over the stinted pasture. and every part and allotment thereof, and all other seigniories to the lords of the manor belonging (except those barred) by the act, in as full and ample a manner as if the act had not been passed":—Held, that the lord still possessed the exclusive right of hunting, shooting, fishing, and fowling over the allotments. Ewart v. Graham, 7 H. L. Cas. 331; 29 L. J., Ex. 88; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 773; 7 W. R. 621.

The plaintiff was lord of a manor in which there was a stinted pasture, called Bretherdale Bank, divided by a fence from the other lands of the manor, the fence being maintained and repaired by the owners of cattle-gates to which Bretherdale Bank was subject. These cattle-gates were holden of the lord, as customary estates of inheritance, by payment of fine, rents, and services; they descended, on the death of the owner, to the heir-at-law, who was admitted at the lord's court, and paid a fine; they also passed by customary deed, followed by admittance on payment of a fine, the deed being brought into court by the alienee, and presented by the homage. There were eighty cattle-gates, and each of them conferred on its owner rights of depasturing cattle upon Bretherdale Bank. The owners appointed a frithman and a herd to attend to the land and the cattle; they had once changed the time of stinting, and they had the right to cut turf for consumption within the manor, if they were owners of houses within the manor. An act of parliament gave power to the father of the plaintiff, who was lord of the manor, to enfranchise any copyhold or customary messuages, cottages, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, parcel or reputed parcel of the manor. Several cattle-gates had been enfranchised under this act, but appeared to have been enjoyed in the same way as the customary cattle-gates. The lord was entitled to seize quousque for non-payment of fines, and the plaintiff was the owner of one which had been so seized by his predecesso r.

The plaintiff, his father, and their predecessors, lords of the manor, had always pursued and killed grouse on Bretherdale Bank without obstruction from the cattle-gate owners, and they had since 1819 preserved the game there. No person, except by stealth, or with the permission of the lords of the manor, had been accustomed to search for or kill game, and only one cattle-gate owner had asked for and obtained leave to shoot grouse there. In 1852 the defendant became owner of four cattle-gates, which were described in the conveyance as "all the four cattle-gates or beast-grasses in, upon, and over the close of pasture-ground called Bretherdale Bank," and he was admitted before the steward of the manor out of court. In respect of these cattle-gates he claimed a right to shoot game over Bretherdale Bank, and did kill four grouse there. The lord having brought an action for doing so:—Held, that he was in possession of the soil, the defendant having only a right, as owner of the cattle-gates, to the feeding of his beasts upon Bretherdale Bank, without any right to the soil itself, and therefore that the lord had a right to maintain trespass against him for killing the grouse. Lonsdale (Earl) v. Rigg, 1 H. & N. 924; 26 L. J., Ex. 196; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 390; 5 W. R. 355—Ex. Ch.

Held, also, that the facts stated did not show an exclusive right in the lord to shoot on Bretherdale Bank. Ib.

By an inclosure act, directing the allotment of certain common and waste lands, a portion was allotted to the lord of the manor as full compensation for his right in the residue, save and except as thereinafter excepted. The mines, &c., were not to be taken into the valuation of the allotments, they being reserved to the lord. It was provided that nothing in the act contained should defeat the lord's right to the seigniories, &c., belonging to the manor, but that he should have, &c., all rents, &c., piscaries, fishing, hunting, hawking, and fowling, and all beasts and birds considered as game, &c., and all other royalties, &c., and appurtenances (except such as were taken away by the act), in the same and as full a manner as they were then or had been enjoyed by the then present or any lords. It reserved to the lord all mines, &c., under the lands to be allotted, and gave powers for searching for and working the same. Before the passing of the act the lord had the right of shooting over the waste lands as owner of the soil, but had no right of free warren over them:—Held, that the act reserved to the lord the exclusive right of sporting over the allotments. Leconfield (Lord) v. Dixon, 37 L. J., Ex. 33; L. R. 3 Ex. 30; 17 L. T. 288; 16 W. R. 157—Ex. Ch.

A manor was vested in trustees for the benefit of the freeholders of the manor. By a provisional order, confirmed by act of parliament, a moor, a portion of the manor, was converted into a stinted pasture. The order provided that the right of all manner of game upon the lands should not be in any way affected or interfered with by the inclosure, and that all persons entitled to such game should have the same rights of entry and other rights as theretofore enjoyed:—Held, that the right of shooting was severed from the right to the soil, and became a right in gross, and was therefore not to be taken into account in estimating the value at which the stinted pastures were rateable to the poor. Hilton Overseers v. Bowes Overseers, 35 L. J., M. C. 137; L. R. 1 Q. B. 359; 13 L. T. 512; 14 W. R. 368.

By an inclosure act, the commissioners were authorised to apportion to the lord of the manor, in satisfaction for his right and interest as such lord, a certain quantity of the waste in cattle-gates. By a subsequent section—reciting that the waste was of such small value as not to bear the expense of being allotted—the commissioners were empowered to set it out in one inclosure, and to regulate the stint among the owners of land entitled to rights of common, awarding them sheep gates in proportion to their several rights. The proprietors, or persons entitled to the greater part of the sheep gates, were then empowered, with the consent of the lord, to appoint commissioners to divide the stinted pasture into allotments "to and amongst the proprietors of the said common or waste land, in proportion to their respective rights and interest therein." A further section reserved to the lord the right "to enjoy, search for, and work all mines, minerals, and other rights and privileges in the said waste (except the right to the soil thereof, for which a compensation was thereinbefore directed to be made), in as full, ample, and beneficial a manner as if the act had not been made":—Held, that the effect of the act was, to take from the lord his right to the soil of the waste, and with it the exclusive right of sporting thereon. Robinson v. Wray, L. R. 1 C. P. 490; 14 L. T. 434.

The lords of a manor in which there was waste land were the owners of the soil, subject to rights of common. As an incident to the ownership of the soil, they had the right to take the game. Under the powers conferred by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 99, the waste lands of the manor were inclosed and portions allotted to M. The commissioners made a provisional order, and declared as one of the conditions on which they were of opinion that the inclusure should be made, "that one-sixteenth part in value of the lands be allotted under the provisions of the act to the lords of the manor, in lieu of their right and interest in the soil of the lands, exclusively of their right and interest in the game, and in all mines, minerals, stone, and other substrata under the lands." A person, by the authority of M., killed game upon the land allotted to him:—Held, that the commissioners had power to impose the condition that the right to the game should be in the lord, that the language used by them was sufficient, and that consequently the right of taking the game was in the lord, who might maintain an action against the party for killing game on the allotment. Musgrave v. Forster, 40 L. J., Q. B. 207; L. R. 6 Q. B. 590; 24 L. T. 614; 19 W. R. 1141.

An inclosure act directed the commissioners to allot to the lady of the manor, her heirs and assigns, a certain proportion in value of the lands to be inclosed in lieu of, and as a full compensation for, the right and interest of such lady of the manor, in and to the soil of the lands, and to allot the residue amongst the other persons entitled to rights of common; and it was enacted that the several allotments should be vested in the allottees in full bar and satisfaction of all rights of common and other rights and interests whatsoever in, over, and upon the lands (except such manorial rights as were thereinafter reserved to the lady of the manor, her heirs and assigns); and that all rights of common should cease over the lands. The reservation clause provided that nothing in the act contained should prejudice the right, title, or interest of the lady of the manor, her heirs and assigns, in or to the seigniory or royalties incident or belonging to the manor; but that she might hold and enjoy all rents, quit-rents, and other rents, reliefs, duties, customs, and services, and all courts, perquisites, and profits of courts, rights of fishery, and liberty of hawking, hunting, coursing, fishing, and fowling within the manor, and all tolls, fairs, marts, markets, stallage, goods and chattels of felons or deodands, royalties, jurisdictions, franchises, matters, and things whatsoever to the manor, or to the lord or lady thereof, incident or belonging, or which had been theretofore held and enjoyed by the lady of the manor or any of her ancestors (other than and except such common right as could or might be claimed by the lady of the manor as owner of the soil and inheritence of the commons or waste grounds) :—Held, that the act did not reserve to the lady of the manor the right of shooting which she formerly possessed over the lands allotted under the act by virtue of her ownership of the soil. Sowerby v. Smith, 43 L. J., C. P. 290; L. R. 9 C. P. 524; 31 L. T. 309; 23 W. R. 79—Ex. Ch.

4. By Parol Agreement.

Rights Under.]—Where there was an agreement in writing, but not under seal, to let a messuage, together with full and free and exclusive licence, and leave to hunt, hawk, course, shoot, and sport over a manor, and the tenant entered and was possessed during the term granted :—Held, in an action on the agreement for rent, that not being by deed the agreement was void, because an incorporeal hereditament was agreed to be let, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover in respect of the actual enjoyment of the premises let by the defendant, of which he had taken possession. Bird v. Higginson, 2 A. & E. 696; 4 N. & M. 505; 1 H. & W. 61; 4 L. J., K. B. 124. See Ewart v. Graham, and Webber v. Lee, ante, col. 469.

Declaration on a written agreement (not under seal) by the plaintiff to let land to the defendant for two years, and by the defendant to make satisfaction for damage done to tenants by game on their farms, over which he was to be at liberty to preserve game; the amount of damage to be settled by two referees, one chosen by each party, or by their umpire in case of disagreement. Averment, that the defendant entered and enjoyed the exclusive right of shooting during the whole term agreed upon. Breach, that although within a reasonable time W. M. was chosen and nominated on the plaintiff's behalf, and notice given to the defendant, who was requested by the plaintiff to give the name and address of a referee on his behalf to act with W. M. within ten days, or that in default W. M. would assess the damage done, yet the defendant did not nor would give notice to the plaintiff of any person chosen or nominated on his behalf, nor ever made any satisfaction for the damage done; that, accordingly, W. M. alone assessed the damage, and that the defendant had not paid any compensation to the plaintiff :—Held, that the agreement to make compensation was not void, although the right of shooting, being an incorporeal hereditament, did not pass by it. Thomas v. Fredericks, 10 Q. B. 775; 16 L. J., Q. B. 393; 11 Jur. 942.

Held, also, that as the defendant was stated to have enjoyed the right of shooting during the whole period agreed for, the absence of an averment of a grant of such right as a condition precedent did not render the declaration bad. Ib.

—— Trespass by Licensee.]—See Jones v. Williams, post, col. 483.

—— Injunction Restraining Interference, until Lease Executed.]—See Frogley v. Lovelace (Earl), ante, col. 471.

—— Compensation under Lands Clauses Act.]—B., by an agreement in writing (not under seal), was entitled to the right of sporting over lands for a term of three years. A company, under the powers of its act of parliament, purchased some of this land from the owner, and constructed their line over the land :—Held, that B. had no interest in the land sufficient to entitle him to claim compensation from the company under the Lands Clauses Act in respect of the damage to the right of sporting. Bird v. G. E. Ry., 19 C. B. (N.S.) 268; 34 L. J., C. P. 366; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 782; 13 L. T. 365; 13 W. R. 989.

5. Exercising and Enjoying Right.

With Friends.]—In a demise, the lessor granted to the lessee the right of sporting over the land demised, and certain other lands, "in common with the lessor, his heirs and assigns, and any friend of his or them" :—Held, that the exercise of the privilege was not confined to a single friend at a time. Gardiner v. Colyer, 10 L. T. 715; 12 W. R. 979.

If the plaintiff is tenant of A., and has agreed that A. shall give three persons licence to sport over the lands, and the defendant has such a licence from A., such licence will not support the plea of leave and licence by the plaintiff. Hayward v. Grant, 1 Car. & P. 448.

—— Damages done by Hunting.]—In an action by a farmer against a gentleman who was member, not master, of a hunt, who had taken the shooting on the plaintiff's farm, for trespass in hunting :—Held, that the defendant was not liable for damage caused by the horses of other members of the hunt. Paget v. Birkbeck, 3 F. & F. 683.

Extent of Right.]—A person having an agreement for shooting over a farm has only a right to do so in the usual and reasonable way, and not to tread over fields of standing crops at a time when it is not usual or reasonable. Hilton v. Green, 2 F. & F. 821.

Right to Turn down Rabbits or Birds.]—A tenant of shooting having a licence to lay down some game is not liable for damage done by rabbits or birds, unless he has laid down an unreasonable and excessive number. Paget v. Birkbeck, 3 F. & F. 683.

He has no right to turn rabbits on to the farm, without express leave to do so, and he is liable to the occupier for damage done to the crops by rabbits, or the progeny of rabbits, thus turned on by his express or implied authority, and without the occupier's licence. Hilton v. Green, 2 F. & F. 821.

A demise of the exclusive right of sporting over a farm does not justify the lessee in turning out on it game not bred thereon in the ordinary way. Semble also, that in such a case the lessor is justified in keeping down the excess. Birkbeck v Paget, 31 Beav. 403.

Where land is let to a tenant reserving the the right of shooting over the land, the tenant may maintain an action against the persons entitled to the right of shooting for overstocking the land with game so as to cause damage to the tenant's crops. Farrer v. Nelson, 54 L. J., Q. B. 385; 15 Q. B. D. 258; 52 L. T. 786; 33 W. R. 800; 49 J. P. 725.

An infant tenant in tail, for purposes of shooting, turned loose a large number of rabbits upon the farms of his tenants, who held their lands from year to year under a verbal agreement that the shooting should be preserved. The rabbits occasioned considerable damage to the crops, and the tenants claimed to have the amount of the damage deducted from their rent; but, pending the consideration as to how much should be deducted, the tenant in tail died. After his death his personal representative refused to allow the tenants' claim:—Held, that the claim could not be sustained. Harrington v. Harrington, 20 L. T. 512.

Breaking up Rabbit Warren.]—To break up a rabbit warren, unless a warren by charter or prescription, is not waste at common law, and the court will not grant an injunction to prevent it. Lurting v. Conn, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 273.

6. Ground Game.

Letting of Sporting Rights to Tenant—Agreement by Tenant to Let to Third Party Sole Right to Ground Game.]—The Ground Game Act, 1880, does not prevent the tenant of a farm over which he has the sole right of shooting and of killing and taking ground game, otherwise than in pursuance of the statute, from entering into a valid agreement with a third person to let to him, for a valuable consideration, the "sole right of shooting and killing all winged game, hares and rabbits" on such farm. Section 3 is only directed to preventing landlords and tenants from combining to defeat the objects of the act. Morgan v. Jackson, 64 L. J., Q. B. 462; [1895] 1 Q. B. 885; 15 R. 411; 72 L. T. 593; 43 W. R. 479; 59 J. P. 327.

Right Vested in Person other than Occupier.]—When at the date of the passing of the Ground Game Act, 1880, land is in the occupation of a tenant with a legal interest, as tenant from year to year, expiring after the commencement of the act, but also with an equitable interest under an agreement prior to the act for a lease for fourteen years, to commence from the expiration of the legal interest, and reserving to the landlord the right to the ground game on the land, such right in the landlord as against the tenant is preserved by the provisions of the saving clause of the act (s. 5); the phrase "is vested" not being confined to an actual legal vesting a lease in possession, but including an equitable vesting of the right under an agreement for a lease, contract of tenancy, or other contract bonâ fide made for valuable consideration. Allhusen v. Brooking, 53 L. J., Ch. 520; 26 Ch. D. 559; 51 L. T. 57; 32 W. R. 657.

By lease dated 4th September, 1865, H. demised to L. the shooting and game of the lands of P. for twenty years from the 1st November, 1863. In 1874 L. assigned to B. and W., who after the expiration of the lease continued to hold the right of shooting as tenants from year to year. By lease dated the 28th June, 1869, H. demised to C. the lands of P. for the term of sixty years, reserving to the landlord the game:—Held, that the case came within s. 5 of the Ground Game Act of 1880, and that C. was not entitled on the expiration of the lease of 1865 to take and kill ground game. Hansard v. Clark, 13 L. R., Ir. 391.

Spring Traps—Owner in Possession.]—By the 6th section of the Ground Game Act, 1880, no person having a right of killing ground game under this act or otherwise, shall use any firearms for the purpose of killing ground game between the expiration of the first hour after sunset and the commencement of the last hour before sunrise; and no such person shall, for the purpose of killing ground game, employ spring traps except in rabbit holes, nor employ poison; and any person acting in contravention of this section shall, on summary conviction, be liable to a penalty not exceeding 2*l.*:—Held, that the section does not apply to an owner of land doing any of the acts prohibited therein upon his own land. Smith v. Hunt, 54 L. T. 422; 16 Cox, C. C. 54; 50 J. P. 279.

—— Tenant with Right of Shooting.] — A tenant of land who is under his agreement entitled to the game and right of shooting thereon, is liable to a penalty, under s. 6 of the Ground Game Act, 1880, for employing spring traps in the open for the purpose of killing ground game. Saunders v. Pitfield, 58 L. T. 108; 16 Cox, C. C. 369; 52 J. P. 694.

7. Trespassing.

Jurisdiction of Justices—Claim of Right.]—It is not sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the justices in regard to a charge of trespass in pursuit of game under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, that there is an honest claim of right if such claim is absurd and impossible in point of law. The question is whether a reasonable claim of right is involved, and not one of mens rea, inasmuch as the statute is not a mere criminal statute, but is intended for the protection of the peculiar rights of persons entitled to shoot game. Watkins v. Major, 44 L. J., M. C. 164; L. R. 10 C. P. 662; 33 L. T. 352; 24 W. R. 164. S. P. Legg v. Pardoe, 9 C. B. (N.S.) 289; 30 L. J., M. C. 108; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 499; 3 L. T. 371; 9 W. R. 234.

An information was preferred against the appellant for killing a rabbit contrary to 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30. At the hearing it was proved that E. claimed to be lord of the manor, and a witness stated that the manor had belonged to two persons, who were predecessors in title to E. A deputation was also produced, which appeared to have been duly enrolled by the clerk of the peace of the county, by which T. was appointed gamekeeper for and within the manor. The witness also stated that he had known the common for forty years, and had always believed it to be part of the manor, and that E. had allowed him to shoot over the common. The appellant went by direction of his father on to the common, and there shot a rabbit. The father had previously acquired a lease of some land near the common, and had built a house on it. He claimed in respect of this land, as one of the commoners, a right of killing rabbits on the common, but no evidence was adduced that any of the commoners had ever claimed or exercised a right of killing rabbits on the common. The claim to kill rabbits was made by the appellant and his father bonâ fide, and the justices having convicted the appellant :—Held, first, that there was evidence that the manor existed, that the common was within it, and that E. was the lord of it. Ib.

Held, secondly, that as the appellant had given no sufficient evidence of a right justifying him in killing the rabbit, he was properly convicted, although he bonâ fide believed himself to be entitled to shoot the rabbit. Ib.

Appellant was summoned under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30, for trespassing in pursuit of game. At the hearing before the justices he set up a claim under a lease. The lease was produced by the respondent, when it was found that the locus in quo could not possibly be included in the land demised. The appellant contended that there was a mistake in the map annexed to the lease, and supported his claim to the locus in quo by evidence of acts of possession. The justices, while considering that his claim might be made bonâ fide, thought it an impossible and absurd one, and convicted him :—Held, that such conviction was right, and that they had not exceeded their jurisdiction. Watkins v. Smith, 38 L. T. 525 ; 26 W. R. 692. S. P., Leatt v. Vine, 30 L. J., M. C. 207 ; 8 L. T. 581.

M. laid an information against A. for trespassing in pursuit of game, under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32 (Game Act), s. 30. At the hearing he gave evidence that the lords of the manor had, in 1815, granted the right of shooting, down to the present time, and that he was then renting the shooting of them. On A.'s part it was alleged that he had a lease from the lords of the manor of the lands said to be trespassed upon, dated 1859, in which there was no reservation of a right to the game, and that the alleged trespass was committed in the assertion of his right to the game. The justices having convicted A. :—Held, that, under the circumstances, the claim of right having been bonâ fide made, the jurisdiction of the justices was ousted. Adams v. Masters, 24 L. T. 502. S. P., Reg. v. Cridland, 7 El. & Bl. 853 ; 27 L. J., M. C. 28 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1213 ; 5 W. R. 679 ; Reg. v. Kayley, 10 L. T. 339.

The tenant of a farm under a lease which reserved the game to the lessor, but did not expressly say that it did so exclusively, shot three hares in the presence of the keeper to assert his right. He set up this claim of right on the hearing of an information against him before the justices, and alleged that it ousted their jurisdiction. They found that the claim was not bonâ fide, because he had a copy of the lease, and convicted him :—Held, that this finding as to the bonâ fides was not conclusive, because there was no evidence that his claim was made malâ fide ; and that as he asserted his claim of right the magistrates had no jurisdiction to hear the information. Lovesy v. Stallard, 30 L. T. 792.

A trespasser in search of game set up as a defence, under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30, the leave and licence of the occupier under a parol lease. The occupier denied that the game was reserved ; evidence was given to show that it was :—Held, that the defence was not bonâ fide, and, therefore, the jurisdiction of the justices was not ousted. Reg. v. Critchlow, 26 W. R. 681.

Semble, that if there is any evidence to show that the game is reserved, it becomes a question of fact to be decided by the justices. Ib.

B. was charged with trespass in pursuit of game, under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30, and was proved to have shot game on glebe land over which the rector of the parish had always exercised the privilege of sporting. The defence of B. was that he was game watcher, employed by three gentlemen who were proved to rent shooting from the lord of the manor, and that the lord claimed the shooting over part of the glebe under an inclosure act. He proved that his employers ordered him to go upon this land, but he produced no evidence, although an adjournment was offered for that purpose, that the land upon which the alleged trespass was committed was included in the lands over which his employers' shooting extended, nor in the disputed part of the glebe. The magistrate decided that he had no bonâ fide claim of right to shoot on this particular land, and convicted him of the trespass :—Held, that, under the circumstances, the magistrate was justified in convicting. Birnie v. Marshall, 35 L. T. 373.

The title attempted to be set up must be in the defendant and not in a third person. Cornwell v. Sanders, 3 B. & S. 206 ; 32 L. J., M. C. 6 ; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 540 ; 7 L. T. 356 ; 11 W. R. 87.

B. was tenant of lands, there being no reservation of game by the landlord, and B. let the land to A. to get and cut the hay, and both B. and A. gave leave to P. to shoot game over the land. P. was convicted under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30, of trespassing in pursuit :—Held, that the justices were wrong, for the whole right to the game was in B. and A., and P. having the leave and authority of both had a good claim of right to the rabbits. Pochin v. Smith, 52 J. P. 4.

B.'s covert adjoined the field of P., and B. went on a public footpath in this field to shoot, directing his servant to beat B.'s own covert and hedge. B. on being charged with trespassing in pursuit of game under s. 30 of 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 82, set up a claim of right, as the hedge was his :—Held, that the justices were wrong in allowing a claim of right, as no title to property was involved, and B. ought to have been convicted. Philpot v. Bugler, 54 J. P. 646.

Jurisdiction of Queen's Bench.]—The Court of Queen's Bench has no jurisdiction to direct the court of quarter sessions to rehear an appeal, on the ground of their having rejected evidence which was admissible, although the appeal was against a conviction under 1 and 2 Will. 4, c. 32, by which a certiorari is taken away. Pratt, Ex parte, 2 N. & P. 102 ; 7 A. & E. 27.

Evidence of.]—To sustain a charge of trespass in pursuit of game, brought under the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 67, the only evidence given on behalf of the complainants to prove the commission of the offence was, that the defendant, with two greyhounds, was trespassing on lands of the complainants where hares had been frequently seen, and that he went away on being called on to stop by a caretaker of the complainants. The caretaker deposed that he believed the defendant was beating for hares :—Held, that there was no evidence that the defendant had committed an offence under the statute. Kingston (Countess) v. O'Neill, L. R., 6 Ir. 101.

Damages for.]—In an action for breaking and entering the plaintiff's closes, and sporting there, under circumstances of aggravation, the jury gave 500*l.* damages; the court refused to reduce them, though the plaintiff had sustained no actual pecuniary damage. Merest v. Harvey, 1 Marsh. 139; 5 Taunt. 442; 15 R. R. 548.

By Licensee.]—A landlord, who has verbally reserved the game to himself, has thereby a sufficient authority to give leave to a person to kill game on such farm, to prevent any such person from being a trespasser thereon in pursuit of game within s. 30 of 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32. Jones v. Williams, 46 L. J., M. C. 270; 36 L. T. 559.

Inducing others to Trespass.]—Where a person goes out sporting with his friends, and purposely leads them on to another's land, he is equally guilty of a trespass, although he may remain off the land whilst his friends go on it. Hill v. Walker, Peake's Add. Cas. 234.

If a gentleman sends out his hounds and his servants, and invites other gentlemen to hunt with him, although he does not himself go on the lands of another, but the other gentlemen do, he is answerable for the trespass they may commit in so doing, unless he distinctly desires them not to go on the lands. Baker v. Berkeley, 3 Car. & P. 32.

By Dog.]—Where, in an action of trespass, it appeared that the defendant was a qualified person, and had permission to sport on the right-hand side of a road; but his dog crossed over the road and ranged over a field on the other side; the judge left it to the jury whether the dog had crossed over by the incitement of the defendant or not. If the jury finds that the dog escaped against the defendant's will, and that he had no intention of sporting on the other side of the road, they must accordingly find a verdict for the defendant. Dimmock v. Allenby, 2 Marsh. 852.

An action lies against the owner of a dog, who, knowing the animal to have a propensity for chasing and destroying game, permits it to be at large, and the dog in consequence enters the plaintiff's wood and chases and destroys young pheasants which are being reared there under domestic hens. Read v. Edwards, 5 N. R. 48; 17 C. B. (N.S.) 245; 34 L. J., C. P. 31; 11 L. T. 311.

Hunting no Justification for Trespass.]—It is no justification of a trespass that it was committed in pursuit of a fox, where such pursuit is carried on as a sport. Paul v. Summerhayes, 48 L. J., M. C. 33; 4 Q. B. D. 9; 39 L. T. 574; 27 W. R. 215; 14 Cox, C. C. 202.

Semble, that the pursuit of a fox could not, under any circumstances, be a justification. Ib.

S. managed his father's farm, his father being an invalid, and while working in a field, part of the farm, forbade P., E. and others, who were out with the Taunton Vale foxhounds in pursuit of a fox, from entering that field. P. insisting upon riding into the field, S. turned his horse back. P. and E. then committed an assault upon S., for which they were summoned by S. before the justices and jointly charged in the information. The justices refused to allow P. and E. to sever their defence so that they might give evidence for each other, and convicted them both: —Held, that such conviction was right, s. 32 of 1 & 2 Will. 4 not applying to such a case. Ib.

A person may justify a trespass in following a fox with hounds over the grounds of another, if he does no more than is necessary to kill the fox. Gundry v. Feltham, 1 Term Rep. 334; 1 R. R. 215.

If a hunted stag runs into a barn for shelter, the owner of the hounds and his servants have no right to enter the barn to take the stag; and if they do so they are trespassers. Baker v. Berkeley, 3 Car. & P. 32.

Frightening away Game.]—Firing at wildfowl to kill and make profit of them, by one who was at the time in a boat, on a public river or an open creek, where the tide ebbs and flows, so near to an ancient decoy on shore (about 200 yards), as to make the birds there take flight, the defendant having before fired at a greater distance from the decoy, which brought out some of the birds, though he did not fire into the decoy-pond, is evidence of a wilful disturbance of and damage to the decoy for which an action is maintainable by the owner. Carrington v. Taylor, 11 East, 571; 2 Camp. 258; 11 R. R. 270.

An action lies for discharging guns near the decoy-pond of another with design to damnify the owner by frightening away the wildfowl resorting thereto, by which the wildfowl is frightened away, and the owner damnified. Keeble v. Hickeringill, 11 East, 574, n.; 11 R. R. 273, n.

A person whose game is enticed away from his land by a neighbour, is liable to an action for exploding combustibles so as to be a nuisance to the latter, in order to frighten the game away from his land and prevent him killing them, and enticing other game. Ibbotson v. Peat, 3 H. & C. 644; 34 L. J., Ex. 118; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 394; 12 L. T. 313; 13 W. R. 691.

Power of Police to Apprehend.]—A policeman has no power, under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, to apprehend persons whom he may suspect of coming from land where they have been unlawfully in pursuit of game, and such persons may lawfully resist and use such violence as is necessary to prevent their apprehension. Reg. v. Spencer, 3 F. & F. 854.

A warrant for neglecting to appear to a summons for trespass in search of coneys, under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30, was issued against C., directed to all the peace officers in the county. A peace officer in the county met C. and said he apprehended him under this warrant, but the warrant was not in his possession at the time. C. resisted, and, having severely injured the officer, escaped, but afterwards surrendered himself. The justices fined him 10*s.* for the trespass, and sentenced him to six months' hard labour for assaulting the officer in the execution of his office:—Held, that the arrest under the circumstances would not have been in the execution of the constable's office, and that the conviction for assault must be quashed. Codd v. Cabe, 45 L. J., M. C. 101; 1 Ex. D. 352; 34 L. T., 453; 13 Cox, C. C. 202.

Poaching—Suspicion.]—A constable saw H. with a gun poaching in a field, and then saw him on the highway, where he stopped and searched him, saying that he suspected H. of coming from land where he had been unlawfully searching for game. H. assaulted the constable, and was summoned for the assault:—Held, that the justices were wrong in dismissing the charge for the reason they gave, viz. that as H. had been seen poaching he could not have been suspected of poaching Hall v. Robinson, 53 J. P. 310.

Trespassing in Pursuit of—Actually seen on Land—Legal Evidence.]—G. was charged under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30, with unlawfully trespassing in the daytime in pursuit of game. A report of a gun was heard proceeding from the land which was a wood, and G. was seen almost immediately to come out of the wood with a gun and three dogs, and run off. There was no direct evidence that he was seen in the wood in actual pursuit. The justices refused to commit, holding the evidence not to be legal :—Held, the justices were wrong, and that there was legal or admissible evidence. Burrows v. Gillingham, 57 J. P. 423.

Night Poaching.]—B. was caught with rabbits at night in a field forming part of a farm over which H. had the right of sporting. The justices found as a fact that this field was not a warren or ground used for the breeding or keeping of hares or rabbits within the 17th section of the Larceny Act, 1861, and convicted B. of night poaching under 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, s. 1 :—Held, that it was a question of fact whether the place was within this description ; and that upon this finding the conviction was right. Bevan v. Hopkinson, 34 L. T. 142.

And see CRIMINAL LAW (Poaching).

Conviction—When Irregular.]—After a conviction by two justices under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30, and before any formal conviction had been drawn up, one of such justices changed his mind, and together with a third justice who had not heard the case, but without the concurrence of the other justice who had convicted, reversed such conviction :—Held, that such reversal was irregular, but that as no conviction had been drawn up there was no good conviction existing, and the whole proceeding was a miscarriage. Jones v. Williams, 46 L. J., M. C. 270 ; 36 L. T. 559.

Taking or Killing on Sunday.]—A. was convicted for that he, on the 15th of August (being Sunday), did use snares for the purpose of killing game. He set the snares on the 13th and 14th of August, and on the 15th the snares were seen set ready to catch game, and two dead grouse were found caught in snares :—Held, that a snare was an engine or an instrument within 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 3, and that putting down a snare on a day before Sunday, for the purpose of killing game, and keeping it set on Sunday, was using an engine or an instrument on Sunday. Allen v. Thompson, 39 L. J., M. C. 102 ; L. R. 5 Q B. 336 ; 22 L. T. 472 ; 18 W. R. 1196.

At petty sessions an information was laid against two persons charging that they did use a gun and kill two pheasants contrary to 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 3 ; each claimed to be tried separately in order to call the other as a witness ; the justices refused, and heard the charge against both together, and convicted them, and a conviction was drawn up separately against each of them imposing a penalty of 3*l*. :—Held, that it was in the discretion of the justices whether they would hear the charge separately or not ; that, as the penalty was imposed on every person acting in contravention of the statute, each was separately liable to the whole penalty, and that separate convictions were right. Reg. v. Littlechild, Reg. v. Heslop. 40 L. J., M. C. 137 ; L. R. 6 Q. B. 293 ; 24 L. T. 233 ; 19 W. R. 748.

C. CERTIFICATES.

Setting Trap for Game.]—A person who in March sets a trap for the purpose of taking partridges or pheasants, not having a game certificate, is liable to the penalty imposed by 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 23, upon any person who sets any instrument for the purpose of taking game, such person not being authorised so to do for want of a game certificate, although s. 3 imposes a penalty upon any person killing or taking partridges between the 1st of February and the 1st of September, or pheasants between the 1st of February and the 1st of October, since the two offences are distinct, and the penalties imposed by the two sections are cumulative. Sanders v. Baldy, 6 B. & S. 791 ; 35 L. J., M. C. 71 ; L. R. 1 Q. B. 87 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 334 ; 13 L. T 322 ; 14 W. R. 177.

Killing Game—With Gun.]—Proof that the defendant did "keep and use a gun to kill and destroy the game" was sufficient evidence to support a conviction under the game laws, though the witness had his reasons for believing "that the gun was fired by the defendant, who was walking about a piece of ground at H. with that apparent intent." Rex v. Davies, 6 Term Rep. 177.

—— Accidentally.]—If a person not qualified to kill game killed a pheasant or other game by accident, he could not take it away, or he was subject to the penalty. Molton v. Cheeseley, 1 Esp. 123.

—— Take, kill, and pursue — If three Offences.]—J. was charged under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 90, s. 4, with taking, killing, and pursuing game without a licence. Objection being taken that these were three separate offences, the justices dismissed the information :—Held, that the justices were wrong, and that only one offence was charged. Laxton v. Jefferies, 58 J. P. 318.

Penalties and Convictions.]—In an action to recover penalties under the game laws, the plaintiff can recover but one penalty under the 5 Anne, c. 14, s. 4, for the same act. Ib.

On an information charging a defendant with keeping and using a dog, and also a gun, on the same day, he could only be convicted in one penalty. Rex v. Lovett, 7 Term Rep. 152.

But a defendant might be convicted of several offences in the same conviction. Rex v. Swallow, 8 Term Rep. 284.

And two persons could not be convicted in separate penalties under 5 Anne, c. 14, s. 4, for using a greyhound to destroy game. Rex v. Bleasdale, 4 Term Rep. 809.

The 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 3, subjects a person killing or taking birds of game during certain seasons of the year to a penalty not exceeding 1*l*. for every head of game killed or taken. Sect. 23 subjects persons killing or taking game, or using any dog for the purpose of searching for or killing or taking game, without a certificate, to a penalty not exceeding 5*l*. :—Held, that the penalties in the two sections are cumulative, and, therefore, a person using an instrument for taking a bird of game without a certificate out of season, was liable to a penalty under s. 23. Sanders v. Baldy, 6 B. & S. 791 ; 35 L. J., M. C. 71; L. R. 1 Q. B. 87 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 334 ; 13 L. T. 322 ; 14 W. R. 177.

Killing game without a game certificate is not an offence against the game laws. Stevens v. Copp, 38 L. J., Ex. 31 ; L. R. 4 Ex. 20 ; 19 L. T. 454 ; 17 W. R. 166.

Unqualified Person in Company.]—An unqualified and unlicensed person may join the sport with a person lawfully entitled to kill game, if he merely joins in the sport, and is not himself a principal, or using his own dogs. Molton v. Rogers, 4 Esp. 217.

But in an action on 5 Anne, c. 14, if the defendant set up a defence that he joined in the sport as a servant of another, he must have given strict evidence that the person by whose orders he acted was himself qualified to kill game. Clarke v. Broughton, 3 Camp. 328.

An unqualified servant going out with his qualified master and shooting game in his presence, and for his use, was liable to a penalty under 5 Anne, c. 14, for keeping and using a gun to kill game. Rex v. Sylvester, 4 M. & Ry. 5 ; 9 B. & C. 61 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 63.

But an unqualified person going out with the qualified owner of greyhounds to course a hare, which was killed by the dogs, was not liable to the penalty of 5*l.* given by 5 Anne, c. 14, for using a greyhound to kill game; although he took an active part in the sport by beating the bushes in order to find a hare, and took it up after it was killed. Lewis v. Taylor, 16 East, 49.

A groom attending his qualified master while using dogs for killing the game, and pursuing it by his master's command, was not liable to a penalty under 5 Anne, c. 14. Rex v. Taylor, 15 East, 460.

Using a greyhound merely in the company of a qualified person, who kept it, was not an offence against the statute. Rex v. Newman, Lofft, 178 ; 5 Term Rep. 376.

A servant of a qualified person assisted his master in setting a trap on his land for taking rabbits and vermin, and was ordered, if a hare should be caught, to bring it to his master. A hare being afterwards caught in the trap, in the absence of the master, it was accordingly killed and carried to him by the servant :—Held, that he was not liable to the penalties for using snares for the destruction of game, or having it in his possession, so as to constitute an exposure to sale under 9 Anne, c. 25, s. 2. Walker v. Mills, 4 Moore, 343 ; 3 Br. & B. 1.

Keeping Sporting Dogs.]—The mere fact of keeping a sporting dog is no evidence of keeping it for the purpose of destroying game, without some evidence of its having been used for that purpose. Read v. Phelps, 15 East, 271.

To constitute the offence of keeping a setting-dog with 5 Anne, c. 14, s. 4, it must have been kept for the purpose of killing and destroying game ; therefore, where at the time the alleged offence was charged to have been committed, the dog was tied up, and never had been taken out into the field by his master, it was not an offence within the statute. Hayward v. Horner, 5 B. & Ald. 317.

So where a dog was kept as a house-dog. Briarly v. Althorpe, 5 B. & Ald. 320, n.

Not Producing.]—To bring a party within 52 Geo. 3, c. 93, for not producing his game certificate, it is not necessary that the demand should be made on the land on which he was sporting ; but the demand must be made so immediately after the party has left the land, as to form part of the same transaction. Search v. Gardener, 5 Car. & P. 38.

It is not necessary that the person making the demand should produce any certificate ; and if the other party refuses to produce his, he takes the risk of whether the person demanding is one having a right to make such demand. Ib.

If a person refuses to produce his game certificate, or to tell his name or residence, the person demanding need not go on to ask in what place, if any, he is assessed to the game duty. Ib.

The penalty for not producing a licence when lawfully required, is not complete by the refusal to produce it, unless the party refuses on request, to tell his christian and surname, and the place of his residence. Molton v. Rogers, 4 Esp. 215.

Right of Supervisor to conduct Prosecution.]—In prosecutions for taking game without a licence the inland revenue supervisor for the district has a right to conduct the case although the prosecution is not in his name, and a general authority given to him by the commissioners is sufficient compliance with 53 & 54 Vict. c. 21, s. 27. Reg. v. Turner, 58 J. P. 320.

Evidence of Authority to Prosecute—Re-opening Case.]—In a prosecution for pursuing game without a licence, the information alleged that it was by order of the commissioners of inland revenue. Objection was taken that no evidence thereof was given :—Held, that the justices were wrong in allowing such an objection, and in ignoring 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 71. Held, further, that the justices were wrong in resolving not to re-open the case before they knew on what ground it would be asked for. Hargreaves v. Hilliam, 58 J. P. 655.

D. DEALERS IN.

Legality of Contracts.]—The 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 4, does not render illegal a contract made during the game season, whereby a party licensed to deal in game undertakes to deliver to another live game at a period out of the season. Porritt v. Baker, 10 Ex. 759 ; 3 C. L. R. 432 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 336.

The buying of game was formerly prohibited in all cases by 58 Geo. 3, c. 75 ; therefore, under that statute, a contract for the sale of live pheasants for the purpose of breeding, passed no property to the purchaser, and could not be enforced. Helps v. Glenister, 3 M. & Ry. 12; 8 B. & C. 533 ; 7 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 117.

Disqualification—Sale of Beer by Retail.]—The holder of an additional licence to sell beer under 26 & 27 Vict. c. 33, s. 1, is a person "licensed to sell beer by retail" within the meaning of s. 18 of the Game Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32), and is therefore disqualified from holding a licence to deal in game under that section. Shoolbred v. St. Pancras JJ., 59 L. J., M. C. 63 ; 24 Q. B. D. 346 ; 62 L. T. 287 ; 38 W. R. 399 ; 54 J. P. 231.

Unlawful Possession.]—A person licensed under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 4, who has in his possession live pheasants after the time mentioned in the act, is guilty of an offence under the act. Loome v. Bailey, 3 El. & El. 444; 30 L. J., M. C. 31; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1299; 3 L. T. 406; 9 W. R. 119.

Breeding Pheasants.]—M., a pheasant-breeder for many years, set pheasants' eggs under barn-door hens in coops, cutting one wing of each bird to prevent escape and facilitate identification. He sold two cock pheasants on 5th February for 1*l.* to one of the public:—Held, that he was subject to the penalty under the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 90 and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 91, s. 17, for dealing in game without a licence. Harnett v. Miles, 48 J. P. 455.

Game killed Abroad.]—An excise licence under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 90, s. 14, is not required for the sale of game killed abroad. Pudney v. Eccles, 62 L. J., M. C. 27; [1893] 1 Q. B. 52; 5 R. 52; 67 L. T. 713; 41 W. R. 125; 17 Cox, C. C. 594; 57 J. P. 38.

A person licensed to deal in game by virtue of the Game Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32), was convicted under s. 4 of knowingly having in his shop game during the close season, as defined in s. 3. It appeared that game was exposed for sale in his shop during the close season, but that it had been killed abroad:—Held, that the act did not apply to birds killed abroad, and that the conviction was wrong. Guyer v. Reg., 58 L. J., M. C. 81; 23 Q. B. D. 100; 60 L. T. 824; 37 W. R. 586; 16 Cox, C. C. 657; 53 J. P. 436.

It is no defence to an information under the Wild Birds Protection Act, 1876, for exposing wild birds for sale during the prohibited season, that such birds have been bought or received of or from a person residing out of the United Kingdom. Whitehead v. Smithers, 46 L. J., M. C. 234; 2 C. P. D. 553; 37 L. T. 378.

E. UNLAWFUL POSSESSION OF.

Evidence of.]—In order to convict under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, s. 2, it is not necessary that the person charged should have been seen on the land where he is said to have obtained unlawful possession of game found upon him; it is sufficient that circumstances are proved from which the magistrates may infer that the offence has been committed. Brown v. Turner, 32 L. J., M. C. 106; 13 C. B. (N.S.) 485; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 850; 7 L. T. 681; 11 W. R. 290.

Under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, s. 2, a person may be convicted of having obtained game by unlawfully going on land in search or pursuit of game without evidence of his having been on any particular land. Evans v. Botterill, 3 B. & S. 787; 33 L. J., M. C. 50; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 311; 8 L. T. 272; 11 W. R. 621.

A person may be convicted of that offence, or of having used any net, &c., for unlawfully killing or taking game, upon circumstantial evidence. Ib.

Upon an information against a person under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, s. 2, for having obtained game by unlawfully being on land in search or pursuit of game, it is not necessary to prove an actual search of the person by the constable if game was seen upon the person. Hall v. Knox, 4 B. & S. 515; 33 L. J., M. C. 1; 9 L. T. 380; 12 W. R. 103.

A policeman can only justify stopping and searching a cart upon a highway under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, where he has good cause to suspect that the cart is carrying game which has been unlawfully obtained. Reg. v. Spencer, 3 F. & F. 857.

In order to justify a conviction under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, s. 2, it is necessary that game or instruments for taking game should be found by the constable on the accused in a highway. Clarke v. Crowder, 38 L. J., M. C. 118; L. R. 4 C. P. 638; 17 W. R. 857.

It is not sufficient that the accused should be seen in a highway and followed, and game found on him elsewhere. Ib.

Semble, that it is also necessary that the game or instruments for killing or taking game should be detained and taken from the accused in the highway in order to give magistrates jurisdiction to convict for the offence. Ib.

A common carrier between B. and R. was met by a police constable coming along the turnpike road to R. with his horse and cart. The constable suspecting that he had been unlawfully on land in pursuit of game, asked him if he had any game in his cart, to which he replied that he had only a few rabbits. The constable then searched the cart, and found in a basket beneath the rabbits, a pheasant, nine partridges (three of which had been shot, and six netted), and two hares (one of which had been shot and the other trapped). The game was wet, and had been recently killed; and the boots of the carrier (who fainted when the game was discovered) were dirty, although the road was dry. The justices who convicted him found that "no evidence was given on the one hand to show that the game was unlawfully obtained, or on the other hand to show that it was lawfully obtained":—Held, that the foregoing circumstances did not constitute sufficient evidence on which he could be convicted of having obtained game by unlawfully going on land in search or pursuit of game within 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, s. 2. Jones v. Dicker, 22 L. T. 95.

In order to give jurisdiction to magistrates to convict of an offence under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, s. 2, it is necessary that the game or instruments for killing or taking game should be seized and detained on the highway. Turner v. Morgan, 44 L. J., M. C. 161; L. R. 10 C. P. 587; 33 L. T. 172; 23 W. R. 659.

A man, whilst going in a cart along a highway, was required to stop by a constable. He drove off without obeying the order to stop, and shortly afterwards delivered to G. several rabbits, of which the constable subsequently took possession:—Held, that as the rabbits were not seized by the constable whilst they were in his possession upon the highway, he could not be convicted under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, s. 2. Ib.

A police constable saw the appellant in a highway with some rabbits slung over his back. The appellant left the highway and ran across a meadow followed by the police constable, and on being overtaken, at a distance from the highway, he threw the rabbits on the ground, and they were then and there taken possession of by the police constable. On appeal against a conviction under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, s. 2:—Held, that the conviction was right. Turner v. Morgan (L. R. 10 C. P. 587) commented on. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 14 Q. B. D. 725; 53 L. T. 536; 33 W. R. 457; 15 Cox, C. C. 767; 49 J. P. 630.

Proof of the possession of game being innocent lies on the person accused. A servant taking a hare out of a snare and carrying it to his master, never intending to make any use of it himself cannot be said ever to have had the possession of it. Hemming v. Haley, 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 105.

—— User of net Sufficient.]—Two men were seen together by a policeman on the 16th of December on a highway, about half-past 9 p.m. One had a net under his arm for catching hares. Nothing else was found on either of them; but they had a lurcher with them. The policeman had heard a dog yelping as if in chase of a hare or rabbit a little time before these men came along the road. The night was damp and the net was wettish. They were both convicted under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, s. 2:—Held, that there was evidence to support the conviction; for that it was not necessary that they should have caught any game; it was sufficient if they had used the net for the purpose, though unsuccessfully, of which there was evidence. Jenkin v. King, or Reg. v. Cornwall JJ., 41 L. J., M. C. 145; L. R. 7 Q. B. 478; 26 L. T. 428; 20 W. R. 669.

Abetting Poachers—Carrier buying Game from Poachers.]—M., a constable, at half-past seven in the morning in the month of October, stopped L. driving a carrier's cart on the highway, and after questioning L. searched it. M. found two pair of rabbits (of which L. gave no account), and seized them under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, s. 2. L., on being served with a summons, said "I bought them of a man I did not know. This was the first time I have been summoned. I won't have any more of them":—Held, that the evidence was not sufficient to justify the justices in convicting L. of aiding persons unknown, who unlawfully went on land in pursuit of game. Lawley v. Merricks, 51 J. P. 502.

Game, taking, during Fence Months.]—A pheasant was caught accidentally, between the 1st of February and the 1st of October, by a farmer on his own farm, in a wire set for rabbits and not for pheasants, but finding the pheasant in the wire still alive, he, after releasing it, and putting it on the ground, picked it up and carried it away with him. The 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 3, makes it unlawful "to kill or take any game between the 1st of February and the 1st of October":—Held, that the catching the pheasant in the wire, and the picking it up and carrying it away, was not one continuous act, but that the picking it up and carrying it away constituted a taking within the statute, but that it was material for the justices to consider whether the farmer took the bird away with a view only to restore it to liberty, or with a view to killing it or keeping it, in which latter case they ought to convict. Watkins v. Price, 47 L. J., M. C. 1; 37 L. T. 578; 27 W. R. 692.

The penalty for having possession of a partridge between the 1st February and 1st September does not attach if the bird was killed before or on the 1st February and kept afterwards. Simpson v. Unwin, 3 B. & Ad. 134; 1 L. J., M. C. 28.

By Dealer.]—See Loome v. Bailey, ante, col. 489.

F. GAMEKEEPERS.

Deputation of.]—The lord of a hundred or wapentake cannot grant a deputation to a gamekeeper. Ailesbury (Earl) v. Pattison, 1 Dougl. 28.

Bodies corporate, who were lords of manors, were not prevented by 3 Geo. 1, c. 11, from appointing unqualified persons their gamekeepers. Spurrier v. Vale, 1 Camp. 457; 10 East, 413.

A deputation to a gamekeeper, who is neither himself qualified to kill game, nor is a servant to the lord of a manor, need not state on the face of it that he is appointed to kill game for the use of the lord, and it will be presumed that whatever game he kills is for the lord's use till the contrary is proved. Ib.

A deputation is not admissible as evidence of the existence of a manor, without a foundation being first laid in fact. Rushworth v. Craven, M'Clel. & Y. 417.

The evidence of colourable title, necessary to make a deputation a defence to an action on the game laws, is such as primâ facie affords a fair presumption, 1st, of the existence of a manor; and, 2ndly, that there exists some serious claim to the manor on the part of the person under whom the defendant claims a right to act; and if the evidence actually given does not amount to that, it ought not to be left to the jury. Ib.

In an action for a penalty for using a gun to kill game without being qualified, evidence of the real title to a manor was admissible for the purpose of rebutting the presumption of the existence of a colourable title in the person under whom a gamekeeper deputed by the lord of the manor claimed to act. Hunt v. Andrews, 3 B. & Ald. 341.

Where a defendant pleaded that he had been deputed gamekeeper by the lord of a manor, and the jury negatived the existence of a manor:—Held, that this amounted to a negative of the existence of a reputed manor. Bush v. Green, 5 Scott, 289; 4 Bing. (N.C.) 41; 3 Hodges, 265; 7 L. J., C. P. 38; 1 Jur. 844.

Rights of—To carry Gun—Killing Dogs.]—A plea to an action for killing the plaintiff's dog cannot justify the act, by stating that the lord of the manor was possessed of a close, and that the defendant, as his gamekeeper, killed the dog when running after hares in that close, for the preservation of the hares, such plea not even stating that it was necessary to kill the dog for the preservation of the hares, nor stating that it was the dog of an unqualified person. Vere v. Cawdor (Lord), 11 East, 568; 11 R. R. 268.

The gamekeeper to a lord of a manor has a right to carry a gun anywhere out of the manor. Rogers v. Carter, 2 Wils. 387.

—— Other.]—A gamekeeper was authorised by his deputation to seize greyhounds, setting-dogs, ferrets, and to do all things belonging to the office of gamekeeper, according to the directions of the acts of parliament:—Held, that he was not thereby authorised to seize hounds. Grant v. Hulton, 1 B. & Ald. 134.

The 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 13, does not authorise a gamekeeper, appointed by the lord of a manor, to seize a gun used within the limits of the manor by a person not authorised to kill game, for want of a game certificate. Daddle or Duddle v. Hickton, 17 L. T. 549; 16 W. R. 372.

A gamekeeper is not empowered to seize game in the possession of an unqualified person, under a general direction given him by the lord of a manor, although such seizure was made within the manor. Bird v. Dale, 1 Moore, 290 ; 7 Taunt. 560.

In an action for taking hares, where the defendant justified seizing them by command of the lord of the manor, and for his use within the manor, the hares being found in the possession of an unqualified person, and the plaintiff traversed the command :—Held, that the command to be proved to maintain the issue must be such a command as would legally authorise the seizure ; and that evidence of a wrongful command would not maintain the issue. Ib.

It was no defence to an action for penalties under the game laws that the defendant acted bonâ fide as gamekeeper of the manor in which the offence was committed, under a deputation from a person claiming a right to appoint the gamekeeper, there being no ground for the claim. Calcraft v. Gibbs, 5 Term Rep. 19.

The gamekeeper of a person who has merely the right of shooting over land is not justified in apprehending a person unlawfully being upon such land by night for the purpose of taking game. Reg. v. Price, 5 Cox, C. C. 277.

Liabilities of.]—A gamekeeper appointed by a person having only a permission to shoot, trying to take a gun from a poacher, and in the scuffle causing a loaded gun to go off, which killed the poacher, is guilty of manslaughter. Reg. v. Wesley, 1 F. & F. 528.

A person having only a right of shooting over land has no right to empower keepers to apprehend parties trespassing in search of game ; and on their resisting with no greater violence than is used by the keepers, they will not be liable for an assault ; but if the trespass is in the night they may be indicted for night poaching. Reg. v. Wood, 1 F. & F. 470.

A. LAWFUL AND UNLAWFUL GAMES.

Horse Races and Matches.]—A trotting match at 25*l.* a side along a turnpike road is not an illegal race within 18 Geo. 2, c. 34, s. 11. Challand v. Bray, 1 D. (N.S.) 783 ; 11 L. J., Q. B. 204 ; 6 Jur. 626.

A steeplechase for 50*l.*, or upwards, is a lawful race within 18 Geo. 2, c. 32, s. 11, notwithstanding the repeal by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 5, of the provisions as to horse racing in 13 Geo. 2, c. 19. Evans v. Pratt, 4 Scott (N.R.) 378 ; 1 D. (N.S.) 505 ; 3 Man. & G. 759 ; 11 L. J., C. P. 87 ; 6 Jur. 152.

A horse race for 50*l.* or upwards is a legal race by virtue of 18 Geo. 2, c. 34, s. 11. Bentinck (Lord) v. Connop, 5 Q. B. 693 ; D. & M. 538 ; 13 L. J., Q. B. 125 ; 8 Jur. 336.

Since the repeal of the 13 Geo. 2, c. 19, by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 5, a horse race for money given by third persons, by way of prize, is not illegal. Applegarth v. Colley, 10 M. & W. 723 ; 12 L. J., Ex. 34 ; 7 Jur. 18.

Game—Skill or Chance.]—All games, whether of skill or of chance, being within 9 Anne, c. 14, s. 5, a promissory note given to secure the payment of money won at either is invalid. Sigel v. Jebb, 3 Stark. 1.

Coursing.]—A coursing match was an illegal game within 9 Anne, c. 14, s. 5. Daintree v. Hutchinson, 10 M. & W. 85 ; 11 L. J., Ex. 397 ; 6 Jur. 736.

Foot Races.]—A foot race is a lawful game sport or pastime, within the proviso in 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18. Batty v. Marriott, 5 C. B. 818 ; 17 L. J., C. P. 215 ; 12 Jur. 462. See Johnson v. Lansley, 12 C. B. 469 ; Coombs v. Dibble, 4 H. & C. 375 ; 35 L. J., Ex. 167 ; L. R. 1 Ex. 248 ; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 456 ; 14 L. T. 415 ; 14 W. R. 676.

Two persons agreed to run a foot race, and each of them deposited 10*l.* with a third person, the whole 20*l.* to be paid over to the winner :—Held, that the loser could not recover his deposit from the stockholder. Ib.

Where a number of persons assembled together in a public highway to enjoy a diversion called a stag hunt, which consisted in one of the number representing a stag, and the others chasing him, whereby an obstruction was caused :—Held, that this was a game within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 72. Pappin v. Maynard, 9 L. T. 327.

A foot race is within the statute 9 Anne, c. 14, entitled, "An Act for the Better Preventing of Excessive and Deceitful Gaming." Parker v. Alcock, 1 Younge, 361.

Cricket.]—A match at cricket for 20*l.* was within the 9 Anne, c. 14, s. 5, and 18 Geo. 2, c. 34, s. 8, and therefore illegal. Hodson v. Terrill, 1 C. & M. 797 ; 3 Tyr. 393; 1 D. P. C. 264; 2 L. J., Ex. 282.

A game at cricket for above 10*l.* was illegal, though the game was not finished in one day. Ib.

Hazard.]—The game of hazard is considered an unlawful game by 12 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 3, and 18 Geo. 2, c. 34, s. 2, whether played in private or at a public gaming-table. M'Kinnell v. Robinson, 3 M. & W. 434; 1 H. & H. 146 ; 7 L. J., Ex. 149 ; 2 Jur. 595.

Rouge et Noir.]—The game of "rouge et noir" is illegal. Rex v. Rogier, 1 B. & C. 272 ; 2 D. & R. 431 ; 25 R. R. 393.

Baccarat.]—Baccarat is a game of chance and unlawful within s. 4 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 38. Jenks v. Turpin, 53 L. J., M. C. 161 ; 13 Q. B. D. 505 ; 50 L. T. 808 ; 15 Cox, C. C. 486 ; 49 J. P. 20.

Chemin de fer.]—The game of "chemin de fer" is merely a form or variety of baccarat, a term which, as ordinarily understood in England, comprises both "baccarat banque" and "chemin de fer" ; it is, therefore, an unlawful game in the same sense and under the same circumstances as baccarat. Jenks v. Turpin (13 Q. B. D. 505) followed. Fairtlough v. Whitmore, 64 L. J., Ch. 386 ; 13 R. 402 ; 72 L. T. 354 ; 43 W. R. 421.

Cock Fights.]—A cock fight was a game within 9 Anne, c. 14, and no action could be maintained upon a wager on a cock fight. Squires v. Whisken, 3 Camp. 140.

Quære, whether cock fights are illegal. Martin v. Hewson, 10 Ex. 737 ; 24 L. J., Ex. 174 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 214.

Dominoes.]—A conviction which states that a keeper of a public-house, licensed under 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, has been "guilty of an offence against the tenor of his licence ; that is to say, that he knowingly suffered an unlawful game, to wit, the game of dominoes, to be played in his house," is bad, as the game of dominoes is not itself unlawful, and playing at dominoes does not necessarily amount to gaming within the meaning of the licence. Reg. v. Ashton, 1 El. & Bl. 286 ; 22 L. J., M. C. 1 ; 17 Jur. 50.

Billiards.]—The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, applies to billiards, though a lawful game, and the proviso does not extend to money won by one of the players from the other. Parsons v. Alexander, 5 El. & Bl. 263; 24 L. J., Q. B. 277; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 660 ; 3 W. R. 510.

Sweepstakes.]—Before the running of a horse race, several persons subscribed into the hands of a secretary, and deposited with a treasurer 15*s.* each ; the names of the subscribers were written on cards, and the names of the horses intended to run were written in like manner on other cards ; each set of cards was placed in a box, and the cards drawn out alternately, as chance directed ; each subscriber was considered as holding that name of a horse which came out next before the drawing of his own name, and the holders became entitled to prizes varying from 2*l.* downwards, as the horses whose names they held came in first, second, &c., in the race :—Held, before 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, an illegal game. Gatty v. Field, 9 Q. B. 431 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 408 ; 10 Jur. 980.

A horse race being about to be run, 155 persons subscribed 1*l.* each, upon the terms that the names of the horses should be placed on separate cards in one box, and the names of the subscribers on separate cards in another box, and that two disinterested persons should draw these cards by chance, one from each box after the other, and that the person whose name was drawn next after the name of the winning horse should be entitled to 100*l.* out of the entire fund :—Held, that if this was not a lottery, but a bet, it was an illegal bet, and not recoverable. Allport v. Nutt, 1 C. B. 974 ; 3 D. & L. 233 ; 14 L. J., C. P. 272 ; 9 Jur. 900.

B. WAGERS.

1. Invalidity Generally.

Application of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109.]—This statute does not extend to India. Thackoorseydass v. Dhondmull, 6 Moore, P. C. 300 ; 4 Moore, Ind. App. 339 ; 12 Jur. 315.

—— Retrospective Operation.]—Section 18 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, has not a retrospective operation, so as to prevent a party from prosecuting an action on a wager which he had commenced before the statute passed. Moore v. Durden, 2 Ex. 22 ; 12 Jur. 138. S. P., Pettumberdass v. Thackoorseydass. 5 Moore, Ind. App. 109 ; 7 Moore, P. C. 289 ; 15 Jur. 257.

Common Law.]—According to the common law of England (altered by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), an action might be maintained on a wager, although the parties had no previous interest in the question on which it was laid, if it was not against the interests or feelings of third persons, and did not lead to indecent evidence, and was not contrary to public policy. Thackoorseydass v. Dhondmull, 4 Moore, Ind. App. 339 ; 6 Moore, P. C. 300 ; 12 Jur. 315.

Trial of Actions—Discretion of Judge.]—It was discretionary with a judge, whether he would or would not try an idle or frivolous cause respecting a wager ; but if he suffered it to be tried, and the plaintiff recovered a legal verdict, the court would not on that ground disturb it. Robinson v. Mearns, 6 D. & R. 26 ; 3 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 124.

No action will lie on a wager respecting the mode of playing an illegal game ; and if such a cause is set down for trial, the judge will order it to be struck out of the paper. Brown v. Leeson, 2 H. Bl. 43 ; 3 R. R. 341.

If an action for money had and received is brought against the stakeholder on a dog-fight, to recover the stakes, on the ground that the plaintiff's dog won ; the judge will order it to be struck out of the cause paper, as he will not try which dog won the battle. Egerton v. Furzeman, 1 Car. & P. 613 ; R. & M. 213.

The lord chief justice refused to try an action to recover back a deposit paid to abide the event of a wrestling match which did not take place. Kennedy v. Gad, 3 Car. & P. 376; M. & M. 225.

The stakeholder upon a cricket match between eleven players on each side, at 5*s.* a head, was liable to the winner, if the judge, in the exercise of his discretion, thought proper to try the cause. Walpole v. Saunders, 7 D. & R. 130; 4 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 29.

Foot Race—Deposits with Stakeholder.]—A wager of less than 10*l.* on a foot race, to be run for a sum under 10*l.*, before 8 & 9 Vict. c. 108, s. 18, was legal and valid, and neither of the bettors could recover his stake from the stakeholder before the determination of the event. Emery v. Richards, 14 M. & W. 728; 15 L. J., Ex. 49.

An agreement to walk a match for 200*l.* a side, the money being deposited with a stakeholder, is a wager, and null and void, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18. Diggle v. Higgs, 46 L. J., Ex. 721; 2 Ex. D. 422; 37 L. T. 27; 25 W. R. 777—C. A.

Subscription or Contribution to Lawful Game.]—The deposit of money to abide the event of a walking match is not a subscription or contribution for a sum of money to be awarded to the winner of a lawful game within the proviso of s. 18 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109; and although the winner of the match cannot sue the loser or the stakeholder to recover the stakes, yet a depositor may maintain an action to recover back the share deposited by him with the stakeholder. Diggle v. Higgs, supra.

D. and S. agreed to walk a match for 200*l.* a side, and each deposited 200*l.* with the defendant to be paid to the winner. S. won the match. D., after the determination of the match, but before the money was paid over to S., demanded the sum deposited by him from the defendant:—Held, that he was entitled to recover his share of the deposit from the defendant. Ib. S. P., Batson v. Newman, 1 C. P. D. 573; 25 W. R. 85—C. A.

The plaintiff deposited with the defendant 200*l.* to abide the event of a match between a horse of the plaintiff and another horse belonging to G.; but before the day fixed for the race, he gave notice to the defendant that he revoked the authority to pay over the money, and demanded the return of it:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover such deposit. The contract under which the money was deposited was one by way of wagering, and was not an agreement to contribute a sum of money within the meaning of the proviso contained in s. 18 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, which proviso applies to contributions other than wagers. Diggle v. Higgs (2 Ex. D. 422) approved. Trimble v. Hill, 49 L. J., P. C. 49; 5 App. Cas. 342; 42 L. T. 103; 28 W. R. 479.

A person collected subscriptions from the members of a club to run greyhounds, on account of the treasurer, and became bankrupt:—Held, the treasurer might prove for the amount. King, Ex parte, Watkins, In re, 2 Mont. & Ayr. 676; 2 Deac. 23; 5 L. J., Bk. 45.

Horse Race already Run.]—A wager of more than 10*l.* on a horse race already run was not illegal, under 9 Anne, c. 14, s. 5. Pugh v. Jenkins, 1 Q. B. 631; 1 G. & D. 40; 10 L. J., Q. B. 201; 5 Jur. 1082.

Right of Action.]—No action can be maintained against the loser of a bet of 10*l.* for refusing to pay the same, though the bet is upon a legal horse race. Thorpe v. Coleman, 1 C. B. 990; 14 L. J., C. P. 260; 9 Jur. 903.

O. and T. made up a match for 100*l.*, to trot their respective horses a given distance. O. made up his stakes by getting his friends to take shares. The defendant took fifty shares, and disposed of twenty to plaintiff. O.'s horse won. The defendant promised the plaintiff to pay him as soon as he was paid by O. O. afterwards paid the defendant:—Held, that the plaintiff could not sue the defendant as for money had and received, the wager being illegal. Martin v. Smith, 4 Bing. (N.C.) 436; 6 Scott, 268; 6 D. P. C. 639; 1 Arn. 194; 7 L. J., C. P. 201; 2 Jur. 376.

No action will lie on a wager, though above 50*l.*, that a single horse shall run on the high road from A. to B., and arrive sooner than one of two horses placed at any distance the owner should please, such a race not being legalised by 13 Geo. 2, c. 19, or 18 Geo. 2, c. 34, s. 11. Whaley v. Pajot, 2 Bos. & P. 51.

Nor on a wager that the plaintiff could perform a certain journey in a postchaise and pair of horses in a given time. Ximenes v. Jaques, 6 Term Rep. 499: 1 Esp. 311.

C. was treasurer of a Derby lottery, and received the subscriptions. Tickets marked with the names of horses entered to run for the Derby stakes were issued to the subscribers; and it was understood that the holder of a ticket bearing the name of a winning horse would receive a prize in money. C. received 5*s.* for each, and was to pay the prizes. The holder of a ticket purchased of C. sold it to A. There was no written contract between any of the parties, and the party who bought of C. subscribed as for himself. The horse named on A.'s ticket won:—Held, that A. could not recover the amount of the prize from C., there being no privity between them. Jones v. Carter, 15 L. J., Q. B. 96; 8 Q. B. 134; 10 Jur. 33.

—— Where one Party can determine Wager.]—No action can be maintained by A. against B. on a wager, in which A. bets that B. will, and B. that he will not, pass his examination as an attorney; inasmuch as B. has the power of determining the wager in his own favour. Fisher v. Waltham, 4 Q. B. 889; D. & M. 142; 12 L. J., Q. B. 330; 7 Jur. 625.

Contracts in the Nature of Wagers.]—An action was brought for a breach of the following agreement:—The plaintiff agreed to buy, and the defendant agreed to sell, his horse Partington for 200*l.* provided he trotted eighteen miles within one hour within one month: and if the task was not performed, the horse was thereby sold to the plaintiff for 1*s.*, which the plaintiff that day paid to the defendant. At the trial, it appeared that the task was not performed, and that the defendant had refused to deliver the horse to the plaintiff. A verdict was found for the plaintiff:—Held, upon a motion to arrest the judgment, that this agreement was illegal, and within 9 Anne, c. 14. Brogden v. Marriott, 3 Bing. (N.C.) 88; 2 Scott, 712; 2 Hodges, 136; 5 L. J., C. P. 302.

An agreement between two persons, each of whom is possessed of a horse, to ride a race, the winner to have both horses, is null and void, being an agreement by way of wagering, within 8 & 9

Vict. c. 109, s. 18, and not an agreement to contribute towards a prize to be awarded to the winner of a lawful game, within the meaning of the proviso in that section. Coombs v. Dibble, 4 H. & C. 375; 35 L. J., Ex. 167; L. R. 1 Ex. 248; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 456; 14 L. T. 415; 14 W. R. 676.

In the course of a bargain between the plaintiff and the defendant for the sale of goods, a dispute arose as to the price of similar goods on a former sale; and the following memorandum was signed:—"The plaintiff states that the goods sold by him to the defendant, and afterwards burnt, were invoiced at 5*s*. 9*d*. per cwt. of 112 lbs. The defendant says the price was 6*s*. per cwt. The losing man is to pay for the winner one gallon of best brandy. The five tons of rags now lying at the Salford station are to be regulated, as to price, according to the above, viz. the plaintiff says they are invoiced at 5*s*. 9*d*.; the defendant says 6*s*. It is also agreed by both parties that if the plaintiff is wrong, they are to be charged at 3*s*. only; if the defendant is wrong he is to pay for the same 6*s*.":—Held, that, independently of the clause about the brandy, this was a contract by way of wagering within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, and therefore could not be enforced by the plaintiff in an action for goods bargained and sold. Rourke v. Short, 5 El. & Bl. 904; 25 L. J., Q. B. 196; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 352; 4 W. R. 247.

The plaintiff was a "tipster," i.e. gave information as to the probable winners of horse races. Upon his giving the name of a horse to the defendant as the probable winner of a certain race, it was agreed between them that the plaintiff should have 2*l*. on the horse at 25 to 1; that is to say, that if the defendant backed the horse and won, the plaintiff should have 50*l*. out of his winnings, but if the horse lost the plaintiff should pay the defendant 2*l*. The defendant did back the horse and it won, and the plaintiff thereupon claimed 50*l*. out of the defendant's winnings:—Held, that the agreement was void within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, and that the 50*l*. could not be recovered. Higginson v. Simpson, 46 L. J., C. P. 192; 2 C. P. D. 76; 36 L. T. 17; 25 W. R. 303.

A wager, under the disguise of a contract to pay a reward for information, is illegal. Ib.

The defendants, who were the proprietors and vendors of a medical preparation called "The Carbolic Smoke Ball," published the following advertisement:—"100*l*. reward will be paid to any person who contracts the increasing epidemic, influenza, after having used the ball three times daily for two weeks" in a certain specified manner; "1,000*l*. is deposited with the A. bank, showing our' (the defendants') sincerity in the matter." The plaintiff, on the faith of this advertisement, purchased from a chemist one of the defendants' smoke balls, and used it in the manner required, and then contracted influenza:—Held, that such a contract is not a contract by way of wagering within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109. Gerhard v. Bates (2 El. & Bl. 476), discussed. Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co., 62 L. J., Q. B. 257; [1893] 1 Q. B. 256; 4 R. 176; 67 L. T. 837; 41 W. R. 210; 57 J. P. 325—C. A.

H. and W. each deposited 500*l*. in the hands of a stakeholder, upon an agreement that if W., before a certain date, proved the convexity or curvature to and fro of any canal, river, or lake, by actual measurement and demonstration to the satisfaction of certain referees he should receive both sums, but that if he failed, then H. should receive both. The experiment was made, and the referees decided in favour of W.:—Held, that the agreement was a wager, and consequently null and void, within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18. Hampden v. Walsh, 45 L. J., Q. B. 238; 1 Q. B. D. 189; 33 L. T. 852; 24 W. R. 607.

—— Sale of Stocks and Shares.]—See infra, col. 507.

Wagering Policies—Want of Insurable Interest.]—J. H. effected with the defendant company two policies of insurance on the life of his father, J. H., in which he had no insurable interest. According to the policies, the premiums were to be paid weekly. J. H., the son, continued to make these weekly payments for some years. J. H., the father, had at first no knowledge of the insurances effected on his life; but when he became aware of them he objected to their being continued, and gave notice to that effect to the company. J. H., the son, then gave notice to the defendants that the policies were at an end, and claimed the return of the amount of the premiums. The defendants refused to pay, and J. H., the son, brought his action for their recovery, and the county court judge gave judgment for the plaintiff:—Held, that under the circumstances of the case the policies were wagering policies, and consequently the premiums paid in respect of them could not be recovered. Howard v. Refuge Friendly Society, 54 L. T. 644.

See further, INSURANCE (LIFE).

Rescission of Contract by Tossing.]—The plaintiff and the defendant had agreed in writing that the plaintiff should take a lease of the defendant and buy a goodwill and fixtures for 800*l*., of which 25*l*. was to be paid, and was paid, by the plaintiff as a deposit. Afterwards the defendant offered the plaintiff 50*l*. to be off the bargain. The plaintiff refused this, but the parties agreed that it should be settled by a toss whether the defendant should give the plaintiff 50*l*. or 75*l*. to be off the bargain. The defendant won the toss, and when the plaintiff sued him for the 50*l*., and for the 25*l*. deposit, set up that the contract of rescission was a wagering one and void, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18. The jury found that the deposit was not in contemplation of the parties, but that a rescission of the contract was in fact made:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover both the 50*l*., as consideration for the rescission, and also the 25*l*. deposit. Wilson v. Cole, 36 L. T. 702.

2. INVALIDITY FOR IMMORALITY AND IMPOLICY.

An action will not lie upon a voluntary wager between two indifferent persons, upon the sex of a third person, apparently a man, having acted and continuing to act as such in various public characters. First, because such inquiry tends to indecent evidence; and secondly, because it tends to disturb the peace of the individual and of society. De Costa v. Jones, Cowp. 729.

A policy upon the sex of a person is a wagering policy within 14 Geo. 3, c. 48. Roebuck v. Hammerton, Cowp. 737.

And an action cannot be maintained upon a wager whether an unmarried woman has had a child. Ditchburn v. Goldsmith, 4 Camp. 152.

A wager by which the defendant received from the plaintiff 100 guineas on the 31st May, 1802, in consideration of paying the plaintiff a guinea a day as long as Napoleon Buonaparte (then first consul of the French Republic) should live, which bet arose out of a conversation upon the probability of his coming to a violent death by assassination or otherwise, is void on the grounds of immorality and impolicy. Gilbert v. Sykes, 16 East, 150; 14 R. R. 327.

A wager between two voters, with respect to the event of an election of a member to serve in parliament laid before the poll began, is illegal. Allen v. Hearn, 1 Term Rep. 56; 1 R. R. 149.

A wager respecting the amount of any branch of the public revenues is illegal, because it leads to an improper discussion, and is contrary to sound policy. Atherfold v. Beard, 2 Term Rep. 610; 1 R. R. 556.

But the mere circumstance that a wager refers to the public revenue does not establish its illegality. Thackoorseydass v. Dhondmull, 6 Moore, P. C. 300; 4 Moore Ind. App. 339; 12 Jur. 315.

The mere circumstance that a wager has a tendency to make a party to it do what is wrong, not being a matter of duty, will not, according to the common law of England, vitiate the wager. So, where a wager in India related to the price of opium at a future day, the proceeds of which formed part of the government revenue, and it was the interest of one party to the wager to raise, and of the other to depress the price of opium:—Held, that the wager was legal. Ib.

So a wager as to the conviction or the acquittal of a prisoner on trial on a criminal charge is illegal, as being against public policy. Evans v. Jones, 5 M. & W. 77; 2 H. & H. 67; 8 L. J., Ex. 173; 3 Jur. 318.

An engagement, in consideration of 40 guineas, to pay 100*l.*, in case Brazilian stock should be done at a certain sum on a certain day, subscribed by several persons, each for himself, is a policy of insurance, and void, under 14 Geo. 3, c. 48. Paterson v. Powell, 9 Bing. 320, 620; 2 M. & Scott, 399, 773; 2 L. J., C. P. 13.

A wager that A. had purchased of B. is not void at common law, or prohibited by 14 Geo. 3, c. 48. Good v. Elliott, 3 Term Rep. 693; 1 R. R. 803.

3. Money Paid by Third Person.

Request to Bet—Implied Authority to Pay.]—A testator had requested a friend to bet for him on certain horses, and the friend paid the amount lost by the bets:—Held, that the request to bet implied an authority to pay the bets if lost, and that the friend was entitled to prove against the estate for the amount paid by him in respect of the bets. Bubb v. Yelverton, Ker, In re, 24 L. T. 822; 19 W. R. 739.

The plaintiff, a turf commission agent, was employed by the defendant to make bets for him in the plaintiff's own name. After the plaintiff had so made some bets, but before he had paid those which were lost, the defendant repudiated the bets. On the settling day the plaintiff, who was a member of Tattersall's, paid the bets, as, if he had been a defaulter, he would have been subject to certain disqualifications in connection with racing matters, and he then sued the defendant for the amount so paid:—Held, that he was entitled to recover the amount so paid. Read v. Anderson, 53 L. J., Q. B. 532; 13 Q. B. D. 779; 51 L. T. 55; 32 W. R. 950; 49 J. P. 4—C. A.

A plaintiff who, by the defendant's authority, lays illegal bets in the defendant's name, and losing, pays them without a subsequent express direction so to do, cannot recover from the defendant the amount of the money so paid. Clayton v. Dilly, 4 Taunt. 165.

Where a dinner is ordered at a tavern by the authority of two persons who have laid a wager of a rump and a dozen, if the winner pays the bill he may maintain an action against the loser for money paid, to recover the amount. Hussey v. Crickett, 3 Camp. 168.

Money paid in discharge of a lost bet made for another person is recoverable from such other person. Oldham v. Ramsden, 44 L. J., C. P. 309; 32 L. T. 825.

In an action for money paid by the plaintiff for the defendant's use at his request, it is no answer that the money was paid in discharge of claims against the defendant under wagering contracts, void by the statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18. Knight v. Cambers, 15 C. B. 562; 3 C. L. R. 565; 24 L. J., C. P. 121; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 525.

It is no defence to an action against the acceptor of a bill of exchange that the bill was given for bets on horse-races, made by the drawer as the acceptor's agent, but paid by him without the acceptor's request. Oulds v. Harrison, 10 Ex. 572; 3 C. L. R. 353; 24 L. J., Ex. 66; 3 W. R. 160.

Effect of Gaming Act, 1892.]—The Gaming Act, 1892, is not retrospective, and therefore a betting agent can recover moneys due to him before the act came into operation, though the action was commenced after that date. Knight v. Lee, 62 L. J., Q. B. 28; [1893] 1 Q. B. 41; 5 R. 54; 67 L. T. 688; 41 W. R. 125; 57 J. P. 117.

Section 1 of the Gaming Act, 1892, prevents a plaintiff who has, at the defendant's request, paid money in settlement of lost bets, from recovering the money from the defendant, even though the plaintiff was no party to the betting. Tatam v. Reeve, 62 L. J., Q. B. 30; [1893] 1 Q. B. 44; 5 R. 83; 67 L. T. 683; 41 W. R. 174; 57 J. P. 118.

—— In respect of Wagering Contract.]—The defendant, who had agreed to fight a boxing match with another person for stakes to be deposited with a stakeholder by himself and the other combatant, requested the plaintiff to lend him the money for his stake. The plaintiff advanced the money, which was deposited with the stakeholder. The defendant won the match and received the stakes. In an action by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant the money advanced as money lent:—Held, that the money was paid by the plaintiff in respect of a contract rendered null and void by the Gaming Act, 1845, within the meaning of s. 1 of the Gaming Act, 1892, and the action could not be maintained. Carney v. Plimmer, 66 L. J., Q. B. 415; [1897] 1 Q. B. 634; 76 L. T. 374; 45 W. R. 385; 61 J. P. 324—C. A.

4. Money Lent by Third Person.

For Payment of Bets.]—Money lent to enable the borrower to pay a bet which he has already lost does not constitute a debt for an illegal consideration within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 1, and is consequently recoverable by the lender. Pyke, Ex parte, Lister, In re, 47 L. J., Bk. 100; 8 Ch. D. 754; 38 L. T. 923; 26 W. R. 806.

For Illegal Game.]—Money lent for the purpose of playing an illegal game cannot be recovered back. M'Kinnell v. Robinson, 3 M. & W. 434; 1 H. & H. 146; 7 L. J., Ex. 149; 2 Jur. 595.

—— By Licensed Victualler.]—Money lent by a licensed publican for the purpose of enabling a guest to play at skittles cannot be recovered, the "knowingly suffering any unlawful games, or any gaming whatsoever," upon the premises, being an offence against the tenor of the publican's licence which subjects him to penalties under 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 21. Foot v. Baker, 6 Scott (N.R.) 301; 5 Man. & G. 335; 7 Jur. 131.

5. Relation of Principal and Agent.

Employment of Principal's Money by Agent.]—An agreement between a principal and his agent that the agent shall employ moneys of the principal in betting on horse-races, and pay over the winnings therefrom to his principal, is not a contract by way of gaming or wagering rendered void by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, nor is it illegal. Beeston v. Beeston, 45 L. J., Ex. 230; 1 Ex. D. 13; 33 L. T. 700; 24 W. R. 96.

Agent employed to make Bets—Action for Winnings.]—The Gaming Act, 1892, does not deprive a principal, employing an agent to make bets for him, of his right to recover from such agent any sums received by the agent on account of such bets. De Mattos v. Benjamin, 63 L. J., Q. B. 248; 10 R. 103; 70 L. T. 560; 42 W. R. 284.

The plaintiff employed the defendant to make bets for him upon commission. The defendant having done so received from the losers money in respect of bets so made which were won by him. The plaintiff claimed this money from the defendant, but the defendant refused to pay it on the ground that it was money won upon a wager, and therefore that the plaintiff could not recover, in consequence of the provisions of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover; that the defendant had received the money for the use of the plaintiff; that the provisions of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, only apply to the original contract between the two persons who make a bet, and that they do not make void a contract such as that which the plaintiff had made with the defendant. Bridger v. Savage, 54 L. J., Q. B. 464; 15 Q. B. D. 363; 53 L. T. 129; 33 W. R. 891; 49 J. P. 725—C. A.

—— Breach of Instructions.]—The plaintiff having employed the defendant to bet on commission, and the defendant having failed to make certain bets pursuant to the plaintiff's instructions, the plaintiff sued the defendant for breach of contract as his agent, claiming as damages the excess of gains over losses which should have been received by the defendant, had the bets in question been made, after deducting the amount of his commission:—Held, that as by statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, the bets would not have been recoverable at law, the plaintiff could not maintain the action. Cohen v. Kittell, 58 L. J., Q. B. 241; 22 Q. B. D. 680; 60 L. T. 932; 37 W. R. 400; 53 J. P. 469.

6. In Other Countries.

Money won at play or lent for the purpose of gambling in a country where the games are not illegal, may be recovered in the courts of this country. Quarrier v. Colston, 1 Ph. 147; 12 L. J., Ch. 57; 6 Jur. 959.

It is no defence to an action for money lost in France that it was lent for the purpose of gaming there. King v. Kemp, 8 L. T. 255.

Bills made in France and on French stamps cannot be enforced in England if they are given for a gambling debt. Winne v. Callender, 1 Russ. 293.

7. Recovery of Deposits.

Repudiation of Wager before Determination of Event.]—The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, which avoids contracts by way of gaming or wagering, and prohibits the maintenance of actions for the recovery of money won upon any wager, or deposited in the hands of a stakeholder to abide the event of any wager, does not preclude the party who repudiates the wager, before the event is ascertained, from recovering from the stakeholder the amount of his deposit. Varney v. Hickman, 5 C. B. 271; 5 D. & L. 364; 17 L. J., C. P. 102.

The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, does not preclude a party who repudiates a wager before the event is ascertained from recovering from the stakeholder the amount of his deposit. Martin v. Hewson, 10 Ex. 737; 24 L. J., Ex. 174; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 214.

Where money is deposited with a stakeholder to abide the result of a wager, the depositor may revoke his authority before the money is paid over by the stakeholder and recover from the stakeholder the money deposited by him. The words "any sum of money paid" in s. 1 of the Gaming Act, 1892, mean "paid out and out," and do not apply to money "deposited" to be handed over to a third person. O'Sullivan v. Thomas, 64 L. J., Q. B. 398; [1895] 1 Q. B. 698; 15 R. 253; 72 L. T. 285; 43 W. R. 269; 59 J. P. 134.

It is a good answer to an action for money had and received that the money was deposited in the hands of the defendant to abide the event on which a wager was made, and was claimed by the plaintiff as the winner of the wager, and that he did not repudiate the wager, nor demand back his money before the event thereof, and had never repudiated the wager, nor claimed the money on any ground than as the winner of the wager, and that no part of the money was a subscription or a contribution, or due on any agreement to subscribe or contribute for or towards any plate, prize, or sum of money to be awarded to the winner or winners of any lawful game, sport, pastime, or exercise. Savage v. Madder, 36 L. J., Ex. 178; 16 L. T. 600; 15 W. R. 910.

When Stakes not paid over.]—When the loser of an illegal wager repudiates the wager at any time before the stakes have been paid over by the stakeholder, and before action, he can recover his own stake. Graham v. Thompson, Ir. R. 2 C. L. 64; 16 W. R. 206.

Liability of a Stakeholder.]—A stakeholder receiving country bank notes as money, and paying them over wrongfully to the original staker after he has lost the wager, is answerable to the winner for money had and received to his use. Pickard v. Bankes, 13 East, 20.

But not after the wager has been determined against the plaintiff. Brandon v. Hibbert, 4 Camp. 37.

In order to maintain an action against a stakeholder to recover the amount of stakes deposited with him to abide the determination of certain persons on a legal event, the plaintiff must either have the decision in his favour, or show that it was no longer practicable to obtain it. Brown v. Overbury, 11 Ex. 715; 25 L. J., Ex. 169; 4 W. R. 252.

Notice to Stakeholder.]—Where A. and B. deposited money in the hands of a stakeholder to abide the event of a boxing match, and after the battle A. claimed the whole sum from the stakeholder, and threatened him with an action if he paid it over to B., which he nevertheless did, by the direction of the umpire:—Held, that A. was entitled to recover from him his own stakes, as money had and received to his use, on the ground of its being an illegal wager. It would be otherwise if no notice was given. Hastelow v. Jackson, 8 B. & C. 221; 2 M. & Ry. 209; 6 L. J. (O.S.) K. B. 318.

The plaintiff deposited with the defendant 200*l.* to abide the event of a match between a horse of the plaintiff and another horse belonging to G.; but before the day fixed for the race, he gave notice to the defendant that he revoked the authority to pay over the money, and demanded the return of it:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover such deposit. The contract under which the money was deposited was one by way of wagering, and therefore null and void under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18. Diggle v. Higgs (2 Ex. D. 422) approved. Trimble v. Hill, 49 L. J., P. C. 49; 5 App. Cas. 342; 42 L. T. 103; 28 W. R. 479.

D. and S. agreed to walk a match for 200*l.* a side, and each deposited 200*l.* with the defendant to be paid to the winner. S. won the match. D. after the determination of the match, but before the money was paid over to S., demanded the sum deposited by him from the defendant:—Held, that he was entitled to recover his share of the deposit from the defendant. Diggle v. Higgs, 46 L. J., Ex. 721; 2 Ex. D. 422; 37 L. T. 27; 25 W. R. 777—C. A.

When the loser of an illegal wager repudiates it and demands his deposit back at any time before the stakes have been paid over by the stakeholder, the authority of the latter is determined; and the loser may recover his own stake as money had and received by the stakeholder to his use. Hampden v. Walsh, 45 L. J., Q. B. 238; 1 Q. B. D. 189; 33 L. T. 852; 24 W. R. 607.

H. and B. deposited 50*l.* each with N., and entered into a written agreement that the 100*l.* should be paid to H. if his horse trotted eighteen miles in an hour, and if not, then to B. The referee decided that the horse did trot the distance within the hour. B. demanded his 50*l.* back from N. before the money had been paid over to H.:—Held, that B. was entitled to recover his stake back from N., for that the transaction was simply a wager, and did not come within the proviso in 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, as to contributions to a prize or sum of money to be awarded to the winner of any lawful game, sport, pastime, or exercise. Batson v. Newman, 1 C. P. D. 573; 25 W. R. 85—C. A.

Death of Stakeholder—Liability of Estate.]—The amount of a bet lost at a horse-race was paid by the loser into the hands of a third party, upon the faith of the promise of the latter to pay it to the winner. The person who received the money died before he had paid it to the winner. A claim filed in equity by the winner to be paid the amount out of the assets of the deceased was disallowed. Beyer v. Adams, 26 L. J., Ch. 841; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 709; 5 W. R. 795.

—— Payment by Administratrix.]—Moneys which had been deposited with a testator to abide the result of bets between himself and the depositors, were, after his death, returned to the depositors by his administratrix, who, at the same time, paid the amount of such of the bets as were not pending at his death, but had been decided against him in his lifetime:—Held, that in respect of the deposits so returned upon bets not decided in his lifetime, the administratrix was entitled to credit in her accounts against the general estate; but not so in respect of the sums paid for bets decided before his death, and for the deposits upon such bets. Manning v. Purcell, 7 De G. M. & G. 55; 3 Eq. R. 387; 24 L. J., Ch. 522; 3 W. R. 273.

Before 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18.]—Money deposited upon an illegal wager, laid on a future event, might be recovered before the event happened. Aubert v. Walsh, 3 Taunt. 277; 12 R. R. 651.

So money deposited on an illegal wager might be recovered back from the winner after the wager had been lost. Lacaussade v. White, 7 Term Rep. 535; 2 Esp. 629.

—— Payment made with Loser's Consent.]—But where the money deposited on an illegal wager had been paid over to the winner by the consent of the loser, the latter could not afterwards maintain an action against the former to recover back his deposit. Howson v. Hancock, 8 Term Rep. 575.

—— Before Payment over.]—If a wager was deposited with a stakeholder on the event of a battle to be fought by the parties laying the wager, and it was not paid over, though the battle was fought, either party might recover from the stakeholder the sum deposited by him. Cotton v. Thurland, 5 Term Rep. 405.

A person who deposited in the hands of a stakeholder a sum as a wager, on the event of a boxing-match between himself and another, might, after committing a breach of the peace by fighting, recover back his deposit from the stakeholder, having demanded it before it was paid over. Smith v. Bickmore, 4 Taunt. 474.

8. Avoidance of Securities.

a. Generally.

Effect of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 1.]—The statute has a prospective operation. Hitchcock v. Way, 6 A. & E. 943; 2 N. & P. 72; W. W. & D. 491; 6 L. J., K. B. 215.

Semble, that the construction put by some of the old authorities on 9 Anne, c. 14, s. 1—namely, that it only avoided the security given for a gaming debt, and not the contract to pay the debt itself—was erroneous; but, at all events, such construction cannot be held good since 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41. Applegarth v. Colley, 10 M. & W. 723; 12 L. J., Ex. 34; 7 Jur. 18.

Judgment obtained Adversely.]—In an action against the marshal, for an escape of a prisoner in custody under an execution on a judgment obtained adversely against him, it was no defence that the judgment was to recover the amount of a bill of exchange given for money lost at play, the 16 Car. 2, c. 7, and 9 Anne, c. 14, not including judgments obtained adversely, but those only given to secure money lost at play. Chapman v. Lane, 1 G. & D. 523; 11 A. & E. 980; 10 L. J., Ex. 543—Ex. Ch.

Recovery of Deposit—Deposit with Party to Wager—Decision of Wager and Appropriation of Deposit before Repudiation.]—Section 18 of the Gaming Act, 1845, which provides that "no suit shall be brought or maintained for recovering any sum of money or valuable thing which shall have been deposited in the hands of any person to abide the event on which any wager shall have been made," applies to deposits in the hands of one of the parties to the wager as well as deposits in the hands of third persons. The plaintiff, having entered into gambling transactions with the defendants in respect of differences upon pretended purchases and sales of stocks and shares, deposited with the defendants 3,000*l.* in cash as security for any losses which should appear on the accounts between them to have been sustained by him. The 3,000*l.* were from time to time appropriated by the defendants in payment of the plaintiff's losses. The deposit having been exhausted, the plaintiff closed his account with the defendants and commenced an action to recover the 3,000*l.*:—Held, that the events having happened, to abide which the 3,000*l.* had been deposited, and the money having been appropriated by the defendants before there was any repudiation of the transactions by the plaintiff, he was precluded by s. 18 of the Gaming Act, 1845, from maintaining the action. Manning v. Purcell (7 De G. M. & G. 55; 24 L. J., Ch. 522) followed. Strachan v. Universal Stock Exchange (64 L. J., Q. B. 723, affirmed next case) distinguished. Strachan v. Universal Stock Exchange (No. 2), 65 L. J., Q. B. 178; [1895] 2 Q. B. 697; 73 L. T. 492; 44 W. R. 90; 59 J. P. 789—C. A.

—— Securities deposited as "Cover" for Transactions in Stocks and Shares.]—Transactions between stockjobbers and their customers entered into under written terms that none but real purchases of stocks and shares were intended, but in which in fact there was no intention to purchase, but only to speculate in differences, are gaming transactions, and therefore void under the Gaming Act, 1845, s. 18. But securities deposited by the customer as "cover" for any balance which might be found to be due from him to the stockjobbers are not "deposited to abide the event on which any wager should have been made" within the meaning of that section, and the customer is not precluded from maintaining an action for their recovery. Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan (No. 1), 65 L. J., Q. B. 428; [1896] A. C. 166; 74 L. T. 468; 44 W. R. 497; 60 J. P. 468—H. L. (E.)

Penalty — Discovery.] — The forfeiture of securities under the stat. 9 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, for moneys lent at play is not a penalty of such a nature as to protect a party from discovering whether the consideration of the security on which he brings his action was not moneys lent at play. Sloman v. Kelly, 4 Y. & Coll. 169.

I O U.]—Quære, whether an I O U is security within the stat. 9 Anne, c. 14. Wilkinson v. L'Eangier, 2 Y. & Coll. 363.

Relief when granted by Court.]—The court will grant an injunction to prevent the negotiating a note obtained at play, upon affidavit, before service of subpœna. —— v. Blackwood, 3 Anstr. 351.

Bills of exchange made in France on French stamps, and substituted in France for English bills of exchange which were originally given for a gambling debt, ordered to be delivered up. Wynne v. Callander, 1 Russ. 293.

Injunction to restrain the defendants from suing in Ireland upon a bill of exchange given by the plaintiff for a gambling debt, under the circumstances, continued. Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to stay the proceedings in foreign courts. Portarlington (Lord) v. Soulby, 3 Myl. & K. 104.

A bond executed for a sum of money lost at billiards is void. Kenny v. Browne, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 514.

Bond for money won at play, and a part of it paid. The court ordered the money to be repaid, and relieved against the bond for the remainder. Rawden v. Shadwell, Ambl. 269.

One apprentice gives a bond to another apprentice for 50*l.* won at play. Bond decreed to be delivered up, gaming among apprentices being of the worst consequence. Woodroffe v. Farnham, 2 Vern. 291.

The court ordered securities given by the plaintiff to prevent a prosecution for cheating at cards to be delivered up. Osbaldiston v. Simpson, 13 Sim. 513; 7 Jur. 734.

A., having engaged to run a foot race for 1,000*l.*, prevails on B. and C. to advance the money required for making good the stakes; and it is agreed by the three that bets shall be made by B. and C. on A., and that the winnings and losses shall be borne by all three. A. loses the race, and B. and C. pay on account of themselves and A. the bets lost. A. executes to B. and C. a mortgage for the amount of his share of the money so paid by them, and subsequently sells the estate to them, for a consideration of which the money so due to them forms part. Bill by the son of A., praying a declaration that he was entitled under the stat. 9 Anne, c. 14, to the estate, or at least to the mortgage, and relief founded on that declaration. A demurrer for want of equity was overruled. Parker v. Alcock, Younge, 361.

The court will not assist a plaintiff seeking to have a contract set aside on the ground of fraud, if the contract be in its nature one of gambling or wagering. Where a person having only thirty shares in a company, in the course of a fortnight entered into contracts for the sale of between seven hundred and eight hundred shares, to be delivered on a future day, and was unable to deliver them in consequence of the shares of the company being under the control of the persons to whom he had agreed to sell, the court refused to assist him on an interlocutory application, though the fraud was not denied by the defendants. Rees v. Fernie, 4 N. R. 539.

In the year 1827 a bond to secure the payment of a sum of money was given to S. by L.; M. joined in the bond as surety. In 1829 L. died. In 1832 S. brought an action in Ireland against M. upon the bond, and M. then filed a bill in Ireland for an injunction to restrain the action, on the ground that the bond was granted on a gambling transaction. An injunction was granted; and subsequently a decree nisi for taking the bill pro confesso was made against S., and the order was served upon him two days before his death, which happened in 1833. In 1837 S.'s personal representatives brought an action upon the bond against M., in England. M. then filed a bill for an injunction. S.'s representatives, in their answer, stated that they were entirely ignorant as to the nature of the consideration for the bond, and that they had found among S.'s papers certain memorandum books relating to bets upon horse-races, which books they had destroyed as useless, but they denied that the books showed the consideration for the bond. Upon this answer the vice-chancellor granted an injunction, which was continued, upon appeal, without obliging the plaintiff to bring the money into court. Milltown (Earl) v. Stewart, 8 Sim. 371; 3 Myl. & C. 18; 6 L. J., Ch. 298.

b. Bills of Exchange.

Renewals.]—To a declaration by drawer against acceptor of two bills of exchange for 50*l.* each, he pleaded that he accepted the bills at the request of a third person, to whom he had lost 100*l.* by gaming, and in consideration of the sum so lost; that there was no other consideration, and that the plaintiff, when the bills were drawn and accepted, had notice of the gaming consideration. It appeared on the trial that the defendant at first accepted, in consideration of the gaming transaction, a bill drawn by the plaintiff for 100*l.*, which was dishonoured, and the plaintiff then gave him time, and took the acceptances declared upon by way of renewal; and that the plaintiff at that time knew of the gaming transaction:—Held, first, no material variance, the evidence showing sufficiently that the acceptances declared upon were given for the original gaming transaction. Hay v. Ayling, 20 L. J., Q. B. 171; 16 Q. B. 423; 15 Jur. 605.

Held, secondly, not material that the latter acceptances were given partly on a new consideration, namely, the extension of time for payment. Ib.

The validity of the plea was not affected by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, which makes the contract, but not a security, void; for under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 1, the consideration for the security is illegal, and the plaintiff was not a bonâ fide holder. Ib.

Special Plea—Evidence.]—To an action by indorsee against acceptor of a bill, he pleaded, that, before the accepting of the bill, he, at one sitting and meeting, and on credit, lost to C., who won of the defendant, a sum exceeding 100*l.* by gaming and playing at vingt-un; that afterwards, and before the accepting, the defendant, at one sitting and meeting, and on credit, lost to C., who won of the defendant, a sum exceeding 100*l.*, by gaming and playing at the game of hazard; and the sums, making together 2,654*l.*, having been won and lost, and remaining unpaid, it was agreed between C. and the defendant, that 500*l.*, parcel thereof, should be secured to C. by his acceptance. At the trial it was proved that there were five bills for 500*l.* each, that C. and the defendant had played together at vingt-un and hazard, and that C. had won of the defendant more than the amount of the five bills; but there was no evidence of any loss at vingt-un. It did not appear that there had been more than two meetings at which the defendant lost:—Held, first, that there was evidence to warrant the finding of the jury that more than 100*l.* had been lost at one sitting. Cooke v. Stratford or Stafford, 13 M. & W. 379; 2 D. & L. 399; 14 L. J., Ex. 66.

Held, secondly, that, as there was no evidence of any loss at vingt-un, the plea was not proved as framed. Ib.

Accepted by Third Party.]—A. and B. jointly made bets with third persons on a horse-race, B. received the money, and gave A. a bill accepted by C. (who was no party to the betting) for his share:—Held, that A. was not precluded by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, from suing C. upon the bill. Johnson v. Lansley, 12 C. B. 469.

Payment by Agent.]—It is no defence to an action against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, that the bill was given for bets on horse-races, made by the drawer as the acceptor's agent, but paid by him without the acceptor's request. Oulds v. Harrison, 10 Ex. 572; 3 C. L. R. 353; 24 L. J., Ex. 66; 3 W. R. 160.

See also BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

c. Cheques.

Illegality of Consideration.]—To a declaration upon a cheque, a plea that the plaintiff and the defendant gamed together, by playing at billiards, and that the cheque was made to secure a sum of money won by the plaintiff from the defendant by such gaming is a good defence under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 1. Parsons v. Alexander, 5 El. & Bl. 263; 24 L. J., Q. B. 277; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 660; 3 W. R. 510.

A cheque given in payment for counters obtained from the secretary of a club to enable the purchaser to gamble at cards cannot be sued upon by the secretary. St. Croix v. Morris, 1 Cab. & E. 485.

Payment by Bankers.]—The plaintiff, in payment of bets on horse-races, gave the defendant three cheques on the plaintiff's bankers payable to bearer on demand, which were indorsed by the defendant to third persons, to whom they were paid by the plaintiff's bankers; in an action to recover back the sums so paid, the defendant sought to set off the amount of a cheque drawn by M., payable to bearer on demand, which was given by the defendant to the plaintiff in payment of a bet and was cashed by him:—Held, first, that the word "bill" in 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41, ss. 1, 2, includes a cheque; that the payment of the cheques by the plaintiff's bankers, being a payment by his direction, on his account, and in discharge of his liability, was a payment by the drawer of the cheque to the indorsee thereof within s. 2, and that, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Lynn v. Bell, Ir. R. 10 C. L. 487.

Held, secondly, that the plea of set-off could not be sustained, inasmuch as M., and not the defendant himself, paid the amount. Ib.

d. Promissory Notes.

Not within the Statute.]—A promissory note, given to secure money advanced for payment of racing bets, is not to be deemed to have been given for an illegal consideration within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 1. Pyke, Ex parte, Lister, In re, 47 L. J., Bk. 100 ; 8 Ch. D. 754 ; 38 L. T. 923 ; 26 W. R. 806—C. A.

In the Hands of Third Persons.]—Action on a promissory note, by indorsee against maker. Plea, that he made the note, and delivered it to the indorser in payment of a bet on the amount of hop duty ; and that the plaintiff took it when overdue, and without value. On the trial, it was proved that the note was made and given for the bet to the indorser, but that it was not overdue when indorsed to the plaintiff. The judge reserved leave to enter a verdict for the plaintiff, if, on the evidence, the note was overdue. He left it to the jury to say whether there was value for the indorsement, telling them that the burden lay on the defendant to prove that there was none :—Held, that there was no misdirection ; for that, though proof that a negotiable instrument was affected with fraud or illegality in the hands of a previous holder raises a presumption that he would indorse it away to an agent without value, and consequently calls on the plaintiff for proof that he gave value, the presumption does not arise when the previous holder merely held without consideration ; and that a bet, though void, and therefore no consideration, was not illegal so as to raise a presumption that the indorsement was without value. Fitch v. Jones, 5 El. & Bl. 238 ; 24 L. J., Q. B. 293 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 854 ; 3 W. R. 507.

The plaintiff brought an action to recover the amount due on two promissory notes given by the defendant to B. in respect of gambling transactions, on the Stock Exchange, and indorsed over by B. to the plaintiff for valuable consideration :—Held, that the plaintiff's right to recover was not affected by the fact that he had notice of the notes having been given by the defendant to B. in respect of gambling transactions, the consideration for the notes not being illegal, but falling only within the category of void contracts under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109. Lilley v. Rankin, 56 L. J., Q. B. 248 ; 55 L. T. 814.

When Substituted for a Bill.]—To an action on a note for 100*l.* made by the defendant on the 12th September, 1833, payable six months after date to the order of K., and by K. indorsed to the plaintiff, the defendant pleaded that on the 23rd July 1833, he lost money at play to A., and that the note was given to secure the money so lost. The evidence was that in July, 1833, the defendant gave A. a bill of exchange for 87*l.* payable six months after date, for money won by him from the latter at hazard, which bill the defendant indorsed to K., and that in December, 1833, the note declared upon was substituted for the bill :—Held, that the evidence did not support the plea. Boulton v. Coghlan, 1 Scott, 588 ; 1 Bing. (N.C.) 640; 1 Hodges, 145; 4 L. J., C. P. 172.

e. Bonds.

Payment of Betting Debts.]—A person owed considerable sums lost in betting on horse-races. In order that he might be allowed to fulfil racing engagements, a sum of money was paid, and a bond given to trustees to distribute among his creditors on such debts. The amount of the cash and bond together was less than half the amount of the debts :—Held, that the bond was valid. Bubb v. Yelverton, 39 L. J., Ch. 428 ; L. R. 9 Eq. 471 ; 22 L. T. 258 ; 18 W. R. 512.

After Assignment.]—A bond was assigned for valuable consideration without notice of objection to its validity, and the obligor having applied to the assignee for a further advance, offering to give a mortgage for the whole, but stating no objection to the validity of the bond, was not allowed to endeavour to avoid the bond, by evidence that it was given to secure money lost by a bet on a horse-race. Hawker v. Hallewell, 3 Sm. & G. 194 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 537 ; 4 W. R. 584. Affirmed, 25 L. J., Ch. 558 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 794 ; 4 W. R. 631—L.JJ.

Bonds are within the equity of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41, which makes securities valid in the hands of bonâ fide holders, without notice that the consideration was a gaming debt. Ib.

A bond executed for a sum of money lost at billiards is void ; but where such bond was assigned with the privity of the obligor, and upon his assurance that it was valid, and where he paid part of the money, and prevailed on the assignee to enter satisfaction upon the judgment obtained on the bond, and accept a new security for the remainder of the debt, equity will not relieve him. Kenney v. Browne, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 514.

Bonâ fide Loan—Intention to Pay Bets.]—Where a deed, containing covenants for the payment of 2,000*l.*, with interest, purporting to be a security for the repayment of a loan to that amount, is declared on, and the plea is that the deed is a mortgage deed within 9 Anne, c. 14, and 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41, as part of the consideration for it was money won in betting ; on that issue there is nothing objectionable in the judge directing the jury, that if they believed that there was no agreement between the parties that a betting debt due from the defendant to the plaintiff should be repaid out of the loan, but that the plaintiff advanced the 2,000*l.* absolutely as a loan to the defendant, as the lawful owner, to dispose of it as he pleased, and the defendant gave the deed to secure that loan, then the deed was valid, though the plaintiff expected to be paid out of the loan. Fox v. Hill, 4 H. & N. 359 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 964 ; 7 W. R. 263—Ex. Ch. S. C., at Nisi Prius, 1 F. & F. 136.

C. RACES.

1. Rights and Liabilities on Contracts.

Waiver of Conditions.]—If a race is advertised to take place under certain conditions, the stakeholder cannot waive any of the conditions without the consent of the whole of the subscribers. Weller v. Deakins, 2 Car. & P. 618.

Entrance Money.]—Where, by the terms of a horse-race, the entrance money is to be given to the second best horse, and it is doubtful, on the construction of those terms, whether all the money paid at the entering each horse is to be considered as entrance money, the court will put such a construction on the words as will include the whole in the description of entrance money to be given to the second best horse, being most agreeable to 13 Geo. 2, c. 19, ss. 2 and 7. Dowson v. Scriven, 1 H. Bl. 218.

Keeping of Appointment.]—The plaintiff and defendant made an agreement in writing to run a match with greyhounds "on the Wednesday during the Newmarket February meeting, 1841." The Newmarket meetings were meetings of a coursing club; the power of appointing and adjourning meetings was vested in the stewards, who were governed by printed rules; and the practice of the club was to hold the February meeting on the first Tuesday in that month, weather permitting, but if the weather prevented its being then held, to adjourn it to a future day, weather permitting. At the time when the contract was made, the day appointed for the February meeting was Tuesday, the 2nd February, 1841. On Wednesday, the 3rd, the plaintiff and the defendant were there, but frost prevented the meeting from being then held, and it was adjourned to Tuesday, the 9th, and again, from the same cause, to Tuesday, the 16th when it was held. On Wednesday, the 17th, the plaintiff was ready with his dog to run the match, but the defendant made default:—Held, that, the true construction of the contract was, that the match should be run on the Wednesday during the February meeting, whenever it should be actually held, and therefore that the plaintiff performed his part of the contract by being ready to run on Wednesday, the 17th. Daintree v. Hutchinson, 10 M. & W. 85; 11 L. J., Ex. 397; 6 Jur. 39.

"Regularly Hunted."]—If, to qualify a horse to start for a certain stake, it should have been regularly hunted with the hounds of A., it is not necessary that the horse should have been hunted every day the hounds went out, but once hunting with those hounds is not sufficient. Weller v. Deakins, 2 Car. & P. 618.

"Across a Country"—Written Contract—Parol Evidence.]—In an action on the following memorandum, signed by the parties: "Evans and Pratt: T. H., umpire. F. Pratt bets T. Evans, 100*l.* to 25*l.* p. p. Mr. Riley's brown mare (late his property) beats T. Evans' mare, Matilda, four miles across a country, 13*s.* each. To come off the 1st March, 1841. The umpire's decision to be final":—Held, that evidence was admissible to show that, in sporting phraseology, across a country meant over all obstructions, and prohibited the rider from availing himself of an open gate. Evans v. Pratt, 4 Scott (N.R.) 378; 1 D. (N.S.) 505; 3 Man. & G. 759; 11 L. J., C. P. 87; 6 Jur. 152. See also Daintree v. Hutchinson, 10 M. & W. 85; 11 L. J., Ex. 397; 6 Jur. 39.

—— Decision of Umpire.]—Held, that it was not competent to either party to dispute the decision of the umpire whom they had constituted judge of the law and fact. Ib.

"Unprofessional Riders."]—A race was run, subject to conditions, one of which was, that the riders should be gentlemen, farmers, or tradesmen, being persons never having ridden as regular jockeys or paid riders; another, that the decision of the committee on any dispute that might arise should be final. At the trial, it appeared that the rider of the plaintiff's horse, which first came to the winning post, had been in the habit of riding at the races, sometimes receiving his expenses, but never having been paid for his services; and that the plaintiff's right to the stakes was disputed on the ground of an alleged cross, on the subject of which the committee had heard evidence, and intimated an opinion adverse to the plaintiff, but had come to no final decision:—Held, that the rider of the plaintiff's horse was not disqualified, nor the plaintiff, under the circumstances, disentitled to maintain the action. Walmsley v. Matthews, 3 Scott (N.R.) 584; 3 Man. & G. 133; 5 Jur. 508.

—— Decision of Steward.]—The plaintiff entered his horse for a steeplechase, one of the conditions being, that no groom or professional jockey would be allowed to ride; and another, that all disputes should be decided by the steward, whose decision should be final. The plaintiff intended his horse to be ridden by W., but, before the day of the race, was informed by the steward that he considered W. a professional jockey, and that the horse, if ridden by him, would be no horse in the race. The plaintiff insisted that W. was qualified, and on the race-day, notwithstanding a similar intimation from the steward to the plaintiff, W. rode the horse, which came in first. On the following day, the steward pronounced the second horse to be the winner, and by his directions the stakes were paid to the owner of that horse:—Held, that the steward had decided the question within the meaning of the condition; that his decision was final, although it was not made after hearing both parties; and that the plaintiff could not recover the stakes from the stakeholder. Benbow v. Jones, 14 M. & W. 193; 14 L. J., Ex. 257.

Stewards Unable to Decide.]—The defendant was stakeholder of a race, which was to be decided by the award of four stewards. After the race was over, the stewards met, but were unable to agree, two being in favour of the plaintiff's horse, and two in favour of another horse. In an action by the plaintiff to recover the stakes:—Held, that it was a condition precedent that there should be a decision of the stewards, if practicable, and that the plaintiff could not submit the question to the jury, or recover back his amount of contribution. Brown v. Overbury, 11 Ex. 715; 25 L. J., Ex. 169; 4 W. R. 252.

Race not Run according to Conditions.]—The plaintiff and H. agreed, in writing, to run a match between two horses on a specified day, with a specified person as judge, and a specified person as starter. They had each deposited a stake in the defendant's hands, the whole to be paid to the winner, and the agreement made "the money to be given up by the decision of the judge." On the day fixed the plaintiff and H. were present, but the starter failed to appear. H. refused, on that ground, to run the race. The judge held that the objection was not material. The plaintiff's horse was trotted over the course, and the judge declared the plaintiff the winner. He, after the day fixed for the race, demanded the stakes from the defendant, who refused to hand them over. In an action by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant the stakes:—Held, that, as the race was never run according to the conditions agreed upon, it must be taken not to have been run at all; that therefore the judge's jurisdiction never arose, and his decision was invalid; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover the whole of the stakes, but that, as the race had not and could not be run upon the specified terms, the plaintiff and H. were each entitled to recover back his own stake from the defendant as money had and received. Carr v. Martinson, 1 El. & El. 456; 28 L. J., Q. B. 126; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 788; 7 W. R. 293.

Held, also, that even if demand of that amount was necessary before action (per Lord Campbell, C.J., and Crompton, J., it was not), the demand of the larger sum was a demand of the less. Ib.

Effect of Club Rules.]—In an action for the recovery of the amount of the stake deposited by one of the parties to a horse-race, to abide the event of the race, the jury found for the plaintiff on the ground that the race, though run under the auspices of the Australian Jockey Club, was not run under the Jockey Club rules as provided by the agreement; the court below granted a new trial on the ground that the race was properly run under the agreement:—Held, on the construction of the agreement and the rules of the Jockey Club which it referred to, that the finding of the jury was wrong, and that a new trial was properly granted. Dines v. Wolfe, 5 Moore, P. C. (N.S.) 382; L. R. 2 P. C. 280; 20 L. T. 251.

Trotting Match—Mode of Trotting.]—On a wager that A. will trot two horses sixteen miles in two successive hours, he may trot them in any manner he thinks proper. Robson v. Hall, Peake, 127.

Boat Race—Referee's Decision—Fair Start.]—K. and S., two watermen, agreed to row a right-away sculler's race upon the Thames; the start to take place at 2.30 p.m.; the rowing to be according to the recognised rules of boat-racing, and a referee to be chosen, whose decision should be final. In watermen's races it is the practice for the men to start themselves. A referee was appointed, and the race commenced, but a foul having taken place, the men were ordered by the referee to row over again. On the following day they came to the starting-place. After several fruitless attempts to start, K. rowed up to the referee's steamboat, which had drifted out of sight of the men, and complained that S. would not start. The referee looked for S., but not seeing him, told K. to inform S. that he must start, and that if he would not to row over without him. K. then rowed off, and the referee afterwards saw him row over the course, but did not hear him speak to S. The referee thereupon decided that K. was entitled to the stakes; and it was found by the jury in an action against the stakeholder, that the referee's order was not communicated to S. and that a fair opportunity of starting was not given to him:—Held, that, under the agreement, it was necessary to empower the referee to award the stakes, that there should be a race or a start, and that it was essential to a start that the referee's directions should be conveyed to S. That, in the absence of any such communication, there could have been no fair start, so that the referee's decision was without jurisdiction and void. Sadler v. Smith, 10 B. & S. 17; 39 L. J., Q. B. 17; L. R. 5 Q. B. 40; 21 L. T. 502; 18 W. R. 148—Ex. Ch.

If the referee had decided, though upon insufficient evidence, that the communication was duly made to S., his decision as to the person entitled to the stakes would have been final, but he appeared to have neglected to decide, whether what he had imposed as a condition of the start had been fulfilled. Ib.

Recovery of Subscription.]—A. entered his horse for a race, and paid the subscription money. The horse won; but it turned out that, by the rules of the race, he was not entitled to run. Notice of the objection had been given to A. before the race:—Held, that he was not entitled to recover his subscription money. Goldsmith v. Martin, 4 Man. & G. 5; 4 Scott (N.R.) 620; 11 L. J., C. P. 201.

Action for Unpaid Stakes.]—The clerk of the course at a race cannot bring actions for unpaid stakes. Charlton v. Hill, 5 Car. & P. 147.

2. Jurisdiction and Liability of Stewards.

Validity of Decision.]—Stewards of horse-races are not in the strict legal position of judges or arbitrators, and where there are more than one, it is not necessary to make their decision valid that it should have been arrived at jointly. It need only be fair and final. Parr v. Winteringham, 1 El. & El. 394; 28 L. J., Q. B. 123; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 787; 7 W. R. 288.

—— Made by a Majority.]—Three stewards of a horse-race, as to which their decision was to be final, met and discussed an objection raised to the winner by a competitor. No actual decision was then arrived at, and no other meeting of the three was held. Afterwards, two of the three stewards made known their decision, and the third, upon hearing it, made known his dissent from it:—Held, that the decision of the two was valid. Ib.

Right to Reopen Question.]—The plaintiff's horse ran in a race, subject to the following conditions: that he had been fairly hunted with certain hounds during the season; that he had been a certain time in possession of his owner; and the stewards were to disqualify any horse that they did not consider to have been hunted in a genuine and bonâ fide manner, and their decision in all cases of dispute was to be final. The horse came in first, and his owner claimed the stakes. On an objection that the horse had not been fairly hunted, the stewards at once went into the question, and held that he had, leaving the question whether the plaintiff was the owner within the conditions, for future decision. They subsequently decided that he was such owner, but at the same time disqualified the horse as not having been fairly hunted, because he had not been ridden by his owner. In an action for the stakes:—Held, that the first decision was inchoate only, and that the stewards could reopen the question, and that the ultimate decision, disqualifying the horse, was by the conditions final. Smith v. Littledale, 15 W. R. 69.

Finality of Decision.]—At a steeplechase, weight for age—run under certain rules, one of which made the decision of the stewards final, and another required that upon entering a horse his age should be stated—the defendant's horse was entered as "aged;" he came in first, but was objected to as being a "six-year-old" and not an "aged" horse; the stewards decided that, though, as a matter of fact, the horse was a "six-year-old," and not "aged," the misstatement in the entry was immaterial, inasmuch as the weight imposed on a "six-year-old" and on an "aged" horse was the same:—Held, that the stewards had not exceeded their jurisdiction; that, there being no question as to the bona fides of their judgment, their decision on the construction of the rules, as well as on the matters of fact, was final and conclusive between the parties; and, accordingly, that the defendant's horse was entitled to the stakes. Newcomen v. Lynch, Ir. R. 10 C. L. 248—Ex. Ch. S. P., Benbow v. Jones, 14 M. & W. 193; 14 L. J., Ex. 257.

When Jurisdiction Arises.]—Although the judge of a horse-race has power to decide finally who is entitled to the stakes as winner, such power does not accrue to him until the race has been run. Carr v. Martinson, 1 El. & El. 456; 28 L. J., Q. B. 126; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 788; 7 W. R. 293.

One Steward interested in Result.]—One of the conditions of a race was, that all disputes should be settled by the stewards, whose decisions should be final. There were four stewards, and a dispute having arisen as to whether the plaintiff's horse or the defendant's mare was the winner, three of the stewards voted in favour of the plaintiff's horse. One of the three had betted against the defendant's mare:—Held, that the steward was not disqualified from acting by reason of his pecuniary interest in the event of the race; and even assuming that he was, that did not annul the decision of the other stewards. Ellis v. Hopper, 3 H. & N. 766; 28 L. J., Ex. 1; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1025; 7 W. R. 15.

Liability — Negligence.]—A person gratuitously undertaking the duties of steward of a horse-race is not liable for negligent nonfeasance in not appointing a judge, unless it appears that he commenced to perform the duties of the office. Balfe v. West, 13 C. B. 466; 22 L. J., C. P. 175; 1 W. R. 335.

—— Turning Ticket-holder out of Inclosure.]—In 1843, Lord Eglinton being steward of the Doncaster races, tickets were sold in Doncaster at a guinea each, which were understood to entitle the holders to admission into the Grand Stand and its inclosure, and to remain there during the races. They were issued with Lord Eglinton's privity, but they were not sealed or signed by him:—Held, that it was lawful for Lord Eglinton, without returning the guinea, or assigning any reason for what he did, to order any holder of a ticket to quit the stand and inclosure, and, after reasonable time, to force him to leave, though such holder had not misconducted himself, and, but for the order to quit, would have been justified, by the purchase of the ticket, in remaining there. Wood v. Ledbitter, 13 M. & W. 838; 14 L. J., Ex. 161; 9 Jur. 187.

3. Use of Land for.

Custom.]—A custom for the freemen or citizens of Carlisle to enter on Ascension-day upon certain land in an extra-parochial hamlet, near to the city of Carlisle, for the purpose of horse racing, is a good custom. Mounsey v. Ismay, 1 H. & C. 729; 32 L. J., Ex. 94; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 306; 7 L. T. 717: 11 W. R. 270.

But such a claim is not a claim to an easement within 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 2. Mounsey v. Ismay, 3 H. & C. 486; 34 L. J., Ex. 52; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 141; 12 L. T. 27; 13 W. R. 521.

Rights of Way.]—To a declaration for breaking and entering into land of the plaintiff, the defendant pleaded that there was a public highway over and along the land for all persons to go and return at such times of the year as horse-races were holden on the land at their free will and pleasure for the purpose of witnessing the races, and that the trespasses were a use by the defendant of the highway for these purposes. Other pleas alleged a common right for all persons to go and remain for a reasonable time for the purpose of witnessing the horse-races:—Held, that the pleas were bad. Coventry (Earl) v. Willes, 9 L. T. 384; 12 W. R. 127.

4. Racecourse.

Ratability.] — In ascertaining the ratable value of land used as a racecourse, the assessment committee may call for the books of the racecourse proprietors, or give affirmative evidence of the amounts of the profits made, the profits being a material element, though not a test, in determining the ratable value. Reg. v. Verrall, 45 L. J., M. C. 29; 1 Q. B. D. 9; 33 L. T. 379; 24 W. R. 139.

D. Gambling in Funds, Stocks, or Shares.

Intention to Purchase and Deliver.]—The question of time bargains is, whether at the time of making the contract there was a bonâ fide intention to purchase or deliver shares. If there was such an intention the contract is good; if there was not such an intention, the contract is an agreement by way of gaming or wagering within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, and by that section is null and void. Barry v. Croskey, 2 Johns. & H. 1.

The plaintiff, a stockbroker at B., was employed by the defendant to purchase on his behalf shares in railway companies, with a view to sell them before the settling day on the Stock Exchange. The plaintiff employed K., a stockbroker in London, to buy the shares, and he having purchased them by the orders of the defendant through the plaintiff, sold them before the settling day. By the custom of the Stock Exchange, K. was responsible as the purchaser; he did not, however, pay money on the purchase and transfer of the shares, but was debited by the selling brokers with the amount, he having opened accounts with them, and on the settling day the accounts were closed, and the balance ascertained:—Held, that as shares were really bought and sold, the transaction was not by way of gaming and wagering, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover his commission, and the amount of losses on the sale of the shares. Ashton v. Dakin, 7 W. R. 384.

Time bargains in stock, though they may be gaming or wagering within the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, relating to games and wagers, were not so within the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 201 (Bankrupt Act of 1845). Ryder, Ex parte, 1 De G. & J. 317; 26 L. J., Bk. 69; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1159.

Speculation in Differences.]—Transactions between stockjobbers and their customer entered into under written terms that none but real purchases of stocks and shares were intended, but in which in fact there was no intention to purchase, but only to speculate in differences, are gaming transactions, and therefore void under the Gaming Act, 1845, s. 18. Universal Stock Exchange v. Strachan (No. 1), 65 L. J., Q. B. 428; [1896] A. C. 166; 74 L. T. 468; 44 W. R. 497; 60 J. P. 468—H. L. (E.)

A contract between stockbrokers and their customer that the broker shall, at the customer's direction, buy shares and sell them, and that the profits shall belong to the customer—the brokers being personally liable to him for those profits—and that the losses shall be borne by the customer—the stockbrokers personally (and not by way of indemnity) receiving those losses—is a wagering contract within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, and void as such. Byers v. Beattie, Ir. R. 2 C. L. 220; 16 W. R. 279.

The fact that the brokers are in either case to receive their commission and charges makes no difference. Ib.

A colourable contract for the sale and purchase of railway shares, where neither party intends to deliver nor to accept the shares, but merely to pay differences according to the rise or fall of the market, is gaming within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18. Grizewood v. Blane, 11 C. B. 538.

A., B. and C. were members of the Stock Exchange, according to the rules and customs of which there are two days appointed in a month for settling transactions relating to foreign securities, and, in case of a loan upon or a sale of such securities, the lender or seller has the right, in case of non-payment of the loan or non-completion of the purchase, either to sell or take them at their market value, the deficiency, if any, in the price being paid to the borrower or purchaser, and the surplus, if any, beyond the loan or purchase money, being paid by him to the lender or seller, who, if the borrower or purchaser is declared a defaulter, is bound to take the securities at a price fixed by the official assignees of the association. According to these rules and customs A. lent to C. money on the security of foreign railway shares, which were of the full value of the loan, and on each succeeding settling day the amount of depreciation or increase in the value of the shares was paid by C. or A. respectively to the other, till C. was declared a defaulter, when A. took the shares at the price fixed by the official assignees. C. was afterwards adjudged a bankrupt, and A. tendered a proof for the balance due to him in respect of the transaction, after deducting the price at which he had taken the shares. According to the same rules and customs B. agreed with C. to sell him 100 foreign railway shares for a certain sum. The transaction was not completed, but on each succeeding settling day the differences were paid by B. or C., as in A.'s case; and on C. being declared a defaulter, B. likewise took the shares at their market value, and on C.'s bankruptcy tendered a proof for the balance due to him in respect of the said shares:—Held, that these were not gambling transactions, or illegal within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, and that the proofs must be admitted. Phillips, Ex parte, Morgan, In re, Marnham, Ex parte, 2 De G. F. & J. 634; 30 L. J., Bk. 1; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1273; 3 L. T. 516; 9 W. R. 131.

Indemnity of Broker.]—The defendant employed the plaintiff, a stockbroker, to speculate for him on the Stock Exchange, knowing that for the purpose of carrying out his transactions the plaintiff would have to enter into contracts to buy or sell stocks and shares, and, in order to protect himself and the defendant, would have to enter into other contracts to sell or buy respectively. The plaintiff knew that the defendant never expected or intended to accept actual delivery of the stocks and shares which the plaintiff might buy for him, nor actually to deliver the stocks and shares that the plaintiff might sell for him. The defendant, nevertheless, knew that he incurred the risk of having to accept or deliver; but was content to run that risk in the expectation and hope that the plaintiff would arrange so as to make nothing but differences payable to or by him; and unless that arrangement was made the defendant was, to the knowledge of the plaintiff, wholly unable to pay for or deliver the stocks and shares bought or sold. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for commission and indemnity against the liabilities incurred by the plaintiff on the Stock Exchange, with the authority and for the benefit of the defendant, the defendant pleaded that the claim was founded on gaming and wagering transactions, illegal at common law and under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover both the commission and indemnity claimed. Thacker v. Hardy, 48 L. J., Q. B. 289; 4 Q. B. D. 685; 39 L. T. 595; 27 W. R. 158—C. A.

A principal instructed his broker to buy for him shares on the Montreal Stock Exchange. The principal, who was a bank clerk, at the time he gave the instructions, had no intention of taking delivery of the shares, but intended to sell them again as soon as a profit should be obtainable owing to a rise in the price. The broker, however, took delivery, paid the full price by means of loans raised on the security of the shares, and resold when instructed. He received a commission of ¼ per cent. on each transaction, but any profit or loss accruing was credited or debited to the principal's account:—Held, that delivery to the broker was delivery to the principal; that the transactions were not gambling transactions as between the broker and his principal, and therefore, were not void by reason of article 1927 of the civil code of Lower Canada. Thacker v. Hardy (4 Q. B. D. 685) approved. Forget v. Ostigny, 64 L. J., P. C. 62; [1895] A. C. 318; 11 R. 474; 72 L. T. 399; 43 W. R. 590—P. C.

A written contract was entered into by an "outside" stockjobber with his customer, that bonâ fide purchases and sale of stocks and shares should be made between them. No subsequent bargain was in fact come to between the parties that the purchases and sales should not be carried out, and merely the differences paid, but it was contemplated that this might be so, and in the actual dealings no delivery of stocks took place The stockjobber did, however, offer to deliver certain shares and stock:—Held, that, although the parties may have contemplated that, as a whole, there would be a mere payment of differences between them, yet, inasmuch as the actual contracts entered into involved the liability for the actual delivery of the stock dealt with, they were not gaming or wagering transactions within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18. Universal Stock Exchange v. Stevens, 66 L. T. 612; 40 W. R. 494.

If a broker is employed to make wagering contracts such as are illegal under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, and at the request of his principal pays the amount due under such contract, he can recover the amount so paid from his principal; and the illegal nature of the contract with reference to which the money is paid, is no defence to an action founded on such a claim. Rosewarne v. Billing, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 316; 33 L. J., C. P. 55; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 496; 9 L. T. 441; 12 W. R. 104.

Declaration for money paid by the plaintiff for the use of the defendant, at his request. Plea, that the money was paid, in respect of differences on the price of shares in a public company, to be paid by the defendant under wagering contracts, contrary to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, which the plaintiff had made for the defendant with third persons:—Held, that as the plea did not negative the plaintiff's request, and the statute made such contracts only void, and not illegal, the plea disclosed no defence. Knight v. Cambers, 15 C. B. 562; 3 C. L. R. 565; 24 L. J., C. P. 121; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 525.

To a declaration for money paid, and on accounts stated, the defendant pleaded, first, that the causes of action accrued after the passing of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, under and by virtue of certain contracts made between the plaintiff and the defendant by way of gaming upon the market price of shares; and, secondly, that the causes of action accrued to the plaintiff as a broker in the city of London, about the purchasing and selling for the defendant, in the city of London, of shares, and that the plaintiff was not duly licensed in pursuance of the statute:—Held, that the pleas were bad. Jessopp v. Lutwyche, 10 Ex. 614; 3 C. L. R. 359; 24 L. J., Ex. 65.

Where a person desiring to speculate on the Stock Exchange had instructed a broker to buy and sell stocks for him, with the intention that he should only receive or pay "differences," and has authorised the broker to pay any losses for him, the broker is entitled to recover any sums which he has so paid for the principal even though he has not entered into separate contracts on his behalf, but has appropriated to him parts of larger amounts of stock which he (the broker) has bought as a principal with the view of dividing them among different clients for whom he has been instructed to buy. Rogers, Ex parte, Rogers, In re, 15 Ch. D. 207; 43 L. T. 163; 29 W. R. 29—C. A.

Sale of Undeclared Dividends.]—A bonâ fide sale of an undeclared dividend is not a wager within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18. Martin v. Gibbon, 33 L. T. 561; 24 W. R. 87—C. A.

The printed rule of the Stock Exchange that the committee will not recognise bargains in prospective dividends being in practice treated by the committee not as forbidding such transactions, but only as declaring that the committee will not adjudicate on disputes arising out of them, the unwritten usage of the Stock Exchange that members deal with each other as principals, will be cognisable in courts of law in respect to contracts between members of the Stock Exchange for the sale and purchase of such dividends. Ib.

Therefore, if a broker, employed to sell prospective dividends on shares by a person holding or whom he has no reason to believe does not hold such shares, sell to a jobber, he will be personally liable to the jobber, and may pay the amount for which he is liable, although forbidden to do so by his principal, and may recover from his principal the amount so paid. Ib.

Work Done and Money Paid.]—To a declaration for work done, commission and money paid, a plea, that the plaintiff was a stock and share broker, and as such made contracts with persons for the defendant by way of wagering, contrary to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, under the semblance of pretended sales, respecting the future market price of public and other stock, shares, scrip, and goods and chattels, whereby the defendant was to receive or pay the difference between the price of the public stock on the days on which the contracts were made and the price on certain future days, according as the price had become lower or higher; and that the work was done, and the commission claimed in respect of the making such contracts, and the money paid in discharging the differences which had become payable, is no defence under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109. Knight v. Fitch, 15 C. B. 566; 3 C. L. R. 567; 24 L. J., C. P. 122; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 526.

To an action for work done and money paid, at the request of the defendant, a plea that by agreement between the plaintiff and defendant, the plaintiff, as agent to the defendant, contracted with third parties for the pretended purchases and sales of shares in a railway company, under which contracts no shares were actually transferred; and that the contracts of pretended purchase and sale between the parties were by way of wagering only on the market prices of the shares, contrary to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18; and that the work was done and the money paid in pursuance of that agreement, and in making and performing those contracts of pretended purchase and sale, and in and about the paying by the plaintiff of those differences; which payment was made without any request by the defendant to the plaintiff, is a bad plea, as disclosing no answer to the count for work done. Inchbald v. Cockerill, 4 Jur. (N.S.) 693.

Payments partly for bonâ fide Sales.]—In an action for money paid the defendant pleaded that the money was paid for and in respect of differences which the plaintiffs, as the defendant's brokers, contracted to pay for him on account of certain unlawful contracts, by way of gaming and wagering, relating to the public funds, and to railways and shares in railways, and to the then present and future prices thereof respectively, in lieu of and instead of making, accepting, and paying for transfer thereof, partly contrary to 7 Geo. 2, c. 8, and partly contrary to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109:—Held, that the plea being no answer as to the money paid in respect of losses on the sale of shares, was bad altogether, and was not made good as to the money paid in respect of losses on sales of consols by the 75th section of the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852. Lyne v. Siesfeld, 1 H. & N. 278.

E. STATUTORY OFFENCES.

1. LOTTERY.

a. What is.

Horse-Race—Names on Cards.]—A horse-race being about to be run, the plaintiff and one hundred and fifty-four other persons subscribed

1*l.* apiece, which was deposited with the defendant on the terms that the name of each subscriber should be written on a card, and the name of each of the horses written on another, and then the two sets of cards placed in a box, and the cards should be drawn by chance from each of the boxes, and the person whose name should be drawn next after the name of the winning horse, should be entitled to receive 100*l.* from the entire fund :—Held, an illegal lottery within 10 & 11 Will. 3, c. 17, and 42 Geo. 3, c. 119. Allport v. Nutt, 3 D. & L. 233 ; 1 C. B. 974 ; 14 L. J., C. P. 272 ; 9 Jur. 909. S. P., Gatty v. Field, 9 Q. B. 431 ; 15 L. J., Q. B. 408 ; 10 Jur. 980.

—— Prize for "placing" Horses—Coupons.]—A prize of 100*l.* was offered by a sporting newspaper to purchasers who correctly "placed" the first, second, third, and fourth horses in a race. The price of the newspaper was one penny, and a column of twenty-five coupons was attached. Purchasers were invited to fill four blank spaces with the names of horses and send the coupons so filled to the office of the newspaper. No. 1 coupon was free of charge, but if all or any of the remaining twenty-four coupons were used, a penny stamp was to be sent with each. A summons under the Lottery Acts was issued against the newspaper proprietors. The magistrate found as a fact that the winning of the prize in the competition would be by chance, and not by skill :—Held, that this coupon competition was not a lottery. Neither the selection of the winner, nor the "placing" of the first four horses, were matters of pure chance. Stoddart v. Sagar, 64 L. J., M. C. 234 ; [1895] 2 Q. B. 474 ; 15 R. 579 ; 73 L. T. 215 ; 44 W. R. 287 ; 18 Cox, C. C. 165 ; 59 J. P. 598.

The proprietor of a sporting newspaper issued weekly at the price of one penny, in connection with the newspaper and from the same office, a handicap-book or racing record containing general information as to horse-races past and to come. The last page of this book was a coupon, in which six races to come were selected, and pecuniary prizes were offered to any purchaser of the book who filled up one coupon with the names of six, five, or four winning horses, and returned the coupon to the newspaper office within a limited time and under certain specified conditions :—Held, that this was not a proposal and scheme for the sale of chances in a lottery within s. 41 of the Lottery Act, 1823. Caminada v. Hulton, or Reg. v. Hulton, 60 L. J., M. C. 116 ; 64 L. T. 572 ; 39 W. R. 540 ; 17 Cox, C. C. 307 ; 55 J. P. 727.

"Missing Word Competition"—Right of Competitors to return of their Contributions.]—The proprietor of a paper conducted competitions in the following manner : A sentence was inserted in the paper with one word missing ; intending competitors were required to cut out a coupon attached to the paper, to write the missing word on the coupon and send it, together with a fee of 1*s.* for each coupon, to the proprietor. The missing word was decided upon before the commencement of the competition. The entrance fees were divided amongst the successful competitors :—Held, (1) that the competition constituted a lottery within the meaning of 42 Geo. 3, c. 119 ; (2) the moneys, which had been brought into court, were not impressed with any trust which the court could administer : so far as they were impressed with any trust, it was one which had arisen out of an illegal transaction, and that the assistance of the court would not be invoked in administering it. Barclay v. Pearson, 62 L. J., Ch. 636 ; [1893] 2 Ch. 154 ; 3 R. 388 ; 68 L. T. 709 ; 42 W. R. 74.

Sale of Land for Purpose of.]—An agreement to sell and convey land for the purpose of being resold by lottery in contravention of the 12 Geo. 2, c. 28, and a deed afterwards executed to secure the payment of the price of the land so conveyed, is void. Fisher v. Bridges, 3 El. & Bl. 642 ; 2 C. L. R. 928 ; 24 L. J., Q. B. 165 ; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 157 ; 2 W. R. 706—Ex. Ch.

Allotment of Land by Ballot.]—A company consisting of a number of persons subscribing small sums was formed for the purpose of buying land, erecting dwellings thereon, and allotting the same to the subscribers. The allotment depended upon the result of a ballot. Quære, whether it was illegal as being contrary to the Lottery Acts, or whether it fell within 12 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 11. O'Connor v. Bradshaw, 5 Ex. 882 ; 20 L. J., Ex. 26.

Tickets for Prizes.]—C. kept an eating-house, and sold tickets for what was called the Great Eastern Money Club, in respect of which prizes were drawn ; and the holders of the tickets, whose numbers were drawn for prizes, received the same, and C. delivered out the prizes to such ticket-holders :—Held, that this evidence was sufficient to support a conviction against him for keeping a lottery, but was not sufficient to support a conviction for keeping a room for betting upon horse-racing under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119. Reg. v. Crawshaw, Bell, C. C. 303 ; 30 L. J., M. C. 58 ; 3 L. T. 51 ; 9 W. R. 68 ; 8 Cox, C. C. 375.

The appellant erected a tent, in which he sold packets, each containing a pound of tea, at 2*s.* 6*d.* a packet. In each packet was a coupon entitling the purchaser to a prize ; this was publicly stated by the appellant before the sale, but the purchasers did not know until after the sale what prizes they were entitled to ; the prizes varied in character and value, and the tea was worth the money paid for it :—Held, that this constituted a lottery within 42 Geo. 3, c. 119, s. 2. Taylor v. Smetten, 52 L. J., M. C. 101 ; 11 Q. B. D. 207 ; 48 J. P. 36.

A lottery in which tickets were drawn by subscribers of a shilling, which entitled them at all events to what was professed to be a shilling's worth of goods, and also to the chance of certain bonuses of goods of greater value than the shilling, is an illegal lottery. Reg. v. Harris, 10 Cox, C. C. 352.

Enclosing Money in Packets.]—H. kept a shop for the sale of sweets and sold penny packets of caramel, several of which contained a halfpenny in addition to a fair pennyworth of sweets. There had been no advertisement as to these enclosures :—Held, that H. was rightly convicted under 42 Geo. 3, c. 119, s. 2, of keeping a lottery. Hunt v. Williams, 52 J. P. 821.

Presents according to Seats.]—The programme of an entertainment stated that at its conclusion the proprietor "would distribute amongst his audience a shower of gold and silver treasures on a scale utterly without parallel, besides a shower of smaller presents, all of which would be impartially divided amongst the audience and given away." The public was admitted on purchasing tickets, which were not numbered. The seats of the audience were numbered. At the conclusion of the entertainment the proprietor called out a number on a seat, and delivered one of the articles to the person occupying that seat, and in that way distributed all the articles amongst the audience:—Held, a lottery within 42 Geo. 3, c. 119, s. 2. Morris v. Blackman, 2 H. & C. 912; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 520.

Concession to Company—Prospectus advertising Foreign Lottery—English Company setting up Lottery Abroad.]—A company, formed to acquire and work a concession conferring the exclusive privilege of conducting all operations in connection with lottery loans in Persia, issued a prospectus which referred to the profits made on the continent by lotteries, and stated that the operations of the company would be conducted upon the lines adopted by European states where government lotteries were in vogue, and that "at least five issues have to be made annually in Persia with minimum drawings of 10,000*l*., and it is estimated that these operations should return continuously increasing dividends." The company had agreed to purchase this concession. A shareholder commenced an action to restrain the company from acquiring, and from publishing any prospectus or scheme relating to the acquisition of, this concession, and from publishing any advertisement or notice in any manner relating to such lottery loans, and from applying the funds of the company in the purchase of the said concession, contending that the enterprise of the company was illegal and in contravention of the Lottery Acts:—Held, that the proposed purchase of the concession was lawful; that the company were not attempting to erect or set up any lottery in this country within the meaning of 9 Geo. 1, c. 19, s. 4; that the general statements in the prospectus did not amount to a publication, advertisement, or notice of a foreign lottery within the meaning of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 66; and that the action must therefore be dismissed. Macnee v. Persian Investment Corporation, 59 L. J., Ch. 695; 44 Ch. D. 306; 62 L. T. 894; 38 W. R. 596.

Society—Periodical Drawings amongst Members.]—A society constituted avowedly for the benefit of its members, making certain of them entitled to particular benefits by the process of periodical drawings, does not come within the Lottery Act. Wallingford v. Mutual Society, 50 L. J., Q. B. 49; 5 App. Cas. 685; 43 L. T. 258; 29 W. R. 81—H. L. (E.) And see Smith v. Anderson, 50 L. J., Ch. 39; 15 Ch. D. 269; 43 L. T. 336; 29 W. R. 22—Argument in C. A.

An association was formed in 1872 with the object of buying foreign bonds and other securities below par value, and, after payment of expenses and a fixed rate of interest to all the members, dividing the profits which should be made by the sale of the bonds or their payment off at par, amongst some of the members, who were to be chosen by lot at annual drawings for that purpose. There was a trust deed which set out in detail the working of the scheme. In an action against a former trustee for alleged breaches of trust: Semble, that it was illegal under the Lotteries Acts. Sykes v. Beadon, 48 L. J., Ch. 522; 11 Ch. D. 170; 40 L. T. 243; 27 W. R. 464.

b. Persons Liable.

Printers.]—The printer of a newspaper, publishing an illegal proposal for gambling in the lottery, incurred a penalty under 22 Geo. 3, c. 47, s. 13. King v. Smith, 4 Term Rep. 414.

c. Proceedings.

Proceedings for Penalty.]—Proceedings for the recovery of penalties, relating to lotteries, contrary to 42 Geo. 3, c. 119, must, since the 46 Geo. 3, c. 48, s. 59, be sued for in the name of the attorney-general, and not before magistrates, whether the lotteries are private or state lotteries. Reg. v. Tuddenham, 9 D. P. C. 937; 5 Jur. 871.

Indictment.]—By 10 & 11 Will. 3, c. 17, s. 1, lotteries are declared to be common and public nuisances; s. 2, which came into operation on a subsequent day, rendered persons keeping lotteries liable to a penalty, to be sued for by information or action. The 42 Geo. 3, c. 119, contains similar enactments with regard to lotteries called "Little Goes":—Held, on an indictment, containing counts for keeping a lottery, framed upon these statutes, that the counts were good and the offence indictable. Reg. v. Crawshaw, Bell, C. C. 303; 30 L. J., M. C. 58; 3 L. T. 510; 9 W. R. 68; 8 Cox, C. C. 375.

Defence to Action to Recover.]—In an action for money had and received, a plea that the money was the amount of a prize in an illegal lottery held by defendant, and that he paid over the amount to one whom he conceived to be the winner, and who was entitled to receive and retain the money, was bad for duplicity. Holmes v. Lock, 1 C. B. 524.

"Aiding, abetting, counselling and procuring" to keep.]—A wholesale confectioner who sells sweetmeats, some of which contain coin, to a shopkeeper with a view to his selling them and the chance of obtaining money in them to the public, is rightly convicted of "aiding, abetting, counselling, and procuring the commission of an offence" within the meaning of s. 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848. Barratt v. Burden, 63 L. J., M. C. 33; 10 R. 602.

2. Keeping a Place for Betting and Gaming.

a. Liability for.

Common Gaming House.]—Keeping and maintaining a common gaming-house for lucre and gain, and causing and procuring idle and evil-disposed persons to come there to play together at rouge-et-noir, and permitting such persons to play at such game for large sums of money, is indictable at common law. Rex v. Rogier, 2 D. & R. 431; 1 B. & C. 272; 25 R. R. 393. S. P., Rex v. Taylor, 3 B. & C. 502.

Unlawful Gaming.]—A. was the proprietor of the Park Club and was also occupier of the premises used by the club, and received the profits. B., C., D. and E. were members of the committee of management, whose duty it was to regulate the internal management of the club, and (amongst other things) to make by-laws and regulations for the carrying it on and for the government of its members, who were elected by them. F., G. and H. were members of the club. By the rules and regulations of the club, hazard was not to be played, dice were excluded, and the points at whist were limited to 1*l.*; all games were to be played for ready money; and under no pretence were strangers to be admitted to the card-room. An entrance fee of 10 guineas and an annual subscription of six guineas was paid by each member of the club. The kitchen was conducted at a loss, and wines and cigars supplied at a slight excess over cost price. The profits accruing to the proprietor arose from the entrance fees and subscriptions, and what was called "card money." Members' cheques were cashed by the proprietor to the amount of 200*l.*, for which he charged 1 per cent. The game of baccarat was played nightly. Upon an information charging the eight persons abovenamed with having committed offences against s. 4 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 38, A., the proprietor, was adjudged to have been guilty of "keeping and using the Park Club for the purpose of unlawful gaming," and fined 500*l.* The four committeemen were adjudged to have been guilty, as persons "having the care or management of and assisting in conducting the business" of the house so kept and used for the purpose of unlawful gaming, and were each fined 500*l.* The three players were also adjudged to have been guilty of the offence, as persons who "assisted by playing in conducting the business of the house so kept and used for the purpose of unlawful gaming," and were each fined 100*l.*:—Held, that the proprietor of the club and the four members of the committee were properly convicted; but that the players,—though possibly liable to be indicted for unlawful gaming in a common gaming-house,—were not liable to be summarily convicted under this statute. Jenks v. Turpin, 53 L. J., M. C. 161; 13 Q. B. D. 505; 50 L. T. 808; 15 Cox, C. C. 486; 49 J. P. 20.

Per Hawkins, J.:—If the house in question had been opened and used for a double purpose, viz. as an honest sociable club for those who did not desire to play, as well as for the purposes of gaming for those who did, it would not the less be a house opened and kept "for the purpose of gaming." To constitute "unlawful gaming," it is not necessary that the games played shall be unlawful games: it is enough that the play is carried on in a "common gaming-house." The expression "unlawful games" was intended by the legislature to cover and include some games which, being lawful in themselves, were only made unlawful when played in particular places or by particular persons. It makes no difference that the use of the house and the gaming therein is limited to the subscribers or members of the club, and that it is not open to all persons who might be desirous of using it. It is not a public but a common gaming-house that is prohibited. "Baccarat" is a game of chance, and unlawful within 17 & 18 Vict. c. 38, s. 4. Excessive gaming per se is not any longer a legal offence; it was not an offence at common law; and there now exists no statute against it. But the fact that it is habitually carried on in a house kept for the purpose of gaming is cogent evidence for a jury or other tribunal called upon to determine whether the house in which it is carried on is a common gaming-house, so as to make the keeper of it liable to be indicted for a nuisance at common law. Ib.

Per A. L. Smith, J.:—A "common gaming-house" is a house kept or used for playing therein at any game of chance, or any mixed game of chance and skill, in which (1) a bank is kept by one or more of the players exclusively of the others, or (2) in which any game is played the chances of which are not alike favourable to all the players, including among the players the banker or other person by whom the game is managed or against whom the other players stake, play, or bet. It is immaterial whether the bank is kept by the owner or occupier or keeper of the house or by one of the players. Ib.

Betting House—Club.]—A club whose members habitually bet is not within the meaning of the Betting Houses Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 1). Oldham v. Ramsden, 44 L. J., C. P. 309; 32 L. T. 825.

"Place"—What is.]—The term "place" in s. 3 of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, does not necessarily mean one particular spot, but may include a place extending over a considerable area of ground; such place need not be bounded by a definite line, but it cannot be of unlimited extent, and is to be confined to the area occupied by persons congregating together and resorting to it. It is not necessary that the delinquent should remain stationary in the place so used, he may use the place by moving about within its area. Reg. v. Preedy, 17 Cox, C. C. 433.

—— Movable Box within Ring at Races.]—By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 3, "any person who, being the owner or occupier of any house, office, room, or other place, or a person using the same, shall open, keep, or use the same for the purposes" of betting with persons resorting thereto is liable to a penalty. The respondent and a companion, having paid for admission, were in a railed inclosure of the grand stand at a race meeting. The companion stood on a small wooden box not attached to the ground, and he and the respondent called out offering to make and making bets with other persons. The companion received the money for bets made, and the respondent booked the same. They stood together in one place within the inclosure during the races:—Held, that the fixed and ascertained spot defined in the inclosure by the box at which the respondent orally advertised his willingness to bet was a "place" used by him for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, and he was liable to a penalty under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 3. Gallaway v. Maries, 51 L. J., M. C. 53; 8 Q. B. D. 275; 45 L. T. 763; 30 W. R. 151; 46 J. P. 326.

—— Temporary Structure adjoining Racecourse.]—Upon a slip of land adjoining a racecourse, during the races, there was erected a temporary wooden structure, four feet high, without a roof. Over it was a board exhibited upon which was the name of the proprietor, and there were betting lists containing the odds upon and against each horse which he was willing to bet. The structure had two frontages, and boards used as desks fronting each way. At each desk a man sat with a book for the purpose of recording the bets made with persons outside. Persons betting deposited money and received a card containing the terms of the bet:—Held, that this was an office or a place within the meaning of the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 1. Shaw

v. Morley, 37 L. J., M. C. 105; L. R. 3 Ex. 137; 19 L. T. 15; 16 W. R. 763; 11 Cox, C. C. 128.

—— Stool covered by Umbrella.]—B. was on a racecourse, standing on a stool, over which was a large umbrella, similar to a carriage umbrella, capable of covering several persons, the stock being made in joints like that of a sweep's brush, so as to be taken in pieces, and was fastened in the ground with a spike. The umbrella when opened was seven or eight feet high. It was a showery day; but the umbrella was kept up rain or dry. On the umbrella was painted in large letters "G. Bows, Victoria Club, Leeds." There was also a card exhibited, on which were the words, "We pay all bets first past the post." B. was calling out, offering to make bets; and he was seen to make bets, the money being deposited with him, and for which he gave a ticket:—Held, that B. was using a fixed and ascertained "place" for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, and was properly convicted under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 3. Bows v. Fenwick, 43 L. J., M. C. 107; L. R. 9 C. P. 339; 30 L. T. 524; 22 W. R. 804.

—— Cricket Ground.]—By the Betting Houses Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), s. 1, no house, office, room, or other place shall be opened, kept or used for the purpose. A ground used for cricket, footracing, &c., is a place within the meaning of the enactment, and the owner, occupier, or keeper may be convicted under the act for knowingly permitting any other person to use any such house, office, or place for the purpose of betting with persons resorting to it, though the person so using it is in no sense the occupier or keeper of the premises. Haigh v. Sheffield Corporation, 44 L. J., M. C. 17; L. R. 10 Q. B. 102; 31 L. T. 536; 23 W. R. 547.

—— Ground for Pigeon Shooting.]—E. was the occupier of inclosed grounds, in which a pigeon-shooting match between two persons for 10*l.* a-side, and afterwards a foot-race, took place, and into which the public were admitted on payment of money. The persons who were admitted into the grounds made bets with each other, both on the pigeon-shooting match and on the foot-race:—Held, that the grounds were a "place," and that they were kept and used by E. for the purpose of betting within the meaning of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 3. Eastwood v. Millar, 43 L. J., M. C. 139; L. R. 9 Q. B. 440; 30 L. T. 716; 22 W. R. 799.

—— Particular Spot in Open Space.]—The habitual use of a spot in a public park for the receiving of deposits, to return a larger sum on the contingency of a particular horse winning a race, is not the using of a place for such purpose within the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 1. Doggett v. Catterns, 19 C. B. (N.S.) 765; 34 L. J., C. P. 159; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 243; 12 L. T. 355; 13 W. R. 390—Ex. Ch.

For three consecutive days a bookmaker took up his position at one end of an advertisement hoarding erected on an open space of ground on a river bank, and betted on horse races with passers-by. The ground was of considerable extent, uninclosed, and free to the public frequenting it:—Held, that the spot where he stood was a sufficiently defined "place" to be within the mischief aimed at by s. 3 of the Betting House Act, 1853, and that he had used a place for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto contrary to the statute. Liddell v. Lofthouse, 65 L. J., M. C. 64; [1896] 1 Q. B. 295; 74 L. T. 139; 44 W. R. 349; 18 Cox, C. C. 249; 60 J. P. 264.

The business of a bookmaker on the turf not being illegal if carried on in a way which does not infringe the provisions of the Betting Act, 1853, a partner in such a business who intended that the business should be thus carried on, and was unaware that it was being carried on otherwise, is entitled to an account and to payment of his share of the profits. Thwaites v. Coulthwaite, 65 L. J., Ch. 238; [1896] 1 Ch. 496; 74 L. T. 164; 44 W. R. 295; 60 J. P. 218.

Dog-races were held in an inclosed field hired for the purpose by a committee, the public being admitted to a reserved portion of the field on payment of a small sum. The appellant attended the races, and moved about the reserved portion, making bets with various persons there:—Held, that the appellant did not use a place for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, within the meaning of ss. 1 and 3 of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, and therefore was not liable to be convicted for an offence under those sections. Snow v. Hill, 54 L. J., M. C. 95; 14 Q. B. D. 588; 52 L. T. 859; 33 W. R. 475; 15 Cox, C. C. 737; 49 J. P. 440.

The fact that any one who carries on the business of a professional betting man goes to a particular spot to bet, and remains there for some hours betting, with persons who have been brought together to that spot in the expectation of finding him there to bet with, is sufficient to constitute that spot a "place" within the meaning of s. 3 of the Betting Act, 1853. McInany v. Hildreth, 66 L. J., Q. B. 376; [1897] 1 Q. B. 600; 76 L. T. 463; 61 J. P. 325.

On the morning of the day upon which a horse-race called the Lincolnshire Handicap was run a crowd of persons assembled upon a piece of vacant ground in the borough of Jarrow, known as the Pit Heap, to which the public had free access at all times upon the day in question. The appellant, a professional bookmaker, went to the Pit Heap in the course of the morning, and took up his stand at a particular spot upon the Pit Heap with his back against a wall. He remained for the space of several hours upon that one spot making bets with, and receiving money in respect of such bets from, a number of persons in the crowd, and entering particulars of these transactions in a betting book. There was no evidence that he had ever used the Pit Heap or any spot upon it for a like purpose before the day in question:—Held, the appellant was rightly convicted of using a place for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, contrary to the provisions of the Betting Act, 1853. Ib.

—— Enclosure on Racecourse — Bookmaker Betting without Confining Himself to any Fixed Spot.]—The owners and occupiers of a racecourse fenced off with iron rails an enclosure of about a quarter of an acre in extent, adjoining the course. The enclosure is uncovered except that on the side further from the course there are raised tiers of seats covered with a roof. The general public are admitted to the enclosure on race days upon payment, and vary in number from 500 to 2,000. Amongst them are always from 100 to 200 bookmakers, who are admitted as members of the general public, and on the same terms. The bookmakers have no rights, privileges, interest, or control in or over the enclosure. Each bookmaker is accompanied by a clerk. The bookmakers do not confine themselves to any fixed spot in the enclosure, nor do they use any such apparatus as a desk, stool, umbrella, or tent, though any particular bookmaker is usually to be found in or near the same spot. The bookmakers carry on their business in the enclosure in competition with each other, betting with those of the public within the enclosure desirous of betting with them, whether upon credit or by way of ready-money betting:—Held, that in these circumstances the bookmakers were not persons using a house, office, room, or other place for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto within the meaning of s. 3 of the Betting Act, 1853 (Rigby, L.J., dissentiente). Hawke v. Dunn (66 L. J., Q. B. 364; [1897] 1 Q. B. 579), not followed. Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co., 66 L. J., Q. B. 601; [1897] 2 Q. B. 242; 77 L. T. 2; 46 W. R. 8; 61 J. P. 548.

Any area of enclosed ground, covered or uncovered, which is known by a name or capable of reasonably accurate description, to which persons from time to time or upon any particular occasions or occasion resort, or who may properly be described as resorting thereto, used by a professional betting man for the purpose of exercising his calling and betting with such persons, or for the purpose of carrying on a ready-money betting business, may be a "place" within the meaning of s. 3 of the Betting Act, 1853. Metes and bounds are not essential, and it is immaterial whether the bookmaker remains upon one particular spot within the area or moves about within that area from one spot to another. Each case must depend and be decided upon its own particular circumstances. Hawke v. Dunn, 66 L. J., Q. B. 364; [1897] 1 Q. B. 579; 76 L. T. 355; 45 W. R. 359; 18 Cox, C. C. 543; 61 J. P. 292.

The law does not forbid betting itself, nor is the business or avocation of a bookmaker necessarily illegal. That which the legislature has forbidden, and which it has pronounced to be illegal, is the use, by those who make a trade and business in betting, of any place for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto or for the purpose of receiving, either themselves or by any other person, any money or valuable thing as the consideration for a bet or bets on the event of any horse-race, &c. Ib.

Upon the occasion of a race meeting about one thousand persons, including the respondent, a bookmaker and professional betting man, were admitted to a l. stand known as Tattersall's ring. Tattersall's ring was enclosed by an iron fence breast high, and about forty yards long by thirty yards broad, and was owned by a limited company. The respondent invited all persons about him to bet with him, and certain persons did so, each being required to pay in advance to the respondent a deposit of the money for which they had respectively backed the horse. The respondent did not confine himself to any one fixed spot or locality—he had no stool, box, umbrella, nor anything of a similar character to denote the precise spots at which from time to time he was carrying on his betting operations—but moved about the ring at his will, shouting out the odds and making his bets in various parts of it. After each race the respondent paid to each backer the bets they had respectively won:—Held, that the ring was a "place" within the meaning of s. 3 of the Betting Act, 1853. Ib.

—— Bar-room in Public-house.]—The bar-room of a public-house is a "place" within the meaning of s. 3 of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119. Reg. v. Preedy, 17 Cox, C. C. 433.

A bookmaker went nine days within a fortnight into the bar of a public-house, but had no interest in or exclusive occupation of the bar. Whilst there he betted with all comers, received bets on horse-races, being seated at a table with sporting papers and slips and cards before him for two hours at a time:—Held, that he was liable to conviction under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 3, for using the place for the purpose of betting. Mc William v. Dawson, 56 J. P. 182.

User of House for Betting.]—In order to support a conviction under s. 3 of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, it is unnecessary that there should be evidence that the house, room, or place has been opened and kept or used previously to the occasion in question for the purpose of such illegal betting as is forbidden by s. 1; it is also immaterial that the principal user of the house, room, or place is for a legitimate object, if it is also used for the prohibited purpose. Reg. v. Preedy, 17 Cox, C. C. 433.

The payment of bets which have been previously made does not of itself constitute "betting" within the Betting Act, 1853. Therefore a person who uses a house for paying bets which he has previously made elsewhere does not by the mere payment of such bets in that house commit an offence under s. 3 of the act. Bradford v. Dawson, 66 L. J., Q. B. 191; [1897] 1 Q. B. 307; 76 L. T. 54; 45 W. R. 347; 18 Cox, C. C. 473; 61 J. P. 134.

A person on three successive days went to the bar-room of a public-house for the purpose of betting, and did there bet upon certain horse-races with persons resorting thereto, but he had no interest in the keeping, management, or tenancy of the room, or of any part of the public-house:—Held, that as the room had not been opened, kept, or used for the purpose of betting, he had not committed an offence under s. 3 of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, which imposes a penalty upon any person who, being the owner or occupier of any house, office, room, or other place, or a person using the same, shall open, keep, or use the same for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto. Whitehurst v. Fincher, 62 L. T. 433; 17 Cox, C. C. 70; 54 J. P. 565.

Keeping Place for Purpose of Betting.]—To open or keep a house or other place for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto is made an offence by the first part of s. 1 of the Suppression of Betting Houses Act, 1853, and it is not necessary to prove that money has been received as a deposit on bets. Bond v. Plumb, [1894] 1 Q. B. 169; 10 R. 44; 70 L. T. 405; 42 W. R. 222; 17 Cox, C. C. 749; 58 J. P. 168.

A newspaper called "Turf Life" published what was termed a coupon competition, inviting persons, for a prize of 100*l.*, to name the horses which should be first, second, third, and fourth in a certain race. The coupons, which formed part of each copy of the paper, were numbered from 1 to 25. No. 1, called the "Free Coupon," could be used without any money being remitted to make the competitor eligible, but additional coupons could be filled up, and for each of these one penny had to be remitted; so that if all the coupons were used the remittance must be two shillings. Money was received at the newspaper office from intending competitors:—Held, that the magistrate having found the above facts insufficient to support charges of keeping an office or place, receiving moneys and deposits on bets, and publishing advertisements inviting persons to make bets, contrary to the Betting Acts, 1853, and 1874, the court would not interfere with his finding. Stoddart v. Sagar, 64 L. J., M. C. 234; [1895] 2 Q. B. 474; 15 R. 579; 73 L. T. 215; 44 W. R. 287; 18 Cox, C. C. 165; 59 J. P. 598.

—— Person having Care of Place—Liability of Manager.]—The appellant was manager of bicycle grounds. Bicycle races, at which 20,000 spectators were present, took place there. Placards, with the words "No betting allowed," were posted in the grounds, and twelve police constables were employed there by the manager, but some betting took place about twenty yards from the winning-post where he stood, acting as judge of the races. He was aware that betting would and did take place, but could not have wholly prevented it under the circumstances, although he might have repressed it to certain extent with the aid of the constables:—Held, that as the business of the grounds was not that of illegal betting within 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 1, he was not liable to conviction under s. 3, as a "person having the care or management of or in any manner assisting in conducting the business of any . . . . place opened, kept, or used for the purposes aforesaid." Reg. v. Cook, 13 Q. B. D. 377; 51 L. T. 21; 32 W. R. 796; 48 J. P. 694.

Suffering House to be Used in Contravention of Betting Houses Act.]—By s. 17 of the Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), any licensed person who suffers his house to be used in contravention of the Betting Houses Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119) is liable to a penalty. By ss. 1 and 3 of the Betting Houses Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), any occupier of a house who permits it to be used by another for the purpose of any money being received by or on behalf of such person by way of betting is guilty of an offence.—The defendant, the keeper of a licensed house, allowed a person who made bets near it to deposit in the house the stakes received by him. Such stakes had been received by him outside the house:—Held, that, as the money was proved to have been received by the depositor outside and not inside the house, the defendant was not liable to be convicted for suffering the house to be used by the depositor for the purpose of money being received by him by way of betting contrary to ss. 1 and 3 of the Betting Houses Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119). Davis v. Stephenson, 59 L. J., M. C. 73; 24 Q. B. D. 529; 62 L. T. 436; 38 W. R. 492; 17 Cox, C. C. 73; 54 J. P. 565.

The respondent, a keeper of a beerhouse, was charged under s. 3 of the Betting Houses Act, with permitting his premises to be used for the purpose of betting. It appeared that a bookmaker and his clerk were, with the respondent's permission, in the bar of the beerhouse on five consecutive days for the purpose of betting, and did bet, with persons resorting there. Neither the bookmaker nor his clerk had any interest in the beerhouse, nor did either of them occupy any particular place in the bar:—Held, that the respondent ought to have been convicted. Hornsby v. Raggett, 61 L. J., M. C. 24; [1892] 1 Q. B. 20; 66 L. T. 21; 40 W. R. 111; 17 Cox, C. C. 428; 56 J. P. 135.

A person was charged on a summons under the Betting Houses Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 119), ss. 1 and 3, with knowingly and wilfully permitting a place of which he was the occupier to be used by certain persons for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto. On the hearing it was proved that he occupied as tenant a house, with a piece of inclosed ground adjoining, used for cricket, foot-racing, and other games and sports. On the day named in the summons foot-racing took place in the grounds, to which persons were admitted on payment of 6*d*. Within the grounds, but outside the space reserved for the runners, and amongst the spectators, some fifteen or twenty professional bettors stood on chairs and stools in different spots, with books in their hands, calling out the odds on the various runners, and betting with different persons, a man behind each of the professional bettors recording the bets in a book, the persons betting paying 1*s*. each, and receiving a ticket. The evidence satisfied the magistrate that the party knew of what was going on and took no steps to prevent it, and that he might have prevented it if he had been so minded; and he accordingly convicted him of the offence charged:—Held, that the conviction was right. Haigh v. Sheffield Corporation, 44 L. J., M. C. 17; L. R. 10 Q. B. 102; 31 L. T. 536; 23 W. R. 547.

Using a Place for the purpose of "betting with persons resorting thereto."]—There is evidence to go to the jury in support of an indictment, under s. 1 of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, charging the defendant with using a place for the purpose of "betting with persons resorting thereto," when it is shown that the defendant has, on various occasions, gone to a public-house bar, and there, or just outside the door, has received bets from persons who had met him there. Semble, if a person habitually resorts to the bar of a public-house, or similar place, with a view to meeting others to bet with him, that is a user of that place for the purpose of "betting with persons resorting thereto," even if all the bets are handed over outside the house. Reg. v. Worton, 64 L. J., M. C. 74; [1895] 1 Q. B. 227; 15 R. 102; 72 L. T. 29; 18 Cox, C. C. 70—C. C. R.

Where a club is a bonâ fide association, a member betting with other members on the premises cannot be convicted under s. 3 of the Betting Act, 1853, of unlawfully using the premises for the purpose of "betting with persons resorting thereto." Downes v. Johnson, 64 L. J., M. C. 238; [1895] 2 Q. B. 203; 15 R. 466; 72 L. T. 728; 43 W. R. 556; 59 J. P. 487.

To satisfy the meaning of the word "resort" within s. 1 of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, persons must "resort physically," and the mere sending of letters and telegrams does not constitute "resorting" within the meaning of the act. Reg. v. Brown, 64 L. J., M. C. 1; [1895] 1 Q. B. 119; 15 R. 59; 72 L. T. 22; 43 W. R. 222; 18 Cox, C. C. 81; 59 J. P. 485—C. C. R.

"House used for unlawful gaming"—Isolated Occasion.]—An isolated instance of an unlawful game of cards being played among friends at the house of one of them does not render the owner of the house liable to the penalties imposed by s. 4 of the Gaming House Act, 1854. The question whether a particular game at cards falls within the category of unlawful games is one for the court and not for the jury. Reg. v. Davies, 66 L. J., Q. B. 513; [1897] 2 Q. B. 199; 76 L. T. 786—C. C. R.

Advertisement—Betting Houses—Advice with respect to Wagers.]—The Betting Act, 1874, is confined to such bets as are mentioned in the Betting Act, 1853, that is, to bets made in any house, office, or place kept for betting, and the act does not apply to advertisements offering information for the purpose of bets not made in any house, office, or place kept for that purpose. Cox v. Andrews, or Andrews v. Cox, 53 L. J., M. C. 34; 12 Q. B. D. 126; 32 W. R. 289; 48 J. P. 247.

—— Advertising as to Betting—Prizes for Selecting Winning Horses.]—The respondent, a newspaper proprietor, published weekly a "Racing Record," which contained information as to races which had been recently run and as to those which were about to take place; at the end of the book was a coupon, which the purchaser of the book might cut off, and, after writing upon it the names of the horses which he thought would win the six races mentioned on it might send it to the respondent's office; the respondent offered prizes to the persons who selected six, five, or four winners, the prizes varying in amount according to the number of winners selected. The "Racing Records" were sold principally through newsvendors or stationers, and a few copies only were sold by the respondent over the counter at his office:—Held, that the respondent had not committed any offence under the Betting Act. Caminada v. Hulton or Reg. v. Hulton, 60 L. J., M. C. 116; 64 L. T. 572; 39 W. R. 540; 17 Cox, C. C. 307; 55 J. P. 727.

On Licensed Premises.]—See INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

b. Proceedings.

One Justice.]—An information for using a place for betting contrary to 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 3, need not be laid before two justices; one is sufficient. Lee v. Gold, 44 J. P. 395.

Proper Information or Summons.]—Upon a warrant issued by a justice under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 11, an act for the suppression of betting-houses, founded upon an information that a house was used as a common gaming-house within the meaning of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, an act to amend the law concerning gaming and wagers, the house was searched, and B. and others apprehended and brought before the petty sessions, when B. was charged with having the management of a room in the house for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, upon horse-races, contrary to the statute. No information charging such offence on summons embodying such information had been issued or served:—Held, that the want of such information or summons rendered the proceedings on the hearing invalid, and that the conviction thereon must be quashed. Blake v. Beech, 45 L. J., M. C. 111; 1 Ex. D. 320; 34 L. T. 764.

Held, also, that a month's notice of the taking of such proceedings was not necessary before laying an information under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 17. Ib.

An information under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, charged A. with having on the 5th October, and on divers other days and times between the 5th October and laying the information (the 16th November), being then and there the occupier of a house, knowingly and wilfully opened, kept, and used the same for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto. The justices stated that it was established to their satisfaction that he did so keep and use the house on the 8th November, but not on the 5th October, or any other day; and they convicted him of the offence committed on the 8th November:—Held, that the information was good, as not alleging more than one offence, and that the conviction thereon might, therefore, be upheld. Onley v. Gee, 30 L. J., M. C. 222; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 570; 4 L. T. 338; 9 W. R. 662.

Arrest of Persons en masse—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to bind by Recognisances.]—The power of binding by recognisances persons "haunting, resorting, and playing" in gaming-houses given by s. 14 of the Unlawful Games Act, 1541, is exercisable by a magistrate where, in the case of a suspected betting-house, he has issued his warrant to the police under s. 11 of the Betting Act, 1853, and persons found on the premises have been arrested and brought before him. Murphy v. Arrow, 66 L. J., Q. B. 865; [1897] 2 Q. B. 527; 77 L. T. 435; 46 W. R. 94.

Penalty—Betting Houses Act—Licensing Act.]—The provisions of s. 17 of the Licensing Act, 1872, whereby a licensed person is liable to a penalty of 10*l.* for using his premises for the purpose of betting, do not repeal the provisions of s. 3 of the Betting Houses Act, 1853, whereby such person is liable to a penalty of 100*l.* for the same offence. Sims v. Pay, 58 L. J., M. C. 39; 60 L. T. 602; 16 Cox, C. C. 609; 53 J. P. 420.

—— Right to.]—On a summary conviction under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 38, for permitting gaming to be carried on in a house, before a metropolitan police magistrate, half the penalty, which is not payable to the informer, is payable to the receiver of the metropolitan police, and not to the overseer of the parish. Wray v. Ellis, 1 El. & El. 276; 28 L. J., M. C. 45; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 624; 7 W. R. 91.

No Appeal from Conviction.]—A conviction before justices, under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 3, for keeping a gaming-house is a "criminal cause or matter" within s. 47 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and the court of appeal has, therefore, no jurisdiction to hear an appeal from a judgment of the high court quashing the conviction on a case stated by justices. Blake v. Beech, 2 Ex. D. 335; 36 L. T. 723—C. A.

3. BETTING IN PUBLIC PLACE.

a. Instruments of Gaming.

Money.]—Betting odds on one of several dogs about to be run in a race and paying half a sovereign, is not playing or betting with a coin as an instrument of gaming. Hirst v. Molesbury, 40 L. J., M. C. 76; L. R. 6 Q. B. 130; 23 L. T. 55; 19 W. R. 246.

Halfpence used for pitch-and-toss are not instruments of gaming within 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4, Watson v. Martin, 34 L. J., M. C. 50 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 321 ; 11 L. T. 372 ; 13 W. R. 144 ; 10 Cox, C. C. 56. But see now 31 & 32 Vict. c. 52.

Machine.]—T. and L. were charged with an offence under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 52, s. 3, in being on a racecourse with a machine so constructed as to register the odds laid upon the horses then about to run in a race there. They were taking deposits on the bets made and amounts staked on the several horses, and soliciting bystanders to make bets, charging ten per cent. upon the amounts won, for the use of the instrument which displayed the state of the odds, and by a mechanical arrangement varied the announcement from time to time according to the bets made, and they having been convicted :—Held, that such a machine was an instrument or means of wagering within the meaning of the section, and that the conviction was therefore right. Tollett v. Thomas, 40 L. J., M. C. 209 ; L. R. 6 Q. B. 514 ; 24 L. T. 508 ; 19 W. R. 890.

Game of Chance.]—In order to convict under 36 & 37 Vict. c. 38, s. 3, of the offence of playing or betting by way of wagering or gaming, in a public place, with a coin, card, token, or other article used as an instrument or means of wagering or gaming, it is necessary to allege and prove that the defendant was guilty of wagering or gaming at some game or pretended game of chance. Ridgeway v. Farndale, 61 L. J., M. C. 199 ; [1892] 2 Q. B. 309 ; 67 L. T. 318 ; 41 W. R. 128 ; 17 Cox, C. C. 561 ; 56 J. P. 697.

A conviction under 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4, which stated that the defendant "did play in a certain highway (to wit) the River Thames, with certain instruments of gaming (to wit) cards, at a certain game of chance" is sufficient, as it describes the offence in the words of the statute creating it. Grant, Ex parte, 5 W. R. 289.

b. Public Place.

Place where Public have Access.]—A colliery company had a large field of thirty acres which they allowed the workmen and their families to use for recreation and bowling matches. Strangers were also allowed to come and play there, and were not turned away. One day T. and others played at pitch-and-toss in the field :—Held, that they were liable to be convicted under 36 & 37 Vict. c. 38, s. 3, for playing in a place to which the public are permitted to have access. Turnbull v. Appleton, 45 J. P. 469.

Railway Carriage.]—A party was convicted under 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4 (Vagrant Act), of playing in a certain open and public place (to wit, a carriage used on a railway) with an instrument of gaming :—Held, that the conviction was bad, it not showing that the carriage was being used for the conveyance of passengers on the line. Freestone, In re, 1 H. & N. 93 ; 25 L. J., M. C. 121 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 525 ; 4 W. R. 567.

The Vagrant Act Amendment Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 38), s. 3, imposes a penalty upon "every person playing or betting by way of wagering or gaming in any street, road, highway, or other open and public place, or in any open place to which the public have or are permitted to have access, at, or with any coin, card, &c., used as an instrument or means of such wagering or gaming, at any game or pretended game of chance" :—Held, that a railway carriage while travelling on its journey is within the definition of an open and public place to which the public have or are permitted to have access in the section. Langrish v. Archer, 52 L. J., M. C. 47 ; 10 Q. B. D. 44 ; 47 L. T. 548 ; 31 W. R. 183 ; 15 Cox, C. C. 194 ; 47 J. P. 295.

4. Cheating at Play.

What is.]—The three prisoners being at a public-house with the prosecutor, one of the three placed a pen-case on the table and left the room. One of the two remaining then took out of the case a pen, and putting it under the prosecutor's glass, proposed to him, that he, the prosecutor, upon the return of the man who had left, should bet the man that there was no pen in the case. Being thus induced, the prosecutor made the bet and staked the money ; but the case having been turned into his hand, another pen tumbled out, and the prisoner took his money. Semble, that these facts did not amount to the offence of cheating at play within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17. Reg. v. Hudson, Bell, C. C. 263 ; 29 L. J., M. C. 145 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 566 ; 2 L. T. 263 ; 8 W. R. 421 ; 8 Cox, C. C. 305.

The prisoners were indicted and convicted under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, of obtaining by fraud and unlawful device and ill-practice in playing at a certain game or sport, to wit, in and by wagering on the event of a certain game or sport, a watch and other things from the prosecutor. The evidence was, that the prosecutor was induced to go to a public-house and drink and toss for wagers with one of the prisoners, and the event was that the prosecutor lost, and the prisoners took away the property stated :—Held, that this was a sport, pastime, or exercise, if not a game, within the meaning of s. 17 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109. Reg. v. O'Connor, 45 L. T. 512 ; 15 Cox, C. C. 3 ; 46 J. P. 214.

Sufficiency of Indictment.]—An indictment, framed under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, alleged that the defendant, "by fraud, unlawful device, and ill-practice in playing at and with cards, unlawfully did win from, &c., a certain sum of money, with intent," &c. ; but it was not averred to whom the money belonged :—Held, that such an averment was not necessary, and the indictment was sufficient. Reg. v. Moss, 1 Dears. & B. 104 ; 26 L. J., M. C. 9 ; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1196 ; 7 Cox, C. C. 200 ; 5 W. R. 49.

1. SUPPLY.

a. Duties as to.

Generally.]—The effect of the Metropolitan Gas Act of 1860 is not to prevent companies who were not enumerated in it, and who were supplying gas to others than the public at the time of the passing of the act, from continuing to do so. Imperial Gas Light and Coke Co. v. West London Junction Gas Co., 15 L. T. 66; 14 W. R. 1019.

Semble, that railway companies, and hotels in connection with them, are not "the public" within s. 54. Ib.

Notice to Supply—Length of Notice required.]—The Metropolis Gas Act, 1860, by s. 2 incorporates the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, except so far as the provisions thereof are inconsistent, and by s. 77 imposes a penalty upon a gas company if they wilfully fail for seven days after notice in writing by the consumer to furnish a supply of gas. The Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, provides by s. 1 that the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, and this act shall be construed together as one act, and the provisions of this act shall be held to repeal such of the provisions of the former act as are inconsistent with it, and by s. 11 it is provided that every owner or occupier of a house requiring a supply of gas shall serve a notice upon the undertakers specifying the premises, and the day (not being an earlier day than a reasonable time after such notice) upon which such supply is to commence:—Held, that s. 11 of the later act repealed s. 17 of the former act, so that a metropolitan gas company to which these acts apply is bound to give a supply of gas within a reasonable time after notice by the consumer, and is not entitled to a seven days' notice. South Metropolitan Gas Co. v. Noakes, 61 L. T. 556.

Refusal—Penalty.]—By the Metropolis Gas Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 125), s. 2, the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 Vict. c. 15), is incorporated with this act, and made to apply to the several metropolitan gas companies enumerated; by the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 41), s. 1, the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, and this act shall be construed together as one act:—Held, that the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, applied to all the enumerated companies. Commercial Gas Co. v. Scott, 44 L. J., M. C. 171; L. R. 10 Q. B. 400; 32 L. T. 765; 23 W. R. 874.

The Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 41), s. 36, imposes a penalty whenever the undertakers neglect or refuse to supply gas to any occupier within the limits of the special act under such pressure as is prescribed:—Held, that the section applied to a case where the gas company had improperly cut off the supply of gas. Ib.

Obligation—For what Period.]—There is no obligation upon a gas company to continue to supply a customer with gas for any particular period, nor does the circumstance of quarterly payments, or the hiring of a meter by the year, or of the company being the only one in the neighbourhood, afford any ground for implying a contract to that effect. Hoddesdon Gas and Coke Co. v. Haselwood, 6 C. B. (N.S.) 239; 28 L. J., C. P. 268; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1013; 7 W. R. 415.

—— "Owner or Occupier" of Premises—Bankruptcy of Owner of Premises—Payment of Arrears.]—At the date of the receiving order the debtor was in arrear in respect of gas supplied to his premises during the previous quarter, and the company in consequence cut off the supply, and declined to reconnect at the request of the official receiver until the arrears were paid. The official receiver paid the amount claimed under protest. On application by the trustee in the bankruptcy for repayment:—Held, that the official receiver could not be said to be "owner or occupier" of the premises within s. 11 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, and was, therefore, not entitled to call on the company to supply him with gas, and that the application of the trustee must fail. Mason, Ex parte, Smith, In re, [1893] 1 Q. B. 323; 5 R. 47; 67 L. T. 596; 41 W. R. 159; 57 J. P. 72; 9 Morrell, 304.

A gas company had, under s. 16 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, power to stop the gas from entering the premises of a person who had been supplied with gas and had neglected to pay the rent due for it. Under s. 18 of its private act of 1872, in case any consumer should leave the premises where gas had been supplied to him without paying the rent due to the company, the company could not require from the next tenant payment of the arrears unless (inter alia) the incoming tenant should continue the trade or business of the outgoing tenant, and should have paid a consideration for so doing. A mill company had been supplied with gas on their premises, and owed to the gas company arrears of rent. Plaintiffs were appointed by the court receivers and managers of the business of the mill company on behalf of debenture-holders, and they entered into possession of the premises and carried on the business there:—Held, that whether or not the plaintiffs were "occupiers" of the premises so as to have the right themselves, apart from the mill company, to require a supply of gas, the gas company had a right to refuse to give it until the arrears of rent were paid. Paterson v. Gas Light and Coke Co., 65 L. J., Ch. 709; [1896] 2 Ch. 476; 74 L. T. 640; 45 W. R. 39; 60 J. P. 532—C. A.

Per Lindley, L.J., and Lopes, L.J.: Receivers and managers on behalf of debenture-holders, whether appointed under a deed or by the court, are in the position of caretakers as regards the mortgagor company, and their entering on the premises makes no change of possession. The plaintiffs, therefore, were not "incoming tenants" within the meaning of s. 18 of the act of 1872, and that section was not applicable to the case. The principle of Smith, In re, Mason, Ex parte ([1893] 1 Q. B. 323), applied. Ib.

Per Rigby, L.J.: Sect. 18 of the act of 1872 enabled the gas company to require payment of arrears from incoming tenants except in certain cases, but did not deprive the company of its remedy by way of stopping the supply of gas.

Assuming that the plaintiffs in other respects came within the section, they were not persons who had paid any consideration to anybody for carrying on the business. Ib.

Failure of Supply—Unavoidable Occurrence—Abatement of Price.]—A gas company who are under a statutory obligation to supply a fixed quantity of gas to the public lamps in a district at a fixed price during a certain period are not liable to a reduction in that price if, by reason of an occurrence over which they had no control (such as a frost of exceptional severity), the fixed amount of gas has not been supplied during a part of that period. Richmond Gas Co. and Richmond Corporation, In re, 62 L. J., Q. B. 172; [1893] 1 Q. B. 56; 5 R. 29; 67 L. T. 554; 41 W. R. 41; 56 J. P. 776.

Supply beyond Assigned District.] — Upon the true construction of s. 6 of the Metropolis Gas Act, 1860, a gas company is prohibited from furnishing to a customer a supply of gas for the purpose of consumption by him within a district assigned to another company, notwithstanding that the meter through which the supply passes is on a part of the customer's property which is within the district. Imperial Gas Light Co. v. West London Junction Gas Co. (56 L. J., Ch. 862, n.) distinguished. Gas Light and Coke Co. v. South Metropolitan Gas Co., 62 L. J., Ch. 123; 62 L. T. 126; 54 J. P. 373—H. L. (E.)

—— Interference with Private Rights.]—A corporation having, under the provisions of an act of parliament, bought up a gas company which previously supplied gas to the borough, and which had compulsory powers for the purpose within the borough, commenced supplying gas to an adjoining township, in which another gas company already existed, having similar powers within the township. The gas company of the township having filed a bill against the corporation to restrain them from supplying gas within the township, and alleging, as a personal injury which entitled them to maintain their suit, that the corporation had contracted to supply gas to a particular manufactory within the township which otherwise they must have supplied, and that they had thereby been deprived of the profits arising from the supply of gas to the manufactory, and that great loss would be sustained by them:—Held, that the injury alleged was not such as entitled the plaintiffs to maintain the suit. Pudsey Coal Gas Co. v. Bradford Corporation, 42 L. J., Ch. 293; L. R. 15 Eq. 167; 28 L. T. 11; 21 W. R. 286.

Purity and Illuminating Power.]—The Gas Light and Coke Company's Act, 1868, and the City of London Gas Act, 1868, do not repeal the provisions of the Metropolis Gas Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 125), as to the purity and illuminating power of the gas without as well as within the city of London. Gas Light and Coke Co. v. St. George, Hanover Square, Vestry, 42 L. J., Q. B. 50; 28 L. T. 281—Ex. Ch. S. P., Great Central Gas Consumers' Co. v. Clarke, infra.

—— Gas Examiner—Hearing Counsel.]—The chief gas examiner of the metropolitan district has a discretion as to whether he will or will not hear counsel upon an appeal to him under s. 12 of the Gas Companies Acts Amendment Acts, 1880. Reg. v. Williamson, 59 L. J., Q. B. 493; 63 L. T. 276; 38 W. R. 769; 55 J. P. 101.

—— Supply of Impure Gas—Remedy.]—The obligation to supply pure gas imposed upon those who deal with the public under the Gas Works Clauses Act, 1871, is statutory and not contractual; and the means of enforcing that obligation is either by indictment or by the remedy provided by that act. Clegg, Parkinson & Co. v. Early Gas Co., 65 L. J., Q. B. 339; [1896] 1 Q. B. 592; 44 W. R. 606.

b. Payment for.

Price, how Regulated.]—The price to be charged for gas supplied to the metropolis (as well as the quality) is regulated by the Metropolis Gas Act, 1860, and not by a prior private act. Great Central Gas Consumers' Co. v. Clarke, 13 C. B. (N.S.) 838; 32 L. J., C. P. 41; 11 W. R. 123—Ex. Ch.

Arrears—From whom Recoverable.]—By the Gas Light and Coke Company's Act, 1872, in case a consumer of gas leaves the premises without paying the rates due for gas supplied to him, the company shall not require payment of the arrears from the incoming tenant unless he shall have agreed with the defaulting consumer to pay the arrears, or unless the incoming tenant shall continue the trade of the outgoing one and pay him or the owner a consideration for so doing. B. having taken over a public-house from M., who was in debt to the gas company for gas supplied, was summoned by the company for non-payment of the arrears:—Held, that the act of 1872 gave no positive power to require payment of the arrears from B. and that the gas company could not recover them from him. Gas Light and Coke Co. v. Mead, 45 L. J., M. C. 71; 33 L. T. 729. And see Mason, Ex parte, Smith, In re, and Paterson v. Gas Light and Coke Co., supra.

Distress for Money Due.]—A gas company, having under its private act of parliament a power to levy by distress all sums of money due for the supply of gas, is not a landlord or other person to whom rent is due withing the meaning of s. 34 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and such a company having distrained upon the goods of a liquidating debtor will be restrained from dealing with the distress. Roberts, In re, Hill, Ex parte, 46 L. J., Bk. 116; 6 Ch. D. 63; 37 L. T. 46; 25 W. R. 784—C. A.

A landlord's distress for rent is not liable to be restrained as "an execution or other legal process" within the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 13. Birmingham and Staffordshire Gas Light Co., Ex parte, Fanshaw, In re, 40 L. J., Bk. 52; L. R. 11 Eq. 615; 24 L. T. 639; 19 W. R. 603.

Under a local statute a gas company had the same rights with respect to recovering the rent or charge due for the supply of gas, as landlords have with respect to recovering rent. The company, after notice that a firm indebted to them for a supply of gas had filed a petition under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, s. 125, distrained in pursuance of its statutory rights upon their goods. The creditors of the firm afterwards resolved on liquidation, and a trustee was appointed:—Held, that the distress was not liable to be restrained as "an execution or other legal process" within s. 13; and that, assuming the filing of the petition to be equivalent to the commencement of a bankruptcy, the company was entitled to distrain, after the filing, for one year's supply of gas. Ib.

By their special act (39 & 40 Vict. c. 119, s. 44) the corporation of Walsall were empowered to "recover from any person any rent or charge due to them by him for gas supplied by the like means as landlords are for the time being by law allowed to recover rent in arrear":—Held, that, after the filing of a liquidation petition by a customer, the corporation were entitled as against the trustee in the liquidation to levy a distress in respect of a sum due by the debtor for gas supplied to him before the filing of the petition. Harrison, Ex parte, Peake, In re, 53 L. J., Ch. 977; 13 Q. B. D. 753; 51 L. T. 878.

Held, also, that the corporation were not, within the meaning of s. 34 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, "other persons" to whom any rent was due by the debtor, but that, by virtue of s. 44 of the special act, they were entitled to the rights given to landlords by s. 34. The payment to a gas company for gas supplied, though it is called "rent" in some acts of parliament, is not really of the nature of rent, and consequently a gas company does not come within the words "other person to whom any rent is due" in s. 34 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Those words apply only to a person who, though he is not the landlord of the bankrupt, fills a position analogous to that of a landlord, because he is entitled to receive that which is rent strictly so called. Birmingham Gas Light Co., Ex parte, (L. R. 11 Eq. 615), and Hill, Ex parte (6 Ch. D. 63), commented on. Ib.

When Gratuitous.]—The Oldham Corporation Gas and Water Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. xlii.) provides by s. 58 that "the corporation shall at all times afford an ample supply of gas and water without charge to all hospitals and infirmaries within the limits of the act, and all baths and washhouses and all buildings within those limits respectively maintained at the expense of the borough rates or the rates for the relief of the poor or other rates raised within those limits." The Oldham Poor Law Union, in addition to four townships within the limits of the act, contains four townships not included within those limits, and the workhouse, which is situate within the limits, is maintained by rates raised for the relief of the poor within all the townships of the union:—Held, that the corporation are not bound to supply gas and water gratuitously to the workhouse, as the benefit can only be demanded by institutions which are supported by rates wholly raised within the limits. Oldham Union v. Oldham Corporation, 2 W. R. 590.

Reduction of Price—Jurisdiction of Quarter Sessions.]—By s. 35 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, a court of quarter sessions may, on the petition of two gas-ratepayers, appoint some accountant, or other competent person, to examine and ascertain at the expense of the gas company (the amount of the expense to be determined by the court) the actual state and condition of the concerns of the company, and to make a report thereof to the court, and power is given to the court to examine witnesses on oath touching the truth of the said accounts and the matters therein referred to; and if it appear to the court that the profits of the company during the preceding year have exceeded the prescribed rate, the court has power, in case the whole of the reserve fund has been and remains invested, and in case dividends to the amount hereinbefore limited have been paid, to make an order reducing the price of the gas supplied by the company. A petition was under this section presented to the recorder of Hanley praying him to appoint a person to inquire into the actual condition of the undertaking of the prosecutors, and an accountant was appointed. During the inquiry he examined not only the accounts of the then previous year, but re-opened all the accounts of previous years to 1871, and a report based upon this inquiry was sent in by him to the recorder. It was admitted that the whole of the reserve fund was not then and never had been invested, and that the prescribed maximum dividend had not been paid. The recorder, being of opinion that the accounts when amended showed that the company had in point of fact earned enough to pay the prescribed maximum dividend, and to have invested and kept invested the whole of the reserve fund, made an order reducing the price of gas 6*d.* per 1,000 cubic feet. He further ordered the prosecutor to pay 650*l.*, the expense of the proceedings before the accountant, and to pay to the petitioners 2,433*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*, "their costs of and incident to the petition." Upon an application for a writ of certiorari to quash the order as being made without jurisdiction:—Held, that the order to reduce the price of gas was bad, the power of the recorder being absolutely restricted by s. 35 to cases where the whole of the reserved fund has been invested and the prescribed dividend paid; and that the recorder acted without jurisdiction in ordering the costs of the petitioners to be paid to the prosecutors. Reg. v. Hanley (Recorder), 56 L. J., M. C. 125; 19 Q. B. D. 481; 57 L. T. 444; 36 W. R. 222; 52 J. P. 100.

The accountant and the recorder had jurisdiction to inquire into the accounts of past years for the purpose of ascertaining the actual condition of the concern; but, semble, that they had no power to disallow and re-cast them, and by so doing vary the accounts of the year into which they were inquiring. Ib.

—— Appointment of Engineer to assist Accountant.]—The court of quarter sessions has no jurisdiction, under s. 35 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, to appoint a gas engineer to assist an accountant appointed thereunder to examine and ascertain the actual state and condition of the concerns of the gas company, and where such order is made a writ of certiorari will lie to bring the order up to be quashed. Reg. v. Brindley, 54 L. T. 435; 50 J. P. 534.

—— Application by Consumers.] — Certain consumers of gas brought an action against the gas company which supplied them, on the ground that the company had created a reserve fund greatly in excess of that authorised by its special acts, and had carried over from year to year large undivided profits, thereby avoiding the obligation upon it to reduce the price of the gas which it so supplied:—Held, that no such duty as alleged was imposed by the acts on the company; that the consumers had no control over the affairs of the company, and were not, therefore, entitled to raise the question, the shareholders alone being interested; and that the court could not order the reserve fund and undivided profits to be applied in reduction of the price of the gas in the manner suggested. Mason v. Ashton Gas Co., 54 L. T. 708; 50 J. P. 628—C. A.

c. Interference with.

Fraudulently Cutting Pipes—Concealment.]—A count stated that the defendants bored into the gas-pipes of the plaintiffs, and affixed gas-pipes of the defendants thereto, and kept them so affixed for a long time, without the knowledge of the plaintiffs, by means whereof quantities of the plaintiffs' gas flowed out of their pipes; that the defendants, maliciously contriving to prevent the plaintiffs from discovering the trespasses so committed till six years should have elapsed, fraudulently and without the plaintiffs' knowledge cut off from the plaintiffs' gas-pipes the gas-pipes of the defendants so affixed thereto, and fraudulently and without the plaintiffs' knowledge stopped and plugged up the gas-pipes of the plaintiffs, where the gas-pipes of the defendants had been so affixed, by means whereof the plaintiffs were prevented from discovering the trespasses until six years from their commission had elapsed, and thereby the remedy of the plaintiffs by action became barred:—Held, that the count disclosed a good cause of action. Imperial Gas Light and Coke Co. v. London Gas Light Co., 10 Ex. 39; 2 C. L. R. 1230; 23 L. J., Ex. 303; 18 Jur. 497; 2 W. R. 527.

Laying Pipe to communicate with Pipe of Company without Consent.]—The appellants, on their own premises, substituted for part of a gas pipe belonging to the respondents a larger pipe for the purpose of increasing their supply. This was done without any fraud, waste, or misuse of the gas, but without the respondent's consent, although notice of intention to disconnect the pipe from the meter was duly given under s. 15 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871. Upon summons a stipendiary magistrate convicted the appellants under s. 18 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847:—Held, upon a case stated, that the appellants had within the meaning of that section caused to be laid a pipe to communicate with a pipe belonging to the undertakers without their consent; and that the magistrate rightly convicted them. Wood v. West Ham Gas Co., 52 L. T. 817; 33 W. R. 799; 49 J. P. 662.

Larceny of Gas.]—A person was indicted for stealing a quantity of gas from a gas company. He only paid the company for the amount that was indicated by a meter placed on the premises; but by means of stop-cocks and pipes he intercepted large quantities of gas which did not pass through the meter. He was convicted of larceny:—Held, that the conviction was good, and that there is nothing in the nature of gas to prevent it being the subject of larceny. Reg. v. White, Dears. C. C. 203; 1 C. L. R. 489; 3 Car. & K. 363; 22 L. J., M. C. 123; 17 Jur. 536; 1 W. R. 418; 6 Cox, C. C. 213.

2. Rights and Liabilities of Gas Companies.

a. In Breaking up Roads and Laying down Pipes.

When Indictable.]—In a town there was a gas company, established by a local act, which incorporated the Gasworks Act, 1847. There were also commissioners under a local act, with powers to lay down mains and pipes for the public lighting of the town, but with no powers to supply or lay down pipes for the supply of private houses. The commissioners, who had formerly been supplied with gas by the old company, duly transferred their powers to the Longton Gas Company, which was a company, but without any parliamentary powers as a gas company. Upon an indictment against them for obstructing the public highway, by opening trenches and laying down pipes, and conveying gas to the public lamps and to private houses:—Held that they were not indictable for the acts done for the public lighting of the town, those acts being authorised by the powers transferred to them by the commissioners; but that the taking up the pavement, and digging trenches, in one instance across the street, and in other instances across the footway of the street, in order to lay down service-pipes to private houses from the mains, could not be justified as acts done in the exercise of the right of each householder to make such a slight temporary obstruction on the highway as may be necessarily incidental to the enjoyment of his property; and that therefore the company, having no parliamentary powers for the purpose, and a householder who authorised the acts, were indictable. Reg. v. Longton Gas Co., 2 El. & El. 651; 29 L. J., M. C. 118; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 601; 2 L. T. 14; 8 W. R. 293; 8 Cox, C. C. 317.

Restraining by Injunction.]—A gas company was incorporated by statute, for the purpose of supplying a town with gas. Some years afterwards another company was formed, and registered under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, for a like purpose, and commenced opening up the streets and highways to lay down their pipes, some of the inhabitants approving and some disapproving of the works. A court of equity refused an injunction to restrain the new company from continuing their works, the nuisance or damage being trivial. Att.-Gen. v. Sheffield Gas Consumers' Co., 3 De G. M. & G. 304; 22 L. J., Ch. 811; 17 Jur. 677; 1 W. R. 185.

The disturbance of the pavement of a town by an unincorporated gas company, without lawful authority, for the purpose of laying down gas-pipes, is not a nuisance so serious and important that a court of equity will interfere by injunction to prevent it. The views of the governing body of a town, and the motives of the persons instituting a suit, are not immaterial where the complaint is of a public injury. Att.-Gen. v. Cambridge Consumers' Gas Co., 38 L. J., Ch. 94; L. R. 4 Ch. 71; 19 L. T. 508; 17 W. R. 145.

Dover Gas Company—Powers of.]—The Dover Gas Light Company has power under its act of incorporation, without the consent of the commissioners for executing the paving acts for Dover, but under the conditions prescribed by its act, to lay down in the streets of Dover in which gas-pipes had been already laid down by them, and were still in use, additional gas-pipes parallel to and to be used with such others, for the same purpose of supplying gas to the town. Dover Gas Light Co. v. Dover Corporation, 7 De G. M. & G. 545; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 812.

Private Roads—Occupiers.]—An estate was purchased for the purpose of building houses; a part was laid out as private roads, and upon a partition, the owners taking the roads covenanted that the other freeholders and the occupiers of the houses should have the full use and enjoyment of the roads in as absolute a manner as if they were public roads :—Held, that a request to be supplied with gas by a minority of the occupiers of houses was sufficient, without the consent of the freeholders, to justify the breaking up the roads by the gas company to lay down their pipes to comply with such request; and every occupier had the same right, for the purpose of his use and enjoyment, to call in all such aid as he might have done if the roads had been public roads. Selby v. Crystal Palace District Gas Co., 4 De G. F. & J. 246; 31 L. J., Ch. 595; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 830; 6 L. T. 790; 10 W. R. 636.

Injuring Property when laying Pipes.]—By 10 & 11 Vict. c. 15 (The Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847), s. 6, the undertakers are authorised to open and break up the soil and pavement of the several streets, within the limits of their special act, and to lay down pipes for supplying gas. By s. 7, it is provided that nothing herein shall authorise the undertakers to lay down or place any pipe or other works into, through or against, any building, or in any land not dedicated to the public use, without the consent of the owners and occupiers. A road passed alongside the plaintiff's premises, and over certain arches occupied by him as cellars. A company, constituted under a local act incorporating the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, in opening and breaking up the soil of the road for the purpose of laying down gas-pipes, damaged the arches :—Held, that the arches were buildings within s. 7, and that the company could not justify breaking through them. Thompson v. Sunderland Gas Co. 46 L. J., Ex. 710; 2 Ex. D. 429; 37 L. T. 30; 25 W. R. 809—C. A.

A gas company, for the purposes of their undertaking, broke up the concrete pavement of a street within the limits of their special act. In the course of such work a servant of the company in striking the concrete with a pick, caused a piece of the concrete to fly up some distance and break a plate-glass window upon adjoining premises. In an action by the owner of the premises to recover damages :—Held, that the company were liable under s. 6 of the Gasworks Clauses Act of 1847, which was incorporated in their special act. Hornby v. Liverpool United Gas Light Co., 47 J. P. 231.

Agreements to Repair and Obstruct Highway.]—A gas company agreed with a highway board that, in consideration of the board allowing them to open a highway under the control of the board for the purpose of laying down their pipes, they would pay to the board a certain sum per yard of road so opened, and would make good the surface of the road. On demurrer to a declaration for a breach of this agreement :—Held, that as the highway board could have prevented the laying down of the pipes, and was liable to keep the road in repair after the gas company had left it, there was a good consideration moving from the highway board to support the agreement, and that the agreement did not necessarily contemplate the indictable offence of blocking up the highway, and was therefore not illegal. Edgware Highway Board v. Harrow District Gas Co., 44 L. J., Q. B. 1; L. R. 10 Q. B. 92; 31 L. T. 402; 23 W. R. 90.

"Street, Highway, or Public Place"—Laying Mains on Seashore.]—A gas company laid down main pipes between two villages on the seashore in an open tract of land above mean high-water mark, which belonged to the owner of the enclosed land fronting the shore. The inhabitants of the villages had always gone to and fro between them along the shore, and at high water passed over this piece of land as they chose and in accordance with the tide, but by no defined track. The owners brought an action for a mandatory injunction to compel the company to remove the pipes :—Held, that the tract of land in question was not a "street, highway, or public place" within the meaning of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847. Maddock v. Wallasey Local Board, 55 L. J., Q. B. 267; 50 J. P. 404.

Support of Mains laid in Highway without Statutory Powers—Subsequent Act giving Authority—Compensation.]—A limited gas company, acting without any statutory authority, and without the authority of the landowner, but with the permission of the highway authority, laid pipes under the soil of the highway. Subsequently a gas company was constituted by a private act, which incorporated the Gasworks Clauses Acts, 1847 and 1871. The private act of this company provided for the dissolution of the limited company, and enacted that all lands, gasworks, easements, mains, pipes, plant, and apparatus placed by, vested in, or which were the property of the limited company immediately before the passing of the act, should be similarly vested in the incorporated company, and the incorporated company were empowered to maintain the existing gasworks and to lay down and maintain additional mains and pipes. The Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, gives power to undertakers of gasworks to open the soil within their district, to lay and repair pipes therein, and to do other acts necessary for supplying gas, making compensation for any damage done in the execution of such powers. The Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, renders it compulsory on undertakers of gasworks to supply gas on certain conditions and within certain limits. The defendants, the lessees of the minerals under and adjacent to the highway under which the plaintiffs had laid their pipes, had by working the coal thereunder let down the soil of the highway and caused injury to the plaintiffs' pipes :—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to support for their pipes, and that the landowner was entitled to compensation for the burden thus imposed upon him; that the plaintiffs could therefore recover damages by action for any injury caused to their pipes, while the owner of the minerals could recover compensation in an arbitration for the limitation thus put upon the user of his lands. Normanton Gas Co., v. Pope, 52 L. J., Q. B. 629; 49 L. T. 798; 32 W. R. 134—C. A. Affirming, 47 J. P. 181.

Injury to Pipes under Roads by Steam Roller.]—The plaintiffs, a gas company, laid down pipes under the surface of certain streets, as they were bound by statute to do, for the purpose of supplying gas to light the street and houses in the streets. The streets were vested in the defendants, the vestry of the parish, by certain statutes which gave them the authority of the surveyor of highways, and with the duty to repair, but without prescribing any particular mode of repair. The defendants used steam-rollers for the repair of the streets, as being a mode of repair most advantageous to both the ratepayers and the public, but the rollers they used were so heavy as to frequently injure the plaintiffs' pipes, though the pipes were sufficiently below the surface so as not to have been injured by the ordinary mode of repair if such rollers had not been used:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled not only to recover damages for the injury which had been done, but also to have an injunction to restrain the defendants from using steam rollers in such a way as to injure the pipes of the plaintiffs. Gas Light and Coke Co. v. St. Mary Abbott's Vestry, 54 L. J., Q. B. 414; 15 Q. B. D. 1; 53 L. T. 457; 33 W. R. 892; 49 J. P. 469—C. A. Affirming, 1 Cab. & E. 368.

Failure to properly reinstate Roadway after laying Gas Main—Nuisance—Liability.]—The defendants, a gas company, had been laying down a gas main, and for that purpose had dug a trench along the side of a public road, which they filled up so carelessly and defectively that the wheel of the vehicle in which the plaintiff was sank suddenly into the trench, causing the vehicle to be upset, and throwing out the plaintiff and thereby causing the injuries in respect of which the action was brought:—Held, that the defendants were liable in damages, notwithstanding the provisions of section 11 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847. Goodson v. Sunbury Gas Consumers' Co., 75 L. T. 251; 60 J. P. 585.

b. Creating Nuisance.

Fouling Wells and Streams.]—A statute constituting a gas company, and giving them great powers, contained an enactment to the effect, that if the company should "cause or suffer to be conveyed or to flow into any stream," any refuse matter from their works, so as to foul such water they should forfeit for every such act 200*l.*; and another that they should be liable, in addition, to "a penalty of 20*l.* a day for each day such refuse shall be so conveyed or flow, or the act by which such water shall be fouled, shall continue after notice:—Held, that the meaning was to give the public a guarantee that the company should be bound to take every possible care that the consequences of their works should not be hurtful to the water of the neighbourhood. Birmingham and Staffordshire Gas Light Co., v. Hipkins, 6 H. & N. 250; 30 L. J., Ex. 60; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 213; 9 W. R. 168—Ex. Ch.

—— Percolations.]—When noxious matter percolates through the soil from gasworks, so as to foul a well, such percolation will render the defendants liable under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90, which imposes a penalty of 200*l.* on any gas company, "who shall suffer any washings, &c., to be conveyed into any well." Millington v. Griffiths, 30 L. T. 65.

—— Disuse of Wells.]—A well which, on account of its having become contaminated, has been disused by the owner for several years, and has been covered over, does not cease to be a well within the meaning of the act. Ib.

Non-user, and closing of his own well in consequence of its being polluted, even coupled with the acceptance by the plaintiff of the use of substituted wells of the defendants, is not such an abandonment of the former as to alter its character and make it no longer a well, nor can any licence to pollute be inferred from such a state of facts. Ib.

—— Who to Recover Penalty.]—By a local act a penalty was imposed on any gas or other company for suffering any impure matter to flow into any stream, to be sued for by a common informer. Afterwards, by the Gasworks Clauses Act (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15, s. 21), a like penalty is imposed for the same offence, such penalty "to be recovered by the person into whose water such substance shall be conveyed, or whose water shall be fouled by any such act":—Held, that the latter provision was pro tanto a repeal of the former. Parry v. Croydon Commercial Gas Co., 15 C. B. (N.S.) 568; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 172; 9 L. T. 694; 12 W. R. 212—Ex. Ch.

Indictment.]—In an indictment against a gas company for a nuisance in conveying the refuse of gas into a great public river, whereby the fish are destroyed and the water is rendered unfit for drinking, the question for the jury is, whether the acts done by the company complained of amount to a nuisance. Rex v. Medley, 6 Car. & P. 292.

The circumstance, that, by the diminution of fish, a considerable number of fishermen are thrown out of employ, is not of itself a sufficient ground to sustain an indictment. Ib.

Liability of Directors.]—The directors of a gas company are answerable for an act done by their superintendent and engineer, under a general authority to manage the works, though they are personally ignorant of the particular plan adopted, and though such plan is a departure from the original and understood method, which the directors had no reason to suppose had been discontinued. Ib.

Action to Restrain Nuisance.]—In an action to restrain a gas company from creating a nuisance at its gas manufactory:—Held, that the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), is incorporated with the Metropolis Gas Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 125), except so far as its provisions are inconsistent with that act; and a company performing the obligations of the act of 1860 cannot justify creating a nuisance by setting up incapacity to make or supply gas without so doing. Att.-Gen. v. Gas Light and Coke Co., 47 L. J., Ch. 534; 7 Ch. D. 217; 37 L. T. 746; 26 W. R. 125.

Held, also, that, even if the company was at liberty to justify itself, the burden of proof rested on it both by the ordinary law and by the act of 1860, s. 52, and that they had failed to discharge that burden by their evidence. Ib.

Injunction to restrain the erection of gasworks in the vicinity of the plaintiff's residence refused, it being uncertain whether upon the completion of the works the manufacture of gas would prove a nuisance. Where a work is going on, which, though not in itself a nuisance, will manifestly end in operations presenting such a nuisance as this court restrains, this court will interfere at once. A motion for an injunction to restrain a contingent nuisance was refused:—Held, that the motion ought to be refused with costs, and not stand over. Haines v.

Taylor, 2 Ph. 209; 11 Jur. 73. Affirming, 10 Beav. 75.

A gas company granted a lease of a piece of ground abutting on the Regent's Canal at Hackney, with a covenant by the lessee to erect a lime kiln and keep up a road, and by the lessors to make the road, and, if it should be necessary to remove it (which they had power to do), to make a new one of like materials. The lessee built the kiln and premises, and the lessors made the road. In 1865 the lessors (having built two gasholders) proposed to erect a third, and enlarge a basin or lay-by, which would render the diversion of the road necessary, but it was proposed to reinstate it with a slight curve. The lessee filed a bill to restrain the erection of the gasholder and the alteration of the road; as to the gasholder, on the ground of nuisance and obstruction of the view of the plaintiff's premises; and as to the road, that it was a mere device to alter the road. On motion, an injunction as to the gasholder was refused; but that as to the road granted, on the usual undertaking as to damages. The bill was afterwards dismissed with costs. An inquiry was then asked for as to damages, and the order of dismissal was made without prejudice to any application as to damages. Butt v. Imperial Gas Light and Coke Co., 14 W. R. 508.

A market gardener, whose premises adjoined those of a gas company, brought an action against the company for the injury done to his crops, by reason of the noxious matter issuing from the company's works. During the trial, the judge suggested a reference to an arbitrator, who was to determine as to the injury, and as to "what should be done" between the parties. The reference having taken place, the arbitrator made his award in respect of the damage sustained up to the date of the award, and no evidence having been adduced before him as to prospective damage, a verdict was entered up for the sum awarded. The company subsequently increased their works. On a bill filed by the market gardener:—Held, that he was entitled to a perpetual injunction to restrain the further manufacture of the gas in a manner injurious to his crops, the award of the arbitrator being, under the circumstances, equivalent to the verdict of a jury. Imperial Gas Light and Coke Co. v. Broadbent, 7 De G. M. & G. 436; 26 L. J., Ch. 276; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 1132; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 221. Affirmed next case.

Acquiescence.]—A plaintiff brought an action to recover damages for an injury to his business occasioned by the erection of gasworks; the action was referred to arbitration; nearly two years elapsed before the award was made; in the course of which time alterations in the mode of carrying on the business complained of were effected; two months after the date of the award an injunction was applied for:—Held, that there had not been any such acquiescence as to deprive the plaintiff of his right to the injunction. Imperial Gas Light and Coke Co. v. Broadbent, 7 H. L. Cas. 600; 29 L. J., Ch. 377; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1319.

4. OTHER MATTERS.

Annual Accounts.]—By s. 2 of the Dudley Gas Act, 1853 (16 Vict. c. 2), the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15) is incorporated with that act. By the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 49, nothing therein or in the special act contained is to exempt the undertakers from any general act relating to gasworks passed in any future session of parliament. By s. 1 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 41), the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, and this act shall be construed together, and the provisions of this act shall be held to repeal and supersede such of the provisions of that act as are inconsistent with this act"; and by s. 3, "the provisions of this act shall apply to every gas undertaking authorised by any special act hereafter passed. . . .":—Held, that the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, being a general act relating to gasworks, applied to the Dudley Gas Act, 1853, which was a special act incorporating the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847; and that therefore the company was liable to a penalty for not keeping and selling the annual statement of accounts, imposed by s. 35 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871. Held, further, that the complaint was in time. Dudley Gas Light Co. v. Warmington, 50 L. J., M. C. 69; 44 L. T. 475; 29 W. R. 680; 45 J. P. 649.

The Leamington Priors Gas Company's Act, 1865 (28 Vict. c. cxxviii.), which incorporated the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, except so far as it might be varied by any provision of the special act, prescribes by s. 32 a special form in accordance with which the annual accounts of the company were to be made up, in lieu of provisions as to accounts contained in s. 38, of the Act of 1847. By s. 49 of the Act of 1847, undertakers are not to be exempted from any general act relating to gasworks which may be passed in any future session. By s. 1 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, that act and the act of 1847 are to be construed as one act, and by s. 35 of the act of 1871, the undertakers are to make an annual statement of accounts in the form prescribed by that act, and to furnish copies of the same to any applicant. The appellants made out their annual statement of accounts in the form prescribed by s. 32 of their special act, and did not furnish to the respondent on application, a copy of an annual statement of their accounts made out in the form prescribed by the act of 1871:—Held, that as the appellants' special act prescribed the form in which the annual statement of accounts was to be made up, the provisions relating to the form of accounts in s. 35 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, did not apply. Dudley Gasworks Co. v. Warmington (50 L. J., M. C. 69) distinguished. Leamington Priors Gas Co. v. Davis, 56 L. J., M. C. 14; 18 Q. B. D. 107; 55 L. T. 734; 35 W. R. 123; 51 J. P. 360.

Gas-stoves let for Hire—Exemption from Distress.]—By s. 14 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, "The undertakers may let for hire any meter for ascertaining the quantity of gas consumed or supplied, and any fittings for the gas . . . and such meters and fittings shall not be subject to distress . . . for rent of the premises where the same may be used":—Held, that a gas-stove let for hire was within the words "fittings for the gas," and therefore was not subject to distress for rent. Gaslight and Coke Co. v. Hardy, 56 L. J., Q. B. 168; 17 Q. B. D. 619; 55 L. T. 585; 35 W. R. 50; 51 J. P.

5. Injury by Explosions.

Duty of Company — Construction of stop-cock.]—In the absence of any statutory enactment, there is no precise duty imposed upon a gas company supplying gas to a dwelling-house to construct a stop-cock on the pipe outside the house, so that, upon receiving a notice no longer to supply the gas, the company may cut off the supply completely from the house. Holding or Holden v. Liverpool Gas Co., 3 C. B. 1; 15 L. J., C. P. 301; 10 Jur. 883.

Where, therefore, a fire occurred in an uninhabited house, owing to the escape of gas, a previous notice having been given to the gas company, that no further supply was wanted, and it appeared that there was a stop-cock inside the house, which, if turned, the escape could not have taken place:—Held, that the owner of the house could not recover against the company for the damage done by the fire. Ib.

—— Escape of Gas.]—A declaration stated that the plaintiff was possessed of premises; that the defendant was employed in laying on gas to the premises adjoining; and that he did the work so negligently, that the gas escaped and ignited, and the premises adjoining the plaintiff's were set on fire, and thereby his premises were set on fire and burnt:—Held, that the declaration disclosed a good cause of action; that it was unnecessary to negative negligence in the owner of the adjoining house in putting out the fire before it communicated with the plaintiff's premises. Blenkiron v. Great Central Gas Consumers' Co., 3 L. T. 317.

In an action against a gas company for negligently allowing the escape of gas from their main into premises where lights were known to be burning, the case was that the gas found entrance through an open window nearly level with the trench from the main, after a hole had been made in the main for the insertion of the service-pipe:—Held, that even if the jury thought the gas so entered, it was a question for them whether the company's men might reasonably have foreseen it, and were bound to have the window closed. S. C., 2 F. & F. 437.

—— Evidence of Negligence.]—Owing to excavations made by the Commissioners of Sewers within two and a half feet of a gas main embedded in a highway at a depth of ten and a half inches, one of the gas pipes was deprived of support from beneath. The weight of traffic above cracked the pipe, and an escape and accumulation of gas occurred for two or three days, resulting in an explosion which injured a man passing. The gas company were unaware of the escape of gas, as well as of the excavation, of which they had received no notice:—Held, that the character of the crack in the pipe, the length of time the gas was escaping, and the absence of anyone on behalf of the gas company at the time of the excavation, constituted evidence of negligence on their part. Price v. South Metropolitan Gas Co., 65 L. J., Q. B. 126.

—— Inspection of Mains.]—A gas company is bound to keep up such a reasonable inspection of their mains and pipes, as may enable them to detect when there is such an escape of gas, by fracture or imperfection of pipes, as may lead to danger of an explosion; and if an explosion takes place from a fracture or defect, which has existed for several days, during which time it has also been discoverable (by reason of the smell of the escaped gas), and would have been discovered by proper inspection, that is evidence of negligence on the part of the company; nor is it enough to relieve them from liability that, upon notice of the escape, they sent a workman to repair the defect, he arriving too late to do so. Mose v. Hastings and St. Leonards Gas Co., 4 F. & F. 324.

—— Defect in Pipe.]—A gas company contracted to supply B. with a proper service-pipe to convey gas from the main outside to a meter inside the premises. Gas escaped from the pipe laid down under the contract into his shop. The servant of a gasfitter employed by B. happened to be at work in another room at the time of the escape, and went into the shop upon hearing of it with a view of finding out its cause. He was carrying a lighted candle in his hand, and immediately on entering the shop an explosion took place, doing damage to B's stock and premises. On the trial of an action against the gas company for their breach of contract in not supplying a proper service-pipe, the jury found, first, that the escape of gas was occasioned by a defect in the pipe, and that that defect existed in the pipe when supplied; and, secondly, that there was negligence on the part of the gasfitter's servant in carrying a lighted candle:—Held, that B. was entitled to recover, and that the gas company was not relieved from liability by the negligent act of the gasfitter's servant. Burrows v. March Gas and Coke Co., 41 L. J., Ex. 46; L. R. 7 Ex. 96; 26 L. T. 318; 20 W. R. 493—Ex. Ch.

Liability of Municipal Corporation for Acts of Servant.]—A municipal corporation was empowered by act of parliament to construct gasworks and to supply gas, and sell and dispose of the coke, the surplus profits to go in reduction of the water-rates, and otherwise towards the improvement of the town. In an action against the corporation, the declaration alleged that the corporation employed workmen to lay down pipes, who so negligently conducted themselves, that a piece of metal was projected against the plaintiff. Plea, that the grievances were bonâ fide done by the corporation in the course of executing the powers conferred on them by their act, and without any neglect, misconduct, or default of the corporation, otherwise than by their workmen, or one of them, and that their workmen were all skilled and qualified, and proper persons to be employed:—Held, that the plea was no answer to the action. Scott v. Manchester Corporation, 2 H. & N. 204; 26 L. J., Ex. 406; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 590; 5 W. R. 598—Ex. Ch.

A local authority who employ a contractor to do work which they are empowered by statute to execute, and which is likely to prove dangerous to others, are bound to see that the work is properly carried out, and are not relieved from liability for injuries caused by the negligent execution of the work by the fact of having employed a contractor. Hardaker v. Idle District Council, 65 L. J., Q. B. 363; [1896] 1 Q. B. 335; 74 L. T. 69; 44 W. R. 323; 60 J. P. 196—C. A.

Liability of Gas-fitter.]—A builder was employed by a committee of a club to execute alterations at the club-house, including the preparation and fixing of gas-fittings. He made a sub-contract with B., a gas-fitter, to execute this part of the work. In the course of doing it, through B.'s negligence, the gas exploded, and injured the plaintiff:—Held, that the builder was not liable for this injury. Rapson v. Cubitt, 9 M. & W. 710; Car. & M. 64; 11 L. J., Ex. 271; 6 Jur. 606.

The defendant, a gasfitter, was employed by the plaintiff's master to repair a gas meter upon his premises, and for the purpose of doing so took away the meter and in lieu of it made a temporary connection by means of a flexible tube between the inlet pipe and the pipe communicating with the house. The plaintiff having gone in the ordinary performance of his duty with a light into the cellar where the meter had been, gas, which had escaped by reason of the insufficiency of the connecting tube, exploded and injured him. The jury found that the work had been negligently done, and that the injury to the plaintiff proceeded entirely from such negligence:—Held, that the defendant was liable. Parry v. Smith, 48 L. J., C. P. 731; 4 C. P. D. 325; 41 L. T. 93; 27 W. R. 801.

1. CHATTELS.

Delivery Necessary.]—In order to transfer property by gift, there must be either a deed of gift or an actual delivery. 2 Saund. 47 a, n. (d).

A gift of chattels unaccompanied by delivery passes no property. Reeves v. Capper, 5 Bing. (N.C.) 56; 6 Scott, 877; 2 Jur. 1067. S. P., Bourne v. Fosbrooke, 18 C. B. (N.S.) 515; 34 L. J., C. P. 164; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 202; 13 W. R. 497.

A verbal gift of a chattel, without actual delivery, does not give the property to the donee. Irons v. Smallpiece, 2 B. & Ald. 551; 21 R. R. 395.

A gift of a chattel capable of delivery, made per verba de presenti by a donor to a donee, and assented to by the donee, whose assent is communicated to by the donor, does not pass the property in the chattel without delivery. Cochrane v. Moore, 59 L. J., Q. B. 377; 25 Q. B. D. 57; 63 L. T. 153; 38 W. R. 588; 54 J. P. 804—C. A.

A clear intention on the part of the donor to give, acted upon by the donee, constitutes a valid gift inter vivos, without actual delivery. Dictum of Parke, B., in Ward v. Audland (16 M. & W. 871), followed. Irons v. Smallpiece (2 B. & Ald. 551), not followed. Harcourt, In re, Danby v. Tucker, 31 W. R. 578.

If apparel is put on a boy, it is a gift in law. Haynes' Case, 12 Coke, 113.

If a father makes to a son under age an absolute gift of an article of dress or of ornament, e. g. a watch, he cannot afterwards, without the son's consent, reclaim the gift. Smith v. Smith, 7 Car. & P. 401.

A father gave his son a watch, some printed books, and several articles of wearing apparel:—Held, that, although the son was under age (viz. sixteen years old), the father could not maintain trover against a person who detained the property, because the right of possession was not in him, but in his son. Hunter v. Westbrook, 2 Car. & P. 578.

In 1850, G. quitted England for Australia, leaving behind him, in the charge and custody of his wife (the defendant), a sword which had come into his possession and ownership on the death of his father, a general in the army, to whom it had been originally presented by the officers of his regiment. G.'s only son having died, G. wrote a letter, from Australia, to his brother H. (the plaintiff) in England, dated 14th September, 1863, expressing a desire for him to have possession of the sword, in the following terms: "You only anticipate my wish that you should have charge of our father's sword, which, of course, you will keep in our family if I should not have a son to inherit, which does not seem probable. I have inclosed an order unsealed to Mary" (the defendant, G.'s wife) "to hand it over to you." This order was as follows: "On receipt of this letter you will be so good as to deliver our father's sword to my brother Henry"; and in a subsequent letter to the plaintiff of 28th September, 1863, G. said, "I shall expect a long letter in reply from you. Tell me how the old sword looks." These letter and order were communicated to the defendant, and applications were made to her by the plaintiff for delivery of the sword to him, but without success. G. died in Australia in December, 1865 :—Held, that the words of the letter of the 14th September, 1863, were not words of gift at all, but amounted merely to a desire by G. that the plaintiff should have charge of the sword, a charge which was revocable at G.'s pleasure, and did not constitute an out and out gift, or pass any property in the sword to the plaintiff. Douglas v. Douglas, 22 L. T. 127.

Parol Gift of Jewels for Life—Request that after Death Jewels be left as Heirlooms—Precatory Trust.]—The owner of certain jewels presented them to her daughter-in-law on her marriage with the donor's son, who was heir-presumptive to a title. The donee's account of the manner in which the gift was made was as follows: "When I married she gave them to me for life, with the request that at my death they might be left as heirlooms." The donee by will left the jewels to the holder of the title for life, and after his death to each and every of the persons who should in turn succeed to the title and dignity severally and successively as they should in turn succeed to such title and dignity :—Held, that the original gift was an absolute gift; that the words of request did not create a precatory trust, and were not intended to fetter the donee's disposition of the jewels in the least degree, but were a mere indication of the manner in which the donor thought that the donee might best dispose of them; and that the donee had therefore power to dispose of them in the manner directed by her will, or in any other manner she might think fit. Hill (Viscount) v. Hill (Dowager Viscountess), 66 L. J., Q. B. 329; [1897] 1 Q. B. 483; 76 L. T. 103; 45 W. R. 371—C. A.

Possession taken by Donee.]—On a gift of a chattel inter vivos, it is not necessary that there should be any formal delivery by the donor to the donee; it is sufficient if the donee takes possession of the chattel as owner in pursuance of the gift. Winter v. Winter, 4 L. T. 639; 9 W. R. 747.

Change of Possession—Passing of Property.]—A barge, while in the possession of the donee, and worked by him as a servant to the owner, was given to him by the owner; afterwards the donee worked it, and paid the wages of the crew on his own account until the donor's death :—Held, that the property thereby became vested in the donee. Winter v. Winter, 4 L. T. 639; 9 W. R. 747.

Household furniture, which was the property of the claimant's father, was in the possession of the claimant's husband, and was in a house where the husband resided with his wife, the claimant. The father, being at the time with the claimant in a room where some of the furniture was, verbally gave the furniture to the claimant by words of present gift. The father then went away from the house leaving the claimant in the room. There was no manual delivery of the furniture to the claimant, and after the gift the furniture still remained in the house where the claimant and her husband continued to live :—Held, that manual delivery of the furniture was not necessary to complete the verbal gift, and that there had been such a change of possession from the claimant's husband to the claimant, consequent upon the gift, as was sufficient to effectuate it. Kilpin v. Ratley, [1892] 1 Q. B. 582; 66 L. T. 797; 40 W. R. 479; 56 J. P. 565.

Delivery first, Gift afterwards.]—Delivery first and gift afterwards of a chattel capable of delivery is as effectual as gift first and delivery afterwards. Alderson, In re, Alderson v. Peel, 64 L. T. 645.

A mere verbal gift of a chattel to a person in whose possession it is, does not pass the property to the intended donee. Sharr v. Pilch, 4 Ex. 478; 19 L. J., Ex. 113. S. P., Smith v. Smith, 2 Str. 955.

2. Choses in Action.

a. Bonds.

What sufficient.]—The delivery of a bond on which judgment had been entered is not sufficient to constitute a valid donatio inter vivos. Patterson v. Williams, Ll. & G. t. Plunk. 95.

The obligee of a bond, five days before her death, signed a memorandum, not under seal, which was indorsed upon the bond, and which purported to be an assignment of the bond without consideration, to a person to whom the bond was at the same time delivered. The circumstances of the transaction did not constitute, in the opinion of the court, a donatio mortis causâ :—Held, that the gift was incomplete, and that, as it was without consideration, the court could not give effect to it. Edwards v. Jones, 1 Myl. & C. 226; 5 L. J., Ch. 194.

J. being indebted to P. by bond, P., by deed, poll, in consideration of natural love, &c., for E., the wife of J., agreed that this bond, and all benefit and advantage to be derived thereby, should, after his death, be wholly for use of E., and her issue by J.; P. afterwards puts bond in suit, but dies before payment of it :—Held, a revocation of gift. Richardson v. Sedgwicke, 2 Bro. P. C. 123.

A. made a voluntary assignment of turnpike bonds and shares in companies to B., in trust for himself for life, and after his death for his nephew. He delivered the bonds and shares to B., but did not observe the formalities required by the Turnpike Road Act, and the deeds by which the companies were formed, to make the assignment effectual :—Held, on his death, that no interest in either bonds or shares passed by the assignment, and that B. ought to deliver them to his executors. Searle v. Law, 15 Sim. 95; 15 L. J., Ch. 187; 10 Jur. 191.

A bond was assigned to trustees, in trust as a married woman should appoint, and in default thereof to her separate use. She afterwards, by deed of indenture, appointed her interest in the bond to certain persons, as an indemnity to them for the fraudulent appropriation made by her husband, who was their solicitor, of certain sums belonging to them :—Held, that the assignment would be supported, though without consideration, as a trust executed. Collinson v. Patrick, 2 Keen, 123; 7 L. J., Ch. 83.

A., in 1852, signed a memorandum, in which he particularised some Russian bonds, and to whom he should give them. In 1853 he made his will, not noticing the bonds. In November following he signed another memorandum, to the same effect as the former, and at the same time delivered the bonds to B., and under a declaration verbally that he was to pay A. the interest for life, and hold the bonds for the persons named in the paper after his death :—Held, that there was a valid delivery and disposition of the bonds in favour of the parties named in the memorandum. Langley v. Thomas, 26 L. J., Ch. 609.

A. from time to time purchased debentures, amounting altogether in value to between 2,000*l.* and 3,000*l.*, and deposited them with B., who lived with him as his wife. As they were purchased, B. received the stockbroker's receipts. She cut off the coupons as they were wanted, and accompanied A. to receive the dividends. Before purchasing the debentures A. had promised them to B., and had said she must keep them ; and subsequently he had frequently alluded to them as her property. A. bequeathed 3,000*l.* to B. during her life and widowhood, and 3,000*l.* for her daughter by him :—Held, that there was a good gift inter vivos. M'Culloch v. Bland, 2 Giff. 428 ; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1183 ; 3 L. T. 357 ; 9 W. R. 65.

The deceased (a person above eighty) delivered the key of a box containing Dutch bonds and title deeds to J., but retained the box in his own possession, and on several occasions directed J. to open it for the purpose of taking out the deeds, etc. ; he also told a third party that the contents of the box belonged to J., and a few weeks before his death desired his nurse to deliver the box to J., which was done, and kept till his death. The bonds were found in an envelope, with a letter attached, addressed to J.'s wife's sisters, with a direction for its being delivered unopened, and the letter stated which of the bonds each was to have, and that he took that course to evade the legacy duty, and that he recommended perfect silence on that subject :—Held, to amount neither to a gift inter vivos, nor to a donatio causâ mortis to the wife and sisters of J. Farquharson v. Cave, 2 Coll. 356 ; 15 L. J., Ch. 137 ; 10 Jur. 63.

Gift of money due on mortgage and bond by testator some time before his death to a daughter, not sustainable by fact of merely changing the securities from one drawer of a bureau to another, proved by his widow, who sought to discharge herself by payments as executrix under the will. Bryson v. Brownrigg, 9 Ves. 1.

Upon the death of a testator ten Austrian bonds were found, amongst other securities, in a box at his house, with the following indorsement : "The first five numbers of these Austrian bonds belong to and are H. D.'s property," signed by the testator. H. D. was his housekeeper, and the key of the box was given into her custody :—Held, that as there had been no actual transfer or delivery of the bonds to H. D., they still remained part of the testator's assets. Trimmer v. Darby, 25 L. J., Ch. 424 ; 4 W. R. 399.

K. alleged that the testator had given her in his lifetime two Egyptian bonds, which, together with one admitted to be hers, were found in the testator's safe after his death. Upon one of the bonds in question was written in her handwriting "given to me with bonds, 18th April, 1870, A. B. K." The coupons on these bonds were proved to have been carried to the testator's account at the bank. K. alleged that these bonds were in the testator's safe for safe keeping only, and that the cash for the coupons carried over to the testator's account, had been regularly paid to her. The only evidence proving the delivery of these bonds, and explaining the fact of their being in the testator's safe, was that of K. herself and her sister. K. was appointed executrix :—Held, that the evidence of the gift by delivery was sufficiently established, and the fact of their being found in the testator's safe satisfactorily explained, and K.'s claim to them allowed. Bottle v. Knocker, 46 L. J., Ch. 159 ; 35 L. T. 545 ; 25 W. R. 209.

b. Cheques and Notes.

Cheque—Presentation in Lifetime.]—C. voluntarily gave a cheque on her bankers to B., and B. forthwith presented it, but payment was refused by the bankers, although they held funds of C.'s sufficient for the purpose. On the next day, and before the cheque had been cashed, C. died :—Held, that as everything in their power had been done, both by the donor and the donee of the cheque, to make the gift complete, and the failure had arisen solely from the acts of third parties, the gift was an effectual gift inter vivos, and B. was entitled to be paid out of the assets in the hands of C.'s executor. Bromley v. Brunton, 37 L. J., Ch. 902 ; L. R. 6 Eq. 275 ; 18 L. T. 628 ; 16 W. R. 1006.

—— Invalid within Statute of Mortmain.]—A lady gave a cheque for 5,000*l.* to the surgeon who attended her, to be laid out in the erection, establishment, and support of a hospital. The money was invested by the surgeon in consols in the names of himself and another as trustees, and both immediately afterwards executed a deed of trust declaring the objects of the gift. The declaration of trust was not made known to the donor, who died a few days after its execution :—Held, that the object of the gift did not exclude the acquisition of land : and that the donor, having died within twelve months after the execution of the deed, the gift was invalid under 9 Geo. 2, c. 36. Hawkins v. Allen, 40 L. J., Ch. 23 ; L. R. 10 Eq. 246 ; 23 L. T. 465 ; 18 W. R. 748.

—— Gift to a Baby.]—A father put a cheque into the hand of his son nine months' old, saying, "I give this to baby for himself," and then took back the cheque, and put it away. He also expressed his intention of giving the amount of the cheque to the son. Shortly afterwards the father died, and the cheque was found amongst his effects :—Held, that there had been no gift to, or valid declaration of trust for, the son. Jones v. Lock, 35 L. J., Ch. 117 ; L. R. 1 Ch. 25 ; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 913 ; 13 L. T. 514 ; 14 W. R. 149.

—— Son constituted Trustee.]—Where a lady, having some money belonging to her in the hands of her son, drew a cheque upon him in favour of his wife, and a few days afterwards she told him to take the cheque, and to invest the money for the benefit of his wife and children, he took it accordingly ; and after his mother's death he invested the money in the names of himself and his wife :—Held, that a valid trust of the 500*l.* was constituted by the mother in favour of the son's wife and children. Roberts v. Roberts, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 992 ; 15 L. T. 260 ; 15 W. R. 117—L.JJ.

A lady drew a cheque for 500*l.* upon her son-in-law (who was not a banker, but who had moneys of hers in his hands) in favour of her daughter Jane, his wife. Afterwards she told him to hold the money in trust for Jane during her life, and afterwards for the children of Jane. The lady died shortly afterwards, and the money was claimed on behalf of the wife and children: —Held, that the objects of the gift were not sufficiently ascertained, and that the 500*l.* must be treated as assets of the deceased. Hughes v. Stubbs, 11 Jur. (N.S.) 913; 13 L. T. 492.

Promissory Notes.]—When an instrument is in form a complete and an immediate assignment, and of such a nature as to give the assignee a right as between him and the assignor to take or receive the property comprised in it presently, it will, although voluntary, be supported in equity and considered as a perfect declaration of trust of such of the property as was not assignable at law. Richardson v. Richardson, 36 L. J., Ch. 653; L. R. 3 Eq. 686.

Therefore, where A., by a voluntary deed, assigned to B. all her personal estate, and appointed him her attorney to recover, receive and give receipts for the same:—Held, after her death, that two promissory notes, one payable to A., and the other to A. or order, and the moneys secured thereby, passed to the donee. Ib.

A., in India, on his own responsibility, invested money belonging to his brother B. in England, in indigo, which he consigned to B., and he recommended him, in consideration of his (A.) not charging commission, to settle 1,000*l.* on each of his two sisters, which he suggested should be invested in spelter, and consigned to him for sale. B. acceded to this, and A. sold the spelter, and remitted the proceeds (nearly 4,000*l.*) to B. on account of his sisters. B. retained the money, and gave his promissory notes to his sisters for the amount:—Held, that the 4,000*l.* belonged to the sisters, and that the gift of it could not be recalled. Mackintosh v. Stuart, 36 Beav. 21.

The holder of a promissory note given without consideration does not stand in the same position as the holder of a voluntary bond, and is not entitled to claim against the estate of the giver after payment of the creditors for value. Whitaker, In re, 58 L. J., Ch. 487; 42 Ch. D. 119; 61 L. T. 102; 37 W. R. 673—C. A.

Voluntary assignment of a chose in action (a promissory note), by indenture which also contained a provision appointing the assignee the irrevocable attorney of the assignor for the recovery of the amount due on the note, will, as the transaction is complete by the execution of the deed, be carried into execution. Blakely v. Brady, 2 Dr. & Wal. 311. S. P., Gannon v. White, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 207.

A payee of three promissory notes executed the following indorsement, preceded by the delivery of them to the indorsee:—"I bequeath—pay the within contents to Simon Smith, or his order, at my death." There was a single witness to the payee's signature. In the act of delivery of the notes, the payee expressed an intention to be "master of them as long as he lived." Semble, that but for the payee's expressed intention to keep the ownership for life, the disposition might have been construed as a gift inter vivos, in trust for him for life, and afterwards for the indorsee absolutely. Patterson, In re, Mitchell v. Smith, 4 De G. J. & S. 422; 33 L. J., Ch. 596; 10 L. T. 801; 12 W. R. 941.

C., in 1858, bought in the Incumbered Estates court an estate for 3,025*l.*, and had it conveyed absolutely to his daughter, H. C. She owned 1,525*l.* of the purchase money; C. contributed 1,500*l.* At the time of the purchase C. used some expressions as to his intention to give this sum to his daughter, but he soon after took from her a promissory note, payable seven days after date, in respect of the interest on which accounts were regularly stated and settled between the father and daughter during his life. In December, 1873, C. signed an indorsement on the note, as follows:—"I direct that this promissory note be delivered up to be cancelled after my death, to the intent that my daughter, H. C., shall be exonerated from payment of same. Dated 10th December, 1873.—P. C." This was attested by only one witness. There was reliable evidence that at various times, particularly when ill, the father told his daughter to take possession of the note when he was dying. He had the conveyance and the note tied together and placed in his deed-box, and he had a label on them, "These belong to H. C." C., having recovered from former illnesses, died after a few days' illness in 1876. In his last illness he said nothing as to the note. About an hour before his death, when he was insensible, the daughter got his keys and opened the deed-box, and found the conveyance and the note, as above described, and on reading the indorsement she replaced them in the box: —Held, that there was no gift of the note inter vivos, nor donatio of it mortis causâ, nor any valid testamentary disposition of it in the daughter's favour, and that it still remained part of C.'s assets. Cross v. Cross, 1 L. R., Ir. 389.

c. Stocks and Shares.

What Sufficient.]—Receipt for a subscription to a navigation, with an indorsement signed by owner, declaring that he thereby assigned to his daughter A. all his interest, found among the papers of his executrix, no evidence that he ever parted with the paper, and a declared intention of satisfaction by a marriage portion; bill for an assignment dismissed. Antrobus v. Smith, 12 Ves. 39; 8 R. R. 278.

A. in extremis gave all his shares in a particular bank to his son, on condition of his paying a debt which the testator owed upon the shares to the bank, and wrote a letter to the manager of the bank, directing that the shares should be transferred into the name of the son. The certificates of some of the shares were delivered to the manager as a preliminary to the preparation of the necessary deed of transfer. Before the deed was prepared, the testator died:—Held, that the transaction was incomplete, and that the shares formed part of his general estate. Lambert v. Overton, 11 L. T. 503; 13 W. R. 227.

A father by deed-poll, expressed to be made in consideration of natural love and affection, declared among other things that he transferred and assigned to his daughter, upon trust for her and her children, some East India stock and shares in a company, with full power in his name to sue for and recover such part of the property comprised in the deed as a mere assignment would not enable her to recover and receive. The deed was sealed and delivered in the usual way, but was retained in possession of grantor till his death, when it was found enclosed in a paper with an indorsement in his handwriting describing it as "papers concerning Mrs. C. and her children," and directing it to be given up to Mrs. C. at his death, and immediately:—Held, that as to the stock and shares, the deed-poll was inoperative. Dillon v. Coppin, 4 Myl. & C. 647; 9 L. J., Ch. 87; 4 Jur. 427.

A voluntary assignment by deed of the assignor's interest in a sum of stock standing in the names of trustees, upon trust for him, is a complete transfer of such interest as between the donee and the representatives of the donor, although no notice of the deed was given to the trustees in the donor's lifetime, because no further act on the part of the donor was requisite to complete the gift. In such a case the donee could compel the trustees to transfer the stock to him without making the donor or his representative parties to the suit. If, however, the trustees, before notice of the deed, transferred the stock to another person, the donee would have no remedy against them. Donaldson v. Donaldson, 1 Kay, 711; 23 L. J., Ch. 788; 2 W. R. 691.

An intended gift, which, for lack of the necessary formalities, was not completed during the intending donor's life, will not be carried into effect by treating him as a trustee of the subject-matter of the intended gift, if there is no proof that he meant to retain such subject-matter as a trustee thereof for the intended donee. Heartley v. Nicholson, 44 L. J., Ch. 277; L. R. 19 Eq. 233; 31 L. T. 821; 23 W. R. 374.

A. B. directed the certificates of some United States Bank shares standing in his name to be delivered to his nephew, and in a letter to him stated that "he made a free gift of them" to him. A. B. also executed a power for transferring the shares, but it was not acted on in A. B.'s life. The shares, being found in A. B.'s name at his death, were held to form part of his personal estate. Weale v. Ollive, 17 Beav. 252.

Some consols belonging beneficially to A. for life, with remainder to B., stood in the names of two trustees, of the survivor of whom B. was the representative. B. voluntarily assigned the stock to A., but no transfer was made. The court refused either to declare B. a trustee of the stock for A., or to compel her to transfer it. Beech v. Keep, 18 Beav. 285; 23 L. J., Ch. 539; 18 Jur. 971; 2 W. R. 316.

The distinction between an assignment for the benefit of a volunteer and a declaration of trust in his favour, though very thin, yet pervades the cases. Ib.

If the legal owner of stock execute a declaration of trust in favour of a volunteer, equity will compel the execution of the trust; but if he merely assigns the stock, and makes no transfer, the court will afford him no assistance. Bridge v. Bridge, 16 Beav. 315; 16 Jur. 1031.

If the beneficial owner of stock standing in the name of trustees assign it in favour of a volunteer, and notice is given to the trustees, who act upon it, equity will enforce the performance of the trust in favour of the volunteer. Ib.

When the owner of property, vested in A. and B. as trustees, purported to assign it to himself and others, in trust for volunteers, but no legal transfer was made, or recognition of the trust by A. and B.:—Held, that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust had not been created in favour of such volunteers. Ib.

A feme sole purchased 1,000*l.* consols in the name of her niece, and informing her of the fact, and that she intended this sum should be for her benefit, procured her to execute a power of attorney to enable the aunt to transfer the stock, and to receive the dividends:—Held, that a trust was well created for the benefit of the niece after her aunt's death. Beecher v. Major, 13 L. T. 54; 13 W. R. 1054—L. JJ.

On the 20th July, 1840, M., then in extremis, executed an ordinary bank power of attorney, and delivered it to her sister E., whereby the latter was empowered to transfer into her own name government stock standing in her name. M. died on the 21st July, 1840, and on the 23rd the transfer was made under the power:—Held (the evidence showing a clear intention on the part of M. to give the legal and beneficial interest in the stock to her sister), that the gift was valid and effectual in favour of E., as against the other next of kin of the donor. Kidâill v. Farnell, 26 L. J., Ch. 818; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 786; 5 W. R. 793—L.JJ. See also Gason v. Rich, infra.

In order to render a voluntary settlement valid and effectual, the settlor must do everything which, according to the nature of the property comprised in the settlement, is necessary to transfer the property, and under the settlement binding upon him; as by actually transferring the property to the persons for whom he intends to provide, or to trustees for the purposes of the settlement, or by declaring that he himself holds the property in trust for those purposes; and if the property is personal the trust may be declared either by writing or by parol; but there is no equity to protect an imperfect gift. If, however, the gift is intended to take effect by transfer, the court will not hold the intended transfer to operate as a declaration of trust. Milroy v. Lord, 4 De G. F. & J. 264; 31 L. J., Ch. 798; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 806; 7 L. T. 178.

.d. Other Cases.

Specialty Debt.]—A gift of a specialty may be good in law, although there is no legal transfer of the debt or property of which it is the security. Barton v. Gainer, 3 H. & N. 387; 27 L. J., Ex. 390; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 715; 6 W. R. 624.

I O U—Intention of Donor.]—A. held certain bank shares in trust for his father B., under a written acknowledgment of the trust. B. indorsed on the acknowledgment: "I transfer these shares to my daughter C. for her sole use and benefit." B. also held two I O U's, one from A., the second from another person indebted to him. Upon each of these B. indorsed: "I transfer the debt of l. to my daughter C., for her sole use and benefit." B. signed these indorsements, and handed the acknowledgment and I O U's to C. There was no consideration for the transfer. B. did not give any notice of it to A. or the debtor upon the second I O U, and continued till his death, five years later, to receive the dividends on the shares and the interest on A.'s I O U:—Held, that, although the indorsements, accompanied by the delivery of the acknowledgment and I O U's were capable, if followed by notice to the trustees and debtors, of operating as equitable assignments, yet as it appeared, having regard to the evidence and especially to B.'s receipt of the subsequent dividends and interest, that he did not intend at the time of the indorsement to divest himself absolutely of his property in the shares or debts, but attempted at most to effect a disposition to become operative only at his death, and in the meanwhile to be ambulatory and revocable, they did not constitute a complete gift enforceable in equity. Gason v. Rich, 19 L. R. Ir. 391—C. A.

Mortgage Debt — Assignment.]—Held, that neither a voluntary assignment by deed of a mortgage debt, accompanied by a grant not specifying the particular estate, but of all estates held in mortgage, and by a covenant for further assurance, and without delivery of the mortgage deed or notice to the mortgagor, nor the voluntary assignment of a policy of assurance retained in the hands of the assignor, and without notice given to the grantor, though accompanied by a covenant for further assurance, can be considered as a complete and effectual assignment to be acted upon and enforced by the assignee without any further or other act to be done by the assignor. Ward v. Audland, 8 Beav. 201; 14 L. J., Ch. 145; 9 Jur. 384.

—— Letters to Cancel.]—Letters written by a mortgagee to the mortgagor, and persons interested under him, containing the expressions, "I now give this gift, to become due at my death, unconnected with my will"; "I hereby request my executors to cancel the mortgage deed"; "I again direct and promise that my executors shall comply with my former request, that is, to cancel all deeds and papers I may have chargeable on the R. estate,"—do not operate either as a declaration of trust, or as a valid gift. Scales v. Maude, 6 De G. M. & G. 43; 25 L. J., Ch. 433; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 1147; 4 W. R. 109.

Insurance Policy.]—In detinue by an administratrix for a policy of insurance, the evidence was that the intestate had given the policy to the defendant. No assignment was executed, but the defendant retained the policy, and had possession of it at the time of the intestate's death:—Held, that the action was not maintainable, for though there had been no assignment of the policy and the right to the money secured by it might not be affected, the right to the document itself passed by the gift to the defendant. Rummens v. Hare, 46 L. J., Ex. 30; 1 Ex. D. 169; 34 L. T. 407; 24 W. R. 385—C. A.

I. B. made a voluntary assignment by deed of a policy of assurance upon his own life for 1,000*l.* to trustees, upon trust for the benefit of his sister and her children, if she or they should outlive him. The deed was delivered to one of the trustees, and the grantor kept the policy in his possession. No notice of the assignment was given to the assurance office, and I. B. afterwards surrendered for a valuable consideration the policy and a bonus declared upon it to the insurance office. Upon a bill filed by the surviving trustee of the deed, to have the value of the property replaced, the court held, that upon the delivery of the deed no act remained to be done by the grantor to give effect to the assignment of the policy, and that he was bound to give security to the amount of the value of the policy assigned by the deed. Fortescue v. Barnett, 3 Myl. & K. 36; 2 L. J., Ch. 98.

Credit at Bankers.]—Where A., having certain funds standing to his credit at his banker's, by letter directed them to carry some parts of such funds to the account of certain persons as trustees for his wife, and after her decease, for his son, and other parts thereof to the account of certain persons as trustees for his son, and such sums were accordingly carried over by the bankers to the account of such persons in their books, and the dividends were, from time to time, carried to the same accounts; but the testator never communicated the facts to the trustees, and there was some evidence that the testator had directed the transfer under an impression that he should be able, by that means, to evade the legacy duty, and that he had shown an intention to exercise some acts of ownership over the funds; the court held that the appropriation was void, and that the testator might, at any time, have revoked them. Gaskell v. Gaskell, 2 Y. & J. 502.

Reversionary Interest in Personalty.] — M. G., having died intestate, possessed of considerable personal property, and entitled, after the death of his wife, to the principal of certain bank stock, standing in the name of a trustee, his brother, by letter, expressed his intention of relinquishing his share of the intestate's estate to the widow, executed to the trustee (transferring to the widow) a release of the bank stock, and directed the preparation of a release of the general personal estate, the execution of which was prevented by his death, but his wish to execute it continued to his last hour; the release of the stock is effectual in favour of the intestate's widow, but the intention to relinquish the share of the general personal estate not being perfected, amounts not to a gift, and she, as administratrix, must account to the representatives of the brother, but without interest. Hooper v. Goodwin, 1 Swan. 485; 1 Wils. 212; 18 R. R. 125.

A testator bequeathed a sum of money to trustees in trust for his daughter for life, and in case she died without leaving issue, for her next-of-kin, exclusive of her husband. During the lifetime of the daughter, her mother, as presumptive next-of-kin, by a voluntary deed assigned her expectant interest in reversion to the husband:—Held, on the death of the daughter, without leaving issue, that the assignment operated only as an agreement to assign, and, consequently, being voluntary, a court of equity would not enforce it. Meeke v. Kettlewell, 1 Ph. 342; 13 L. J., Ch. 28; 7 Jur. 1120.

A voluntary assignment by deed of an equitable reversionary interest in personal property is valid. Voyle v. Hughes, 2 Sm. & G. 18; 23 L. J., Ch. 238; 18 Jur. 341; 2 Eq. R. 42; 2 W. R. 143.

The assignment by deed of an equitable reversionary interest in personal property is not to be treated as a mere agreement; and, although it be voluntary, is not an incomplete gift, but is a transfer of the beneficial interest of the assignor. Ib.

An owner of an equitable reversionary interest under a settlement executed a voluntary assignment of it. No person had notice of the deed, except the solicitor who prepared it, and who was also the solicitor to the trustees of the settlement. The settlor retained the deed in her own possession, and afterwards destroyed it. She disposed of the property by will:—Held, that the deed was ineffectual to pass the property. Way's Trusts, In re, 34 L. J., Ch. 49; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 836; 13 W. R. 149.

3. Leaseholds and Freeholds.

Copyholds.]—Feme seised of a copyhold, on marriage of her daughter to J., surrenders it to the use of J., and his intended wife, and the heirs of their bodies, remainder to J. in fee. The marriage takes effect; the husband signs a writing, whereby he owns that the limitation of the remainder in fee to him was a mistake, and that it was intended to be to the wife; and accordingly, covenants to stand seised of the remainder in fee in trust for the wife in fee. This is not a mere voluntary covenant, and equity will compel the performance of it. Randall v. Randall, 2 P. W. 464.

A. voluntarily agrees to give certain houses to his niece and the heirs of her body after the death of himself and his wife, in case they should have no issue; but no conveyance was executed by A., though he lived about twenty years afterwards. In the meantime, A. becomes indebted by mortgage, judgment, &c., and by his will devises all his estate, both real and personal, to his wife. This agreement is not good against a purchaser for valuable consideration, although he had notice by being a subscribing witness to it. Powell v. Pleydell, 1 Bro. P. C. 124.

Freeholds.]—A., being seised in fee, executed a deed-poll, whereby he voluntarily granted it to his wife as her sole and absolute property for ever:—Held, that this was an imperfect voluntary gift; that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust had not thereby been created, and that a court of equity would not interfere to assist either party. Price v. Price, 14 Beav. 598. Affirmed 1 De G. M. & G. 308; 21 L. J., Ch. 53.

B. by a deed-poll, after reciting his intention to settle certain freehold and leasehold ground rents upon his wife, continued as follows:—"I do hereby settle, assign, transfer, and set over unto her, my said wife, as though she were a single woman," the said property:—Held, that though the deed purporting to be an assignment from husband to wife was invalid as an assignment, yet it contained a sufficient declaration of trust in favour of the wife; and she was declared entitled to the property absolutely. Baddeley v. Baddeley, 48 L. J., Ch. 36; 9 Ch. D. 113; 38 L. T. 906; 26 W. R. 850.

W. the plaintiff exhibited documents of which the first was in the following terms and addressed "Warriner, Kendall. The contents of this box is a deed of gift to John Warriner, Kendall, and all the things in the house in Stramongate and my mother's portrait to be preserved and kept in the family, also my mother's wish, in care of John Hayston. My watch and trinkets for Miss Warriner, also in care of John Hayston. This is a free gift, my mother's wish, that John Warriner of this town is to have those three houses in Stramongate, outhouses, gardens, &c., and also field called Little Mint Feet, and fields at Lancaster, Stizaker and Hatch, as tenants, also 100*l.* each for all of Warriner's children; if anything happened among them the other to be divided among the rest.—November 6th, 1871." A few days afterwards W. found another document, also addressed to him, and written and signed by B., which was as follows:—"Again, Warriner,—The deeds, writings, or documents for property in Stramongate and fields you will find in a large tin box at Greenside, and to be handed over to you free, and all expenses to be paid out of the bulk and writings of Mislet, &c. You have all complete which is intended for you, and 100*l.* to be paid down at once to you for repairs at Mislet and property of Stramongate.—Nov. 6th, 1871." On a bill by W. to obtain declaration that these documents constituted a declaration of trust in his favour:—Held, that the documents amounted to an imperfect voluntary gift, not perfected by a complete disposition of the property, and were also of a testamentary nature and consequently void. Warriner v. Rogers, 42 L. J., Ch. 581; L. R. 16 Eq. 340; 28 L. T. 863; 21 W. R. 766.

A., by will, in 1847, devised his real estates to his wife for life, remainder to his son for life, remainders over. During A.'s lifetime, his son requiring a place for his residence, he signed the following memorandum:—"H., together with my other freehold estates, are left in my will to my wife; but it is her wish, and I hereby join in presenting the same to my son for the purpose of furnishing him with a dwelling-house." The son took possession of H., and expended during the lifetime of the father, and with his knowledge, a large sum of money in the erection of a house and buildings thereon:—Held, that the son was entitled to the inheritance of H. Dillwyn v. Llewelyn, 4 De G. F. & J. 517; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 1068; 6 L. T. 878; 10 W. R. 742.

The subsequent expenditure by the son supplied a valuable consideration, originally wanting, independently of which, the memorandum itself disclosed a plain intention, on the part of the father, to vest in his son the absolute ownership of the estate. Ib.

—— Advance—Possession of Deeds.]—In 1878 A. entered into a contract for the sale to him of two freehold houses at the price of 650*l.* The deposit of 50*l.* was paid by him, and 360*l.*, part of the balance, was obtained from his niece B., to whom he gave his I O U. On the 21st August, 1878, the wife of A., by his direction, wrote to B. as follows:—"A. bought two houses yesterday, and he is going to have them settled and signed in your name, and give them to you. I send you the conditions of sale for you to look at, and I should like you to come and see A. . . . . Bring your bank book with you, as what you have might as well go into them as for us to pay interest. It is all right, I can assure you. I sent the 50*l.* by cheque last night, on deposit." On the 25th October, 1878, the two houses were duly conveyed to A., and he directed his wife to hand over the title deeds to B., and he also said to his wife that the deeds belonged to B., and were of no use to his wife. The deeds were sent to B. by A.'s wife. Subsequently A. died intestate, and his eldest brother and heir-at-law commenced an action against B., claiming a declaration that he, the plaintiff, was entitled to the rents and profits of the two houses and the delivery up of the title deeds:—Held, that there was evidence of an intention on the part of A. to give the property to B.; but that no gift of it had in point of law been made; but held, that there was sufficient evidence of a contract to create an equitable mortgage in favour of B., and upon which the possession of the title deeds by B. originated; and that there should be a redemption decree upon that footing, the costs of B. being added to her security. McMahon, In re, McMahon v. McMahon, 55 L. T. 739.

Leaseholds.]—A person entitled to a leasehold mill, with plant, machinery, and stock-in-trade, indorsed on the lease a memorandum: "This deed and all thereto belonging I give to A. from this time forth with all the stock-in-trade"; and he signed the memorandum and handed the deed to A.'s mother. After his death A. claimed the mill and appurtenances, on the ground that the memorandum amounted to a valid declaration of trust:—Held, that this claim was bad, on the ground that words importing a present intention to give cannot be held to amount to an intention to retain as trustee. Richards v. Delbridge, 43 L. J., Ch. 459 ; L. R. 18 Eq. 11 ; 22 W. R. 584.

A father, being possessed of a lease of tithes from a dean and chapter, which was renewable by custom, upon receiving notice to renew, signified verbally to his son that he wished him to take the renewal for his own benefit. The son paid the fine : the father died, having made the son his executor. After the father's death, the son took the new lease to himself ; and in a creditors' suit against the estate of the father, the court refused to consider the new lease as part of the father's assets. Lee v. Flood, 17 Jur. 544.

K. claimed a leasehold messuage, which she alleged the testator had built for her. The land on which this house was built was to be held on a long lease from the Dover Harbour Board, to be granted to the testator upon the completion of the house. This lease, however, had not been granted at the time of the testator's death, but there was a duplicate copy in an envelope amongst the testator's papers, on which was written, "for A. K." Proposals for a lease of a part of this house had been made and accepted, and on the envelope, which contained the letter of acceptance, was written, "The lease of twenty-one years to C. F. T., of London, to be made out in A. B. K.'s name," also, "T.'s rent to be paid to A. B. K., making, without harbour rent, 45*l*." Evidence of the testator's intention was given. K. was appointed executrix :—Held, that the gift was an imperfect gift, which could not be perfected without the aid of the court, and that aid, according to the principles laid down in Milroy v. Lord (4 De G. F. & J. 264), could not be given. Bottle v. Knocker, 46 L. J., Ch. 159 ; 35 L. T. 545 ; 25 W. R. 209.

A., the owner of a leasehold house, verbally agreed to allow B. to occupy the house during her life, that she might maintain herself by letting lodgings, B. paying the ground-rent and rates and taxes. B. accordingly broke off certain negotiations for a business she was then contemplating, and entered into possession of the house, and there remained until A.'s death, maintaining herself by letting lodgings, and duly paying the ground-rent and rates and taxes. A.'s residuary legatee having brought an action of ejectment against B., and pleaded the Statute of Frauds :—Held, that there was a good gift of the house to B. for life, she having, on the face of A.'s representations, not only altered her mode of life, but also entered into possession. Coles v. Pilkington, 44 L. J., Ch. 381 ; L. R. 19 Eq. 174 ; 31 L. T. 423 ; 23 W. R. 41.

4. Gift or Loan.

W., the uncle of the plaintiff's wife, was applied to by a friend of the plaintiff to advance 1,000*l*. to defray some expenses connected with the plaintiff's election as member of Parliament. W. declined to make the advance, but said he would give the plaintiff 500*l*., and deduct it from the legacy he intended to leave to his wife. Shortly afterwards W. sent the plaintiff a cheque for 500*l*. The plaintiff wrote to thank W., saying that he would gladly repay it at an early opportunity, and hoped shortly to be able to do so. A few weeks afterwards, a conversation took place between him and W., and it was agreed, at the plaintiff's instance, that the plaintiff should pay banker's interest on the sum during W.'s life ; and the plaintiff, for the purpose of effectuating this agreement, signed and gave to W. a promissory note for 500*l*., with interest at 1*l*. per cent., on the understanding that payment of the principal was not to be enforced, but only payment of interest, during W.'s life. After his death, his executors sued the plaintiff on the note for the 500*l*. :—Held, that (although, if there had been a complete gift of the 500*l*. it could not afterwards have formed a consideration for a promissory note) the executors were entitled to recover ; for that, as the plaintiff had not, before the giving of the promissory note, agreed to accept the 500*l*. as a gift, it remained open whether it should be a gift or loan ; and the giving the promissory note was conclusive evidence that the parties agreed upon its being a loan ; and the court could not allow the documentary evidence to be rebutted by the parol evidence given by the plaintiff on his own behalf. Hill v. Wilson, 42 L. J., Ch. 817 ; L. R. 8 Ch. 888 ; 29 L. T. 238 ; 21 W. R. 757.

Certain advances of money and goods made by a very wealthy man, through the medium of his bankers and partners, to his favourite nephew, during the last few years of his life, were held, under the circumstances, in a suit for the administration of the uncle's estate, to have been only loans. Mortimer v. Trezevant, 4 Cl. & F. 657 ; 11 Bli. (N.S.) 191.

A son acted as his mother's solicitor, and with her consent lent 2,500*l*. belonging to her, with other money, on a bond conditioned for payment to himself absolutely of the amount thereby secured, without any declaration of trust except a memorandum, whereby the son acknowledged that he held the 2,500*l*. and undertook to pay the interest thereof to the mother during life. The son died in his mother's lifetime, and his executors claimed the principal sum, subject to a life interest in the mother, as a gift from her to the son :—Held, that the relation of solicitor and client between the son and mother excluded the ordinary presumption in favour of the transaction being a gift. Garrett v. Wilkinson, 2 De G. & Sm. 244.

5. Joint-Survivorship.

Promissory Note.]—A. holding a promissory note from B. for a debt, directed B. to transfer it in his books to the names of A. and his wife, expressing an intention to benefit his wife, and he cancelled the note and took a fresh one to him and his wife. A. died, leaving his wife surviving him :—Held, that the debt belonged to the wife, and did not form part of the testator's general personal estate. Gosling v. Gosling, 3 Drew. 335.

Stocks and Shares.]—Transfer of stock of an intestate into the name of himself jointly with that of the husband of one of his two nieces, accompanied with proof of his having said in his lifetime that it was his intention to give the husband the stock at his death in consideration of affection, etc., and that he had transferred it for that purpose (if not repelled by counter testimony), held to be sufficient proof of gift of such stock ; and court will not continue injunction granted to restrain husband who had administered, from disposing of it. George v. Howard, 7 Price, 646 ; 21 R. R. 775.

A. by her will gave all her estate to her sister ; afterwards she transferred stock into their joint names, as it appeared for the purpose of saving legacy duty. The will was void :—Held, that the transfer was intended to vest the beneficial estate by survivorship in the sister, and that she took the stock to the exclusion of A.'s next-of-kin. Deacon v. Colquhoun, 2 Drew. 21 ; 23 L. J., Ch. 16 ; 2 Eq. R. 319 ; 2 W. R. 67.

In 1843 A. purchased fifty shares in a bank with her own money, and caused them to be transferred into the joint names of herself and B. In 1846 ten of these shares were sold, and the purchase-money was received by A. The dividends on the shares were received by A. during her life. A. died in 1847, leaving B. surviving. It appeared that A. had often said that she was anxious and desirous of making a provision for B., in case B. survived her ; and that she also said her wish and intention in making the purchase of the shares was, that they should go to the survivor of herself and B. :—Held, that there was not a resulting trust of the forty unsold shares in favour of A., and that B. was entitled to them by survivorship. Garrick v. Tayler, 4 De G. F. & J. 159 ; 31 L. J., Ch. 68 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 1174 ; 4 L. T. 404 ; 10 W. R. 49. Affirming 29 Beav. 79.

Shares were purchased in a banking company, the rules of which provided that no benefit of survivorship should take place between the shareholders. The purchaser caused the transfer of them to be made to herself and another person who lived with her, and was called her niece, but was not related to her :—Held, that the rules did not exclude the benefit of survivorship at law between the two. Ib.

A testator, having first made a will in favour of the person with whom he was cohabiting, afterwards transferred stock into the joint names of himself and that person. Subsequently to this transfer he revoked his first will and made another in favour of a third person, a daughter of the original legatee, to whom by the second will nothing was given :—Held, that there was no resulting trust for the testator in the stock, and that the joint transferee was entitled by survivorship. Tumbridge v. Care, 25 L. T. 150 ; 19 W. R. 1047.

A sum of money was invested in the funds in the joint names of husband and wife, and the wife by power of attorney from the husband, sold out a portion, and with his knowledge kept it locked up in her own special custody till his death :—Held, that the portion which remained in the funds in the joint names of the husband and wife survived to the wife, but that the other portion, which was sold out by her, and kept in her custody, formed, on the husband's death, a part of his personal estate. Gadbury, In re, 32 L. J., Ch. 780 ; 11 W. R. 895.

6. Conditional.

Lottery Ticket.]—A. gives lottery tickets amongst her servants, on condition if any of them came up a prize of 20*l.* or more, they should give one-half to her daughter ; the ticket given to the footboy came up a prize of 1,000*l.* ; on a bill by the daughter, a moiety of the 1,000*l.* decreed to her. Scot v. Haughton, 2 Vern. 560.

On Marriage.] — If a person, who makes addresses with a view to marriage, on reasonable expectation of success, give presents, and the lady deceive him afterwards, the presents ought to be returned, or the value of them allowed ; but where made to introduce a person only to a woman's acquaintance he is looked upon in the light of an adventurer. and, if he lose by the attempt, must take it for his pains, especially when there is a disproportion between the lady's fortune and his. Robinson v. Cumming, 2 Atk. 409.

Purchase of Commission.]—A sum of money was paid by A. to B., for the purpose of purchasing C. a promotion in the army, and it remained unapplied in the hands of B. at the death of A. C. having been compelled from the bad state of his health to quit the army and having no prospect of being able to enter into the service again, filed a bill for the money, and it was decreed to be paid to him. Leche v. Kilmorey (Lord), Turn. & R. 207.

Money advanced by plaintiff to the defendant to procure him a commission in the marines, decreed to be refunded with interest ; plaintiff having, after six months, been discovered to have worn a livery, and being thereupon discharged ; first, upon grounds of public policy, and secondly, as plaintiff had been imposed upon, defendant knowing that he was incapable of holding the commission. Morris v. M'Culloch, 2 Eden, 190; Ambl. 432.

7. Other Cases.

A widow of a freeman of London, who left children and died intestate, was entitled to four-ninths of his personal estate, and having, by deed, assigned over her four-ninths for her separate use, in case of marriage, and to such persons as she should appoint, and for want of such appointment then to her children ; the widow intending to marry a second husband, by another deed, to which the husband was a party, in consideration of the intended marriage, and of a settlement made on her by him, recites that if she did not dispose of her four-ninths, the husband would be entitled thereto, and then assigns it over to trustees, in trust, for the intended husband, during their joint lives, subject to her control and disposal by writing ; after which she dies, without disposing of it. Decreed, the second husband is as a purchaser, and the recital, that he would be entitled to it, if the wife should not dispose of it, was a gift. Poulson v. Wellington, 2 P. W. 533.

A gift of a moiety of the donor's goods, to be enjoyed after his death, affects those only of which he was then possessed. Anon., 3 Swan. 400.

Letters to executor, expressing consent that 1,000*l.* was proper to be given to daughter, held not to amount to gift of so much in their hands, the gift not being completed. Cotteen v. Missing, 1 Madd. 176.

Return of.] — Plaintiff sueth for tokens, delivered to defendant as suitor in marriage, and obtains them. Young v. Eurrel, Cary, 54. And see Robinson v. Cumming, 2 Atk. 409, supra.

Whether Revocable.]—Where a verbal representation of an intended absolute gift of property is made, in order to influence the conduct of another, and is acted on by that person, although it is of the essence of the representation that the gift be made by a revocable instrument, the gift is rendered irrevocable. Loffus v. Maw, 8 Jur. (N.S.) 607 ; 6 L. T. 346 ; 10 W. R. 513.

8. Relief in Equity.

Voluntary Deed.]—Equity will not assist the donee of a bond to recover the amount of it, if the gift was made without consideration. Edwards v. Jones, 7 Sim. 325; 4 L. J., Ch. 163.

Equity will not assist a party claiming under a voluntary deed of covenant, by enabling him to use the deed either at law or in this court. Fletcher v. Fletcher, 4 Hare, 78; 14 L. J., Ch. 66; 8 Jur. 1040.

The court of chancery will not assist a volunteer by making effectual an incomplete gift. Weale v. Ollive, 17 Beav. 252.

Court, in general, will not decree performance of voluntary agreements. Wycherley v. Wycherley, 2 Eden, 177. S. P., Brownsmith v. Gilbourne, 2 Stra. 738.

In general, a court of equity will not interpose in voluntary agreements made without fraud. Morris v. Burroughs, 1 Atk. 401.

A mother gives a promissory note to a trustee for the benefit of a child of which she is enciente. This not sufficiently nudum pactum for the court to allow a demurrer to a bill by the child, and the trustee to have it carried into execution. Seton v. Seton, 2 Bro. C. C. 610.

A. executed an instrument purporting to convey to B. all the household furniture, plate, watches, clocks, books, moneys, securities for money, and other effects, which at the time of A.'s decease should be in two specified rooms in his mansion house, except an iron chest and its contents, and the contents of a certain closet. A. lived almost exclusively in the two rooms mentioned in the instrument, and B. at the time of the execution of it, and from thenceforth until A.'s death, was his bailiff and confidential agent. Two years after the date of this instrument, A. made his will, by which he bequeathed his plate, jewels, household furniture, and money to trustees, upon certain trusts, for the benefit of C. and his issue. In a suit for the administration of A.'s estate, B. claimed the benefit of the prior instrument, but without either producing probate of it, or showing for what consideration, or under what circumstances it it was executed:—Held, that if the instrument was to be considered as testamentary, this court could not act upon it without probate, and that if it was to be considered as a deed inter vivos, this court could not give effect to it without further evidence in its support; and this court being of opinion that under the circumstances of the case such further evidence could not be obtained, declined to direct any inquiry on the subject. Consett v. Bell, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 569; 11 L. J., Ch. 401; 6 Jur. 869.

—— Legal Debt.]—Where a donor creates a legal debt in favour of a volunteer, and the trustee declines to act, this court will enforce payment of the debt for the benefit of the volunteer. Bridge v. Bridge, 16 Beav. 315; 16 Jur. 1031.

—— Property not Assignable at Law.]—When an instrument is in form a complete and an immediate assignment, and of such a nature as to give the assignee a right as between him and the assignor to take or receive the property comprised in it presently, it will, although voluntary, be supported in equity and considered as a perfect declaration of trust of such of the property as was not assignable at law. Richardson v. Richardson, 36 L. J., Ch. 653; L. R. 3 Eq. 686.

Property Restored—Motive.]—When, after an alleged gift, the donee restored the control of the property to the donor, mere evidence of motive for the gift is insufficient to establish the donee's right to it. James v. James, 19 L. T. 809.

Untrue Consideration.]—Conveyance for consideration, not afterwards to be set up as a gift. And being for fictitious consideration inserted by grantor himself, though found by a jury, set aside in equity. Bridgman v. Green, 2 Ves. 627.

When a grantee, under a deed purporting to be a conveyance for valuable consideration, attempts to support the grant as a gift, the onus of proving that such a gift was intended and made is thrown upon the grantee, and clear evidence in support of the gift will be required. Coultwas v. Swan, 19 W. R. 485.

A testator with a view of placing property out of the control of liquidators, conveyed it to his stepdaughter absolutely, and, as she alleged, by way of gift. The conveyance purported to be for a valuable consideration, but was in fact voluntary. Subsequently the claims of the liquidators were satisfied out of other property belonging to the testator:—Held, that there was a resulting trust in favour of the testator, and that the property must be reconveyed for the benefit of his estate. S. C., 22 L. T. 539; 18 W. R. 746.

Formalities not Complied With.]—An intended gift, which, for lack of the necessary formalities, was not completed during the intending donor's life, will not be carried into effect by treating him as a trustee of the subject matter of the intended gift, if there is no proof that he meant to retain such subject-matter as a trustee thereof for the intended donee. Heartley v. Nicholson, 44 L. J., Ch. 277; L. R. 19 Eq. 233; 31 L. T. 821; 23 W. R. 374.

The court will not enforce the transfer of stock in favour of a volunteer, to whom it has been merely assigned. Beech v. Keep, 18 Beav. 285; 23 L. J., Ch. 539; 18 Jur. 971; 2 W. R. 316.

Executor never called upon to do any act to perfect a gift inter vivos, except in the particular cases of supplying a defective execution of a power, and the want of a surrender of a copyhold. Antrobus v. Smith, 12 Ves. 47; 8 R. R. 278.

Declaration of Trust.]—A testator gave a policy of assurance to two trustees "to hold the same upon uses appointed by letters signed by them and myself." No such letter existed at the date of the will, but the testator had previously asked the trustees, who had consented, to accept the bequest for the benefit of persons or objects then named by the testator. Long after the date of his will the testator wrote a letter addressed to his executors, stating that he had by his will left the policy to the two trustees, to be delivered up to them for the purposes they had agreed to carry out. At the same time the testator signed an unattested memorandum, declaring the trusts on which the trustees were to hold the policy given to them by his will. The trustees retained the letter and the memorandum until after the testator's death. Upon a claim by one of the persons beneficially interested under the memorandum against the executors and trustees:—Held, that the testator could not prospectively create for himself a power to dispose of property by an instrument not duly executed as a will, and that the letter would not operate as a gift inter vivos; and that the trustees held the proceeds of the policy in trust for the residuary legatees under the testator's will. Johnson v. Ball, 5 De G. & Sm. 85; 21 L. J., Ch. 210; 16 Jur. 538.

A parol declaration of trust may, in the absence of fraud, be perfectly good, and when it amounts to a trust executed, it will be enforced in equity, although in favour of a volunteer; but an imperfect gift will receive no aid from the court. Jones v. Lock, 35 L. J., Ch. 117; L. R. 1 Ch. 25; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 913; 14 W. R. 149.

1. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

Definition of.]—Goodwill must mean every possible advantage that has been acquired by the old firm in carrying on its business, whether connected with the premises in which the business was previously carried on, or with the name of the late firm, or with any other matter carrying with it the benefit of the business.—Per M.R. in Ginesi v. Cooper, 49 L. J., Ch. 601; 14 Ch. D. 596; 42 L. T. 751.

Where a trade is established in a particular place, the goodwill of that trade means nothing more than the sum of money which any person would be willing to give for the chance of being able to keep the trade connected with the place where it has been carried on. Austen v. Boys, 2 De G. & J. 626; 27 L. J., Ch. 714; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 719; 6 W. R. 729.

Goodwill is something distinct from the profits of a business, although in determining its value the profits are taken into account, and it is usually estimated at so many years' purchase. Ib.

The goodwill which attaches to a house from its being well known or situated in a good thoroughfare adds to the value of the house and would pass to the mortgagee under a mortgage of the house; but the goodwill which attaches to the personal reputation of the owner of the house would not pass to the mortgagee. Per Cotton, L.J. Cooper v. Metropolitan Board of Works, 53 L. J., Ch. 109; 25 Ch. D. 472; 50 L. T. 602; 32 W. R. 709—C. A.

—— Solicitor's Business.]—The term goodwill is inapplicable to the business of a solicitor, which has no local existence, but is entirely personal, depending upon the trust and confidence which persons may repose in the integrity and ability of the solicitor to conduct their legal affairs. Ib.

As a general rule, and in the absence of express contract, there is not, in a partnership between solicitors, any partnership asset which is capable of being sold or valued as the "goodwill" of the partnership business—Per Jessel, M.R. Arundell v. Bell, 52 L. J., Ch. 537; 49 L. T. 345; 31 W. R. 477. See cols. 579, 586, 594.

What Comprised in.]—The goodwill of a business comprises all the advantages that may be desired from the purchasers holding themselves out to the public as the persons interested in that business, which has been identified with the name of a particular firm. Churton v. Douglas, Johnson, 174; 28 L. J., Ch. 841; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 887; 7 W. R. 365.

Therefore, though it is well settled that the sale of a goodwill does not imply a contract on the part of the vendor not to set up again in a similar business, he is not at liberty to hold out to the public that he is continuing the same business by using the name of the old firm, even though his own name may be the only one that appeared in that firm. Ib.

In the absence of specific and definite stipulations, an assignment of the "goodwill" of a solicitor's business does not carry with it the right to the custody of deeds and papers belonging to the clients of the assignor—Per Denman, J. James v. James, 58 L. J., Q. B. 300; 22 Q. B. D. 669; 60 L. T. 569; 37 W. R. 495.

Rights of Partners.]—An agreement to share the profit and loss of a business entitles each party as against the other to the general rights of a partner, including an interest in the goodwill; and the agreement would have this legal effect notwithstanding a stipulation that the parties should not be partners. Pawsey v. Armstrong, 50 L. J., Ch. 683; 18 Ch. D. 698; 30 W. R. 469.

See col. 585, and PARTNERSHIP.

Survivorship—Business Carried on by Wife before Marriage.]—The goodwill of a business carried on by a wife before marriage, and afterwards by the husband and wife, survives to her. She may dispose of it, and receive the purchase-money for her own benefit, even though it is carried on upon leasehold premises, forming a part of the estate of the testator, which were disposed of by his will. Morris v. Moss, 25 L. J., Ch. 194.

Covenant against Rival Trading part of Goodwill.]—W. entered the service of C. as a shopman at weekly wages, and covenanted not to carry on business within one mile of the shop at any time thereafter. The business was afterwards moved to another shop close by, and sold by C. to J., together with the goodwill and beneficial interest thereof. W. then left the shop, and set up business within a mile of the old shop :—Held, that the covenant was not unreasonable, and endured for the life of W., though the original convenantee should cease to carry on business altogether, and that the covenant was not affected by the removal of the business to another shop near at hand, though it might have been otherwise if the business had been removed to quite a different neighbourhood :—Held, also, that such a covenant added to the value of the goodwill, and, therefore, was part of the goodwill, and assignable with it, and did, in fact, pass by the sale of the goodwill and beneficial interest to J., so as to give him a right of action. Jacoby v. Whitmore, 49 L. T. 335 ; 32 W. R. 18.

Surgeon Dentist's Business.]—A surgeon dentist, by his will appointed his wife his sole executrix, and she proved the same. The testator was tenant from year to year of the house in which he carried on his business. A few days after the testator's death his widow entered into agreements, in which she was described as one of the executors of the testator, by which it was agreed that A. B. should pay her 500*l.* for the goodwill of the business, and he was to have the advantage of being introduced to the patients of the testator, to take his house, and to buy his furniture and surgical instruments at a stipulated price. On a reference to the Master, evidence was given for the widow, that the agreement as to the 500*l.* was not entered into with her in her character of executrix, and that the intention of the parties was, that that sum was to be paid to her as the value of her influence with the patients and her personal trouble in introducing them to the purchaser A. B. The Master found that the whole of the 500*l.* belonged to the widow ; but on exceptions to the report the same was sent back for review, with a declaration that the whole or part of the 500*l.* belonged to the estate of the testator. Smale v. Graves, 19 L. J., Ch. 157 ; 14 Jur. 662.

Public-house.]—Goodwill an element in the value of a reversionary interest in a public-house. Edwards v. Edwards, 1 Jur. 654.

The goodwill of a victualler's business held, under the circumstances, to be incident to the stock and licence, and not to the premises on which the business was carried on. A widow carried on the business of a licensed victualler on premises held by her from year to year ; prior to her second marriage she assigned her household goods, furniture, stock-in-trade, brewing utensils, and all other her effects upon trusts, excluding her husband ; she married :—Held, that the goodwill of the trade, which was afterwards sold, passed by the deed as incident to the stock and licence, and not to the husband with the premises. England v. Downs, 6 Beav. 269 ; 12 L. J., Ch. 85 ; 6 Jur. 1075.

In the administration of the estate of an intestate, a public-house belonging to him in fee, and in which he had carried on business, was sold as a lease :—Held, that as between the heir-at-law and next-of-kin, any portion of the amount realised representing goodwill could not be separated from the interest of the heir-at-law. Booth v. Curtis, 20 L. T. 152 ; 17 W. R. 393.

—— Mortgage of.]—The goodwill of a mortgaged public-house is not a personal goodwill, but belongs to the mortgagor's trustee in liquidation as against the mortgagee. Punnett, Ex parte, Kitchin, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 212 ; 16 Ch. D. 226 ; 44 L. T. 226 ; 29 W. R. 129.

The defendant mortgaged, by demise, a leasehold public-house, with the goodwill of the business carried on there, to the plaintiff. The deed contained a covenant for further assurance. Default was made, and the plaintiff in a foreclosure action obtained a receiver :—Held, that the defendant was bound under the terms of the mortgage to assign his licence to the receiver. Rutter v. Daniel, 30 W. R. 801—C. A. Affirming 46 L. T. 684.

And see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Equitable Mortgagee of Lease.]—The unexpired term in a house, and the goodwill of a business established in it, were sold in a creditor's suit, with the consent of a person with whom the lease had been deposited as a security, and brought a price less than the amount of his debt :—Held, that the equitable mortgagee was entitled to the whole of the purchase-money, whether arising from the value of the goodwill, or from the value of the lease, independently of the goodwill. Chissum v. Dewes, 5 Russ. 29 ; 29 R. R. 10.

Pawnbroking Business.]—A., a pawnbroker, sold to B. his trade and business, and stock-in-trade, and all profits, benefits, advantages, and emoluments resulting therefrom for 600*l.*, which sum was allowed to remain in the purchaser's hands, and for which he was to pay A. 30*l.* a year, as secured by deed. By a lease of the premises on which the business was carried on, bearing even date with the deed securing the payment of 30*l.* a year, the rent reserved on the premises was 120*l.* B. became bankrupt ; and when A. sought to put his debt on the file, the premises were sworn not to have been worth more than 60*l.* It was held that the additional 60*l.*, unaccounted for, did not necessarily make the original transaction between the parties usurious, so as to prevent A. from filing his proof against B.'s estate, but that the 60*l.* a year above the rent might well be put down to the account of certain "facilities" afforded by A. to B., and which were in the nature of "goodwill," although "goodwill" was not expressed in terms to have been sold. Lynn, Ex parte, Tovey, In re, 5 Jur. 1089.

2. SALE AND TRANSFER.

a. Generally.

What passes to Purchaser on.]—When a business is sold, the entire goodwill and right to use trade marks pass to the purchaser without any express mention of them being made in the deed of assignment. And the court will restrain any attempt on the part of the vendor to dispose of them either for his own benefit or use. Shipwright v. Clements, 19 W. R. 599.

Assignment of Licence of Public-house.]—The defendant mortgaged, by demise, a leasehold public-house, with the goodwill of the business carried on there, to the plaintiff. The deed contained a covenant for further assurance. Default was made, and the plaintiff in a foreclosure action obtained a receiver:—Held, that the defendant was bound under the terms of the mortgage to assign his licence to the receiver. Rutter v. Daniel, 30 W. R. 801—C. A. Affirming 46 L. T. 684.

Goodwill of Mortgaged Public-house.]—The goodwill of a mortgaged public-house belongs to the mortgagor's trustee in liquidation as against the mortgagee. Punnett, Ex parte. Kitchin, In re, 50 L. J., Ch. 212; 16 Ch. D. 226; 44 L. T. 226; 29 W. R. 129—C. A.

Solicitor's Business—Right to Papers.]—In the absence of specific and definite stipulations, an assignment of the "goodwill" of a solicitor's business does not carry with it the right to the custody of deeds and papers belonging to the clients of the assignor. James v. James, 58 L. J., Q. B. 300; 22 Q. B. D. 669; 60 L. T. 569; 37 W. R. 495.

Partnership, In case of.]—See col. 592.

b. Competition by Vendor.

Right of.]—Sale of a trade, with the goodwill, does not prevent the vendor's setting up again in a similar trade, without express covenant; or fraud by representing it as a continuation of the old trade, or by conduct encouraging others to involve themselves, in the confidence that he would not trade again, etc. Sale under a commission of bankruptcy of the waggon trade from B. to L., with the goodwill. Another concern from B. to W. and S. being purchased in trust for the bankrupt, having obtained his certificate, he commenced trade again to L., by that road, soliciting customers by advertisement and cards, stating generally, that being reinstated by the friends in the carrying business, his waggons set out at the usual hours, etc. An injunction was refused. Crutwell v. Lye, 17 Ves. 335. And see Davies v. Hodgson, 25 Beav. 177.

Though it is well settled that the sale of a goodwill does not imply a contract on the part of a vendor not to set up again in a similar business, he is not at liberty to hold out to the public that he is continuing the same business by using the name of the old firm, even though his own name may be the only one that appeared in that firm. Churton v. Douglas, 1 Johns. 174; 28 L. J., Ch. 841; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 887; 7 W. R. 365.

Soliciting Customers of Old Firm.] — The vendor of a business and the goodwill thereof may, in the absence of express stipulation to the contrary, set up a business of the same kind either in the same neighbourhood, or elsewhere, and may publicly advertise the fact of his having done so; but he must not solicit the customers of the old business to cease dealing with the purchaser, or to give their custom to himself. Labouchere v. Dawson, 41 L. J., Ch. 427; L. R. 13 Eq. 322; 25 L. T. 894; 20 W. R. 309.

A partner who has no share in the goodwill of the business is not entitled during the partnership to extract from the books of the firm the names and addresses of customers for the purpose of soliciting such customers on his own behalf after the termination of the partnership. Labouchere v. Dawson (41 L. J., Ch. 427; L. R. 13 Eq. 322) approved. Pearson v. Pearson, infra, overruled. Trego v. Hunt, 65 L. J., Ch. 1; [1896] A. C. 7; 73 L. T. 514; 44 W. R. 225—H. L. (E.)

A trader who has sold his business and goodwill to another for value must abstain not only from soliciting orders from but also from dealing from the old customers. Form of injunction. Ginesi v. Cooper, 49 L. J., Ch. 601; 14 Ch. D. 596; 42 L. T. 751.

Where two partners dissolve partnership on the terms that one shall have the goodwill and continue the business, and the retiring partner sets up a similar business in the neighbourhood, the court will grant an injunction to restrain the retiring partner from soliciting the old customers of the firm, but will not restrain him from dealing with them. Ginesi v. Cooper (14 Ch. D. 596) disapproved. Leggott v. Barrett, 51 L. J., Ch. 90; 15 Ch. D. 306; 43 L. T. 641; 28 W. R. 962—C. A.

Semble (per Brett, L.J.), that the doctrine of Labouchere v. Dawson (L. R., 13 Eq. 322) is correct in the case of a sale of goodwill, and of a dissolution of partnership for a valuable consideration—that is, that there is an implied contract on the part of the vendors in the one case, and of the retiring partner who receives the consideration in the other, that he will not solicit the former customers. Ib.

T. P., as trustee of a will, carried on a business which had been carried on by the testator under the name of James P. By an agreement made to compromise a suit, James P., a son of the testator and a beneficiary under his will, agreed to sell to T. P. all his interest in the business, and in the property on which it was carried on. And it was provided that nothing in the agreement should prevent James P. from carrying on the like business where he should think fit, and under the name of James P. T. P. brought this action to enforce this agreement, and to restrain James P. from soliciting the customers of the old firm. An injunction was granted on the authority of Labouchere v. Dawson (L. R. 13 Eq. 322), and the cases in which it had been followed:—Held (dissentiente Lindley, L.J.), that Labouchere v. Dawson was wrongly decided, and ought to be overruled, and that even apart from the proviso in the agreement, the plaintiff was not entitled to the injunction which he had obtained:—Held, by the whole court, that the proviso in the agreement authorised the defendant to carry on business in the same way as any stranger might lawfully do, and took the case out of the authority of Labouchere v. Dawson, supposing that case to have been well decided. Pearson v. Pearson, 54 L. J., Ch. 32; 27 Ch. D. 145; 51 L. T. 311; 32 W. R. 1006—C. A. followed. Vernon v. Hallam 56 L. J., Ch. 115; 34 Ch. D. 748; 55 L. T. 676; 35 W. R. 156.

Expelled Partner.]—A partner who has been expelled under a provision in the articles of partnership, and has been repaid his share of the capital, will not be restrained from carrying on the business on his own account, and soliciting the old customers of the firm. Dawson v. Beeson, 22 Ch. D. 504; 48 L. T. 407; 31 W. R. 537—C. A.

Trustee under Liquidation.]—The rule of Labouchere v. Dawson, which precludes the vendor of the goodwill of a business from soliciting the former customers is not to be extended to the case of a compulsory alienation. Therefore, where the trustee of liquidating debtor sold the goodwill of the debtor's business, and the debtor having obtained his discharge, started a similar business in the same town, and solicited the customers of his old firm:—Held, that no injunction could be granted to restrain such solicitation. Walker v. Mottram, 51 L. J., Ch. 108; 19 Ch. D. 355; 45 L. T. 659; 30 W. R. 165—C. A.

The decision of Labouchere v. Dawson is founded on an implied contract by the vendor of the goodwill of a business not to injure the property for which he has received consideration, but the obligation enforced by that case is purely personal, and not a mere incident to the transfer of property. Ib.

The assignment of a business and its goodwill, in the absence of any covenant, carries with it now as much and no more than in the days of Lord Eldon. Ib.

The concurrence of a bankrupt in the assignment o fhis property by his trustee is immaterial, inasmuch as, being bound by every lawful disposition of his property by his trustee, he is bound to respect whatever rights such a disposition confers on the purchaser. Ib.

In substance there is no distinction between the sale of a business and goodwill by a trader himself, and a sale by his assignees in bankruptcy. Hudson v. Osborne, 39 L. J., Ch. 79.

Right to Use Old Name.]—A vendor who had carried on a business under the name of "Madame Elise," which was the name of his wife, sold the goodwill and interest of the business, together with the exclusive right of using the name of "Madame Elise and Company:"—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to trade under the old name alone, inasmuch as it would lead people to believe that the old business was still being carried on, and might cause the vendor to incur liability. Chatteris v. Isaacson, 57 L. T. 177.

Circulars.]—A partnership between M. and C., who carried on the business of wine merchants, having determined at the end of seven years by effluxion of time, and M. being entitled to the goodwill, C. proposed to issue a circular to all the customers of the firm and the trade generally, which, after announcing that he had joined another firm of wine merchants, and drawing attention to one of their circulars which was annexed, continued, "I take this opportunity to thank you for your valued support during the last seven years, and to solicit a continuance of the same in future." The annexed circular was an announcement by T. & Co., an old-established firm of wine merchants, that C. had joined their firm, and concluded as follows:—"Thanking you for your support in the past, and soliciting a continuance in the future to the new firm." M. having objected to these circulars being issued, C. proposed to omit the words "and to solicit a continuance of the same in future":—Held, that the circulars amounted to a suggestion that the new firm were the successors in trade of the old firm, and that C. must be restrained from issuing either of the three, and from applying to any person who was a customer or correspondent of the old firm, and asking them to deal with him, or not to deal with M. Mogford v. Courtenay, 45 L. T. 303; 29 W. R. 864.

Form of Decree.]—Form of decree in Cook v. Collingridge (Jacob, 607) containing a declaration of the rights of surviving partners to carry on the same trade after the sale of the partnership premises and business; but that notwithstanding this, the chance of a purchaser of the partnership property to retain the old customers could not be treated as of no speculative value. Cook v. Collingridge, 27 Beav. 456, n.

Covenant by Vendor.]—Contracts entered into between two persons to restrain one of them from setting up or exercising a particular trade or employment within a certain limited district, and for valuable consideration, are valid. Chesman v. Nainby, 1 Bro P. C. 234.

The defendant agreed to sell his business premises and goodwill to the plaintiff, and not to set up in the same business in the neighbourhood, the plaintiff agreeing to employ the former. The sale was carried out, the defendant employed for a short time, and then dismissed for alleged neglect of his work. Some months afterwards the defendant committed a breach of the negative covenant. A bill having been filed for specific performance of such covenant, the court, at the hearing, granted an injunction to restrain the breach, but, not being satisfied as to the bonâ fides of the dismissal and the evidence of neglect, without costs. Daggett v. Ryman, 17 L. T. 486; 16 W. R. 302.

A covenant by vendor of a business and the goodwill thereof that he would not for a term of years carry on the business of a manufacturer, either by himself or jointly with any other persons, under the name or style of J. H., or H. Brothers, the name of the business which he had sold, is not a covenant that the vendor would not carry on business as a manufacturer, but against using a particular name or style in trade, and an injunction was granted to restrain a breach of the covenant. Vernon v. Hallam, 56 L. J., Ch. 115; 34 Ch. D. 748; 55 L. T. 676; 35 W. R. 156.

—— Coach Master.]—A coach master having sold his share of the business to his partner, with an undertaking not to be concerned in any coach running from R. to London, or prejudicial to the business which he had sold; an injunction was granted, restraining him from running a coach from P., through R., to London. Williams v. Williams, 2 Swan. 253; 1 Wils. 473. n.

—— General Merchant.]—Upon the sale of the business of a general merchant in a country place, the vendor agreed to give a bond for a sum of 1,600*l.* as liquidated damages, if he should be thereafter concerned in any "trading establishment" within a neighbouring district, comprising a considerable section of the county of Cornwall:—Held, that this was not too general a restraint of trade, and specific performance of the agreement was decreed at the suit of the vendor. Avery v. Langford, 1 Kay. 663; 23 L. J., Ch. 837; 18 Jur. 905; 2 W. R. 615.

In construing the condition of such a bond, a court of law would take into consideration the surrounding circumstances at the time of executing the bond, and would consider the words "trading establishment" to mean an establishment for any trade likely to interfere with the goodwill, which was the subject of the sale. Ib.

—— Solicitor.]—An agreement by a solicitor, made for valuable consideration on the sale of his business, not to practise as solicitor in any part of Great Britain for twenty years without the consent of the purchaser, held valid, and an injunction granted to restrain the seller accordingly from practising, and from endeavouring to induce any persons who were clients of the former and present firm to cease to employ the latter. An injunction was also granted to restrain the seller from detaining or destroying certain papers and documents belonging to the firm which he had got in his possession. Whittaker v. Howe, 8 Beav. 383.

—— Tailor.]—D. sold his business, goodwill, fixtures, &c., to N., and covenanted not to carry on or be concerned or interested in the business of a tailor within five miles of the former shop. D. then engaged himself to his nephew, carrying on the same trade within a quarter of a mile of the former place of business, and whose name was the same as his own, as a journeyman, at a weekly salary:—Held, that this was within the spirit and letter of the covenant, and an injunction was granted. Newling v. Dobell, 19 L. T. (N.S.) 408.

—— Wine Merchant.]—Agreement, by which, in consideration that plaintiff would purchase defendant's premises and stock of wine, and would pay 2,000*l.* as a premium for the goodwill of defendant's business of a wine merchant, defendant agreed that he would not, by himself or agent, or otherwise howsoever, either directly or indirectly set up, embark in, or carry on the business or trade of a wine and spirit merchant at C., or at any other town or place within the three counties of C., A., and M.:—Held, that defendant had broken the agreement by supplying wine to persons resident in C. and in other towns and places within the counties of C., A., and M., solicited by him, within C. and the other towns and places, personally, and by his agents, though he had no place of residence, warehouse, cellars, or place of business within C. or the other towns and places. Turner v. Evans, 2 De G. M. & G. 740; 17 Jur. 1073.

—— Damages.]—Bill for an account under covenant upon sale of goodwill not to carry on the trade; the usual course, a bill of discovery for an action. Scott v. Mackintosh, 1 Ves. & B. 503.

Undertaking, upon sale of the goodwill of a trade, not to carry on the same business, and to use the best endeavours to assist the purchaser, &c.; the remedy for a breach is an action, or issue quantum damnificatus; and an injunction against proceeding under a judgment for the consideration upon affidavits before answer was refused. Shackle v. Baker, 14 Ves. 468.

And see CONTRACT.

c. Sale by Court.

Notice of Liability to Competition.]—The goodwill of a partnership business having been ordered to be sold by the court in a suit instituted by the surviving partner, it was directed that the advertisements and particulars of sale should contain a notice that a sale would not prevent any person interested in the business from carrying on the like business in the same town. Johnson v. Helleley, 2 De G. J. & S. 446; 34 L. J., Ch. 179; 10 Jur. (N.S.), 1041; 11 L. T. 581; 13 W. R. 220.

d. Specific Performance.

When Decreed.]—Specific performance decreed of agreement to sell goodwill of trade, and exclusive use of secret therein. Bryson v. Whitehead, 1 Sim. & S. 74; 1 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 42.

The court will not execute a contract for the sale of a goodwill, but will leave the parties to law. Baxter v. Connolly, 1 Jac. & Walk. 576.

Specific performance of an agreement to purchase the business of an attorney refused upon a bill by the vendor, there being no express stipulations by which the court might be enabled to carry it into effect on his part, in return for the defendant's purchase-money, and there being no conditions generally applicable to transactions of this nature, so as to come within the description of "usual clauses" to be inserted in an instrument to be drawn up in pursuance of the agreement. Bozon v. Farlow, 1 Mer. 459.

Whether such an agreement void, at law, upon ground either of morality or of public policy. Ib.

Quære, if legally a valid agreement, whether it is of such a nature as is capable of being enforced in equity. Ib.

—— No Agreement as to Price.] — An agreement to sell the goodwill of the business of a solicitor, without any stipulation as to the amount to be paid for it, or otherwise, cannot be enforced by specific performance. Austin v. Boys, 2 De G. & J. 626; 27 L. J., Ch. 714; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 719; 6 W. R. 729.

—— Fixtures at Valuation.]—An agreement for sale of leasehold premises and the goodwill of a trade, and certain fixtures to be taken at a valuation to be made by two gaugers, to be named, or their umpire:—Held, that the court could not decree specific performance of an agreement, one part of which was left to be determined by arbitration. Darbey v. Whitaker, 4 Drew. 134.

—— Uncertainty.]—The terms "goodwill, &c.," in a contract for the sale of a foundry are not so uncertain as alone to prevent a decree for specific performance of it, for the words "et cætera" point to things necessarily connected with, and belonging to, the goodwill, and to be defined in the conveyance. Cooper v. Hood, 26 Beav. 293; 28 L. J., Ch. 212; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 1266; 7 W. R. 81.

Specific performance of an agreement to purchase one-third of a foundry, refused, on the ground of uncertainty, the contract not specifying what portion of the purchase-money was to be left in the business, but only a large portion, and not stating when it was to be paid, or how to be secured, and what interest was to be allowed in the meanwhile. Ib.

—— Time of the Essence of Contract.]—In an agreement by a tenant at will of a public-house for the sale of possession, trade, and goodwill of the house at a fixed sum, and of the stock and furniture at a valuation; one of the terms being that possession should be taken, and the money paid on a given day, time is of the essence of the contract; and a purchaser was not in a condition to fulfil his part of the contract on that day cannot compel a specific performance, though he was ready on the following day to have proceeded to complete the purchase. Coslake v. Till, 1 Russ. 376.

—— Terms of Decree.]—By agreement entered into with executors, for the purchase of a leasehold public-house, and the goodwill and licences connected with it, the household furniture, stock in trade, and other effects upon the premises, were to be taken by the purchaser at a valuation, and possession was to be delivered up to him on the 29th September, 1821. The valuation was made, but on the 29th September the purchaser, alleging that there was a defect in the title to the leasehold, refused to perform his contract. The executors filed a bill for specific performance; but in the meantime remained in possession of the house, and carried on the business:—Held, that though the executors were entitled to a decree for specific performance, and though the purchaser had done wrong in refusing to perform the contract, he could not be made answerable for the trade which had been carried on in the premises since September, 1821; that he could not be compelled to take that portion of the stock-in-trade on the premises at the time of the decree which was not there at the date of the agreement, but had been substituted for such parts of the old stock as had been consumed in the usual course of the business; that the purchaser ought to be charged with rent and taxes, and other outgoings paid by the executors since September, 1821, and with interest, on the same so paid by them; that the purchaser was not entitled to any occupation-rent, or other allowances, for the use of the house and furniture, by the executors, during the period that elapsed after the 29th September, 1821. Dakin v. Cope, 2 Russ. 170.

3. PARTNERSHIP, IN CASE OF.

An Asset of the Partnership.]—It is now settled that goodwill is ordinarily a distinct part of the property of a trading partnership; and therefore under a provision in partnership articles for valuation of the partnership property and effects at its close, the goodwill is a matter for valuation. Reynolds v. Bullock, 47 L. J., Ch. 773; 39 L. T. 443; 26 W. R. 678.

No Survival.]—The goodwill in a partnership business does not on the death of one partner survive beneficially to the others; when it has any value a due proportion belongs to the estate of the deceased partner, but the surviving partner has still the right to carry on the same business and at the same place. Smith v. Everett, 27 Beav. 446; 29 L. J., Ch. 236; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1332; 7 W. R. 605. Quære now Farr v. Pearce, 3 Madd. 74; and Hammond v. Douglas, 5 Ves. 539.

An agreement to share the profit and loss of a business entitles each party as against the other to the general rights of a partner, including an interest in the goodwill and the agreement, would have this legal effect, notwithstanding a stipulation that the parties should not be partners. Pawsey v. Armstrong, 50 L. J., Ch. 683; 18 Ch. D. 698; 30 W. R 469.

Partnership stock includes the goodwill of the business and the right to use the trade mark; and on the purchase, by a surviving partner from the executors of a deceased partner, of the partnership stock at a valuation, the value of the goodwill and the trade mark must be taken into account. Hall v. Barrows, 4 De G. J. & S. 150; 33 L. J., Ch. 204; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 55; 9 L. T. 561; 12 W. R. 322.

By articles of partnership it was provided, that if either of the partners should die before the expiration of the co-partnership, the surviving partner should have the option of taking to himself all the stock belonging thereto, on paying to the executors of the partner dying the value of his share. The firm was in the habit of using as a trade-mark the initial letters of the names of the original manufacturers of the articles sold; but the mark had ceased to be a representation that the articles on which it was impressed were the manufacture of the persons whose initials it bore, and had come to be a mere brand, denoting the quality of the articles. In taking the value of the partnership stock, for the purpose of purchase by a surviving partner:—Held, that the exclusive right to the trade-mark belonged to the partnership as part of its property, and must be included in the valuation. Ib.

—— Wife's Business before Marriage.]—The goodwill of a business carried on by a wife before marriage, and afterwards by the husband and wife, survives to her. She may dispose of it, and receive the purchase-money for her own benefit, even though it is carried on upon leasehold premises forming part of the estate of the testator which were disposed of by his will. Morris v. Moss, 25 L. J., Ch. 194.

Dissolution—Original Price of Goodwill—Return.]—Upon the dissolution of a partnership and a notice as provided in the partnership articles, if there has been no misconduct nor breach of the articles on the part of the partner so giving notice, the price originally paid by the continuing partner for his share in the goodwill will not be returned him, although the goodwill may have become valueless, and the business may have suffered by the retiring partner setting up a similar business in his own name, and on the adjoining premises. Bond v. Milbourn, 20 W. R. 197.

Solicitors' Business.]—As a general rule, and in the absence of express contract, there is not, in a partnership between solicitors, any partnership asset which is capable of being sold or valued as the "goodwill" of the partnership business. Arundell v. Bell, 52 L. J., Ch. 537; 49 L. T. 345; 31 W. R. 477.

In 1877 the three partners in a firm of solicitors agreed that the partnership should be dissolved, that two of them should continue to carry on the partnership business, and should employ the third as a clerk at a salary, and that all the books, papers, and other property of the firm should vest in and be the property of the two continuing partners. The third partner died shortly afterwards, and in an action by his administratrix against the two continuing partners, an order was made directing the partnership accounts to be taken as from January, 1874. In taking the accounts the plaintiff claimed that a sum should be allowed in respect of the interest of the deceased partner in the "goodwill" of the partnership business, which was put at 10,000*l.*, being five years' purchase of the estimated annual profits of the business:—Held, that, under the circumstances, no sum could be allowed in respect of the alleged "goodwill" of the business. Ib.

The term "goodwill" seems wholly inapplicable to the business of a solicitor, which has no local existence, but is entirely personal, depending upon the trust and confidence which persons may repose in his integrity and ability to conduct their legal affairs. Austin v. Boys, 2 De G. & J. 626; 27 L. J., Ch. 714; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 719; 6 W. R. 729.

Where articles of partnership between London solicitors provided that either partner might retire, and that in that case the continuing partner should pay the retiring partner for his share and goodwill the fair marketable value, and the retiring partner should not practise within one hundred miles of the General Post Office, but should use his best endeavours to promote the interests of the existing partners:—Held, that the goodwill must be taken to mean only the interest which the retiring partner would have had if he had remained in the partnership till the expiration of it by effluxion of time. Ib.

Stockbrokers' Business.]—The plaintiff, the defendant, and T. W., deceased, carried on the business of stockbrokers in partnership, under articles dated 8th March, 1881, for five years from 1st February, 1881, and thereafter from year to year. The partnership was dissolved in the lifetime of the partners by notice on the 31st October, 1889; and the plaintiff instituted this action for an account of the partnership dealings and profits to 31st October, 1889, and claimed to have the goodwill in the partnership business valued and included in the account. There were no covenants in the articles restricting the right of the continuing partners to carry on the business or to use the firm name:—Held, that there was no saleable goodwill in the business, and that in taking the accounts, which were directed by the judgment, the goodwill should be excluded. Wilson v. Williams, 29 L. R. Ir. 176.

Surgeon—Agreement not to carry on the Profession of a Surgeon.]—M. became assistant to H. and P., surgeons at N., and entered into a bond, which recited that he was taken into their employment on the terms "that he should not at any time set up or carry on the business or profession of a surgeon" in N., or within ten miles thereof. The condition of the bond was that M. "shall not at any time hereafter directly or indirectly, and either alone or in partnership with or as assistant to any other person or persons, carry on the profession or business of a surgeon" in N., or within ten miles thereof. The partnership having been dissolved, both partners continued to practise in N., and H. engaged M., as his assistant at a salary. P. brought his action to restrain M. from acting as such:—Held, that as the agreement recited in the bond was for the protection of the business carried on by H. and P., and they had in the business a joint interest during the partnership, and several interests in the event of a dissolution, the agreement must be taken to be several as well as joint, and that P. could sue alone for a breach of it:—Held, also, that there had been a breach of it, for that a person acting as a surgeon was carrying on the profession of a surgeon, although he only acted as salaried assistant to a surgeon who carried it on for his own benefit. Allen v. Taylor (19 W. R. 556) distinguished. Palmer v. Mallet, 57 L. J., Ch. 226; 36 Ch. D. 411; 58 L. T. 64; 36 W. R. 460—C. A.

Deceased Partner—Right of Estate to Share.]—The estate of a deceased partner is entitled to participate in the goodwill of a business which does not belong to the surviving partners except by express agreement. Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 22 Beav. 84; 25 L. J., Ch. 710; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 674.

By articles of partnership, on the death of a partner the survivors were entitled to the goodwill. A., a partner, died in 1801, having appointed his co-partners executors. They continued the trade, having made out an account, from which it appeared that the assets (consisting nearly wholly of outstanding debts) were 496,000*l.*, the liabilities 410,000*l.*, and the surplus 85,900*l.*, of which A.'s share was 55,000*l.* The survivors carried this to the credit of the deceased partner's account, and they paid the amount with interest to the cestuis que trustent as they came of age. In 1831 the children claimed to participate in the profits of the subsequent trading, which in thirty years had amounted to 308,000*l.*, on the ground that their capital had been employed therein. At the hearing, inquiries were directed with a view to charge them; but on the Master's report, the court having come to the conclusion that at the testator's death the surplus was merely nominal, that the business to wind up was insolvent, and that the subsequent profits were attributable to goodwill and the personal exertions and capital of the surviving partners:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to participate in the profits, so far as those profits were attributable to the goodwill and connection in trade of the old firm, and that their share in the portion of which they would be entitled to participate could not be estimated higher than the interest already paid. Ib.

If the goodwill of a business belongs wholly to surviving partners, the representatives of a deceased partner are not entitled to participate in the profits made by the surviving partners, though as a new firm they debited themselves with the general assets of the whole firm, including those of the deceased partner, and carried on the trade through a series of years, and through several changes in the firm; when, from the nature of the trade, and the state of the accounts of the old firm, and its liabilities, it appeared that neither the assets of the deceased partner, nor the assets of the old firm, could have been realised, except by a continuance of the business. Ib.

If two or more partners carry on business, and one dies, his share of the goodwill is assets, as part of his estate, but the value of his share will be computed with reference to his interest, limited, however, by any rights which may survive to his co-partners. Smith v. Everett, 29 L. J., Ch., 236; 27 Beav. 446; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1332; 7 W. R. 605.

Where, therefore, after the death of a partner, his co-partner could carry on business alone, or by a slight alteration in the name of the firm, and upon the same premises, and a beneficial privilege vested solely in the surviving partner, who alone could confer that right on other persons :—Held, that the value of the share of the deceased partner must be a proportion of the net value, after deducting the amount at which the surviving rights were valued. Ib.

After the death of one of two partners in a bank, the survivor sold the business for 10,000*l.* :—Held, that the estate of the deceased was entitled to a share of so much of the 10,000*l.* as was attributable to the goodwill, and special inquiries were directed to ascertain the value, having regard to the fact, first, that the partnership premises belonged to the survivor ; secondly, that he had still the right to carry on the same business in the same locality ; and, thirdly, that the sole right of issuing notes, under the 7 & 8 Vict., c. 32, belonged to him. Ib.

B., the surviving partner in a business, being also the executor of the deceased partner, carried on for eight years the business, which was insolvent at the death of the deceased partner, and then sold the business for 1,700*l.* In a suit for the administration of the deceased partner's estate against B., as executor :—Held, that the value of the goodwill ought to be ascertained at the time of the deceased partner's death, and not at the time of sale. Broughton v. Broughton, 44 L. J., Ch. 526 : 23 W. R. 970.

In 1877 the three partners in a firm of solicitors agreed that the partnership should be dissolved, that two of them should continue to carry on the partnership business, and should employ the third as a clerk at a salary, and that all the books, papers, and other property of the firm should vest in and be the property of the two continuing partners. The third partner died shortly afterwards, and in an action by his administratrix against the two continuing partners, an order was made directing the partnership accounts to be taken as from January, 1874. In taking the accounts, the plaintiff claimed that a sum should be allowed in respect of the interest of the deceased partner in the "goodwill" of the partnership business, which was put at 10,000*l.*, being five years' purchase of the estimated annual profits of the business :—Held, that, under the circumstances, no sum could be allowed in respect of the alleged "goodwill" of the business. Arundell v. Bell, 52 L. J., Ch. 537 ; 49 L. T. 345 ; 31 W. R. 477—C. A.

—— Death before Yearly Account taken—Showing Purchase-money.]—Four persons carried on business in partnership under articles which provided that on the death of one partner his share was to be taken over by the survivors at the value put upon it in the last balance-sheet. Negotiations for a sale of the business premises to a railway company were in progress when one partner died :—Held, that, in taking the accounts, the deceased partner was entitled to be credited with his share of the premises, plant, fixtures, &c., at the price which was subsequently given for them by the railway company, but not with a share of the goodwill, although that was included in the sale, and a value put upon it. Hunter v. Dowling, 64 L. J., Ch. 713 ; [1895] 2 Ch. 223 ; 13 R. 474 ; 72 L. T. 653 ; 43 W. R. 619.

—— Legatee of Share.]—A legatee of the share of the mere goodwill of a deceased partner cannot support a bill against the surviving partner to obtain the benefit of his legacy, even after assent by the executor. Robertson v. Quiddington, 28 Beav. 529.

—— Articles as to.]—By articles of partnership between A. and B., it was agreed (Art. 24) that for the purposes of the articles the goodwill of the business should be deemed to be of the value of 6,000*l.* and to belong to the partners in the same proportions as those in which they respectively were entitled to the capital of the partnership ; but the value of the goodwill was not to be taken into account in any of the accounts between the partners, or between the partnership and either of the partners. It was also provided (Art. 49) that on the determination of the partnership, at whatever time and by whatever means, a general account and valuation of all the property, effects, and liabilities of the partnership should be made up and settled by and between the partners, as the case might be, or the surviving partner and the executors or administrators of the deceased partner, and their respective claims on, or shares and interests in, the partnership and the property and effects thereof should be ascertained ; also, that if either partner died, the partnership should thereupon determine. A. was entitled to five-ninths, and B. to four-ninths of the capital. A. died :—Held, that in taking a general account and valuation of the partnership property and effects (under Art. 49) between A.'s executor and B., the value of the goodwill was properly to be included in the account. Wade v. Jenkins, 2 Giff. 509 ; 30 L. J., Ch. 633 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 39 ; 3 L. T. 464.

When three brothers entered into a partnership for seven years, "or for such further time as the partners might agree upon," and at the end of the seven years a general account was taken, but nothing was mentioned about continuing the partnership, and the general account did not include the plaintiff's share of the goodwill :—Held, that although he had signed the account he was not bound by it, as it was not according to the terms of the articles, and no mention of the goodwill was made in the account. Barrow v. Barrow, 27 L. T. 431.

—— Purchase of Business by Surviving Partner—Valuation.]—Two persons agreed to carry on the business of a brewery for twenty-one years under partnership articles, which provided that, on the death of a partner without nominating a son to succeed him (which event happened), "the property, stock, goods, and effects of the said partnership" were to be valued, and the surviving partner was to have the option to purchase at such valuation. The articles further provided that immediately on the determination of the partnership by any of the contingencies mentioned in the articles the partners should join in making up a final account of all the property, joint-stock, money, goods, and effects belonging to the partnership, and that after such account should have been so made up "the property, stock, goods, and effects then employed or used in carrying on the said business" should be valued as therein mentioned. The partnership was continued upon the same articles by a deed of covenant for a further period of seven years, and afterwards without any written or verbal agreement. One partner died, and the surviving partner exercised his option to purchase the business at the valuation :—Held, that although the articles said nothing about goodwill in terms, yet the words "then employed or used in carrying on the said business" could not be construed in so narrow a way as to exclude the goodwill in valuing the business; and that, therefore, the goodwill must be valued separately. Hall v. Barrows (4 De G. J. & S. 150; 33 L. J., Ch. 204) applied. Held also, that the executors of the deceased partner were entitled to a share of profits down to the date of the valuation. Page v. Ratliffe, 76 L. T. 63—C. A.

—— "Susceptible of Valuation."]—Partnership articles executed in India on the plaintiff and defendants going into partnership as commission merchants, gave power to the majority to inforce the retirement of any partner, if they should be so desirous, on giving six calendar months' notice. It was provided by the articles that an account should be taken as soon as possible after the 30th April in each year of the stock, moneys, debts, and partnership assets, and a valuation should be made of all the particulars included in such accounts, which might be in their nature "susceptible of valuation." On the 30th April, 1875, the majority of the partners gave due notice of inforced retirement to the plaintiff. After the notice, but before the date fixed for his retirement, they furnished him with an account to ascertain the sum due to him under the articles, but in such account made no valuation or allowance of or in respect of the goodwill of the business:—Held, that the goodwill of the business was rightly omitted from the account, as not being a partnership asset "susceptible of valuation." Steuart v. Gladstone, 10 Ch. D. 626; 40 L. T. 145; 27 W. R. 512—C. A. Reversing 47 L. J., Ch. 423.

When, after the expiration of a term limited by partnership articles, the business is carried on by the partners without the execution of fresh articles, all those provisions of the old articles which are not inconsistent with a partnership at will continue to apply to the partnership at will thus constituted. Under such circumstances:—Held, that a provision in the articles that, on the decease of one of the partners before the expiration of the partnership term, the surviving partner should pay to his executors the sum of 1,500*l.*, as the purchase-money for his interest in the goodwill of the business, applied to the partnership at will constituted by the carrying on of the business without fresh articles after the expiration of the partnership term. Essex v. Essex (20 Beav. 442) followed; Cookson v. Cookson (8 Sim. 529) not followed. Cox v. Willoughby, 49 L. J., Ch. 257; 13 Ch. D. 863; 42 L. T. 125; 28 W. R. 503.

—— Silence as to Goodwill — Dissolution — Use of Name of Firm.]—A firm of solicitors consisting of three partners, carried on business under the style of "Chappell, Son, & Griffith." The senior partner having died, the business was continued by the son and the junior partner under the same style for upwards of three years. The partnership was then dissolved, an agreement being executed providing for the dissolution, but containing no reference to the goodwill of the business or the sale or disposal thereof. After the dissolution, the business of a solicitor was carried on by Chappell, the son, on the premises held by the original firm under the style of "Chappell & Son." Griffith, having taken offices a few doors off, also carried on the business of a solicitor, under the style of "Chappell & Griffith." To this Chappell objected, and having commenced an action to restrain Griffith from carrying on business under the style referred to, moved for an interim injunction. It was proved that immediately before the dissolution of the partnership, Griffith had written to Chappell, stating that he intended carrying on business under the style of "Chappell & Griffith," and making suggestions as to the style Chappell should adopt. Circulars were also forwarded by Griffith to all the clients of the old firm, informing them that he proposed to carry on the business of a solicitor by himself, and stating the style that he intended to adopt:—Held, that the primâ facie right of the defendant was to use the name of the old firm, no arrangement having been made as to the goodwill of the business; that from the nature of the business, and from the fact that the style of the original firm had been used with a variation, there was practically no risk that the plaintiff would be exposed to injury by what the defendant was doing: and that, therefore, no case had been made for the intermediate interferance of the court. Chappell v. Griffith, 53 L. T. 459; 50 J. P. 86.

See PARTNERSHIP.

Retiring Partner—Share of Goodwill.]—Claim of retiring partner to a share in the value of the goodwill of the business disallowed. Hall v. Hall, 20 Beav. 139.

Two persons entered into partnership for twenty-one years, but in consequence of disagreements and misconduct, disputes ensued. The partnership was dissolved by decree, one consenting to retire, and the other to take the stock and effects at a valuation:—Held, that the retiring partner was not entitled to any allowance for his share of the goodwill, no provision being made by the partnership articles for such an allowance on a dissolution by death or by retirement of one partner by notice during the term. Ib.

—— Implied Agreement not to Compete.]—Award made of 500*l.* to B., a retiring partner, as consideration for goodwill, etc., on understanding not expressed in award that he should not set up same trade in the vicinity; on parol evidence, injunction was granted to enforce award and such understanding. Harrison v. Gardner, 2 Madd. 198; 17 R. R. 207.

Sale of Goodwill.]—A. and B. carried on the business of country bankers, with the right to issue notes, in premises belonging to A. There were no articles of partnership, but the capital of the bank was contributed by the partners equally. B. died, and A. continued to carry on the business for some time after his death, when he sold the goodwill of the business:—Held, that the representatives of the deceased partner were entitled to a portion of the purchase-money, but in apportioning the proceeds of the sale regard must be had to the circumstances that the banking premises belonged to A., that he was entitled to carry on the business of a banker in the same premises, though not under the name of the old firm, and that the right of issuing notes survived. Smith v. Everett, 27 Beav. 446; 29 L. J., Ch. 236; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1332; 7 W. R. 605.

—— With Book Debts.]—Upon the sale of the goodwill of a partnership business which had been carried on by the surviving partner and the deceased partner, the book debts were directed to be sold together with the goodwill. Johnson v. Helleley, 34 Beav. 63; 34 L. J., Ch. 32; 10 Jur.

(N.S.) 1041 ; 11 L. T. 295 ; 13 W. R. 38. Affirmed 2 De G. J. & S. 446 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 179 ; 11 L. T. 581 ; 13 W. R. 220.

—— Sale by One Partner to Other or Others.]—Primâ facie the sale of his share in a going business by one partner to the others imports a sale of the vendor's interest in the goodwill of that business. Churton v. Douglas, 1 Johns. 174; 28 L. J., Ch. 841 ; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 877 ; 7 W. R. 365.

It is perfectly settled that the mere sale of the goodwill neither implies a contract on the part of the vendor not to set up again in a similar business, nor restricts him as to the place of carrying on that business. Ib.

Upon a sale, goodwill means every positive advantage (as contrasted with the negative advantage of the vendor not carrying on the business himself) which has been acquired by the vendor's firm in carrying on its business, everything connected with the premises or the name of the firm, and everything connected with, or carrying with it the benefit of the business ; but it does not follow that the purchaser has a right to use the name of the vendor's firm simpliciter. Ib.

A. and B. carried on the business of chemists upon leasehold premises belonging to A. By the partnership articles, upon A.'s retirement B. was to have the right of purchasing the premises at a valuation :—Held, that the premises were to be valued irrespective of the advantages to be derived from the fact that the business of chemist had been carried on there for thirty years. Burfield v. Rouch, 31 Beav. 241.

—— Receiver—Interference with.]—By an agreement for a dissolution of partnership between A. and B., it was provided that the machinery, plant, stock-in-trade, goodwill, and existing contracts should be offered for sale ; and two persons should be receivers of the partnership estate and act in the winding up of the same under the direction of the partners. A notice was issued, announcing the dissolution of the partnership ; and afterwards B. used portions of the partnership property for the purpose of carrying on a business of his own of the same kind, thereby diminishing the value of the goodwill of the partnership. Injunction granted to restrain him from carrying on the business on his own private account, and from impeding the receiver. Turner v. Major, 3 Giff. 442 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 909 ; 5 L. T. 600 ; 10 W. R. 243.

Sale by Court—Notice of Liability to Competitors.]—The goodwill of a partnership business having been ordered to be sold by the court in a suit instituted by the surviving partner, it was directed that the advertisements and particulars of sale should contain a notice, that a sale would not prevent any person interested in the business from carrying on the like business in the same town. Johnson v. Helleley, 2 De G. J. & S. 446 ; 34 L. J., Ch. 179 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1041 ; 11 L. T. 581 ; 13 W. R. 220.

And see PARTNERSHIP.

4. PRINCIPLE OF VALUATION.

Partners, as Between.]—As to the principle on which the value of the goodwill of a business should be ascertained as between the partners on a dissolution. Mellersh v. Keen, 28 Beav. 453.

When, on a dissolution, one partner obtains exclusively the benefit of the goodwill, and is made accountable for it, the court, in ascertaining its value, considers what it would have produced, if sold in the most advantageous manner, and at the proper period of time. Ib.

The value of the goodwill of a banking business assessed at one year's average net profits. Ib.

On the purchase by a surviving partner of the goodwill of a business, the goodwill should be valued on the footing that such surviving partner is entitled to set up the same description of business without purchasing. Hall v. Barrows, 4 De G. J. & S. 150 ; 33 L. J., Ch. 204 ; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 55 ; 9 L. T. 561 ; 12 W. R. 322.

As to time for ascertaining value. See Broughton v. Broughton, col. 588.

—— Benefit of Advertisements Paid for.]—The payment of the expenses of advertisements out of partnership funds is not necessarily a ground for giving to each partner, at the expiration of the partnership, a continuing share in the advantages of publicity produced by the advertisements, the partnership having had, during its continuance, the benefit of the expenditure. Morison v. Moat, 9 Hare, 266.

Banking Business.]—The value of the goodwill of a banking business assessed at one year's average net profits. Mellersh v. Keen, 28 Beav. 453.

Solicitors — Seven Years' Term.]—Solicitors agreed to become partners for seven years, and stipulated that if either retired, the continuing partners should pay him the fair marketable value of his goodwill. One gave notice two days before the expiration of the seven years :—Held, that he was only entitled to the value of the goodwill as for two days, and not as of a going business. Austen v. Boys, 24 Beav. 598 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 243 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1285. Affirmed 2 De G. & J. 626 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 714 ; 4 Jur. (N.S.) 719; 6 W. R. 729.

In 1839, a retiring partner stipulated with the continuing partners that they should at a future period take his grandson T. into the business. In 1846, the continuing partners entered into articles for seven years, and by one clause (which formed no part of the partnership contract prior to that time), it was stipulated that any partner might retire, and the continuing partners should then pay him the value of his share in the "goodwill." Afterwards, in 1849, T. was admitted, but the memorandum arranging his admission specified little more than the share he was to take, and it was agreed that it should not annul the articles of 1846, as between the former partners. T. had no notice of the stipulation as to retirement :—Held, that T. was not bound by it, though the former partners were, and assuming that under it the value of the goodwill was to be calculated as a perpetuity, still that the arrangements of 1849 had cut it down and limited it to so much of the seven years as were unexpired at the time of the notice to retire. Ib.

Tobacco Broker's Business.]—The goodwill of a tobacco broker, whose brother had been actively engaged in the business and survived him, and continued the business :—Held, to be valueless. Davies v. Hodgson, 25 Beav. 177.

Damages for Breach of Agreement.]—In August, 1845, the defendant's testatrix granted to the plaintiff a lease of a public-house in London Road, Liverpool, for fourteen years, at a rent of 70*l.* per annum, the latter paying 300*l.* for the goodwill; and before the expiration of that lease, viz., in March, 1858, she granted him a further lease for fourteen years at a rent of 80*l.* per annum. Each of these leases contained the following proviso:—"Provided also, and it is agreed and declared that, at the expiration or other sooner determination of the term hereby granted, all such sum and sums of money as shall or can be procured for the goodwill of the business of a licensed victualler in respect of the premises from an incoming tenant, shall be received by and belong to the lessee, his executors, &c." The second lease being about to expire, negotiations took place betwen the plaintiff and the defendant for a renewal, but they failed to come to terms; and the defendant, with notice of the plaintiff's claim under the above proviso, granted a lease of the premises to a new tenant for a term of fourteen years, at a rent of 160*l.* per annum, and a premium of 1,300*l.* Upon a case stated for the opinion of the court by an arbitrator, to whom it was to be referred to assess the amount of damages the plaintiff was entitled to recover for the breach (if any) of the above proviso, upon the principles to be laid down by the court, it was found as a fact that "the rental of 160*l.* per annum reserved in the lease granted to the new tenant was, without any premium, bonus or other payment whatever, a full and sufficient rental for the premises under such a lease, whether intended for a licensed victualler's business or not;" and, further, that "the goodwill of the business carried on by the plaintiff would, if belonging to the owner of the house, have had a very considerable value, and if such owner had in that case been willing to grant a lease similar to that granted to the new tenant, a sum exceeding 1,300*l.* would without difficulty have been obtained for the goodwill":—Held, that the proviso was broken; and that the arbitrator was to estimate the damages the plaintiff was entitled to recover for such breach, in the same manner as one accustomed to value the goodwill as between outgoing and incoming tenants would estimate them, and in so doing was not to disregard the increased value of the property in the neighbourhood generally. Llewellyn v. Rutherford, 44 L. J., C. P. 281; L. R. 10 C. P. 456; 32 L. T. 610.

1. LICENCES.

"Hackney Carriage."]—By a local act (4 Vict. c. 16), s. 145, if the driver of any hackney carriage shall be found standing or plying for hire within the limits of the act without a licence, he shall be liable to a penalty. There is no definition of a hackney carriage in the act:—Held, that the words "hackney carriage" must be taken to mean a carriage exposed for hire to the public, whether standing in the public street or in a private yard. Bateson v. Oddy, 43 L. J., M. C. 131; 30 L. T. 712; 22 W. R. 703.

Section 4, sub-s. 1, of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, imposes a duty upon every hackney carriage as thereinafter defined, and by sub-s. 3 a "hackney carriage" means "any carriage standing or plying for hire":—Held, that an ordinary omnibus running along a fixed route is a "hackney carriage" within the meaning of the act. Hickman v. Birch, 59 L. J., M. C. 22; 24 Q. B. D. 172; 62 L. T. 113; 54 J. P. 406.

Where a conviction alleged that a coachmaster, not being licensed, did drive and let to hire a certain coach and two coach-horses, being within the bills of mortality, and within and upon the paved streets of London and Westminster, and, in the information on which the conviction was founded, it was stated that the defendant did drive for hire a certain coach and two coach-horses, within or upon such paved streets; and that the driver conveyed a person in the coach for hire within the limits aforesaid:—Held, that such conviction could not be supported under any of the statutes by which hackney coaches were licensed or regulated, as it was not alleged to be a hackney coach within 9 Anne,

c. 23, nor was it driving for hire with a coach, within 1 Geo. 1, c. 57. Cloud v. Turfery, 9 Moore, 595; 2 Bing. 318; 3 L. J. (O.S.) C. P. 16.

—— Plying for Hire.]—A proprietor of an unlicensed omnibus who makes no charge for fares but receives money as voluntary contributions from passengers, is a person who "permits a carriage to be used as a hackney carriage plying for hire" within s. 45 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847. Cocks v. Mayner, 10 R. 467; 70 L. T. 403; 17 Cox, C. C. 745; 58 J. P. 104.

A carriage, whilst on the premises of a railway company, under a contract with them to await the arrival of their trains, for the conveyance of any passenger by railway who chooses to hire it, is plying for hire within the Metropolitan Public Carriage Act, 1869, s. 4, and is therefore a hackney carriage, and must be licensed. Clarke v. Stanford, 40 L. J., M. C. 151; L. R. 6 Q. B. 357; 24 L. T. 389; 19 W. R. 846. S. P., Allen v. Tunbridge, 40 L. J., M. C. 197; L. R. 6 C. P. 481; 24 L. T. 796; 19 W. R. 849.

In a district to which the Local Government Act, 1858, applied, a piece of ground adjoining a railway station, and belonging to the company, metalled and separated from the highway only by a gutter, was used as an approach to the railway station. Private carriages were allowed to stand there, but no hackney or public carriages, except those of C.; C., by agreement with the company, having the sole right of standing carriages there for the purpose of plying for hire. He having been convicted in a penalty for allowing his carriages to ply there for hire without a licence:—Held, that the place was not a street within the Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847, s. 3, for that the places included by that section in the word "street" were places over which the public had a right of passage; and that the conviction was therefore wrong. Curtis v. Embrey, 42 L. J., M. C. 39; L. R. 7 Ex. 369; 21 W. R. 143.

Application by Employer of Driver—Personal Attendance of Driver required.]—An information was laid by an inspector against the defendant for unlawfully driving a stage coach without having obtained a licence from the Improvement Commissioners of Llandudno. Defendant was in the employ of a carriage proprietor as a stage coach driver. The licensing committee appointed by the commissioners passed a resolution requiring drivers who desired their licences renewed to apply to the committee in person. The manager of the said carriage proprietor applied to the licensing committee for a renewal of, amongst others, the defendant's licence. The committee refused to consider any application unless the applicants attended personally. No complaint was made against the defendant personally. The defendant subsequently acted as a driver without a licence. The justices held that the defendant had failed to obtain a licence in consequence of the committee refusing to hear his application, although they had no complaint against him, and that under those circumstances the charge was trivial, and they accordingly dismissed it. The inspector who preferred the information appealed:—Held, that the justices were wrong and should have convicted, for there had been a breach of the law, and that the commissioners had a right to insist on the personal attendance of the applicants, the possession of a driver's licence being a personal privilege. Banton v. Davies, 66 L. T. 192; 17 Cox, C. C. 469; 56 J. P. 294.

Police and Revenue Licences.]—A licence for hackney carriages, granted by the commissioners of stamps, under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 120, does not dispense with the necessity of a licence under the Towns Police Clauses Act of 1847, s. 37; the first being required for the purpose of revenue, the second for the purpose of police. Buckle v. Wrightson, 5 B. & S. 854; 34 L. J., M. C. 43; 11 Jur. (N.S.) 280; 11 L. T. 341; 13 W. R. 92.

Discretion of Police Commissioner.]—Notwithstanding the terms of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, s. 8, a commissioner of police may exercise a discretion in granting licences to metropolitan omnibus drivers and conductors, and may propose such questions to them with relation to their application for such licences as he may think proper, and is not bound to renew such licences upon the bare production of a certificate of the good conduct and fitness of the applicant. Mitcham, Ex parte, 5 B. & S. 585; 33 L. J., Q. B. 325; 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1254; 10 L. T. 573; 12 W. R. 983.

2. Obstruction in Streets.

Plying for Hire at Place other than a Cab-stand.]—A licensed driver of a hackney carriage had been convicted under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, s. 33, of plying for hire elsewhere than at some standing or place appointed for that purpose. He was the servant of a cab proprietor, who was also the occupier of a public-house immediately opposite to the Putney railway station. In front of the public-house, and between it and the road, is an open piece of ground, part of the land attached to the public-house, and private property. Here he stood with his master's cab, and when hailed from the station drove across the street and picked up a fare. This place was not appointed by the commissioners of police as a standing for hackney carriages under s. 29:—Held, that these facts did not constitute an offence under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, or under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 22. Skinner v. Usher, 41 L. J., M. C. 158; L. R. 7 Q. B. 423; 26 L. T. 430; 20 W. R. 659.

The urban sanitary authority of E. made a by-law that every driver of a hackney carriage, when plying for hire, should station his carriage on one of the appointed stands. In the city of E. there was a square in front of a hotel which was not inclosed, and where the public could pass freely, except when the hotel-keeper's carriages stood there, as the square was let with the hotel, and used for the hotel cabs standing when plying for hire:—Held, that the driver when plying for hire there incurred the penalty imposed by the by-law, as this place was part of the street. Marks v. Ford, 45 J. P. 157.

By an order in council the entire area, places, and parts of places comprised within the boundaries of a township were constituted a district, for the purposes of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. An improvement act empowered the local board from time to time to make by-laws for regulating the conduct of the drivers of hackney carriages plying within the district, and for fixing the stands of such hackney carriages. The local board made the following by-law: "That the several places in the district where painted boards shall from time to time be placed by the local board, to distinguish them as stands, shall be the stands for such number of carriages, horses, asses, and mules, &c., as shall be mentioned on such boards; and no driver of any such carriage, &c., shall place the same on any other than some one of such stands, or shall ply for hire in any of the streets or places within the district (except on one of such stands) under a penalty not exceeding 40*s*." A licensed driver was convicted of plying for hire off a stand. On appeal, the justices stated that it was proved to their satisfaction that he was driving a licensed carriage on the beach, within the district; that he got off, and spoke to some people, and took them up, having then passed a stand:—Held, first, that the by-law was valid, although it did not, on the face of it, specify the exact localities where the stands were to be. Blackpool Local Board v. Bennett, 4 H. & N. 127; 28 L. J., M. C. 203; 7 W. R. 382.

Held, secondly, that the seashore between high and low-water mark was within the district. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the driver was properly convicted of plying for hire off a stand. Ib.

Removal of Cabstand.]—A paving act authorised the commissioners to direct and regulate the hackney coach stands within their district:—Held, that they might remove a hackney coach stand altogether if it obstructed the public street. Rex v. Rawlinson, 9 D. & R. 7; 6 B. & C. 23; 5 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 16.

3. Proprietor and Customer.

Negligence of Driver—Liability of Registered Proprietor.]—Where, according to the ordinary law, the master of the driver of a hackney carriage would be liable for damage caused by the negligence of the driver, an action will lie, under the provisions of the Metropolitan Hackney Carriage Act, 1843, against the registered proprietor of the carriage, notwithstanding that, by the ordinary law, the driver is not his servant. King v. Spurr (8 Q. B. D. 104) was overruled by King v. London Improved Cab Co. (23 Q. B. D. 281). Keen v. Henry, 63 L. J., Q. B. 211; [1894] 1 Q. B. 292; 9 R. 102; 69 L. T. 671; 42 W. R. 214; 58 J. P. 262—C. A.

Under the Metropolitan Hackney Carriage Act, 1843, so far as the public is concerned, the proprietor of a hackney carriage is responsible for the acts of the driver whilst plying for hire, as if the relationship of master and servant existed between them. Venables v. Smith (2 Q. B. D. 279) approved. King v. London Improved Cab Co., 58 L. J., Q. B. 456; 23 Q. B. D. 281; 61 L. T. 34; 37 W. R. 737; 53 J. P. 788—C. A.

The relation of the proprietor and the driver of a cab quoad the public is that of master and servant; inter se that of bailor and bailee. Where there is no wrongful user of the cab by the driver, the proprietor is responsible for his negligence. Venables v. Smith, 46 L. J., Q. B. 470; 2 Q. B. D. 279; 36 L. T. 509; 25 W. R. 584.

A driver, who had no specified time for starting from or leaving the proprietor's stables, made a short deviation for his own convenience at the close of his day's work and while returning to the stables. After such deviation he was again returning when he ran over and injured the plaintiff:—Held, that the driver was not on an independent journey, and must be considered to be in the proprietor's employ at the time of the accident. Ib.

The plaintiff's cart and pony were injured by a cab plying in the streets of London, owing to the negligence of the cab-driver. The defendant was proprietor of the cab and licensed to ply it for hire. He had let the cab to the driver for a weekly payment, the horse, harness and whip being provided by the driver, with whom the defendant had nothing to do beyond receiving money from him:—Held, that under the circumstances there was nothing in the Metropolitan Hackney Carriage Acts (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 22, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86), to make the defendant liable for the negligence of the driver. Powles v. Hider (6 El. & Bl. 207) and Venables v. Smith (2 Q. B. D. 279) considered. King v. Spurr, 51 L. J., Q. B. 105; 8 Q. B. D. 104; 45 L. T. 709; 30 W. R. 152; 46 J. P. 198. See supra.

In an action against the registered proprietor of a cab for the loss of luggage by a licensed driver, it appeared that the driver paid each morning a fixed sum for the use of the cab and horse, and was allowed to keep for himself the money he received. The cab had upon it the name of the proprietor, but the proprietor exercised no control over the driver as to where he should ply with the cab:—Held, that, under the circumstances, and the 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 22, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, the driver was the servant or agent of the proprietor, with authority to make contracts, on which the proprietor was liable; and therefore the action was rightly brought against him. Powles v. Hider, 6 El. & Bl. 207; 25 L. J., Q. B. 331; 2 Jur. (N.S.) 472.

—— Form of Action.]—In an action against a cab proprietor, the declaration stated that the plaintiff hired the vehicle, and that, in consideration of the premises, and that the plaintiff with his luggage would become a passenger, and of certain reward, the defendant promised the plaintiff to carry and convey him and his luggage safely and securely, and alleged a loss of part of the luggage by the negligence of the defendant's servant:—Held, that the declaration was sufficient to charge the defendant for a breach of his implied duty to use an ordinary degree of care, the words "safely and securely" not necessarily importing a more extended liability. Ross v. Hill, 2 C. B. 877; 3 D. & L. 788; 15 L. J., C. P. 182; 10 Jur. 435.

A declaration alleged that the defendant, at the time of the promise and negligence therein alleged, was the owner of a hackney cab at the time of the promise conducted by his servant; that the plaintiff at his request hired it of him, and the defendant promised to convey the plaintiff's luggage safely, but not regarding his duty or promise negligently lost the same:—Held, that the action was founded on contract, and that as a sum not exceeding 20*l*. was recovered, the plaintiff was deprived of costs under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142, s. 5. Baylis v. Lintott, 42 L. J., C. P. 119; L. R. 8 C. P. 345; 28 L. T. 666.

Award by Magistrate against Driver—Bar to Action against Proprietor.]—An award of compensation by a magistrate against the driver of a hackney or metropolitan stage-carriage upon an information for furious driving under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, s. 28, is a bar to a subsequent action against such driver's employers by the party injured in respect of his injuries. Wright v. London General Omnibus Co., 46 L. J., Q. B. 429; 2 Q. B. D. 271; 36 L. T. 590; 25 W. R. 647.

If the party injured accepts such compensation he is barred from further proceedings, even where he did not lay the information or, in the first instance, request the magistrate to award compensation. Ib.

4. Driver and Customer.

Refusing to Drive.]—Under 10 Geo. 3, c. 44, s. 7, a justice of the peace, after convicting a hackney coachman for refusing to go with his coach, might immediately commit him to the house of correction if he did not pay the penalty. Duck v. Addington, 4 Term Rep. 447.

A hackney carriage whilst on the premises of a railway company by their leave for the accommodation of passengers by their trains, is not plying for hire in any street or place within the meaning of the Hackney Carriage Acts, 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 22, s. 35, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 33, s. 17, and the driver of such carriage cannot under those acts be compelled to convey any person desirous of hiring it. Case v. Storey, 38 L. J., M. C. 113; L. R. 4 Ex. 319; 20 L. T. 618; 17 W. R. 802.

The word "place" in s. 17, sub-s. 2 of the London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853, means any place to which the driver of a hackney carriage is required by a fare to drive where he can gain admittance, even though such a place may be private property, as, for instance, a railway station. Kippins, Ex parte, 66 L. J., Q. B. 95; [1897] 1 Q. B. 1; 75 L. T. 421; 45 W. R. 188; 18 Cox, C. C. 459; 60 J. P. 791.

Fare — Non-payment — Civil Debt — Towns Police Clauses Act.]—A cab fare is a civil debt, and upon complaint by a cabman under s. 66 of the Towns Police Clauses Act, 1847, the justices have no power to order the defendant to be imprisoned in default of payment of the sum claimed and costs. Reg. v. Kerswill, 64 L. J., M. C. 70; [1895] 1 Q. B. 1; 10 R. 476; 71 L. T. 574; 43 W. R. 59; 18 Cox, C. C. 49; 59 J. P. 342.

—— Extra Persons.]—The 16 & 17 Vict. c. 127, s. 14, provides that when more than two persons shall be carried inside any hackney carriage or cab drawn by one horse only, a sum of 6*d.* for each person shall be paid for the whole hiring, in addition to the fare directed to be paid for two persons under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 33, and that two children under ten years of age shall be considered as one adult person:—Held, that if two children under ten years of age are carried in excess of two persons, they shall be counted and paid for as one adult; but that if one child only be so conveyed in excess, he shall still be considered as an extra person within the meaning of the act, and paid for accordingly. Norton v. Jones, 8 L. T. 241; 11 W. R. 573.

—— Notice of.]—Under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 115, a secretary of state made an order that the application for a licence for a hackney carriage should specify the proposed fares; that the carriage should be examined and numbered; that a licence specifying the number and the fares should be granted; and that such fares should be put on a flag on the carriage; and provided a penalty for breach of the order:—Held, that the order was valid, and the penalty for not having a flag inscribed with the fares enforceable. Bocking v. Jones, 40 L. J., M. C. 19; L. R. 6 C. P. 29; 23 L. T. 739; 19 W. R. 227.

5. Proprietor and Driver.

Injuries Due to Bad Horse.]—When a cab-driver hires from a cab proprietor a horse and a cab at a certain sum per day, the relationship of master and servant does not exist between the proprietor and the driver so as to deprive the driver of his remedy for personal injuries sustained by him, by reason of the proprietor hiring out to him a horse not reasonably fit and safe to drive, and notice of action, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, s. 47, is not necessary in such a case. Gibbons v. Standon, 16 L. T. 497.

The plaintiff was the driver of the defendant's cab, for which he paid 18*s.* a day, and kept the remainder of what he earned for his own benefit. The plaintiff could do what he liked with the cab during the day, and was not under the control of the defendant. In an action by him against the defendant for an injury sustained by reason of the plaintiff having been supplied with a vicious and unmanageable cab horse, it was proved that the horse supplied had never before been driven in a hansom cab, and was fresh from the country. The jury found for the plaintiff, and the court discharged a rule to enter the verdict for the defendant:—Held, on appeal, that there must be a new trial, and the jury ought to be asked whether or not the plaintiff took the risk upon himself. Fowler v. Lock, 43 L. J., C. P. 394, n.; 30 L. T. 800—Ex. Ch.

The plaintiff was the driver of the defendant's cab, for which he paid 18*s.* a day, and kept the remainder of what he earned for his own benefit. The plaintiff could do what he liked with the cab during the day, and was not under the control of the defendant. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendant for an injury sustained by reason of the plaintiff having been supplied with a vicious and unmanageable cab horse, it was proved that the horse supplied had never before been driven in a hansom cab, and was fresh from the country. The jury found specially that the horse was not reasonably fit; that the plaintiff did not take upon himself the risk of the horse being reasonably fit; that the defendant did not take reasonable precautions to supply a horse reasonably fit, and that the horse and cab were intrusted by the defendant to the plaintiff as bailee and not as servant; whereupon a verdict was entered for the plaintiff:—Held, that the finding of the jury amounted to a finding of negligence in the defendant, and a rule to enter the verdict for the defendant was refused. Fowler v. Lock, L. R. 10 C. P. 90; 31 L. T. 844; 23 W. R. 415.

Proprietor Indorsing Licence—Action for.]—By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, s. 8, the registrar is empowered to grant a licence to parties to act as drivers of hackney carriages. By s. 21, the proprietor of every such hackney carriage "who shall permit or employ any licensed person to act as driver, shall require to be delivered to him, and shall retain in his possession, the licence of such driver, whilst such driver shall remain in his service." In an action by a driver of a hackney carriage against the proprietor, for defacing his licence whilst so retained in the possession of such proprietor, the declaration alleged that the defendant "wrongfully and unjustly wrote in ink, in and upon the licence, certain words, purporting to give, and being intended to give, a character of the plaintiff, as an improper person to act as a driver of hackney carriages (that is to say, 'Discharged, having been guilty of the most reckless, careless act') " :—Held, that case was the proper form of action, and that it was unnecessary to allege that the defendant "maliciously" wrote the words. Hurrell v. Ellis, 2 C. B. 265 ; 15 L. J., C. P. 18 ; 9 Jur. 1013.

A proprietor of a metropolitan public carriage, employing a licensed conductor, is not justified in writing on his licence, deposited with him pursuant to 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, s. 8, the ground on which he discharges the conductor. Rogers v. Macnamara, 14 C. B. 27 ; 2 C. L. R. 569 ; 23 L. J., C. P. 1 ; 17 Jur. 1166 ; 2 W. R. 19.

—— Right to Notice of Action.]—To entitle a person to notice of action under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, s. 47, on the ground that he bonâ fide believed that he was entitled under that act to do what he did, the belief must not only be bonâ fide, but also reasonable ; and, therefore, where the act gave a cab-proprietor power to summon a cab-driver before a magistrate for any misconduct, and the proprietor, instead of doing so, made an indorsement on the driver's licence, which had the effect of depriving him of employment as a cab-driver :—Held, that the proprietor was not entitled to notice of action, on the ground that he believed that he was putting the law in motion. Heath v. Brewer, 15 C. B. (N.S.) 803 ; 9 L. T. 653.

—— Jurisdiction of Magistrate—"Matter of Complaint."]—The addition of a name on a cab-driver's licence to the entries required by the London Hackney Carriages Act, 1843, to appear thereon, is a "defacing" of such licence, and is a "matter of complaint" between the cab-owner and cab-driver which a magistrate has jurisdiction to entertain ; and on evidence that the cab-driver has been prejudiced by such defacing, the magistrate can assess damages. Norris v. Birch, 64 L. J., M. C. 91 ; [1895] 1 Q. B. 639 ; 15 R. 222 ; 72 L. T. 491 ; 43 W. R. 271 ; 18 Cox, C. C. 123. J. M.

HEIR-AT-LAW.

Definition.]—An heir apparent is he who, if he survives his ancestor, must succeed ; an heir presumptive is he who, although heir if the ancestor dies presently, may be ousted by the intervention of a nearer title. Anon., Lofft, 273.

A child born in Scotland of parents domiciled there, who at the time of his birth were not married, but who afterwards intermarried in Scotland (there being no lawful impediment to their marriage either at the time of the birth or afterwards), though legitimate by the law of Scotland, cannot take as heir lands of his father in England. Birtwhistle v. Vardill, 7 Cl. & F. 895 ; 9 Bligh (N.S.) 32 ; West. 500 ; 4 Jur. 1076. S. C., nom. Doe d. Birtwhistle v. Vardill, 2 Scott (N.R.) 828 ; 6 Bing. (N.C.) 385—H. L. (E.)

An ante-nuptial son, born in Scotland, of Scotch parents, who became legitimatised according to the law of Scotland by the subsequent marriage of his parents, settled in England and purchased freehold property there. The son died intestate and unmarried, leaving his father surviving him :—Held, that the father was incapable under 3 & 4 Will 4, c. 106, s. 6, of inheriting real estate from his son, although the son was legitimate by the law of England as to his personal estate, and the property, therefore, escheated to the crown. Don's Estate, In re, 4 Drew. 190 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 98 ; 3 Jur. (N.S.) 1192 ; 5 W. R. 836.

"Heirs" in equity, is construed according to the nature of the subject to which the word has reference. Gittings v. McDermott, 2 L. J., Ch. 212 ; Varne v. Henderson, 1 Jac. & W. 388, n. ; 21 R. R. 193 ; Hayes v. Hayes, 6 L. J. (O.S.) Ch. 141.

—— Heir Male.]—Whoever will take as heir male by purchase must be both heir and male. Groynore v. Nooke, 1 Wils. 30.

Quære, whether a person may take as heir male of the body, without being heir generally. Wills v. Palmer, 5 Burr. 2615 ; 2 W. Bl. 687.

Disinheriting.]—An heir cannot be disinherited but by the express words of a will, or a necessary implication of law. Anon., Lofft, 396. S. P., Denn d. Gaskin v. Gaskin, Cowp. 657 ; Right d. Mitchell v. Sidebotham, 2 Dougl. 759 ; Thomas d. Evans v. Thomas, 6 Term Rep. 671 ; 3 R. R. 40.

Wherever land, or any interest in land, which would descend to the heir-at-law, is devised for purposes which the law will not permit to take effect, the heir-at-law shall have the benefit of the interest so devised as undisposed of. The heir-at-law takes whatever is undisposed of, not by force of the intent, but by the rule of law. Tregonwell v. Sydenham, 3 Dow, 194 ; 15 R. R. 40.

Fraud on Ancestor.]—The heir-at-law may maintain a bill to set aside a sale fraudulently entered into with his ancestor. Bellamy v. Sabine, 2 Ph. 425 ; 5 L. J., Ch. 36.

Fraud by Ancestor.]—A person who has sold an estate under circumstances which entitle him in equity to have the sale set aside, has in the estate an interest of such a nature as to be devisable even by a will made before the passing of the Wills Act. Gresley v. Mousley, 4 De G. & J. 78; 28 L. J., Ch. 620; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 583; 7 W. R. 427.

Purchase by a solicitor for his client set aside under the circumstances on a bill filed two years after the death of the solicitor, and nearly eighteen years after the death of the client. Ib.

Heir Tenant for Life—Maintenance—Incumbrances.]—Tenant for life is bound to keep down the interest of debt, but being an heir-at-law, not otherwise provided for, is, as against the remainderman, entitled to a maintenance. Burges v. Mawbey, Turn. & R. 167; 24 R. R. 9.

Mesne Profits.]—Bill for account of mesne profits does not lie by heir as such merely, unless there is some impediment at law. Pulteney v. Warren, 6 Ves. 89; 5 R. R. 226.

Upon a devise to trustees in favour of a corporation to be thereafter formed for a good charitable use, valid under the Statutes of Mortmain, the heir has no right to the rents and profits accrued before the devise is carried into effect. Att.-Gen. v. Bowyer, 3 Ves. 714; 4 R. R. 132.

A., being seised of real estate, died, leaving his sisters presumptive co-heiresses, his wife being enceinte of a son, born subsequently. The rents from the ancestor's death remaining unreceived by the co-heiresses:—Held, that their seisin being gone on the birth of the posthumous child, they were not entitled to so much of the intermediate rents as they had not received before the birth of the heir. Goodale v. Gawthorne, 2 Sm. & G. 375; 2 Eq. R. 936; 23 L. J., Ch. 878; 18 Jur. 927; 2 W. R. 680.

A qualified heir is entitled to the rents and profits of realty of which the ancestor dies seised, in fee or in tail, which accrue due between the death of the ancestor and the birth of the ancestor's posthumous and only child, whether such rents be actually received or not. Richards v. Richards, Johns. 754; 29 L. J., Ch. 836; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 1145.

Conveyance by—Mistake—Confirmation.]—J. S., under the belief that he had the fee simple in an estate subject to a life interest in his mother, conveyed all his interest to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. The conveyance contained covenants for title and for further assurance. It turned out that at the time of the conveyance the mother had the fee simple, which upon her death descended to J. S. as her heir-at-law:—Held, that although no estate passed by the conveyance, yet the transaction amounted to a contract for the sale of the specific estate, and that J. S., unless he could set aside the contract for fraud, was in equity compellable to carry it into execution. Smith v. Baker, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 223.

Purchase of Incumbrances.]—A. devised an estate to his heir, who, in his own right, had a charge on it. The heir bought up an incumbrance on the estate amounting to 11,555*l.*, for 2,000*l.*:—Held, that he was entitled to the full amount, as against other incumbrances, on the estate. Davis v. Barrett, 14 Beav. 452.

On a bill by purchaser to redeem a prior mortgage, the heir who had taken assignment of the mortgage to a trustee, and was made a defendant, cannot avail himself of the advantage as resisting an application to the court for its assistance: he must make himself an actor by filing a cross bill, if he seeks to impeach the title; and where the legal estate is outstanding in a trustee, the court will not in such a case remain neuter, nor content itself with awarding a perpetual injunction, but will determine the right definitively, the refusal to make a decree ascertaining the beneficial interest being inconsistent with the nature of trusts. Scott v. Dunbar, 1 Moll. 442.

Party impeaching a transaction by which an extension of an existing interest was granted, is not entitled to lie by until the original term is expired by efflux of time, before he proceeds effectually to question the additional interest; and that whether it was in the form of a present conveyance merging the original term, or an executory contract to take effect at its termination, to the injury of the other party, and the mere lying out of his money, for a great length of time, will be so accounted. Ib.

The purchaser of reversion subject to leases, or estate charged with annuity, does not thereby acquire the equities the original vendor may have had to impeach the leases or cut down the annuity; but purchaser, if also heir, is not precluded from relying on his preferable title as heir, but it must have been put in issue. Ib.

Administration—Personal Liability.]—In an action by a bond creditor against the heir of an intestate, the latter pleaded a false plea, the court will, after a decree obtained in a suit by another creditor, for the administration of intestate's assets, restrain the plaintiff at law from taking out execution against the assets, but not from proceeding against the heir personally. Price v. Evans, 4 Sim. 514.

—— In other Cases.]—Where an heir-at-law is brought by order before the court, though there is no resulting trust in his favour he shall have his costs. Att.-Gen. v. Haberdashers' Co., 4 Bro. C. C. 178.

An heir-at-law, claiming as such, was put to prove, and did prove, his pedigree, as stated in his bill in detail:—Held, that the court might and ought to decide without a jury; and it appearing that the evidence of heirship was, previously to the institution of a suit, submitted to the defendants, the trustees, and was such as they ought to have been satisfied with, the court gave the plaintiff the costs of the suit as against the trustees, including the expenses of the genealogical evidence. Lancashire v. Lancashire, 1 De G. & Sm. 288; 11 Jur. 1024. Affirmed 2 Ph. 657; 17 L. J., Ch. 270; 12 Jur. 363.

A. B. contracted to purchase real estate of C. D., but died before completion, intestate. C. D. filed a claim against the infant heir and the administratrix of A. B. for a resale of the estate, and the application of the proceeds in payment of the purchase-money and the expenses:—Held, that the costs of the heir were to be paid by C. D., and added to his own. Popple v. Henson, 5 De G. & Sm. 318; 21 L. J., Ch. 311.

It is the habit to give costs to the heir-at-law, because the purchaser would object if he was absent, but he is not necessarily a party to a bill, e.g., by the devisee of the inheritance in trust to sell, for specific performance of a contract to purchase. Nicholson v. Falkiner, 1 Moll. 555.

Where the bill was filed to recover the amount of a judgment debt out of the real and personal estates of the conusor:—Held, that the defendant, who was a minor, and the heiress-at-law of the conusor, was not entitled as against the plaintiff to the costs of putting in an answer. Downes v. Hogan, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 112.

Where a bill was filed in this court by the conusee to recover the amount of a judgment to which the real and personal representatives of the conusee were made parties:—Held, that the defendants, co-heiresses at law of the conusee, who by their answer did not claim any interest in the premises affected by the judgment, were not entitled as against the plaintiff to their costs of the suit, but only against the surplus fund arising from the sale of the premises decreed to be sold. Rutherford v. Cottnam, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 391.

De ventre inspiciendo.]—Heir apparent cannot have a writ of de ventre inspiciendo in life of ancestor. Dursley (Lord) v. Berkeley, 6 Ves. 260; 5 R. R. 285.

Writ granted to three sisters, co-heiresses of an intestate, whose widow declared herself with child. Aiscough, Ex parte, 2 P. Wms. 591; Moseley, 391; 2 Eq. C. Ab. 780.

The effect of writ de ventre inspiciendo, decreed upon a bill in equity, where a sum of money was devised to a charity on the death of A. without issue; A. dying and leaving a widow of ill-fame, who pretended to be with child. Ib.

Held to be a writ of common right, being to secure the next heir from a fraudulent and supposititious birth; and lies for a tenant in tail, because at the time it was first allowed an estate tail was a fee-simple conditional. Ib.

A widow being admitted to be with child, the court will fix a place agreeable to both parties, where she shall be till delivered, and where the heir may, from time to time, at proper seasons, and on notice, send women to see her, and to be present when the child is born, and in such cases, no need to execute the writ in a strict manner. Ib.

A writ de ventre inspiciendo is always applied for by petition. Bellett, Ex parte, 1 Cox, 297.

HOSPITAL.

Foundation.]—Before 39 Eliz. c. 5, hospitals could only be founded by royal licence or letters-patent: by that act they might be incorporated. In 1597, but before the sessions of parliament, B. founded a hospital for bedesmen, and made ordinances for their regulation, in which the feoffees of the hospital were spoken of. The bedesmen were, in effect, appointed during good behaviour:—Held, that a legal foundation of the hospital might be presumed, either by licence or letters-patent, not necessarily investing the bedesmen with a corporate character; and they were entitled to a separate equitable estate of freehold in their respective rooms. Simpson v. Wilkinson, 1 Lutw. Reg. Cas. 168; 7 Man. & G. 50; 14 L. J., C. P. 49.

The 39 Eliz. c. 5, enables "all and every person and persons" to found hospitals for the poor and to incorporate them. A municipal corporation is included in the words "every person and persons," and may exercise the powers given by the act. Newcastle Corporation v. Att.-Gen., 12 Cl. & F. 402.

Trustees of.]—The hospital of St. John, with the chapel of St. Michael annexed, at Bath, is an eleemosynary and not an ecclesiastical foundation; and as the only religious duties which the trustees of it have to perform, are, first, to appoint a clergyman of the Church of England in priest's orders to the incumbency of the chapel; and, secondly, to keep the chapel in repair, they need not be members of the Church of England. Att.-Gen. v. St. John's Hospital, Bath, 45 L. J., Ch. 420; 2 Ch. D. 554; 34 L. T. 563; 24 W. R. 913.

Right to Present to Living.]—Where a hospital for the relief of the poor, needy, and impotent people is duly incorporated, and consists of a master and twelve poor brethren, and the advowson of a living is conveyed to them to hold to the use of the master and brethren, and their successors for ever, the right to nominate to the living belongs to the majority of the entire body of master and brethren, and the master's concurrence in the act of the majority is not necessary. Reg. v. Kendall, 1 Q. B. 366; 4 P. & D. 603; 10 L. J., Q. B. 137.

Where the majority has nominated the party at a meeting, and the master refuses to put the common seal to a presentation, the court will compel him to do so by mandamus; and if the master, in his return to the writ, merely insists on his right to withhold his consent, and to refuse to seal it, he cannot object that there was no corporate resolution under seal; or that the writ insufficiently states his custody of the seal; or that no presentation has been actually tendered to him for signature; or that the majority having only voted for the prosecutor of the writ, may retract their resolution. And it is no answer to the writ that there are visitors appointed by the founder, to whom disputes between the master and brethren are to be referred. Ib.

Exemption from Land-Tax.]—The 38 Geo. 3, c. 5, s. 25, does not exempt hospitals subsequently built from land-tax; nor crown lands subsequently acquired by the crown. Colchester (Lord) v. Kewney, 36 L. J., Ex. 172; L. R. 2 Ex. 253; 16 L. T. 463; 15 W. R. 930—Ex. Ch.

An hospital which was erected before the passing of 4 Will. & Mary, c. 1, imposing a land-tax, and the site of which was exempted from that tax by 38 Geo. 3, c. 5, ss. 25 and 29, was by a decree by the court of chancery removed to another site, and the old site was discharged from the charitable trusts to which it was then subject:—Held, that the removal of the hospital and secularisation of the site did not remove the exemption from land-tax conferred on the site as "land belonging to a hospital before the fourth year of William and Mary," by 38 Geo. 3, c. 5, s. 29. Cox v. Rabbits, 47 L. J., Q. B. 385; 3 App. Cas. 473; 38 L. T. 430; 26 W. R. 483.

Right of Members to Vote.]—A hospital, consisting of a master and three ancient brethren, was incorporated, and by the terms of its constitution, as afterwards regulated by statute, its revenues derived from lands vested in the corporation, were received by the master, who annually, after paying thereout taxes and other outgoings and reserving one-third to himself, was to pay 25*l.* to each of the three ancient brethren, 70*l.* to the chaplain, and after reserving a balance, not exceeding 60*l.*, to meet current expenses, was to divide the residue between certain other brethr n called "younger brethren," who were added to the number of the brethren from time to time, as the revenues of the charity increased, but no younger brother was to take under such division more than 25*l.*, and the surplus, if any, was left to accumulate until further additional brethren were appointed:—Held, that the younger brethren had no equitable estate in the lands of the hospital, and that, the annual payment to which they were entitled not being a rent-charge, nor a free tenement within 8 Hen. 6, c. 7, they were not entitled to the county franchise. Simey v. Marshall, 42 L. J., C. P. 49; L. R. 8 C. P. 269; 27 L. T. 581; 21 W. R. 123; 2 Hopw. & C. 1. See also Simpson v. Wilkinson, supra, and ELECTION LAW.

Effect of Mortmain Acts.]—A lady, during her illness, gave a sum of money to trustees to establish a fever hospital. The money was invested in their names, and they executed a trust deed declaring that they held the money for the purpose of establishing (after the decease of the donor) a fever hospital. The donor, who knew nothing of the execution of the deed, died a fortnight after giving the money:—Held, that the gift came within 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, and was void. Hawkins v. Allen, 40 L. J., Ch. 23; L. R. 10 Eq. 246; 23 L. T. 465; 18 W. R. 748.

And see CHARITY.

Liability for Expenses.]—If a builder does work at an intended hospital on the order of the physician and surgeon, they being announced to deliver lectures there, and being members of the provisional committee, such builder is not bound to look solely to the funds of the hospital for payment, but may sue the persons who gave the order, unless he was distinctly informed that the dealing was to be on the terms of looking for payment to the funds of the hospital only. Pink v. Scudamore, 5 Car. & P. 71.

The subscribers who attend a committee for managing the concerns of a hospital, are liable to the creditors of the hospital; and the proper question for the consideration of the jury is, whether the defendant had so acted as to induce the plaintiff to believe that he was to look to the defendant and the other members of the committee for payment. Burls v. Smith, 5 M. & P. 735 ; 7 Bing. 705.

When a Nuisance.]—The Metropolitan Poor Act, 1867 (30 Vict. c. 6), authorises the formation of districts and district asylums for the care and cure of sick and infirm poor, creates corporations for that purpose, gives authority to the poor law board (now the local government board) to issue directions to these corporations, enables them to purchase lands and erect buildings for the purposes of the act, and makes the rates of parishes and unions liable for the outlay thus incurred. But it does not, by direct and imperative provisions, order these things to be done, so that if, in doing them, a nuisance is created to the injury of the health or property of persons resident in the neighbourhood of the place where the land is purchased, or the buildings erected ; it does not afford to these acts a statutory protection. And therefore, where such nuisance was found as a fact :—Held, that the district board could not set up the statute, nor the orders of the poor law board under it, as an answer to an action, or to prevent an injunction issuing to restrain the board from continuing the nuisance. Metropolitan Asylum District Managers v. Hill, 50 L. J., Q. B. 353 ; 6 App. Cas. 193 ; 44 L. T. 653 ; 29 W. R. 617 ; 45 J. P. 664—H. L. (E.)

A. STATUTORY LIABILITY FOR INJURY TO PREMISES.

See the Riot (Damages) Act, 1886.

1. WHAT PREMISES.

Private Place.]—The words "persons riotously and tumultuously assembled together" in s. 2, sub-s. 1, of the Riot (Damages) Act, 1886, are not to be limited to apply to a private place only. Gunter v. Metropolitan Police Receiver, 53 J. P. 249.

Buildings—What are.]—An unfinished building never yet inhabited, constructed as and intended for a dwelling-house, and used as a barn, was not a house, outhouse, or barn, within 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, s. 7. Elsmore v. St. Briavells, 2 M. & Ry. 514 ; 8 B. & C. 461 ; 6 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 372.

A house, part of which was occupied by the plaintiff as a shop, and the remainder of which was occupied by his lodgers, no part of the family sleeping therein, was a dwelling-house within the protection of the 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 5. Rea v. Wood, 2 Stark. 269 ; 19 R. R. 717.

Hustings erected to take the poll at a contested election for members to serve in parliament were not a building within 57 Geo. 3, c. 19, s. 38 ; therefore, no action was maintainable against the hundred for the destruction of such property by a tumultuous assembly. Allen v. Ayre, 3 D. & R. 96.

—— Position of—Evidence.]—In an action on 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, against a hundred, for the demolition of a castle by rioters, the plaintiff produced in evidence certain orders made by the justices at the quarter sessions for the county, in which the castle was described as being in that hundred. No proof was given that the justices who made those orders were resiants in the county :—Held, that the orders were admissible as evidence of reputation, for that the justices, from the nature of their offices, must be presumed cognisant of the subject. Newcastle (Duke) v. Broxtowe, 4 B. & Ad. 273 ; 1 N. & M. 598 ; 2 L. J., M. C. 47.

It was proved by other evidence, that for nearly two centuries the castle had been reputed to be within the hundred. The defendants attempted to prove that the town had been from the earliest period separated from any jurisdiction of, or connection with, the adjoining hundreds, and for that purpose gave in evidence an extract from Domesday Book, in which the town was mentioned previously to the enumeration or description of the hundreds in the county, and various presentments during the reigns of Edw. 1, Edw. 3, and Hen. 6, by the jurors of the town, of deaths within the castle and its precincts ; and they produced a charter of Hen. 6, whereby the town was made a county of itself, and the castle was specially excepted. The judge, after recapitulating the evidence, told the jury that the excepting of the castle when the town was made a county, did not show in what hundred the castle originally was ; that the evidence of reputation given by the plaintiff was entitled to great weight, and that when things had gone on for two centuries in one uniform course, it was reasonable to infer that that course had prevailed from the earliest period, unless the evidence to the contrary was certain. It being objected that by this summing up too much weight was given to modern reputation, and too little to the ancient documents:—Held, that the direction was proper. Ib.

In Annexed District.]—By an act of parliament a district was taken out of the county at large, and annexed to the county of a city, and was declared to be member and parcel of the county of the city, except for certain purposes. If a house situate in the annexed district is feloniously demolished by rioters, the owner may sue the inhabitants of the county of the city for the amount of his damages, under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, if such liability is not mentioned among the exceptions, although it may not clearly appear that the defendants could reimburse themselves by a rate which should embrace the annexed district. Humphries v. Bristol, 3 N. & M. 74; 2 L. J., M. C. 83.

Mine Buildings.]—Lessees of a mine had constructed a wooden trough or an aqueduct on piles, for conveying water from a spring at a distance from the mine to a pool of water where the mineral was washed after it had been raised to the surface, in order to separate it from the earth. The trough was erected as near to the mine as the nature of the soil would admit of, but neither the trough nor the pool was locally connected with the mine:—Held, that washing the mineral is part of the business of a mine, and that this trough was an erection used in conducting the business of a mine, within 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 7, and 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 2. Barwell v. Winterstoke Hundred, 14 Q. B. 704; 19 L. J., Q. B. 206; 14 Jur. 392.

Engines.]—The riotous demolition of frames for the manufacture of frame-work lace, was not an offence for which 52 Geo. 3, c. 130, s. 3, gave a remedy against the hundred, for such frames were not within the meaning of the word engine, as used in that act. Orgill v. Smith, 6 M. & S. 182.

Mills.] — The burning of a mill-house, not parcel of any dwelling-house, was not felony within 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, which gave a remedy to the party grieved against the hundred, though within 9 Geo. 3, c. 22, which omitted the remedial clause. Hiles v. Shrewsbury, 3 East, 457.

In an action on 41 Geo. 3, c. 24, for demolishing mills, it was not necessary to allege in the declaration that the offence was committed feloniously. Beatson v. Rushworth, 2 Marsh. 362; 7 Taunt. 45; 3 Price, 48; 17 R. R. 537.

Goods—"Beginning to Demolish."]—Where a mob, after beginning to demolish and pull down a house, stole flour therein, or forced the owner to sell it at an under price, the value thereof could not be recovered in an action against the hundred on 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 5, s. 6, such stealing and robbery being substantive felonies, and not within the offence created by s. 4. Greasley v. Higginbottom, 1 East, 636; 6 R. R. 354.

Where a mob attacked a baker's house, and broke the glass and shutters of the windows, and compelled him to sell flour at a price named by themselves below the marketable value:—Held, this was evidence for the jury of a felonious beginning to demolish the house within s. 4; and that the plaintiff might recover for the damage done to the house, in an action against the hundred, on s. 6; but not for the value of the flour so sold, that not being consequential to the act of demolition; nor could he recover for the value of other flour taken and wasted in another warehouse distinct from his dwelling-house, on the opposite side of the street, of which the lock only was burst, that not being a beginning to demolish, &c., within the act, with the view with which it appeared to have been done. Burrows v. Wright, 1 East, 615; 6 R. R. 351.

If persons riotously assembled demolished the doors and windows of a house, and having thus riotously obtained an entrance into the house, destroyed the goods and furniture in it, the hundred was answerable in an action on 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 5, s. 6, for the damage done to the furniture as well as to the house. Ratcliffe v. Eden, Cowp. 485; 2 Dougl. 701, n. S. P., Hyde v. Cogen, 2 Dougl. 690.

In an action against the hundred they are only liable for things demolished by the rioters, or destroyed in the demolition of the house, and not for any goods stolen from the premises. Smith v. Bolton, Holt, 201.

—— Arms.]—Where the leader of a mob, having entered a gunsmith's shop and demanded arms, was detained, and the mob then declared that unless he was released they would pull the house down, and they did enter and break the windows, window-frames, &c., and for that purpose used some of the arms found in the shop, and carried away others:—Held, that this was evidence of a purpose to demolish the house, and that the owner might recover against the hundred a reparation in damages for the injury done to the house itself, and to the arms actually used in the act of demolishing; but that he was not entitled to recover for the value of the arms carried away, that being a substantive and distinct felony, and therefore not within 1 Geo. 1, st. 2. c. 5. Beckwith v. Wood, 1 B. & Ald. 487; 2 Stark. 262; 19 R. R. 360.

2. Mode of Injury.

Object and Intention of Rioters.]—A hundred was not liable in an action for damages, brought by the person injured, by a mob beginning to pull down his house, unless the riot was of such a kind as to amount to felony within 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 5 (Riot Act). Reid v. Clarke, 7 Term Rep. 496; 4 R. R. 505.

In an action against the hundred on 57 Geo. 3, c. 19, s. 88, to recover damages for an injury done to a private dwelling-house by a mob, it was not necessary to show that the object of such mob was seditious. Clarke v. Burdett, 2 Stark. 504.

A house damaged by rioters is not "feloniously demolished wholly or in part" so as to entitle the person damnified to compensation from the hundred under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 2, unless the rioters when attacking the house had an intention wholly to destroy it. During an election riot, and before the Riot Act was read, the rioters attacked many houses, broke the windows and damaged the walls by throwing stones, and stole tobacco from a house so damaged:—Held, that there was no evidence of felonious demolition for which the hundred was liable to compensate the persons damnified. Drake v. Footitt, Drake v. Hankin, 50 L. J., M. C. 141; 7 Q. B. D. 201; 45 L. T. 42; 45 J. P. 798.

Number of Rioters.]—To support an action against the hundred, for damages on 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 5, for the riotous demolition of a house, it was not necessary to prove that twelve rioters were assembled at the time. Prichit v. Waldron, 5 Term Rep. 14.

"Riot"—What is.]—The 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 8, not having given any definition of what shall be a riot within the meaning of that enactment, the common law definition of a riot must be resorted to, and in such a case if any one of her majesty's subjects is terrified this is a sufficient terror and alarm to substantiate that part of the charge of riot. Reg. v. Phillips, 2 M. C. C. 252. S. C., nom. Reg. v. Langford, Car. & M. 602.

And see CRIMINAL LAW.

"Beginning to Demolish"—Interruption.]—Proof that the mob, after breaking open the door, tearing down the window-frames, and doing other serious damage to the house, was interrupted in its proceedings by a military force, is evidence from which a beginning to demolish (in an action against the hundred) was to be presumed; but if the mob, after committing such mischief, voluntarily retired without proceeding to demolition, it was a question for the jury whether there was a beginning to demolish. King (Lord) v. Chambers, 1 Stark. 195; 4 Camp. 377; 16 R. R. 806.

In an action against the hundred on 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 5, for damage done to a house, the breaking of the inside window-shutters, a window-sill, and the wood of the fan-light, was sufficient evidence of a beginning to pull down, if the mob was interrupted and dispersed, while committing these acts of violence, by an alarm of the approach of the military. Samson v. Chambers, 4 Camp. 221.

Where the mob, after breaking the windows, and doing other damage to the house, retired without demolishing it, and without any disturbance having been given to their operations, the hundred was not liable. Anon., Holt, 203. See also Greasley v. Higginbottom, and cases supra.

Burning.]—In an action on 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 5, and upon 52 Geo. 3, c. 130, against the hundred:—Held, that burning, though specifically mentioned in a clause of the statute, as distinct from a demolishing or pulling down, was included in the latter terms. Nesham v. Armstrong, 1 B. & Ald. 146; Holt, 466.

3. WHO ENTITLED TO RECOVER.

Provocation Offered.]—Where provocation has been offered by the claimant or his representatives to the crowd, that will disentitle the plaintiff to recover under the Riot (Damages) Act, 1886. Gunter v. Metropolitan Police Receiver, 53 J. P. 249.

Trustee.]—An action on 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 5, was maintainable by a trustee, in whom the legal estate was vested for existing purposes, and (as it seems) even by a bare trustee of a satisfied term. Prichit v. Waldron, 5 Term Rep. 14.

An action might be maintained under 1 Geo. 1, s. 2, c. 2, against hundredors, by the trustee in whom the property in a house of correction belonging to the county was vested, for the demolition of the house by rioters. Onslow v. Smith, 3 Dougl. 348.

Joint Lessee.]—A person who is a joint lessee, but a sole occupier of premises feloniously injured, may maintain an action against the hundred if he has complied with the requisites of the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, although the co-lessee has not done so. Lowe v. Braxtowe, 5 B. & Ad. 550; 1 L. J., M. C. 57.

Termor or Freeholder.]—If an action is brought by a termor upon 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, for an injury done to his house within three calendar months from the offence committed, and that action abates by the death of the termor, after the three months have expired, his executor cannot bring a fresh action. Till Adam v. Bristol, 4 N. & M. 144; 2 A. & E. 389; 4 L. J., M. C. 35.

A termor, and also the party seised of the freehold subject to the term, might each recover damages against the hundred for the injury resulting from a felonious burning, in respect of their possessory and reversionary interests. Pellew v. East Wonford, 4 M. & Ry. 130; 9 B. & C. 134; 7 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 84.

Insured Owner.]—An owner of sacks of corn, maliciously destroyed by fire, might maintain an action against the hundred, under 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, although he had previously received the full amount of his loss from an insurance office. Clark v. Blything Hundred, 3 D. & R. 489; 2 B. & C. 254; 2 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 7; 26 R. R. 334.

Insurers.]—Where insurers paid the amount of the loss occasioned by the demolition of a house by rioters, they might maintain an action in the name of the insured, against the hundred, under 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 5, s. 6. Mason v. Sainsbury, 3 Dougl. 61.

But an insurance office having paid the assured the amount of the loss sustained by him in consequence of a demolishing by rioters, sued the hundredors under 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 5, s. 6, in their own names:—Held, by Lord Mansfield, C.J., and Buller, J., Willes and Ashurst, JJ., dissentientibus, that the office was not entitled to recover. London Assurance Co. v. Sainsbury, 3 Dougl. 245.

4. PROCEDURE.

a. Notice.

Time for.]—The two days allowed by 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, for giving notice of the offence, were exclusive of the day on which the fire happened. Pellew v. East Wonford, 4 M. & Ry. 130; 9 B. & C. 134; 7 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 84.

The notice required by 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, s. 8, to be given to the inhabitants of a hundred, for damage sustained by the burning of the plaintiff's barn, must have been given to such inhabitants previously to the party's examination on oath before the magistrate. Fowler v. Loningborough, 3 Moore, 319; 1 Br. & B. 64.

By whom.]—Notice given by a servant of the tenant, as such servant, was sufficient in order to support an action by the landlord. Adderley v. Offlow, Peake's Add. Cas. 206.

To whom.]—A declaration, in an action on 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, s. 8, to recover damages against the hundred for the value of a sack of corn maliciously burnt, alleged that notice of the fact was given within two days to the inhabitants of the parish (instead of the "town, village, or hamlet," which were the words of the act), near the place, &c.; yet, as the law primâ facie intends every parish to be a vill, unless the contrary is shown, this allegation was sufficient, after verdict, to sustain judgment for the plaintiff. But if it had been shown at the trial that the parish consisted of several vills, and that the notice had been given to one more distant than another, the defendants would have been entitled to a verdict. Cook v. Pimhill, 8 East, 173.

Where a declaration upon that act alleged the notice of the fire to have been given to the parish instead of to the town, village, or hamlet, as required by the statute:—Held, that the objection was cured by the verdict. Reed v. Gainsbury, 4 D. & R. 250; 2 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 158.

b. Examination.

Parties—Owner or Servants.] —Where the owner of property destroyed by malicious fire gave in his examination on oath under 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, it was not necessary in order to enable him to recover against the hundred that any other person should do so. Rolfe v. Elthorne, M. & M. 185.

So, the provision that the servants having the care of the premises should do so only applied to cases where the owner was away, and had no personal superintendence of the premises, and not to cases where he merely happened to be absent at the instant when the fire took place. Ib.

Where a reversioner sued the hundred for damages resulting from a felonious burning, if no servant of his had the care of the premises, he was the proper person to give in an examination. Pellew v. East Wonford, 4 M. & Ry. 130; 9 B. & C. 134; 7 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 84.

—— Servants.]—The 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, s. 8, required that all the servants having the care of property wilfully destroyed by fire should be examined before a magistrate before the owner could sue the hundred for damages:—Held, that this was not complied with by the examination of the plaintiff's steward alone, who lived at a distance from the property burnt, and had the general superintendence of it, there being several labourers employed under him, who worked on the spot, and had the actual care of it. Somerset (Duke) v. Mere, 6 D. & R. 247; 4 B. & C. 167.

The servant or servants who in the absence of a master have the general care and superintendence of property, and who represent him in his absence, and not all who have the special care under them of particular parts of the property contained in a dwelling-house or manufactory, are the servant or servants who by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 3, are required, before any action is brought against the hundred for damage by rioters, to go before a justice and state upon oath the names of the offenders, and submit to examination touching the circumstances of the offence. Lowe v. Broxtowe, 3 B. & Ad. 550; 1 L. J., M. C. 57.

The swearing before a justice to a deposition previously prepared is a sufficient submission to examination within the meaning of the act, if the justice requires nothing further. Ib.

—— One of Three Claimants.]—In an action on the stat. 52 Geo. 3, c. 130, against the hundred by several partners in trade, to recover the value of premises feloniously destroyed, three of the partners being present when the fact was committed but only one giving in his examination upon oath, without stating that to the best of his belief the others had no knowledge of the person who committed the fact:—Held, that that was not sufficient. Nesham v. Armstrong, 1 B. & Ald. 146; Holt, 466.

What it must state—Knowledge of Persons.] —In an action against the hundred on 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, for damage sustained by the wilful burning of the party's barn, it was a precedent condition that the party grieved should, within the time limited, give in his examination upon oath before a magistrate whether or not he knew the offender or offenders, or any of them; and an examination on oath, in which the party only swore that he suspected that the fact was done by some person or persons to him unknown, was not sufficient; still less in support of an averment in a declaration that he gave in such examination, in and by which it appeared that the plaintiff did not know the person or persons who committed the fact. For non constat by the terms of such examination that the plaintiff did not know some of the offenders if there were several. Thurtell v. Mutford and Lothingland, 3 East, 400.

An affidavit by the owner of premises wilfully set on fire, "that he did not know the person or persons who wilfully set fire to his premises," but not adding "or any of them," did not satisfy 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, s. 8, and would not support an action against the hundred for compensation. Trimmer v. Mutford, 6 D. & R. 10; 3 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 158. See also Lowe v. Broxtowe, 3 B. & Ad. 530; 1 L. J., M. C. 57.

An examinant was not, however, bound to state mere suspicions entertained by him as to the person who committed the offence, unless interrogated thereto by the magistrate. Pellew v. East Wonford, 4 M. & Ry. 130; 8 B. & C. 134; 7 L. J. (o.s.) M. C. 84.

c. By Action.

Defendants—Borough or Hundred.]—Where a plaintiff, by mistake, proceeded against the inhabitants of the hundred instead of the borough of S., in an action for damages by rioters, under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, the court amended the writ and subsequent proceedings by striking out the word "hundred" and substituting the word "borough," the time for bringing a fresh action having expired. Horton v. Stamford, 1 C. & M. 773; 2 D. P. C. 96; 2 L. J. Ex. 274.

In an action against a hundred to recover compensation for injury done by a riotous mob to premises within a borough which formed part of the hundred:—Held, that the action was properly brought against the hundred, and that the borough was liable as part of the hundred, although it came within the provisions of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 112. Birley v. Salford Hundred, 11 M. & W. 391; 12 L. J., M. C. 118.

—— Inhabitants.]—An action did not lie upon 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, s. 7, against two of the inhabitants of a hundred by name; but must have been brought against the inhabitants at large; and this was a valid objection in arrest of judgment. Jackson v. Pearson, 2 D. & R. 439; 1 B. & C. 304; 1 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 119.

Nature of Proof.]—In an action against the hundred to recover compensation for felonious demolition, the same strictness of averment and proof is necessary as on a trial of an indictment for a felony under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 7. Barwell v. Winterstoke Hundred, 14 Q. B. 704; 19 L. J., Q. B. 206; 14 Jur. 392.

To support an action upon 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, s. 8, against the hundred, for the wilful and malicious destruction of stacks of corn by fire, it was sufficient to give such evidence as might reasonably induce the jury to believe that the fire was wilful and malicious. Reed v. Gainsbury, 4 D. & R. 250.

Knowledge of Offenders.]—A declaration, after stating the felonious demolition of premises, alleged that the person who went before a justice submitted himself to examination, and became bound to prosecute the offenders when apprehended, such offenders being then and there unknown to the plaintiff, or to the party bound:—Held, after verdict, that, assuming any allegation on this point to be necessary under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, this was sufficient, as it could only be sustained by proof that all the offenders were unknown. Lowe v. Broxtowe, 3 B. & Ad. 550; 1 L. J., M. C. 57.

And see supra, col. 618.

Amount of Compensation.]—Semble, that, in assessing compensation for the demolition of a dwelling-house under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, the jury ought to consider what sum will be necessary to repair the injury and replace the building in the state it was when the outrage was committed; and not whether the plaintiff was likely to make it his residence, or whether it was suitable for such residence. Newcastle (Duke) v. Broxtowe, 4 B. & Ad. 273; 1 N. & M. 598; 2 L. J., M. C. 47.

Under 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, where a barn, which was the property of the landlord, and the corn contained therein the property of the tenant, were maliciously set fire to, and burnt, the hundred was liable to the extent of 200*l.* to both parties injured. Adderley v. Offlow, Peake's Add. Cas. 206.

—— Goods Lost or Stolen.]—See ante, col. 613, 614.

Costs.]—A party aggrieved was entitled to costs in an action on 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, against the hundred, although they, together with the damages, exceeded 200*l.* Jackson v. Calesworth, 1 Term Rep. 71. But see Wilkinson v. Abbott, Cowp. 366.

d. By Summary Proceedings.

Formalities.]—To ground a proceeding at petty sessions under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 8, for compensation in respect of felonious injury by rioters, the party or his servant must go before a justice within seven days after the offence was committed, and submit to examination, according to s. 3, as well as where an action is to be brought. And the court will not grant a mandamus to summon such petty sessions, where it does not appear by affidavit that these steps have been taken, though the party swears that he duly served the notice required by s. 8. Rex v. Folkestone JJ., 4 B. & Ad. 552; 1 N. & M. 718; 2 L. J., M. C. 41.

It is not necessary for a party who applies to the magistrates for a remedy in respect of an injury committed against 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, to prove that it was committed by a "riotous" or tumultuous assembly, notwithstanding the introduction of those words in ss. 2 and 4 of 3 Geo. 4. Rex v. Wylde, 4 L. J. (o.s.) K. B. 67.

Amount of Compensation.] — Where the damages sustained by means of the unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to any house, barn, outhouse, mow or stack of corn, was less than 30*l.*, the remedy by action, given by 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, s. 7, to the party grieved, was taken away, and a summary remedy substituted for it by 3 Geo. 4, c. 33; although the injury had not been done by a riotous and tumultuous assembly. Rex v. Somerset JJ., 7 D. & R. 385; 4 B. & C. 913.

The 3 Geo. 4, c. 33, s. 2, gave a summary remedy to the extent of 30*l.* against the hundred, for injuries done to property by riotous assemblies, on application to the petty sessions in the manner therein prescribed; and s. 7 gave an appeal to the quarter sessions to persons aggrieved by anything done in pursuance of the act. Where the petty sessions, under a mistake of the law, and not upon the merits of the case, dismissed an application under this statute:—Held, that the quarter sessions might entertain an appeal against their determination. Rex v. Tucker, 5 D. & R. 434; 4 B. & C. 545.

Order as to Levying Money.]—An order of justices under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 31, ss. 7, 14, 15, for the levying of money upon the inhabitants of the hundred under the Riot Act, directing that the money, when levied, should be paid into the hands of a banker, subject to their further order, was bad. Rex v. Halfshire, 5 Term Rep. 341; Nolan, 265. I. MARRIAGE.

1. VALIDITY.

a. Contractual Capacity.

Law of Domicil.]—The personal capacity of parties to enter into the contract of marriage depends upon their domicil; and where both parties had a foreign domicil, and, by the law of their domicil, their marriage was invalid by reason of consanguinity, a marriage which was contracted in England, and which would have been valid according to English law, was held invalid. Sottomayer (otherwise De Barros) v. De Barros, 47 L. J., P. 23; 3 P. D. 1; 37 L. T. 415; 26 W. R. 455—C. A.

Two Portuguese subjects, whose domicil was Portugal, and whose marriage in Portugal would have been invalid without a Papal dispensation, on the ground of consanguinity, they being first cousins, contracted in 1866 a marriage in England. At that time they were of the respective ages of sixteen and fourteen, and the lady alleged that her marriage was entered into under pressure, and only with the purpose of saving some of her father's property from the consequences of a bankruptcy. The marriage was never consummated. In 1874 a petition to have the marriage declared void was presented by the lady: Held, that the marriage being invalid according to the law of the country of domicil of the parties, must be declared null and void here. Ib.

A foreign marriage, valid according to the law of the country where it is celebrated, is good everywhere; but that applies only to the form, and not the essentials of the contract, which depend on the lex domicilii: that is, the law of the country where the parties are then domiciled, and in which they contemplate to reside. Therefore, if a marriage abroad of English subjects domiciled in this country is contrary to our notions of public policy—for example, polygamous or incestuous—this country will not recognise it, and will follow in that respect its own rules as to incest and policy. Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 193; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 422; 4 L. T. 93; 9 W. R. 461. Affirming 27 L. J., Ch. 401.

Christian Marriage—Nature of Contract.]—The contract of marriage is, in its essence, a consent on the part of a man and a woman to cohabit with each other, and with each other only. The religious element does not require anything more of the parties; and therefore it is not essential that all the words of the marriage service to be repeated by the man and woman should be actually said: but the ceremonies required by law, such as the publications of banns and the like, being complied with, when the hands of the parties are joined together, and the clergyman pronounces them to be man and wife, if they understand that by that act they have agreed to cohabit together and with no other person, they are married. Harrod v. Harrod, 1 Kay & J. 4; 18 Jur. 853; 2 W. R. 612.

—— Domiciled Englishman with Woman of Uncivilised Tribe, according to Native Custom.]—A union formed between a man and a woman in a foreign country, although it may there bear the name of marriage, and the parties to it may there be designated husband and wife, is not a valid marriage according to the law of England unless it be formed on the same basis as marriages throughout Christendom, and be in its essence "the voluntary union for life of one man and one woman to the exclusion of all others." Bethell, In re, Bethell v. Hildyard, 57 L. J., Ch. 487; 38 Ch. D. 220; 58 L. T. 674; 36 W. R. 503.

C. B., whose domicil was English, in 1878 went to South Africa, and afterwards resided at Mafeking in Bechuanaland. In 1883 he went through the ceremony of marriage with T., a woman of the Baralong tribe, according to the customs of the tribe, among whom polygamy is allowed. C. B. and T. lived together as husband and wife. He was killed in the colony in 1884, and about ten days after his death T. gave birth to a female child. C. B., in a document which he wrote and signed in 1883, made some provision for T. and for a child out of the proceeds of sale of his property in the colony. He refused to be married to T. in a church on the ground that he was a Baralong. He never mentioned the marriage to any of his friends in England, and there was no evidence that he ever introduced or spoke of T. as his wife, but that he called her "that girl of mine." He was in receipt of about 600*l*. a year, the rents of estates in England, devised to him for life with remainder to his lawful child or children:—Held, that the union of C. B. and T. was not a marriage in the Christian, but in the Baralong sense, and that it was not a valid marriage according to the law of England. Ib.

—— Marriage between British Subject and Native of Japan—Monogamous Marriages.]—In a petition to establish the validity of a marriage under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 93, it appeared that the petitioner, who was a British subject with an Irish domicil of origin, and temporarily resident in Japan, had married a Japanese woman in Japan, according to the forms required by the law of the country. Evidence having been adduced which showed that the marriage was valid according to the law of Japan, and that by such a marriage the petitioner was precluded from marrying any other woman during the subsistence of the marriage:—Held, that the marriage was valid in this country. Brinkley v. Attorney-General, 59 L. J., P. 51; 15 P. D. 76; 62 L. T. 911.

—— Polygamy.]—A marriage contracted in a country where polygamy is lawful, between a man and a woman who profess a faith which allows polygamy, is not a marriage as understood in christendom; and although it is a valid marriage by the lex loci, and at the time when it was contracted both the man and woman were single, and competent to contract marriage, the English matrimonial court will not recognise it as a valid marriage in a suit instituted by one of the parties against the other for the purpose of enforcing matrimonial duties, or obtaining relief for a breach of matrimonial obligations. Hyde v. Hyde and Woodmansee, 35 L. J., Mat. 57; L. R. 1 P. 130; 12 Jur. (N.S.) 414; 14 L. T. 188; 14 W. R. 517. See col. 632.

Capacity—Presumption in favour of.]—The presumption of the court is always in favour of sanity, and of the validity of a marriage; therefore an ability in general to understand others, especially strangers, and occasional or not infrequent inability to appreciate simple arithmetical calculations, held quite insufficient to show incapacity to enter into the marriage contract; and the court refused to direct an issue to take the opinion of a jury upon the marriage. Harrod v. Harrod, 1 Kay & J. 4; 18 Jur. 853; 2 W. R. 612.

The presumption of law in favour of the validity of a marriage is less strong where there is no issue, and where the parties to the marriage admit its validity. M'Loughlin, In re, 1 L. R. Ir. 421.

Person of Weak Intellect.]—In deciding whether a person has sufficient mental capacity to contract a marriage, the question for the court is, whether the mind of the contracting party was diseased or not at the time of the contract: and if the evidence establishes that the mind was, at the time of entering the contract, diseased, the court will not enter into the consideration of the extent of the derangement. Hancock (f. c. Peaty) v. Peaty, 36 L. J., Mat. 57; L. R. 1 P. 335; 16 L. T. 182; 15 W. R. 719.

Deaf and Dumb Persons.]—Deaf and dumb persons may enter into the contract of marriage, and the presumption is in favour of the validity of such a marriage and of the capacity of the parties to contract, and the onus of proof is upon those who would impeach the marriage. Harrod v. Harrod, supra.

If there is no question of mental capacity, the objection that a deaf and dumb person did not understand the nature of the contract of marriage which she had been induced to enter into, is an objection on the ground of fraud. Harrod v. Harrod, supra.

Insanity—Onus of Proof.]—The burden of showing that the respondent was insane at the time of the marriage lies upon the party asserting it, and the court has to determine whether the respondent was capable of understanding the nature of the contract, and the duties and responsibilities which it creates, and was free from the influence of morbid delusions upon the subject. Durham v. Durham, 10 P. D. 80.

Want of Consent and Free Agency.]—Although public policy requires that a marriage should not be lightly set aside, the validity of a contract of marriage must be tested in the same manner as that of an ordinary contract, and therefore a marriage will be annulled if the consent of either party thereto was obtained by means of fraud or duress. Scott v. Sebright, infra.

It is not necessary in order to avoid a contract entered into through fear that the fear should be such that a person of ordinary courage and resolution would yield to it; but if either party is mentally incompetent to resist pressure improperly brought to bear, there is no consent. Ib.

A young lady, eighteen years of age, entitled to considerable property, her parents being dead, having been passing her vacation at the house of one of the executors named in her father's will, whom she considered as her guardian, was induced by his brother, who was residing in the same house, and was fifty two years of age, to promise to marry him; she withdrew that promise a few days afterwards, but was importuned again, and prevailed upon to renew it, and the marriage was celebrated without the knowledge of any of her friends, upon a false statement made by him of her age and residence in the publication of the banns, and in the register of the marriage. There was no cohabitation, or consummation of the marriage, as she alleged. She, after a few days, went to a friend's house, and by his advice applied for an act of parliament to annul the marriage, the same being considered valid in law:—Held, that it did not appear that the marriage was not solemnised with the free consent of the lady, and that the case made was not such as to justify legislative interference. Field's Bill, 2 H. L. Cas. 48. See Wortham's Case, 2 H. L. Cas. 73.

Duress—Supposed Betrothal—Conspiracy of Respondent and Petitioner's Mother.]—Petitioner was induced by her own mother, acting in concert with the respondent, to go through the ceremony of marriage with the respondent. At the time of the marriage the mother, who was shown to have exercised an abnormal amount of control over her daughter, persuaded her that the ceremony she had gone through was merely a ceremony of betrothal:—Held, that the petitioner acted under the duress of her mother, and was not a consenting party to the marriage, and was therefore entitled to a decree of nullity. Clarke (otherwise Ford, otherwise Stier) v. Clarke, 65 L. J., P. 13; [1896] P. 1; 11 R. 668; 73 L. T. 632.

—— Threat to Shoot.]—A man, after paying to a girl of sixteen attentions which she rejected, threatened to blow her brains out if she would not consent to marry him, and produced from his pocket a pistol, which he held at her head. She then promised to marry him on condition that he put away the pistol, which he did. A few days later she went home, and shortly afterwards he intercepted her while on a railway journey, and took her to the office of a registrar of marriages, stating that they were going to see her mother. During the marriage ceremony she fainted, and, as soon as it was over, she left him. The marriage was never consummated, and the man never insisted upon his marital rights. The court pronounced the marriage to be null and void. Bartlett (otherwise Rice) v. Rice, 72 L. T. 122.

—— Incapacity to resist Coercion—Mental Prostration.]—The petitioner, a young woman of twenty-two years of age, entitled to a sum of 26,000*l.* in actual possession and a considerable sum in reversion, had become engaged to the respondent, and shortly after coming of age was induced by him to accept bills to the amount to 3,325*l.* The person who had discounted these bills subsequently issued writs against her, and threatened to make her a bankrupt. The distress caused by these threats seriously affected her health, and reduced her to a state of bodily and mental prostration, in which she was incapable of resisting coercion and threats, and being assured by the respondent that the only method of evading bankruptcy proceedings and exposure was to marry him, she reluctantly went through a ceremony of marriage with him at a registrar's office. In addition to other threats of ruining her, the respondent immediately before the ceremony threatened to shoot her, if she showed that she was not acting of her free will. The marriage was never consummated, and the petitioner and the respondent separated immediately after the ceremony:—Held, that there was not such a consent on the part of the petitioner as the law requires for a making of a contract of marriage, and that the ceremony before the registrar must be declared null and void. Scott v. Sebright, 56 L. J., P. 11; 12 P. D. 21; 57 L. T. 421; 35 W. R. 258.

—— Coercion — Intimidation — Fraud.] — In a suit by a woman for a declaration of nullity of marriage, it appeared that the petitioner and respondent were Americans and cousins—the petitioner at the time of the ceremony hereinafter referred to being twenty-four, and the respondent under twenty-one years of age. The respondent had made an offer of marriage to the petitioner, which she had refused, and on a Sunday in July 1888, under the pretence of going to the afternoon service at St. Paul's Cathedral, he took her to St. Bride's Church, Fleet Street, and outside the church said to her suddenly, "You must come into the church and marry me, or I will blow my brains out, and you will be responsible." According to her own statement she was so alarmed that she did not know what she was doing, and went into the church, where the ceremony of marriage was performed and she signed the register. The respondent had previously obtained a licence, on a false declaration as to his own age and as to the petitioner's residence, and had made arrangements at the church for the marriage to be performed that day. The vicar of St. Bride's, who performed the ceremony, stated that the petitioner went through it without showing any signs of unwillingness, repeated the responses in an audible tone, and signed the register in a clear, firm hand. After the ceremony the respondent took the petitioner home, and left her at the door of the house. The marriage was never consummated, and the parties never saw each other afterwards, though they corresponded, but always on the footing of cousins and not as husband and wife. The petitioner never told her parents or friends of the marriage, because, as she said, she did not regard it as binding. The respondent, who did not appear in the suit, admitted he had only married the petitioner for her money, and that he did not care for her. There was evidence that the petitioner was of a weak, impressionable character, with not much power of resistance to a stronger will, but that she was not particularly disposed to fall into a hysterical state in the medical sense of the term:—Held, that the facts were insufficient to rebut the presumption of consent: that the marriage was valid, and that the suit must be dismissed. Cooper (f. c. Crane) v. Crane, [1891] P. 369; 40 W. R. 127.

Consanguinity and Affinity.]—The issuing of a citation in a cause of nullity of marriage, seven days previously to the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, receiving the royal assent, was within the meaning of the act, so as to constitute such suit depending. Sherwood v. Ray, 1 Moore, P. C. 353.

The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, s. 2 (passed 31st August, 1835) enacts, that all marriages which shall thereafter be celebrated between persons within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity, shall be null and void. The prohibited degrees are those declared by 28 Hen. 8, c. 7, s. 11, to be prohibited by God's law. Consequently, the marriage of a man with the sister of the deceased wife is prohibited and void by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54. Reg. v. St. Giles-in-the-Fields, 11 Q. B. 173. S. P., Reg. v. Chadwick, 17 L. J., M. C. 33; 12 Jur. 174.

A marriage within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity, or of affinity, is null and void, although one of the parties is illegitimate. Reg. v. Brighton, 1 B. & S. 447; 30 L. J., M. C. 197; 5 L. T. 56; 9 W. R. 831.

—— With Deceased Wife's Sister.] — The marriage of a man with a sister of his deceased wife is declared by 28 Hen. 8, c. 7, to be contrary to God's law; and though that statute itself is repealed, its declarations are renewed in 28 Hen. 8, c. 16, and 32 Hen. 8, c. 38, which are in force. Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 193; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 422; 4 L. T. 93; 9 W. R. 461. Affirming 3 Sm. & G. 481; 27 L. J., Ch. 401.

Being forbidden by the law of England, such a marriage contracted by British subjects temporarily resident abroad, but really domiciled in this country, though valid in the foreign country, and duly celebrated according to the forms required by the law of that country, is absolutely void here. Ib.

A. and B., British subjects, intermarried; B. died; A. and C. (the lawful sister of B.) being both at the time lawfully domiciled British subjects, went abroad to Denmark, where by the law, the marriage of a man with the sister of his deceased wife is valid, and were there duly, according to the laws of Denmark, married:—Held, that under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, the marriage in Denmark was void. Ib.

A person born of an English marriage with a deceased wife's sister is not legitimate in Scotland as to the succession to real estate. Fenton v. Livingstone, 3 Macq. H. L. 497; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1183; 7 W. R. 671.

Although prior to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, a marriage with a deceased wife's sister could not be questioned after the death of both or either of the parties, it was illegal nevertheless, and if questioned while both parties were alive it must have been declared void ab initio. Ib.

A., a native of Marburg, in the electorate of Hesse Cassel, domiciled in England, married in 1835, and in 1836 was naturalised by act of parliament. In 1841 he made his will. His wife having died, he went to Frankfort in 1846, and there married a sister, by the half-blood, of his deceased wife, with a view to subsequent residence in England, such marriage being valid by the law of Frankfort, and by that of Hesse Cassel; soon after his second marriage he returned to England, where he died in 1856, never having since its acquisition abandoned his English domicil. Letters of administration of the estate and effects of A. having been granted by the Prerogative Court of Canterbury:—Held, in a suit instituted for the purpose of recalling those letters of administration, and obtaining probate of the will, that A.'s second marriage was rendered void by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, s. 2, and consequently did not revoke his will. Mette v. Mette, 1 Sw. & Tr. 416; 28 L. J., P. 117; 7 W. R. 543.

—— With Daughter of Deceased Wife's Half-Sister.]—The marriage of a man with a daughter of the half-sister of his deceased wife is null and void by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54. Reg. v. Brighton, 1 B. & S. 447; 30 L. J., M. C. 197; 5 L. T. 56; 9 W. R. 831.

—— Wife's Mother.]—A man petitioned for a decree of nullity of marriage, on the ground that he had had intercourse with his wife's mother before the fact of marriage with his alleged wife, which intercourse, he averred brought him within the prohibited degrees of affinity in respect of marriage established by the law of England:—Held, that affinity could not be so constituted by the law of England, and that 28 Hen. 8, c. 7, had been repealed and not revived by any subsequent statute. Wing v. Taylor (f. c. Wing), 2 Sw. & Tr. 278; 30 L. J., Mat. 258; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 737; 4 L. T. 583.

—— Both Parties cognisant of Impediment.]—A decree will be made declaring a marriage with a deceased wife's sister null and void, although it is shown that both parties at the time of the celebration of the marriage were aware of the impediment. Andrews (f. c. Ross) v. Ross, 58 L. J., P. 14; 14 P. D. 15; 59 L. T. 900; 37 W. R. 239.

Indian Divorce—Marriage of Parties in England within Six Months of Final Decree.]—The prohibition contained in s. 57 of the Indian Divorce Act of 1869, No. 4, against the remarriage of either party within six months of the date of the final decree, is an integral part of the proceedings, and a condition which must be fulfilled before the parties can contract a fresh marriage, and they cannot evade it by obtaining a domicil in another country. A respondent and a co-respondent in a divorce suit in India, in which a decree absolute was pronounced on 27th November, 1879, came to this country and were married on 3rd February, 1880. On 6th February, the co-respondent duly executed a will by which he bequeathed all his property to his "reputed wife." On 2nd April, 1880, the parties went through a second form of marriage:—Held, that the first marriage having been celebrated within six months from the date of the final decree of divorce, was invalid, and that the will was revoked by the subsequent marriage. Scott v. Att.-Gen. (11 P. D. 128) distinguished. Warter v. Warter, 59 L. J., P. 87; 15 P. D. 152; 63 L. T. 250; 54 J. P. 631.

Quakers.]—There is no doubt of the legality of Quaker marriages. They were meant to be included in the remedy of the stat. 21 & 22 Geo. 3, c. 25, though the words of that act may seem not to apply to them. Haughton v. Haughton, 1 Moll. 611.

Jews.]—Marriage presumed between a Jew and a Christian woman, upon the weight of evidence, in the absence of direct proof of a ceremonial marriage. Goodman v. Goodman, 28 L. J., Ch. 745; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 902.

Royal Marriages.]—The Royal Marriage Act, 12 Geo. 3, c. 11, extends to prohibit the contracting of marriages, or to annul any already contracted in violation of its provisions, wherever the same may be contracted or solemnised, either within the realm of England or without. Sussex Peerage, 11 Cl. & F. 85; 8 Jur. 793.

Officer Abroad.]—The marriage of an officer, celebrated by the chaplain of the British army, within the lines of the army when serving abroad, is valid under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 91, though the country in which such army is serving is not in a state of hostility, and though no authority for the marriage has been obtained from the officer's superior in command. Waldegrave Peerage, 4 Cl. & F. 649.

Lunatic.]—Information directed to be filed for contriving marriage of a woman to an idiot. Smart v. Taylor, 9 Mod. 98.

If one marries a lunatic who is under the care of the committee of the court, this is a contempt for which the person marrying may be committed, and marriage is no supersedeas of the commitment, so as to take him or her out of the custody of the committee. Ash's Case, Pre. Ch. 203.

b. Solemnisation.

i. General Formalities.

Lex loci contractus.]—The forms of entering into contract of marriage are regulated by the lex loci contractûs, the essentials of the contract depend upon the lex domicilii. If the latter are contrary to the law of domicil, the marriage (though duly solemnised elsewhere) is there void. Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 193 ; 7 Jur. (N.S.) 422 : 4 L. T. 93 ; 9 W. R. 461. Affirming 3 Sm. & G. 481 ; 27 L. J., Ch. 401.

The 26 Geo. 2, c. 33, only applies to the forms of certain marriages celebrated in this country ; it does not touch the essentials of the contract. It is, therefore, only territorial. Ib.

Marriage Act.]—A marriage contrary to the Marriage Act is absolutely void. Rex v. Preston, Burr. S. C. 486 ; 1 Wm. Bl. 192.

Presence of Priest.]—A man and woman cannot be lawfully married by a priest except such priest is a third party and witness. Beamish v. Beamish, 9 H. L. Cas. 274 ; 11 Ir. C. L. R. 511 ; 8 Jur. (N.S.) 770 ; 5 L. T. 97.

Since Reg. v. Millis (10 Cl. & F. 534), it must be taken that there never could have been a valid marriage in England before the Reformation without the presence of a priest episcopally ordained, or afterwards without the presence of a priest or of a deacon. Ib.

When a bridegroom was himself a priest, there being no other priest present, a valid marriage was not contracted by him. Ib.

The law requires that equally in the case of the clergy, as of the laity, marriage in this country must, in the absence of express statute, take place in the presence and with the assent of a clerk in holy orders, who must be a third person, and whose duty it is to prevent or put off the marriage if there is opposed a just impediment, and who, in case he allows of its proceeding, is then, in the primary sense of the word, to marry the parties by receiving their mutual consent to become man and wife. Ib.

Consent Essence of the Contract.]—No set form of words is, or was previous to the last Marriage Act, necessary to be followed for the legality of a marriage in England. Nothing more is required to be done by the parties than that they shall agree to cohabit with each other, and with no other person, during their joint lives. The religious form is added by the church, but all the parties have to do is to give their consent as above ; therefore the omission of some of the words of the service is not necessarily material. Harrod v. Harrod, 1 Kay & J. 4 ; 18 Jur. 853 ; 2 W. R. 612. And see Beamish v. Beamish, supra.

Form of Words—Rubric.]—The forms of words prescribed by the rubric for the publication of banns need not be precisely followed, this part of the act of parliament being merely directory. Standen v. Standen, Peake, 34 ; 6 Term Rep. 331, n.

Ceremonies Enjoined by Rubric.]—The ceremonies enjoined by the rubric, such as addressing the congregation, putting the ring on the finger, pronouncing the benediction, &c., are not absolutely essential to the validity of a marriage in facie ecclesiæ, the essential part being the reciprocal taking of each other for wedded wife and wedded husband, and being declared married persons. Ib.

Quære, whether the decision in Reg. v. Millis (10 Cl. & F. 534) would apply to a marriage bonâ fide contracted in the colonies, or on board a ship, where it was impossible to procure the attendance of a minister of religion. Ib.

Presbyterian Minister.]—A., a member of the established church in Ireland went, accompanied by B., a Presbyterian, to the house of C., a regularly placed minister of the Presbyterians of the parish where C. resided, and there entered into a present contract of marriage with B. ; the minister performing a religious ceremony between them according to the rites of the Presbyterian church. A. and B. lived together for some time as man and wife ; A. afterwards, B. being still alive, married another person, in a parish church in England :—Quære, whether the first contract thus entered into was sufficiently a marriage to support an indictment against A. for bigamy. The lords being divided, the rule Semper præsumitur pro negante applied, and judgment was given for the defendant in error. Reg. v. Millis, 10 Cl. & F. 534 ; 8 Jur. 717.

Popish Priest and Protestant.]—A party to a marriage celebrated in Ireland by a Roman Catholic priest, who was born and bred a Protestant, and of a Protestant family, unless he has done some act to denote a change in his religious persuasion, must be deemed to be a Protestant within the 19 Geo. 2, c. 13, s. 1, which provides that every marriage celebrated by a popish priest, between a papist and any person that hath been, or hath professed himself to be, a Protestant, at any time within twelve months before such celebration, shall be null and void. Yelverton v. Longworth, 10 Jur. (N.S.) 1209 ; 11 L. T. 118 ; 13 W. R. 235.

Abjuration of Faith—Fraud.]—A marriage celebrated at Rome between two persons, Protestants, but who had, in accordance with the law of Rome, abjured the Protestant faith, and been admitted into the Roman Catholic Church, declared null and void on the ground that such abjuration was fraudulent and colourable, and that the parties never were or intended to become Roman Catholics. Swift v. Swift, 3 Knapp, 303.

Ceremony according to Rites of Church of England on Board Ship—Presence of Ordained Clergyman—No Banns, Licence, or Previous Public Notification.]—The court, in the absence of any argument contra, held, on the authority of Catherwood v. Caslon (13 M. & W. 261 ; 13 L. J., Ex. 334) and Reg. v. Millis (10 Cl. & F. 534), that a marriage solemnised in 1884 according to the rites and ceremonies and by a duly ordained clergyman of the Church of England, on board a Queen's ship, and in the presence of the captain, whilst the ship was lying at or off a port within her Majesty's dominions, was a valid marriage at common law, although there had been no publication of banns, nor any licence for or previous public notification of such marriage. Culling v. Culling, 65 L. J., P. 59; [1896] P. 116 ; 74 L. T. 252.

See now the Foreign Marriages Act, 1892, and col. 650.

Foreign and Mixed Marriages.]—A marriage solemnised at Antwerp between two English persons in the British church, by a Protestant clergyman appointed by the English government, but without performance of the Belgian ceremonies, is void, as being contrary to the lex loci, and not coming within the 9 Geo. 4, c. 91, which permits marriages abroad at an ambassador's or at a factory chapel. Kent v. Burgess, 11 Sim. 361 ; 5 Jur. 166.

The validity of a marriage, celebrated in a foreign country must be determined in an English court by the lex loci where the marriage is solemnised. Lacon v. Higgins, 3 Stark. 178; D. & R., N. P. 38; 25 R. R. 779.

The articles of the law of France, which prescribe the forms essential to marriage, but which do not annul a marriage in fact for non-observance of such forms, are to be considered as merely directory. But parol evidence is admissible to show that, by the law of that country, a marriage in fact, without the observance of the requisites prescribed by such laws, is void. Ib.

A marriage between two Protestant British subjects, solemnised by a Portuguese Catholic priest at Madras according to the rites of the Catholic church, followed by cohabitation, but without the licence of the governor, which it had been uniformly the custom to obtain, is a valid marriage. Latour v. Teesdale, 8 Taunt. 830; 2 Marsh. 243; 17 R. R. 518.

The 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 54, would not affect the law of marriage in any conquered colony in which a different law of marriage has prevailed. The act is limited in its operation to the inhabitants of Great Britain and Ireland. Brook v. Brook, supra.

The rule that a marriage, if good in the country where it was contracted, is good everywhere, is subject to the qualification that the marriage must not be one prohibited by the country to which the parties contracting belong. Ib.

The general rule is to determine the validity of a marriage by the law of the country where the parties were domiciled, and in most cases the legitimacy of a party is to be determined by the law of his birthplace, and of his parent's domicil. Fenton v. Livingstone, 3 Macq. H. L. 497; 5 Jur. (N.S.) 1183; 7 W. R. 671.

The comity of nations does not demand that a nation should recognise as valid every marriage which is valid lege loci contractûs, and not prohibited by the common consent of Christianity. Each nation has a right to define and prohibit incest. Ib.

Mixed Marriage without Statutory Formalities.]—Where a ceremony of marriage between a Protestant and a Roman Catholic was performed by a Roman Catholic clergyman, according to the rules of his church, in the sacristy of a Roman Catholic chapel at about four o'clock in the afternoon in the presence of two witnesses, but with closed doors; and no notice was given to the registrar, nor certificate issued by him, as required by s. 38 of the Matrimonial Clauses and Marriage Law (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 110), and one of the contracting parties subsequently endeavoured, in order to avoid forfeiture of certain rights under a will, to question the validity of the marriage, but no evidence was given of an intention on the part of either, at the time of the ceremony, to contract a sham marriage:—Held, that notwithstanding the absence of the statutory formalities the marriage was valid, as the parties had not, "knowingly and wilfully," disregarded them within the meaning of s. 39 of the same act, and that it was contrary to public policy, under the circumstances, to allow a contracting party to dispute the validity of the marriage. Knox, In re, 23 L. R. Ir. 542—C.A.

—— Marriage in England between Foreigners.]—A marriage duly solemnised in England, in the manner prescribed by the law of England, between parties of full age, and capable of contracting according to that law, cannot be held null and void because the parties to that marriage, being foreigners, contracted it in England in order to evade the laws of the country to which they belonged, and in which they were domiciled at the time. Simonin (f. c. Mallac) v. Mallac, 2 Sw. & Tr. 67; 29 L. J., Mat. 97; 6 Jur. (N.S.) 561; 2 L. T. 327.

—— Cousins, one domiciled in Portugal, the other in England.]—Two natives of Portugal, one of whom was domiciled in England, the other in Portugal, contracted a marriage in England in 1866. They were first cousins, and were incapable, according to the law of Portugal, of intermarrying, on account of consanguinity, without a papal dispensation. The petitioner (the wife) filed a petition praying that her marriage with the respondent might be declared null and void:—Held, that the lex loci contractûs should prevail in the matter; and the marriage being valid according to the law of England, the court dismissed the petition. Sottomayer (otherwise De Barros) v. De Barros (the queen's proctor intervening), 49 L. J., P. 1; 5 P. D. 94; 41 L. T. 281; 27 W. R. 917.

The queen's proctor, although intervening before decree nisi, is not precluded from setting up other defences in addition to that of collusion. Ib.

Presumption as to.]—Evidence that British subjects in a foreign country, being desirous of intermarrying, went to a chapel for that purpose, where a service in the language of the country was read by a person habited like a priest, and interpreted into English by the officiating clerk; which service the parties understood to be the marriage-service of the Church of England, and they received a certificate of the marriage, which was afterwards lost, is sufficient whereon to found a presumption (nothing appearing to the contrary) that the marriage was duly celebrated according to the law of that country, particularly after eleven years' cohabitation as man and wife till the period of the husband's death. Rex v. Brampton, 10 East, 282; 10 R. R. 289.

After Divorce by Foreign Tribunals.] — A woman, whose original domicil was English, and who married in England, resided for two and a half years in one of the states of America, and then petitioned the competent court in that state for a dissolution of her marriage, on grounds for which, if proved, the English court of divorce would also have dissolved an English marriage. No personal notice of the proceedings was given to the husband, who had never been within the state, and whose domicil continued to be English. The marriage having been dissolved, she remarried in America in the lifetime of her first husband:—Held, that a divorce so obtained could have no legal effect upon an English marriage, and therefore the second marriage was invalid. Shaw v. Att.-Gen., 39 L. J., P. 81; L. R. 2 P. 156; 23 L. T. 322; 18 W. R. 1145.

But if she had been legally domiciled in the state at the time when the divorce was granted, the English courts would have recognised and acted on the decree. Ib.

Englishman Married in Armenia.] — An English Protestant went through a form of marriage with an Armenian Protestant christian at Teheran, she being pregnant at the time. By the Persian law, christian marriages are recognised if valid according to the religious denomination of the parties. By the Armenian Church law, a woman cannot marry while in a state of pregnancy. The Armenian priests having refused to marry the parties, a Roman Catholic priest performed the ceremony according to the rites of the Romish Church, he having obtained a special licence to do so on the ground that the man was a Roman Catholic and the woman a Protestant: —Held, that as by the law of the country where the solemnisation took place the marriage was invalid, and as the forms prescribed by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 68, had not been complied with, there was no marriage. Alison's Trusts, In re, 31 L. T. 638; 23 W. R. 226.

Cohabitation in Virginia.]—In a suit for dissolution of marriage, it appeared that the petitioner and respondent lived together for five years in Virginia, and were received in society as man and wife; that by the law in force in Virginia, when the cohabitation began, no religious ceremony was necessary to the validity of a marriage, nor was any registry of marriages required to be kept, and that, in consequence of war in Virginia, the record of any religious ceremony which might have taken place could not be obtained:—Held, that there was sufficient proof of the marriage. Rooker v. Rooker and Newton, 3 Sw. & Tr. 526; 33 L. J., Mat. 42; 9 Jur. (N.S.) 1329; 12 W. R. 807.

The identity of the parties may be proved by circumstantial evidence. Ib. See col. 652.

ii. Banns.

Clandestine Marriages.]—By the stat. of 1 Eliz. and 13 & 14 Car. 2, the laity are bound by the rubric against marrying without publication of banns, and by the first act are expressly punished by the censures of the church; and by the second act, the power of the ordinary is directed to be continued and applied for punishing the like offence against the rubric of the present book of Common Prayer. Middleton v. Crofts, 2 Atk. 674.

Marriage by banns legal, though only one of the parties resided in the parish. Robinson v. Grant, 18 Ves. 289. Or though neither. Nicholson v. Squire, 16 Ves. 259.

—— Wrong Name—Mistake.]—A person whose baptismal and surname were A. L., was married by banns by the name of G. S., having been known in the parish where he resided and was married by that name only, from his first coming into the parish till his marriage, which was about three years:—Held, that the marriage was valid, and therefore the wife and children were entitled to the husband's settlement. Rex v. Billingshurst, 3 M. & S. 250; 15 R. R. 474.

Where a married woman, on the death of her husband, assumed her maiden name, and after several years had elapsed, married, by banns, to a second husband in that name, and described herself as a "widow":—Held, that, in the absence of fraud, such marriage was legal, and that her settlement followed that of her second husband. Rex v. St. Faith's, Newton, 3 D. & R. 348.

In the publication of banns, in 1817, a woman named Mary Hodgkinson was called White, a surname entered by mistake in the register of her baptism, but which she had never gone by or been entitled to. The false name was given to the officiating clergyman without any intention to mislead, nor did any individual having an interest in the marriage appear to have been deceived:—Held, that the marriage was void. Rex v. Tibshelf, 1 B. & Ad. 190; 8 L. J. (O.S.) M. C. 120.

A marriage by banns, published in false names, is not void under 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 22, unless both parties were privy to such mispublication. Rex v. Wroxton, 1 N. & M. 712; 4 B. & Ad. 641; 2 L. J., M. C. 64.

A man caused the banns to be published without the knowledge of the intended wife, a minor, to whom he proposed marriage only the day before it took place. For the purpose of concealment, the christian name of the wife was wrongly stated, and the age and residence of the husband and wife were also falsely described:—Held, that the marriage was valid, the wife having been unconscious of the irregularity in the publication of the banns. Templeton v. Tyree, 41 L. J., Mat. 86; L. R. 2 P. 420; 27 L. T. 429; 21 W. R. 81.

A marriage solemnised after an undue publication of banns will not be held null and void, under 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, unless it is shown that both parties "knowingly and wilfully" concurred in such undue publication. Gompertz v. Kensit, 41 L. J., Ch. 382; L. R. 13 Eq. 369; 26 L. T. 95; 20 W. R. 313.

When an intending husband, then a minor, desiring to have a secret marriage, gave instructions for the publication of banns, and in such instructions omitted two of his own christian names and one of the christian names of his intended wife (also a minor), and the names were entered with such omissions in the register of banns—there being no evidence of how the banns were actually published—and the names were, after the ceremony, signed by the respective parties, with the same omissions in the register, there being no further evidence besides that of the husband, who deposed that he omitted the names, not thinking or believing he was acting contrary to law, and for brevity's sake only, and the marriage having been reputed good for more than thirty years:—Held, that the husband was not proved to have committed any offence against the statute. Ib.

The husband deposed that, prior to the marriage, the intended wife neither directly nor indirectly took any step towards the publication of the banns, but left the matter entirely to him. There was no evidence of knowledge on her part beyond her signature of the marriage register with the omission above mentioned, that not being her usual form of signature. She being dead, and the marriage having been reputed good throughout her life—that is to say, for upwards of twenty-four years:—Held, that the court could not impute to the wife knowledge of the omission of the name in the instructions for publication of banns. Ib.

—— Designedly Changing Name for Clandestinity.]—Banns having been published between two persons (who afterwards clandestinely intermarried) under the names John Miles and Maria Courtenay, upon evidence (of one alone of the parties, corroborated, however, by other persons and by documents) that the intending wife has been baptised Beatrice Mary Victoria Emma Guy, and that instead of the name "Beatrice" (by which she was familiarly known) the name "Maria" (by which she was not known) had been, in the publication of the banns, used and adopted with cognisance of both parties for the purpose of clandestinity:—Held, that the parties had knowingly and wilfully intermarried without due publication of banns; and that under the Irish Marriage Act of 1847 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 81), s. 49, the marriage was null and void. Courtenay v. Miles, Ir. R. 11 Eq. 284.

And a nullity of marriage by reason of undue publication of banns, pronounced for, both parties being cognisant of the undue publication. Brealy v. Reed, 2 Curt. 833.
